The Antiquary, a magazine appealing to a similar class of readers, has no popular article this month; but there is a useful epitome of the regulations adopted in various foreign countries for the preservation of ancient buildings. Taking the view that the rebuilding of the west front of St. Petersburg Cathedral was an act of "vandalism," the editor advocates that we should import such regulations from the Continent as would make crimes of "restoration" impossible in the future. In Prussia a proposal to restore or rebuild an ancient building must be referred to higher powers than those immediately concerned in the work; and in Bavaria "stringent and admirable legislation has existed for many years."

The Alphabet by Mr. William Nicholson, which has just been published by Mr. Heinemann, is indeed a delight. Rarely does a young modern artist break such a triumphant path for himself as Mr. Nicholson has done. It is a slim quarto volume, and contains twenty-six character studies—a study to each letter of the alphabet. The figures are lithographed in three or four colours upon a ground resembling brown paper, which is always the foundation of Mr. Nicholson's work when he practises as one of the Beggarstaff Brothers. But black—fine, rich, dominant black—is the note of his work. He refrains from accessories or half-tints. His line is clean, his characterisation vivid and resolute, his composition artful, and his method forcible. In its way, this Alphabet is quite an epoch-making book.

WE do not wish to be flippant on a serious subject, but we must confess to having found a little book, entitled When Thou Prayest, rather amusing. This is a manual of suggestions for daily prayer, compiled for the use of young communicants by the Rev. W. Hewetson, and prefaced by the Bishop of Coventry. The body of the work is not matter for comment; but a little list of subjects for intercession, arranged alphabetically, invites it. Herein we find:

Actors.	Jews.	Policemen.
Authors.	Mohammedans.	Postmen.
Bishops.	Navvies.	Press, The.
Cabmen.	Parliament.	Relatives.

Reviewers are omitted. No set form of prayer is given.

AN interview with Mr. Zangwill reveals the nature of the book upon which he is now engaged. "In the book upon which I am working at present," he said, "I am giving a character-sketch of Heine, which I find rather difficult. If I give his portrait in his own words—and even that requires great literary skill—well, then, I have no opportunity of showing myself; but if I give a picture in my own words it will be incomplete. You see my difficulties!" Will it cheer Mr. Zangwill in his dilemma to remind him that a provincial reviewer said ecstatically of the Children of the Ghetto, "It is Charles Dickens writing with the pen of Heinrich Heine"?

ADMIRERS of that accomplished critic and divine, the late Dean Church, will be glad to hear that a cheaper edition of the Life and Letters, compiled two or three years ago by his daughter, may now be bought. Messrs. Macmillan have just added the book to their delightful "Eversley" Series, in which the Dean's various biographies and essays are also to be found.

WHAT little literary activity has ever been shown in British Guiana is now, it seems, to be checked. For some twenty years past the colony has produced a half-yearly magazine entitled Tinehri (which is the Aboriginal Indian term for the primitive picture-writings found in that part of the continent), the editors of which have been successively Messrs. Im Thurn, Quelch, and Rodway, some of their chief contributors being Messrs. Kerke, Jenman, Nichols, and Prof. J. B. Harrison. The expenses were borne by the Royal Agricultural and Commercial Society of British Guiana, but now, owing to the grave condition of the sugar industry, this support is to cease, and the magazine will end with the December number.

THE sale of the late Mr. Henry George's principal work, Progress and Poverty, was large in this country. Messrs. Kegan Paul & Co. issued 65,000 copies of the more expensive edition and 110,000 copies in the shilling form.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK will publish immediately a new anthology, entitled To Be Had In Remembrance, compiled by Miss A. E. Chance, and illustrated.

AN ACADEMY OF LETTERS.

A SUGGESTED LIST OF FORTY NAMES.

AWARDS TO AUTHORS.

THE following list of suggested members for an ACADEMY OF LETTERS is based upon a consensus of opinions gathered from the staff of this journal. Whether English literature is served or hindered by the official existence of such an Institution need not now be discussed. Our immediate concern is to invite correspondence on the composition of this list, and to announce that arrangements are now in progress by which, in connexion with the ACADEMY OF LETTERS, a book of signal merit shall be "crowned" each year. The author of the work will receive an award from this journal of ONE HUNDRED GUINEAS. We have also in contemplation the "crowning" of a book each year by an author of younger reputation, to whom we shall make an award of FIFTY GUINEAS. The final list of Academicians will be printed in an early issue, when we shall also enter into further particulars. Meanwhile we invite the opinions of our readers on the names printed below:

John Ruskin.	W. E. H. Lecky.
W. E. Gladstone.	S. R. Gardiner.
Herbert Spencer.	Bishop Creighton.
Duke of Argyll.	Bishop Stubbs.
A. C. Swinburne.	Rev. Aidan Gasquet.
George Meredith.	W. E. Henley.
John Morley.	Andrew Lang.
Thomas Hardy.	William Archer.
James Bryce.	H. D. Traill.
Sir G. O. Trevelyan.	Edmund Gosse.
Leslie Stephen.	Mrs. Meynell.
George Macdonald.	Mrs. Humphry Ward.
R. D. Blackmore.	Francis Thompson.
Rudyard Kipling.	W. B. Yeats.
Aubrey de Vere.	Henry James.
R. C. Jebb.	Austin Dobson.
Dr. Salmon.	J. M. Barrie.
W. W. Skeat.	A. W. Pinero.
Dr. J. A. H. Murray.	W. S. Gilbert.
W. P. Ker.	"Lewis Carroll."

T. E. BROWN.

A EULOGY.

THE death of the Rev. T. E. Brown removes from the slender ranks of modern poets the strongest, cleanest singer of them all. By the few who know and love his verses the loss will be deemed irreparable, so resolute and clear-sighted was he, so straightforward and joyous. He was one of the writers who not only write, but do. He lived very keenly, and his verse reflects his actual life, instead of being, as often happens, merely a dream of what the author would have that life to be. Trials came, but he made the best of them. Friends died, and forthwith he sent across the void a brave greeting to them in heaven. Yet he had none of the arrogance of the exultant optimist. He was filled with humility, and the gentlest, most understanding pity. He offered no new system of philosophy, and he made no discoveries that have not been common-places for centuries. What he did, with all the strength that was in him and in his own characteristic way, was to lay emphasis on the goodness of the marrow of life, and plead for charity in men's dealings with men. His poetry is the poetry of a strong and tender and reverent man, whose piety was as simple as that of George Herbert, and whose literary art and power over words were of the highest.

Mr. Brown's poetry was divided between long stories in the Manx dialect and personal lyrics and elegiacs. The stories are to be found in Betsey Lee, Fo'c's'le Yarns, The Manx Witch, and The Doctor; the shorter poems are in Old John and in recent numbers of the New Review. Mr. Brown turned to verse only when he had something which he wished to say in that form. His most beautiful personal poems were the outlet of private grief. He was also a fine critic, fearless and sympathetic. He knew what he liked and why he liked it. This clearness of intellect marked him.

A clergyman of the Church of England, Mr. Brown was also pantheist to the core. "Cleave the wood and there am I, lift the stone and I am there"—the newly discovered saying of Christ—was said again and again in his own words by this wise and simple seer. He said it in "My Garden":

"A garden is a lovesome thing, God wot!
Rose plot,
Fringed pool,
Ferned grot—
The veriest school
Of peace; and yet the fool
Contends that God is not—
Not God! in gardens! when the eve is cool?
Nay, but I have a sign;
'Tis very sure God walks in mine."

He said it in the sixth lyric of the Clevedon sequence:

"What moves at Cardiff, how a man
At Newport ends the day as he began;
At Weston what adventure may befall,
What Bristol dreams, or if she dreams at all,
Upon the pier, with steps sedate,
I meditate—
Poor souls! whose God is Mammon.
Meanwhile, from Ocean's gate
Keen for the foaming spate,
The true God rushes in the salmon."

He said it, but less directly, in the following glowing, kindling lyric of the spring:

"Sweet breeze that sett'st the summer buds
a-swaying,
Dear lambs amid the primrose meadows playing:
Let me not think!
O floods up'n whose brink
The merry birds are maying, Dream, softly dream! O blessed mother, lead me!
Unsevered from thy girdle—lead me! feed
me
I have no will but thine;
I need not but the juice
Of elemental wine—
Perish remoter use
Of strength reserved for conflict yet to come!
Let me be dumb,
As long as I may feel thy hand—
This, this is all—do ye not understand
How the great Mother mixes all our bloods?
O breeze! O swaying buds!
O lambs, O primroses, O floods!

Yet, even with this valiant creed at his back, all things were not revealed to him. Strong and confident though he was, he could on occasion stand aside and confront God squarely. In the "Clevedon Verses" we find this indictment, prompted by the death of a little son:

"She knelt upon her brother's grave,
My little girl of six years old—
He used to be so good and brave,
The sweetest lamb of all our fold;
He used to shout, he used to sing,
Of all our tribe the little king—
And so unto the turf her ear she laid,
To hark if still in that dark place he played.
"No sound! no sound!
Death's silence was profound;
And horror crept
Into her aching heart, and Dora wept.
If this is as it ought to be,
My God, I leave it unto Thee."

This is the terrible irony of a bereaved father. In the main, it is true, Mr. Brown compelled every bitter thing to yield something of sweet; but not always was it possible. Here, for example, is a piteous sonnet on one of the saddest subjects in all the world. Addressing a street-walker, the poet says:

"You might have been as lovely as the dawn,
Had household sweetness nurtured you, and arts
Domestic, and the strength which love imparts
To lowliness, and chastened ardour drawn
From vital sap that burgeons in the brawn
Around the dreadful arms of Hercules,
And shapes the curvature of Dian's knees,
And has its course in lilies of the lawn.
Even now your flesh is soft and full, defaced
Although it be, and bruised. Unblurched your eyes
Meet mine, as misinterpreting their call,
Then sink, reluctant forced to recognise
That there are men whose look is not unchaste—
O God! the pain! the horror of it all!"

Mr. Brown had a controlling love of children. He had other passions too—

"O God of Heaven!
These are thy gifts, to all thy creatures given—
Love, laughter, light."

So he wrote. The poet had them all. Light was his pre-eminently: he stood ever in the full glare. The joy of the open air pulsed in him. One gets the impression that he wrote always out of doors. Great forces attracted him: the illimitable sea, the generating sun, forgiveness, benevolence. He knew the sea as a comrade, and his poems abound in wonderful hints of it and aspirations for it. In "Star Steering" he cries:

"But, oh, the gladness of the outer sea!
O Venus! Mars!
When shall I steer by you again, O stars!"

And the following scrap of impressionist description is from a piece called "The Bristol Channel":

"The sulky gray old brute!
But when the sunset strokes him,
Or twilight shadows coax him,
He gets so silver milky.
He turns so soft and silky,
He'd make a water-spaniel for King Knut."

Mr. Brown was a northerner by birth, but he settled early in the west—he was master at Clifton for nearly twenty years, and at Gloucester before that,—and the west crept into his nature. Although his heart, however, was ever in the Isle of Man, the West-country may claim half of him for her own, if she cares to, and add his name to those of William Barnes and Stephen Hawker—a noble trio of humane, singing divines. We learn Mr. Brown's favourite scenery from the beautiful "Epistola ad Dakyns" which begins thus:

"Dakyns, when I am dead,
Three places must by you be visited,
Three places excellent,
Where you may ponder what I meant,
And then pass on—
Three places you must visit when I'm gone."

"Yes, meant, not did, old friend!
For neither you nor I shall see the end,
And do the thing we wanted:
Nathless three places will be haunted
By what of me
The earth and air
Shall spare,
And fire and sea
Let be—
Three places only,
Three places, Dakyns."

The first place is by Avon's side; the second is beneath Skiddaw; the third is the little island of Man. That is his strongest love: he will merge, he says, into the island's organic life. Something of the same effect is communicated by the stirring lyric "Clifton":

"I'm here in Clifton, grinding at the mill
My feet for thrice nine barren years have trod,
But there are rocks and waves at Scarlett still,
And gorse runs riot in Glen Chass—thank God!"

"Alert, I seek exactitude of rule,
I step, and square my shoulders with the squad,
But there are blackberries on old Barrule,
And Langness has its heather still—thank God!"

"There is no silence here: the truculent quack
Insists with acrid shriek my ears to prod,
And, if I stop them, fumes: but there's no lack
Of silence still on Carraghyn—thank God!"

"Pragmatic fibs surround my soul, and bate it
With measured phrase that asks the assenting nod;
I rise, and say the bitter thing, and hate it,
But Wordsworth's castle's still at Peel—
thank God!"

"Oh, broken life! Oh, wretched bits of being,
Unrhythmic patched, the even and the odd!
But Bradda still has lichens worth the seeing,
And thunder in her caves—thank God!
thank God!"

The Isle of Man is, of course, the scene of the "Fo'c's'le yarns." The form of these stories of lowly life is rough, the language is racy idiomatic, the rhyming of the simplest, but there is much concealed art in the telling, and the knowledge of human nature exhibited therein is profound. We have no space left in which to quote, nor are passages easily detached; but readers who are not acquainted with these moving little dramas should make good the defect. There is waiting for them much rich humour and rare humanity. The old "Pazon" is not to be forgotten, for kindlier man does not illumine fiction. And once Tom Baynes and the doctor insinuate themselves into the affections, they will not be dislodged. Mr. Brown made everything secondary to the human interest—another instance of his humility; he abstained from all fine writing, all literary epithet, in order that nothing might stand between the reader and the simple virtues of his beloved islanders.

PARIS LETTER.

(From our French Correspondent.)

AFTER the arts of war it is well to be reminded of the arts of peace, and the splendid illustrated edition of M. Demetrius Bikélas' Greek Tales which the firm of Didot have just issued comes appropriately in the lull of national calamities. It is not at so tardy an hour that we have to praise the late Marquis Gueux de Sainte-Hilaire's most perfect rendering in French of those exquisite little pictures of national life, which M. Bikélas has drawn so humorously and so delicately. The illustrations are beautiful, especially those of the Greek artist Gyzis, who illustrates that poignant little masterpiece Philippe Marthas. All the artists are Greek, and each one follows his fancy in a separate tale—the Count of Giallina, MM. Gyzis, Jacobides, Lybrai, Phocas, Ralli, and Rigo. Never was author more brilliantly interpreted by his collaborators of the pencil. And to say that the drawings are worthy of the text is, indeed, saying much, for it would be difficult to treat the short story in a more polished, dainty, academical, and highly finished manner than that of M. Bikélas.

The pity one feels on reading this volume is that the author, so perfectly fashioned by the temper and quality of his distinguished talent for prolonged triumphs in this restricted branch of literature, by the fineness and subtlety of his observation and the quiet grace of his irony, should have scattered his remarkable abilities over so many various other works and pre-occupations instead of reserving himself for narrower and more concentrated achievement. M.

Bikélas, as an artist, was destined for the delicate and scrupulous portrayal of scenes in which every stroke of pen is conscientiously considered, in a style which has no tendency whatever to eloquence or redundancy; sober, cultivated, with just enough irony to give piquancy to the marked tenderness, humour to brighten the exceeding grace; and while he is ever careful to preserve the necessary local colour, he is no less careful to tone this colour with such art and suggestiveness as to keep his subjects well within the broad radius of common humanity, and so afford his translator the occasion to present material which looks quite at home and simple and fresh in its transposition. The tales read as if they had been written in French, and as if French were their natural setting. Les Nouvelles Grecques is a very beautiful and desirable gift-book, superbly mounted.

La Proie, by M. Henri Béranger, is quite a new departure in the monotonous field of latter-day French fiction. A slip backward is often a slip forward, and, if the younger novelists would only from time to time consult Balzac to keep in mind the obvious truth that the interests and features of life are varied, they may even end by forgetting the eternal theme of the moment. M. Béranger has shaken himself free of the boudoir chair, and declined to breathe the restricted atmosphere of existing art; he has the originality to discover that fiction is not comprised of a single element and the usual three persons of the drama, and the result is an extremely strong and interesting novel, with actually, Mighty Powers! a young girl for heroine. Yet not quite a young girl. Here, again, is a typical illustration of our change of point of view. This does not come from Balzac, but is born of the hour. In Balzac's time the young girl of France was still a pensive and amiable maid in the inevitable teens. Seventeen, we know, was Thackeray's age of predilection. Towards twenty-five Balzac transformed the heroine into the femme incomprise. But neither Thackeray nor Balzac would have regarded an unmarried woman of twenty-six as a young girl. This M. Béranger does to his honour. Not so long ago our own male novelists would have depicted M. Béranger's noble and charming Marcelle as a husband-hunting disappointed old maid. Even here in the fashionable novel of Gyp she would be little better—hard, evil-tongued, bitter-natured. But in fresher hands, she remains young, disinterested, declining titled and wealthy husbands, resolved to remain unmated, to the despair of her parents and friends, until she meets the mate of her heart or at least, a husband worthy of interest. The man she chooses, at twenty-six, is a poor enough figure, but his past is relatively clean, he has loved no other woman yet, and, as far as the sterile political atmosphere he breathes permits of honest feeling, he really loves her. Their marriage is, in French fiction, a stupendous innovation; a love marriage on both sides, without on the hero's the degrading necessity of breaking inadmissible ties. And yet it leaves an exceedingly bitter taste of disillusionment in the start of a marriage that ought to have been happy.

Lake all political heroes, Raoul's nature is dry, limited, insincere. We feel he can never reach the high ideal of Marcelle, never feed the aspirations of her lofty soul, will never find a home in a nest so warm and pure as her heart. What is it in politics that creates this bitterness and solitude? What is it in this trivial career that ever casts it without the radius of all that is intimate and tender and true?

The character of Raoul is drawn with unsparing yet measured fidelity. The book is, in every sense of the word, intellectual, that is, written with the aid of thought and knowledge, not dashed off in a cheap search for brilliance and paradox. Raoul, the young man of the world, the literary and political genius, who in school ever regards himself as a future great man, and takes the inevitable Bonaparte for his model, is not overdrawn. There is none of the picturesque excess of Numa Roumestan. He is not in the least cabotin, and his very eloquence is classically cold, reasonable, and convincing. He is the superior political man, of whom a statesman may be made, corruptible by the very nature of his calling, but starting with a sincere and austere ideal of political life. When Young France elected him for Parliament, these youths, famished for reform and virtue, wading in the mud of Panama, really believed, as he did, that they were sending a sage and a saint to speak for them in the Tribune. But their eyes are definitely opened by his brilliant marriage with the tarnished capitalist's daughter, and, after the bachelors' party preceding that event, tell him so. "I am no longer so persuaded as I used to be in listening to you," says one sorrowfully, and Raoul felt himself judged and understood. "I see many," says another disappointed youth, "who aspire to become rich, celebrated, powerful; I see few who desire to live straight and be useful to the humble." The ideal is broken on the altar of vulgar conquest. "Was it for this we elected you?" asks the last to abandon him. Left alone, Raoul feels it is the farewell of youth, of friendship, of bright and exquisite hours. Love remains, but this, too, we know will leave him. Marcelle will suffer first, and then despise him. H. L.

WHAT THE PEOPLE READ.

IV.—A BOOKSTALL KEEPER.

I HAD promised to call at the railway book-stall of a big London terminus to get a parcel of books for a friend. In a den behind the stall sat the custodian of the circulating library, a young man of somewhat serious aspect. He was reading. When I mentioned my friend's name and my own business he looked thoughtfully round the shelves by which he was, so to speak, enclosed; his hand moved to one volume after another with the certainty of one who knows what he wants and where to find it. For a moment he paused at Captains Courageous; then he took it down and laid it with the others on the small counter by his side.

"Miss — doesn't like books of adventures, but she likes Kipling," he said thoughtfully, "so I'll put that in."

He tied up the bundle with a piece of string. "There," he said, as he made it fast, "I think Miss — will be pleased with that selection. I should like to have sent her Miss Violet Hunt's new book, but there is no copy in at present."

"But how do you know what Miss — likes?" I asked.

He looked a little hurt.

"It is my business to know," he said.

"But do you know the taste of all your customers?"

"Certainly; all my regular clients," he replied.

"You see, it saves them the trouble of making up a list. They trust to me, and I have reason to know that they are thoroughly satisfied."

"Then do you read all the books on your shelves?"

"That would be impossible. But I know something about every one, and I know which of my clients each one is suited for. We are very particular as to what books we put into circulation; but even as it is, there are some that I should not send to a young lady—unless, of course, it were specially asked for."

"I suppose the vast majority of the books you send out are novels."

He smiled a little sadly.

"I'm afraid they are," he said. "Not that I think novel reading is wrong in itself. But I fear many people devote themselves to the reading of novels to the exclusion of more serious studies."

"Your own tastes lie in another direction?" I said.

For I had glanced at the book he had down as I entered, and saw that it was Guinness Rogers's The Gospel in the Epistles.

"I never read a novel for my own gratification," he said. "I wouldn't condemn other people. We're told not to judge, you know, but —"

"You go in for theology?" I said.

"Well, not only theology," he replied; "you see, I was destined for the ministry."

"The Church?"

"I belong to the Baptist connexion. But circumstances arose to prevent my studying for the ministry. Still, I have hopes of being able to go to the College in a year or two and being ordained."

"And meantime you are getting all the education you can?"

He nodded. "You see," he said, "in these days a minister is expected to have a wider range than formerly. He must read the literature of other sects, and even that of the sceptics, in order to be able to point out their errors. For example, I have lately been reading Lux Mundi."

"And what are the books you find most helpful?"

"Well, I think the best book I have read for many years is Prof. Drummond's Natural Law in the Spiritual World. Not that I would endorse all his views; but he gives one a new outlook upon things spiritual."

"And Robert Elsmere? You can't condemn a novel like that?"

"No. Robert Elsmere presents a great problem in the form of narrative. Sermons might be preached on Robert Elsmere. But — now here is a book that is better than any novel that was ever written."

He handed me Dean Farrar's Life of Christ.

"Do you know," he said, "if there is any book about those Sayings of Jesus that have been discovered in Egypt?"

"I believe not," I said. "But there is some kind of official report lately published on all the MSS. that were dug up."

"I am not clear," he said, "how we are to regard these Sayings. Will they have the authority of the Gospels?"

He swung the parcel of novels in his hand as we discussed the question, until a hurried lady came in to receive from him the bundle of books which he considered suitable for her reading. And I left, wondering that a man should read novels as a matter of business and theology for pleasure.

THE BOOK MARKET.

THE SALE OF THE WAVERLEY NOVELS.

THE NEW EDITIONS.

THE fact that four or five entirely new editions of the Waverley Novels have just been put upon the market suggested a little inquiry into the matter. We sought to ascertain from leading booksellers: (1) How these editions are selling? (2) Whether the new supply of the novels is in excess of the present demand? (3) What kind of edition is considered the most ideal for popular use? (4) Whether Scott holds his own among the moderns? and (5) Whether complete sets of the Waverley Novels are much bought by the mass of book buyers?

LONDON (W.).

We have received some interesting replies to these questions. A well-known Oxford-street firm writes:

The demand for the Waverley Novels is as great as ever, but we think the supply is considerably in excess of the demand. During the past year the public have been subscribing to five or six editions, and just recently four new editions have been put upon the market, in addition to which the leading novels are being issued by two firms in their series of non-copyright books. Messrs. Dent's pocket edition is charmingly produced in a handy size, and is being purchased by book-lovers; but being in forty-eight volumes it is too expensive to become popular. Mr. Nimmo's new 'Border Edition,' and Messrs. Black's new 'Dryburgh Edition' are exceedingly cheap, but we think the demand is not large enough to ensure the success of both editions. Messrs. Black's 1s. 6d. edition is also a marvel of cheapness, and should sell well in sets. The public taste is so varied that each edition secures a certain number of purchasers, and consequently we do not anticipate a phenomenal success for any particular edition.

On the whole, there is no declension in the sale of Scott's novels, and we are of opinion that they will continue to sell for many years to come.

LONDON (E.C.).

Another London firm replies to our several questions as follows:

We find that Messrs. Dent's and Mr. Nimmo's editions are selling well; Messrs. Service & Paton's moderately; Messrs. Black's two editions, having only appeared in the last few days, have hardly commenced to sell yet.

We think the supply of new Waverley Novels is decidedly in excess of the demand.

Messrs. Black's 'Standard' Edition (25 vols.), at 2s. 6d., is, in our opinion, the idea popular edition; but the 'Author's Favourite Edition' (48 vols.) is the beau-ideal edition.

Undoubtedly Scott is holding his position with the public.

The majority of our customers who buy Vol. I. of these sets complete them.

To sum up, in our experience, Scott, as a novelist, is only second in demand to Dickens.

LONDON (W.C.).

Another London correspondent sends us these careful notes on the five new editions before the public:

We are of opinion that the number of fresh editions serves to create fresh demand for these very popular novels. A few comments are appended—

1. Messrs. Dent's edition in forty-eight volumes, although a long set, appeals to buyers of pretty books, and is going fairly well. But he would be a rash statistician who would attempt to fix the number of sets that will eventually be sold from the sale of the first volume.

2. Mr. Nimmo's re-issue of the 'Border Edition' in twenty-four volumes, at 3s. 6d. per volume, undoubtedly takes the lead this year, as it is the cheapest and best produced book ever offered for the money; for a popular book it is almost perfect.

3. Messrs. Service & Paton's edition at 2s. 6d. comprises only a few odd volumes, and will not be completed as a set. It calls for no particular comment.

4. Messrs. A. & C. Black's re-issue of the 'Dryburgh Edition' in twenty-five volumes, at 3s. 6d., will have to compete with the new edition of the 'Border Edition,' with which it compares rather unfavourably. It would have been wiser to have withheld it for awhile.

5. Messrs. A. & C. Black's 'Victoria Edition' at 1s. 6d. per volume (twenty-five volumes) is, however, the best cheap edition yet produced, and will undoubtedly take a lot of beating—print, paper and binding being exceptionally good. We anticipate a very large sale for this, as the complete set will only cost 28s.

The demand for 'Scott' is steadily increasing, and at no time have buyers had such a large variety of editions from which to choose.

The system of publishing in monthly volumes is a great inducement to small buyers, who invariably complete their sets. Of the foregoing, Mr. Nimmo's re-issue of the 'Border Edition,' at 3s. 6d. the volume, most nearly approaches our idea of a good practical edition for popular use. The present sale of the Waverley novels is, of course, by no means confined to those mentioned, as, from the six-penny paper editions to the original issue of the 'Border' and 'Dryburgh Editions,' the demand is very brisk.

CAMBRIDGE.

From Cambridge we have the following categorical replies to our inquiries:

We find Messrs. Dent's edition is selling best.

We think the supply is in excess of the present demand.

We consider Messrs. Nimmo's new issue of the "Border Edition" to be the most ideal for popular use.

There is a continual small demand for Scott in Cambridge.

Most of our customers who purchase Scott generally procure a complete set.

OXFORD.

An Oxford bookseller favours us with this reply:

Though so many editions of Scott's novels are being put on the market just now as to make one wonder where they all go, there is in Oxford a fairly brisk demand for them. Conditions here are, of course, peculiar, and among so many young men there are always a certain number laying the foundations of future libraries. These very naturally take in volumes of Scott's novels as they appear at intervals, and generally persevere to the end. The favourite editions are those issued in a form that would have commended itself to Dr. Johnson. The depreciation in the beautiful, but bulky, 'Abbotsford Edition,' I think, bears out this statement.

EDINBURGH.

Edinburgh also gives short answers of interest:

Messrs. Dent's & Nimmo's 3s. 6d. (not 6s.) editions are going well.

Always a demand for Scott, although five new editions seem too many.

As to the ideal edition, this question is not easy to answer, but comfort in reading—Dent's edition.

Scott is certainly holding his own.

Many buy the complete set.

BRISTOL.

A West-country correspondent replies as follows (note his startling suggestion that yet another edition is called for):

The success of the expensive 'Border' showed the demand for Scott among well-to-do readers, and the cheap re-issue at 3s. 6d. (against 12s.) will be sure to find a good sale with people of taste but limited purses.

Messrs. Dent's issue, especially in 'lamb's skin,' appeals to dilletanti buyers, and this firm has found that this class numbers thousands.

There is still an opening for a 'people's' Scott, and we venture to think that the cheaper of Messrs. Black's two admirable issues has missed this sale by a tactical mistake.

BRIGHTON.

A Brighton bookseller informs us:

In spite of the ever-increasing flood of new Fiction which bursts upon the literary market continually, and is intensified at the opening of each season, it is beyond dispute that the sales of the works of Dickens and Scott never seem to decrease; and although there are some five new editions of the Waverley Novels just put on the market, each of them seems likely to find purchasers. It is not, however, altogether beneficial to the bookseller, as it means increased stock without a proportionate increased sale.

As far as one can judge at present, Mr.

Nimmo's 'Border Edition' will take the first place for general popularity, although Messrs. Black's 1s. 6d. one is a marvellous production at the price.

Messrs. Dent's pocket edition is most dainty and portable, but the number of volumes will, we fear, prevent it having the sale it deserves.

EXETER.

Lastly, hear the voice of Exeter—farthest removed from the scenes of the Waverley Novels, yet not least enthusiastic:

In reply to your favour respecting the demand for the various editions of Scott's novels—all editions sell steadily. It appears as if the public could not have enough of Scott. In my opinion no author is so largely purchased in complete editions.

D R A M A.

THE Chinese drama is still practically a closed book to Europeans, though a slight glimpse was given of it a few years ago in a yellow covered volume published in Paris under the title of "Le Théâtre des Chinois," by General Tcheng-Ki-Tong, military attaché to the Chinese Embassy. General Tcheng-Ki-Tong, whose literary labours for the enlightenment of the "foreign devil" did not find favour at the Court of Peking—at all events, he was afterwards recalled and, it is said, "disgraced"—was as complimentary as he could be to European drama, but he did not disguise his opinion that the best work of our greatest authors would fail before a Chinese audience. For in Chinese literature, and apparently in Chinese life too, the dominating passion is not love between the sexes, but filial piety and respect for ancestors. Learning is also highly esteemed, and the dénouement to a Chinese play is often sought in the result of a literary "exam." As a rule the jeune premier of the Chinese stage is a young student striving to win his literary laurels. If Corneille had been a Chinese author he would doubtless have written:

"Sors vainqueur d'un concours dont Chimène est le prix."

But filial piety is the mainspring of the Chinese drama, the motive force which keeps the action going, prompting the characters to noble deeds; and the conventional dramatis personæ comprise a high dignitary, an aged father, a young student, a comic man, an old woman, a soubrette, a go-between, a young girl of exalted birth, and a concubine or maitresse légitime, the last-named being brought into opposition with the legitimate spouse for the purpose of creating domestic embarrassments. Curiously enough, while the drama occupies a high place in the estimation of the people, the actors themselves are held in contempt. No human being except a criminal stands lower in the social scale than the Chinese actor. General Tcheng-Ki-Tong styles him un infâme.

UNDENIABLY it would be interesting to import a Chinese play, with actors, scenery, and stage complete, but it would require to be a genuine product of the Flowery Land, and, therefore, very different from the two so-called Chinese plays which have raced each other across the Atlantic from New York, and established themselves at the Lyric and the Globe respectively. "The Cat and the Cherub" and "The First Born" are no more Chinese than "The Mikado," as played at the Savoy, or "The Geisha," at Daly's, is Japanese. An attempt is made in both to represent the external features of life in Chinatown, San Francisco, and in this perhaps "The First Born" is the more successful. But the story is of American origin, and it is played without exception by American actors masquerading as Chinamen, circumstances which are not only fatal to its authenticity, but bring it down to the level of an ordinary variety entertainment. Imagine how English life would fare at the hands of a company of Chinese actors who had picked up their notions of it in a treaty port!

THE rivalry between the two pseudo-Chinese companies and the close similarity of the pieces they bring with them throw an instructive light on the nature of copyright in America. A Mr. Fernald having seen something of Chinese life in Hong Kong, and the Chinese quarter of San Francisco, wrote a series of sketches on that subject in an American magazine. Promptly one of his anecdotes was dramatised by Mr. Francis Powers, an American actor, who garnished it with characterisation of his own, and the piece found favour in the eyes of the New York public under the title of "The First Born." The original author was unable to protect his ideas, but it occurred to him that he might just as well try to reap some advantage from his work in dramatic form too. Hence the production of "The Cat and the Cherub." Of the respective merits of these versions, brought out here almost simultaneously, the London playgoer has now an opportunity of judging. While "The First Born" is more detailed on its spectacular side, it will be generally conceded that "The Cat and the Cherub" is superior in point of dramatic workmanship. The child of a wealthy merchant is stolen by the keeper of an opium-den for the sake of the reward likely to be offered for its recovery. It is not alone the money that tempts this rascal. He is represented as being in love with a beautiful girl, whom he is desirous of purchasing from her father. But the girl has another suitor, son of a learned doctor, and that young man happens to discover the stolen child's whereabouts. Before he can restore the cherub to its sorrowing father, however, he is murdered by the opium dealer. Soon the child is recovered for good, and a new dramatic motive springs up in the vengeance vowed by the learned doctor against the unknown murderer of his son. Who is this murderer? The house knows, but the doctor at first can only suspect. He draws the culprit into conversation, convinces himself of his guilt, and strangles him on a bench by night with his own pig-tail. Now comes the culminating scene of the little play, one which might be employed with equal effect in a purely English or French melodrama. A policeman coming along, the murderer props up the body of his victim on the bench and pretends to be engaged in earnest conversation with it until the danger of detection is over.

SUCH is Mr. Fernald's story. The scene is an alley in Chinatown. A few itinerant hawkers pass and re-pass, and the learned doctor discusses the railway demon, the electric light demon, and the elevator demon with the gossips. In a corner of the scene a party of coolies are seen gambling. The pictorial indications of Chinese life are, however, meagre. Attention is concentrated upon the dramatic action, and "The Cat and the Cherub," as far as it goes, is unquestionably an engrossing little play. Turning to "The First Born," what do we find? The dramatic motive is the same, but still more meagre. The child is stolen, not by an opium-den keeper, but by its mother, who had eloped with a lover. The father attempts to rescue it, knife in hand, and in the scuffle which ensues the child is killed. Then the bereaved father vows vengeance against the man who has wrecked his home, and kills him as he passes his door by night by stabbing him in the back. At that juncture the policeman, as before, saunters up, whereupon the murderer props up his victim in the doorway, making him look like a living man, until the myrmidon of the law has turned the corner. No love interest here, but only paternal affection, coupled with the vengeance of a betrayed husband. On the other hand, the va-et-vient of the Chinese quarter, though, for the most part, undramatic, is more vividly displayed. The learned doctor is a merely incidental personage; itinerant hawkers bawl their wares; a young courtesan—euphemistically styled a "bond-woman"—strolls about; a laundry, a shop, and a gambling-den are seen in operation; a party of American tourists pass; and the gossips discuss, in a gibberish supposed to be Chinese, the latest edict issued against their secret societies. In neither piece is the acting particularly effective, and, such as it is, it is conducted in a language which is almost painfully American.

How far are the salient features of these plays distinctively Chinese? The paternal interest is certainly so, and, as will be seen, it is common to both versions of Mr. Fernald's story. The contemplated purchase of a wife in "The Cat and the Cherub" may also be regarded as a piece of accurate observation; but side by side with this there is a love-passage (between the merchant's daughter and her fancé) which may safely be put down as spurious—an episode intended for the delectation of the Anglo-Saxon palate. Equally dubious is the elopement treated of in "The First Born." It does not appear that conjugal fidelity is of much importance in a Chinese household, where by law a husband is entitled to establish as many concubines as he can put up with; and this is, doubtless, the main reason why the ordinary love interest of the European drama ending in marriage strikes the Chinese mind as foolish or extravagant. The learned doctor of both pieces is a Chinese figure, as far as he goes; but there is no indication of that popular veneration for learning of which nearly every genuine Chinese play, even the most farcical, shows traces. As they stand, these two essentially "bogus" productions hardly justify the eagerness which their respective promoters have shown to place them before the English public.

J. F. N.

THE WEEK.

MRS. MEYNELL'S expected anthology, The Flower of the Mind, comes to hand in cloth covers of delicate green and gold. The poems are arranged under the names of their writers, and Mrs. Meynell contributes an introduction and very full notes. The principle on which the collection has been made is explained by Mrs. Meynell in her Introduction, from which we quote one passage:

"Inasmuch as even the best of all poems are the best upon innumerable degrees, the size of most anthologies has gone far to decide what degrees are to be gathered in and what left without. The best might make a very small volume, and be indeed the best, or a very large volume, and be still indeed the best. But my labour has been to do somewhat differently—to gather nothing that did not surpass a certain boundary-line of genius. Gray's 'Elegy,' for instance, would rightly be placed at the head of everything below that mark. It is, in fact, so near to the work of genius as to be most directly, closely, and immediately rebuked by genius; it meets genius at close quarters, and almost deserves that Shakespeare himself should defeat it. Mediocrity said its own true word in the 'Elegy':

'Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air.'

But greatness had said its own word also in a sonnet:

'The summer flower is to the summer sweet,
Though to itself it only live and die.'

The reproof here is too sure; not always does it touch so quick, but it is not seldom manifest, and it makes exclusion a simple task."

MR. GRANT ALLEN the philosopher is momentarily more in evidence than Mr. Grant Allen the novelist. It has been known for some time that he was at work upon a serious and lengthy book dealing with the origins of religions. The volume now appears under the title of The Evolution of the Idea of God. It is very bulky, running to considerably over 400 pages; but it is to the credit of the publisher that its weight is less than the eye leads one to suspect. Mr. Grant explains in his Preface that his method is constructive, not destructive:

"Instead of setting out to argue away or demolish a deep-seated and ancestral element in our complex nature, this book merely posits for itself the psychological question, 'By what successive steps did men come to frame for themselves the conception of a Deity?'—or, if the reader so prefers it, 'How did we arrive at our knowledge of God?' It seeks provisionally to answer those profound and important questions by reference to the earliest beliefs of savages, past or present, and to the testimony of historical documents and ancient monuments. It does not concern itself at all with the validity or invalidity of the ideas in themselves; it does but endeavour to show how inevitable they were, and how a man's relation with the external universe was certain a priori to beget them as of necessity."

IN Biography we have Memorials of the Life and Writings of Solomon Caesar Malan, D.D. Dr. Malan died a very few years ago, and his eminence as an Oriental scholar, his amazing linguistic attainments, and his general versatility (he was a clever artist) were warrant for this book, which is written by his eldest surviving son. Dipping into it casually, we note the following passage, in which some of Dr. Malan's tastes are lightly touched on:

"He never went to a theatre in all his life, nor to a ball. He never read a novel, nor cared for any book of common light literature. Magazines and reviews for the most part he eschewed, denominating them 'trash,' though he would occasionally peruse an article on some subject in which he was interested. He scanned the Times daily, and followed the summaries of Parliamentary debate sufficiently to master the general drift of political questions. He read the Saturday Review for some years, until he took offence at a certain article, after which he never looked at the paper again. He enjoyed the cartoons in Judy caricaturing the Liberal Government. He enjoyed a good ghost story, and professed to regard black cats as uncanny."

MR. EDMUND GOSSE contributes the volume on Modern English Literature to the series of "Short Histories of the Literatures of the World," which he is editing for Mr. Heinemann. Mr. Gosse writes in his preface:

"The principal aim which I have had before me in writing this volume has been to show the movement of English literature. I have desired above all else to give the reader, whether familiar with the books mentioned or not, a feeling of the evolution of English literature in the primary sense of the term, the disentanglement of the skein, the slow and regular unwinding, down succeeding generations of the threads of literary expression."

MR. HENLEY'S expected anthology of English Lyrics arrives as we go to press, and is commented on in our Notes and News columns.

New works of fiction are catalogued and described elsewhere.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

- CARMEL IN IRELAND. By Father Patrick of St. Joseph. Burns & Oates. 3s. 6d.
 HEBERIAN AND HIS AGE. By Robert Skinner, D.D. Eyre & Spottiswoode.
 THE INTERNATIONAL CRITICAL COMMENTARY: A CRITICAL AND EXEGETICAL COMMENTARY ON THE EPISTLES TO THE EPHESIANS AND TO THE COLOSSIANS. By Rev. T. K. Abbott. T & T. Clark. 10s. 6d.
 THE CHRIST OF HISTORY AND OF EXPERIENCE. By Rev. David W. Forrest, M.A. T & T. Clark. 10s. 6d.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

- MEMOIRS OF THE CAMACS OF CO. DOWN. Edited by Frank Owen Fisher. Jarrold & Sons. 21s.
- MINUTES OF THE COMMITTEE FOR THE RELIEF OF PLUNDERED MINISTERS, AND OF THE TRUSTEES FOR THE MAINTENANCE OF MINISTERS: RELATING TO LANCAIRE AND CHESHIRE, 1843-60. Part II., 1860-60. Edited by W. A. Shaw, M.A. Printed for the Record Society. 1896.
- PLEADINGS AND DEPOSITIONS IN THE DUCKY COURT OF LANCASTER: TIME OF HENRY VIII. Edited by Lieut-Colonel Henry Fishwick, F.S.A. The Record Society.
- TWELVE INDIAN STATESMEN. By George Smith, C.I.E. John Murray. 10s. 6d.
- THE RETURN OF CHAOS. By Charles Neeld Salter. Kegan Paul. 6s.
- SOLOMON CESAR MALAN, D.D.: MEMOIRS OF HIS LIFE AND WRITINGS. By Rev. A. N. Malan, M.A. John Murray. 18s.
- THE WOLSELEY SERIES: WITH THE ROYAL HEADQUARTERS IN 1870-71. By General J. von Verdy du Vernois. Edited by Capt. Walter H. James. Kegan Paul. 10s. 6d.
- COMMUNISM IN CENTRAL EUROPE IN THE TIME OF THE REFORMATION. By Karl Kantaky. Translated by J. L. and E. G. Milliken. T. Fisher Unwin.
- MEMOIRS, JOURNAL, AND BOTANICAL CORRESPONDENCE OF CHARLES CARDALE BASINGTON. Macmillan & Bowes. 10s. 6d.
- MEDALS AND DECORATIONS OF THE BRITISH ARMY AND NAVY. By John Horsley Mayo. 2 vols. Archibald Constable & Co. £3 3s.
- POPULAR COUNTY HISTORIES: A HISTORY OF CAMBRIDGESHIRE. By Rev. Edward Conybeare. Elliot Stock. 7s. 6d.
- LONDON RIVERSIDE CHURCHES. By A. E. Daniell. Illustrated by A. Ansted. A. Constable & Co. 6s.
- FALKLANDS. By "T. L.," the author of "The Life of Sir Kenneth Digby." Longmans, Green & Co. 10s. 6d.
- TEMPLE CLASSICS: THE LIFE OF SAMUEL JOHNSON. J. M. Dent & Co. Vol. IV.
- BURNS FROM HEAVEN. With some other Poems by Hamish Hendry. David Bryce & Son.

POETRY, CRITICISM, BELLES LETTRES.

- HAWTHORNE'S FIRST DIARY. Edited by Samuel T. Pickard. Kegan Paul.
- PENCIL RHYMES AND POETRY. By George Ashmore Roberts. Digby, Long & Co. 1s. 6d.
- A MOORLAND BROOK, AND OTHER POEMS. By Evan T. Keane. Digby, Long & Co.
- A SHORT HISTORY OF MODERN ENGLISH LITERATURE. By Edmund Gosse. Wm. Heinemann. 6s.
- LAST STUDIES. By Hubert Crackanthorpe. Wm. Heinemann.
- POEMS AND SONGS. By W. E. Brockbank. T. Fisher Unwin. 5s.
- THE POETRY OF SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE. Edited by Richard Garnett. Lawrence & Bullen.
- A TALE FROM BOCCACCIO. By Arthur Coles Armstrong. Archibald & Co. 5s.
- ROMANCE OF A ROSE: A DRAMA. By M. S. Digby, Long & Co. 5s.
- THE FIRST EDITION OF KEBLE'S "CHRISTIAN YEAR," BEING A FACSIMILE OF THE EDITIO PRINCIPES. With a Preface by the Bishop of Rochester. Elliot Stock.
- THE MASTERS OF VICTORIAN LITERATURE, 1837-1897. By Richard D. Graham. James Thin (Edinburgh).
- THE SHEPHERD'S CALENDAR. By Edmund Spencer. Illustrated by Walter Crane. Harper & Brothers.
- VARIA. By Agnes Repplier. Gay & Bird.
- THE PEOPLE FOR WHOM SHAKESPEARE WROTE. By Charles Dudley Warner. Harper & Brothers.
- LAYS OF IONA, AND OTHER POEMS. By S. J. Stone, M.A. Longmans, Green & Co. 6s.
- CATEBY: A TRAGEDY OF THE GUNPOWDER PLOT. Billing & Sons.
- THE FLOWER OF THE MIND: A CHOICE AMONG THE BEST POEMS. Made by Alice Meynell. Grant Richards.
- TEMPLE CLASSICS: THE ESSAYS OF MICHAEL LORD OF MONTAIGNE. Vol. VI. J. M. Dent & Co. 1s. 6d.

SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- THE ELEMENTS OF HYPNOTISM. By Ralph Harry Vincent. Kegan Paul. 5s.
- STUDIES IN PSYCHICAL RESEARCH. By Frank Podmore, M.A. 12s.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

- WITH THE CONQUERING TURK: CONFESSIONS OF A BASHI-BAZOUK. By G. W. Stevens. W. Blackwood & Sons. 10s. 6d.
- OLD SAMOA: OR, FLOTSAM AND JETSAM FROM THE PACIFIC. By Rev. John B. Stair. The Religious Tract Society. 6s.

STANFORD'S COMPENDIUM OF GEOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL: NORTH AMERICA: Vol. I., CANADA AND NEWFOUNDLAND. By S. E. Dawson. Edward Stanford. 15s.

IN JUTLAND WITH A CYCLE. By Charles Edwardes. Chapman & Hall.

EDUCATIONAL.

- HINTS TO TEACHERS ON THE CHOICE OF GEOGRAPHICAL BOOKS. By Hugh Robert Mill, D.Sc. Longmans. 3s. 6d.
- EXTRAITS DE THUCYDIDE: TEXTE REVU ET ANNOTÉ. PAR Amédée Hauvette. Librairie Ch. Delagrave (Paris).
- THE ANCIENT USE OF GREEK ACCENTS IN READING AND CHANTING. By G. T. Cartuthers, M.A. Bradbury, Agnew & Co.
- SCENES OF ENGLISH LIFE: LESSONS IN ENGLISH ON THE SERIES METHOD: CHILDREN'S LIFE. George Philip & Son. 1s.

JUVENILE BOOKS.

- NURSERY RHYMES: WITH PICTURES TO PAINT. Review of Reviews Office.
- THE LADY OF HOLT DEWE. By Emma Marshall. Griffith.
- FARRAN. DANISH FAIRY TALES AND LEGENDS. By Hans Christian Andersen. Bliss, Sands & Co. 2s. 6d.
- THE KNIGHTS OF THE WHITE ROSE. By George Griffith. F. V. White & Co. Wild Kitty. By L. T. Meade. W. & R. Chambers. WONDERFUL TOOLS. By Edith Cartington. George Bell & Sons. AN OLD FIELD SCHOOL-GIRL. By Marion Harland. Sampson Low. WITH CROCKETT AND BOWIE; OR, FIGHTING FOR THE LONG-STAR FLAG: A TALE OF TEXAS. By Kirk Munroe. Blackie & Son. 5s. THE GOLDEN GALLEON. By Robert Leighton. Blackie & Son. 5s. ELFIN'S MAGICIAN. By Fred Whishaw. W. & R. Chambers. 2s. 6d. THE KING'S STORY-BOOK. Edited by George Laurence Gomme. Archibald Constable & Co. 6s. THE DIAMOND FAIRY BOOK. Illustrated by H. R. Millar. Hutchinson & Co. THE COMPANIONS OF JESUS. The Sunday School Union. NEW TESTAMENT STORIES. By E. A. Macdonald. The Sunday School Union. THE VANISHED YACHT. By E. H. Burridge. T. Nelson & Sons. 2s. 6d.

MISCELLANEOUS.

- CONTINENTAL CHIT-CHAT. By Mabel Humbert. F. V. White & Co. THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE, 1897. Isbister & Co. 7s. 6d. GOOD WORDS, 1897. Isbister & Co. 7s. 6d. THE DICTIONARY AND PLACE NAMES OF SCOTLAND: TWO POPULAR LECTURES. By Jakob Jakobsen. T. & J. Manson (Leith). AUSTRAL ENGLISH: A DICTIONARY OF AUSTRALIAN WORDS, PHRASES, AND USAGES. By Edward E. Morris. Macmillan & Co. 16s. CONSUMPTION: HOW TO AVOID IT, AND WEAK EYES. By B. Schwarzbach. Digby, Long & Co. THE QUEEN'S HOUNDS, AND STAG-HUNTING RECOLLECTIONS. By Lord Ribblesdale. Longmans, Green & Co. 25s. THE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF SPORT. Part IX. Lawrence & Bullen. 2s. THE GOSPEL OF HUMANITY: SELECTIONS FROM TOLSTOI. Ideal Publishing Union, Ltd. 1s.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

"Mrs. Browning's Letters." Edited by Frederic G. Kenyon.

THIS is the kind of book that receives long notices. With a word of praise or blame for the editor, the critics wax fat on extracts. Sometimes they are so eager to give extracts that they forget the editor. The Scotsman, for instance, forgets that Mr. Kenyon edited this volume with considerable trouble, considerable brain-wear. But it gives splendid extracts. The Times is more just:

"The editor, whose name itself is a guarantee that he is the right man for the work, has supplemented the letters with a slender thread of narrative, sufficient to make of these two volumes a thoroughly adequate biography. The selection of the letters and the interposed narrative are both done with excellent taste, and though at first sight one feels that each volume might with advantage have been shortened by fifty pages, in the case of anybody so interesting as Mrs. Browning it is, perhaps, a good fault to have too much material rather than too little."

The Westminster Gazette has a similar remark about the length of the book.

Regarding Mrs. Browning's letters, the Times distinguishes between early and feeble letters and her later and interesting ones. "At no period of her life can one call her a sound critic of either books or men." Yet the same critic quotes from one of her letters this "neat little antithesis"—Mrs. Browning is touching off Mme. Mohl:

"She is a clever, shrewd woman, but most eminently, and on all subjects, a woman; her passions having her thoughts inside them, instead of her thoughts her passions. That's the common distinction between women and men, is it not?"

The Telegraph thus distinguishes the character of the letters:

"The qualities of her genius are shown elsewhere than in this correspondence, for, unlike some of the greatest of letter-writers, she does not throw the whole strength of her intellectual power into her communications with her friends. But she paints her character with all the surety of unconscious delineation—a character sweet, pure, and lovable, as we always knew it to be full of ardent impulses, hasty, emotional, hating the mere semblance of a wrong or an injustice, true to her friends, and with the strongest possible faith in the nobility of the life she had marked out for herself."

And the Scotsman says:

"Mrs. Browning was an excellent letter-writer, frank, sincere, natural. There is not in these two volumes a line which seems to have been written for literary effect. At the same time, it may be said that, just perhaps because they are so unaffected, the letters rarely impress one as the productions of a woman of genius. They have no literary strut or poetic rapture in their style. . . . Mrs. Browning had a vigorous and independent mind, and her own mind is in all her letters. They have individuality, and therefore interest, even when they have, as most of them have, little or nothing to satisfy or to tickle curiosity."

"Life of Dr. Pusey, D.D." By H. P. Liddon, and Others. Vol. IV.

THIS book receives the same kind of handling as Mrs. Browning's Letters. The Standard remarks that the volume "contains few personal reminiscences—dissociated, that is, from the leading topics in which Dr. Pusey was interested." The Pall Mall Gazette regrets this:

"Had they been content to give us personal features of Dr. Pusey's life, to allow events and incidents to tell their own story, to indicate the development of Dr. Pusey's spirit and character, and to draw us at last within the circle of sorrowful mourners at his dying bed, we should have been touched with a lively sympathy, and we should have been readily able to associate ourselves with the affectionate reverence which drew for us the portrait. But the biography is a manifesto, and it is as such that we fear it will be read."

The Athenaeum says the volume is "inevitably less interesting than its predecessors," but it has praise for the editors, who, "if they have produced a rather colourless narrative, cannot be held accountable." Most of the critics dwell upon Canon Liddon's beautiful account of Pusey's last days—the only portion of the volume from his pen.

THE critics are a shade less "Lochinvar," kind to Mr. Crockett than they used to be. Lochinvar, says the Athenæum, "is not Mr. Crockett's best work, but it is far better than some we have seen of late . . . . Some writers would have made more of William of Orange, and many would have produced a better proportioned plot; but in places, notably the description of the island caves, we recognise the author at his best." The Telegraph considers that the story is "always bright and full of stir and movement," which is good praise; but the writer takes leave of Mr. Crockett coldly. "He writes pleasantly enough, but the tale has been more than twice told, and we begin to tire of the familiar air, even when played with variations."

The Scotsman is rather severe, and makes the following points.

"The book calls to mind Reade's 'Cloister and the Hearth,' for in each we have a young lover seeking over land and sea for his lost lady, and in each we have an honest soldier who, for friendship's sake, accompanies the youth and shares all his bold doings and hairbreadth escapes. But Jack Scarlett is not to be compared with the optimist in 'The Cloister and the Hearth.' Indeed, none of Mr. Crockett's chief characters win the reader's sympathy or interest. . . ."

"The heroine is a dainty enough figure, especially when she goes marketing in the Dutch town of Amersfort; but her character is also incongruous, for we have her at one time represented as strong and steadfast, and capable of defying her father and her friends, and going off into voluntary exile for the sake of her opinions. Then we suddenly discover her faithless and weak, and consenting to marry the rival whom she hates, and who has ever been her enemy and her lover's. And this is told quite carelessly and without apology, and as a matter of course. . . ."

"Those who know anything of the sea will be justly incensed at the nautical ignorance that is displayed, not only in such minor details as the calling of a vessel's bows her 'prow,' and the speaking of 'the rope of the sheet,' but also —," &c.

"The Skipper's Wooing," By W. W. Jacobs. THE humour of this book has been very generally appreciated. The Spectator says handsomely: "In The Skipper's Wooing, as in Many Cargoes, Mr. W. W. Jacobs proves himself to belong to the tribe of benefactors." The Saturday defines Mr. Jacobs's sphere:

"Mr. Jacobs has taken to his heart those who go down to the Channel in ships—the sailor-men of the coasting schooner—and he is in the way of making them his own people. He has watched them with the sympathetic eyes of a friend—eyes not too keen for their faults, the smudges in the human documents—and the result is a humane proportion in the characters—whole pictures of the men. With an artful carelessness of externals, he seems to build up these characters from the inside, presenting with so sure a touch their essential idiosyncrasies that, though he never describes their faces, figures, gait, or clothes, he would be a stupid reader indeed who met Sam, the Cook, or the Skipper without recognising them as soon as they spoke."

The Bookman says that the humour of the book is "very genial, very laughter-provoking, very unaffected, in temper American rather than English."

MR. ELKIN MATHEWS' SELECTED LIST.

AN ATTIC in BOHEMIA: A Diary

Without Dates. By E. H. LACON WATSON, Author of "The Unconscious Humourist." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"Mr. Watson discourses with shrewdness and humour upon such topics as diaries, tea and muffins, golf and matrimony. . . . There are few writers who can treat so deftly and so entertainingly the most commonplace feelings and incidents of everyday life."—Scotsman.

"Another pleasant budget of essays is entitled 'An Attic in Bohemia,' by Mr. Lacon-Watson. Mr. Watson preaches the comfortable doctrine of the desirability of loafing without being idle, and discourses with genuine humour and some philosophy. If the subject-matter is the obvious, the style is singularly fresh and graceful; it is always easy without losing a pleasant literary flavour and without degenerating into slipshod slanginess. His humour is spontaneous (or seems to be so, because he has the art of concealing his art), and a trifle subacid at times, whereby it loses nothing in piquancy. Of the seventeen essays which make up this little volume, there is not one which does not contain some happy fancy, some quaint conceit, or some shrewd reflection."—Pall Mall Gazette.

IDYLLS of SPAIN. Varnished Pictures of Travel in the Peninsula. By ROWLAND THIELMERE. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

"An amusing book of travel. . . . The outcome of an exact observer's wanderings in Zaragoza, Barcelona, and other districts. They are less technically topographical than humorously human. They are brightly written, and thoroughly enjoyable."—Daily Mail.

"A bright, gossip volume. . . . Some passages are perfect prose poems, and make the reader long for the fragrant breezes of the peninsula."—Publisher's Circular.

"The book has roused many a pang of Reiselust." Bookman.

"It is an enjoyable journey, and we put down his volume with the thought that if all who write books of travel were as well equipped, life's way would be easier." Daily Chronicle.

THE JOY of MY YOUTH. A Novel.

By CLAUD NICHOLSON. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

TWO ESSAYS upon MATTHEW

ARNOLD, with his Letters to the Author. By ARTHUR GALTON. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

SELECTED POEMS from the Works of the Hon. RODEN NOBL. With a Biographical and Critical Essay by PERCY ADDLESHAW. With Two Portraits. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

ENGLISH LANDS and LETTERS.

The Later Georges to Victoria. By DONALD G. MITCHELL ("Ik Marvel"), Author of "Reveries of a Bachelor." Thick crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

Mr. Mitchell concludes with this volume his survey of the field of English literature. It is written with the charm that characterises everything from his pen, and his account of Byron, Scott, Landor, Southey, De Quincey, Wilson, Leigh Hunt, Hazlitt, Hallam, and so on, is, as ever, most comprehensive.

BABY LAYS. By Ada Stow. With

16 Designs by Edith Calvert. Royal 16mo, 1s. 6d. net. [Second Edition in the Press.

ADMIRALS ALL, and Other Verses.

By HENRY NEWBOLT. (Shilling Garland, No. VIII.) Fcap. 8vo, 1s. net.

"Genuinely inspired patriotic verse. . . . There are but a dozen pieces in this shillingworth, but there is no dross among them."—St. James's Gazette.

IRELAND, with Other Poems. By

LIONEL JOHNSON. (Uniform with "Poems.") Crown 8vo, 5s. net. [Immediately.

BAD LADY BETTY. A Drama in

Three Acts. By W. D. SCULL, Author of "The Garden of the Matchboxes." Post 8vo, 1s. net. [Immediately.

Founded on the "Luttrells of Four Oaks."

SOME WELSH CHILDREN. By

the AUTHOR of "FRATERNITY." With Title-page and Cover Design by the Author. Extra fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Immediately.

London: ELKIN MATHEWS, Vigo Street, W.

CONSTABLE & CO'S LIST.

THE LAUGHTER OF PETERKIN.

Tales of the Celtic Wonder World.

By FIONA MACLEOD.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Of all the story-books to delight and instruct young readers, there is none to surpass 'The Laughter of Peterkin.'"—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF THE LAFAYETTES.

By EDITH SICHELL.

Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

"She has treated a mass of material with rare judgment." Pall Mall Gazette.

"Miss Sichel's introduction is one of the best and truest pieces of writing we have met for a long while." Spectator.

A TALE of BOCCACCIO.

Poems.

By ARTHUR COLES ARMSTRONG.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s. net.

FIDELIS, and OTHER POEMS. By

O. M. GEMMER. 3s. 6d. net.

"A lover of poetry will not fail to admire them." Scotsman.

NEW POEMS. By Francis Thompson.

Fcap 8vo, 6s. net.

THE SELECTED POEMS of GEORGE

MEREDITH. Crown 8vo, 6s.

PATRIOTISM. By the Rt. Hon. Joseph

Chamberlain, M.P., LL.D., D.C.L. Paper, 1s. net.

Library edition, 2s. net, cloth gilt.

BOSWELL'S LIFE of JOHNSON.

Edited by AUGUSTINE BIRRELL. 6 vols., cloth, paper label, or gilt extra, 2s. net per volume; also half-morocco, 3s. net per volume.

THE KING'S STORY-BOOK Historical Stories collected in Illustration of the Reigns of the English Monarchs. Illustrated by Harrison Miller. Over 500 pp., crown 8vo, 6s.

LONDON RIVERSIDE CHURCHES.

By A. E. DANIELL. Profusely illustrated by Alex. Ansted. Imperial 16mo, 6s.

RICHARD BAIRD SMITH The

Leader of the Delhi Heroes in 1857. By COLONEL H. M. VIBART, R.E. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

"A very valuable book."—The Times.

CONSTABLE'S

HISTORICAL NOVELS SERIES.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each; gilt extra, 5s. each.

LORD LYTTON'S HAROLD.

MACFARLANE'S The CAMP of REFUGE.

"ODD STORIES." By Frances

FORBES-ROBERTSON. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"There is a kind of fairy-tale grace about some of these stories that lends them a character of their own." Morning Post.

2, WHITEHALL GARDENS, WESTMINSTER.

M R. M U R R A Y ' S L I S T .

N E W B O O K S .

With Portraits and Maps. Crown 8vo, 12s. Just out.
"RODDY OWEN" (Late Brevet-Major, Lancashire Fusiliers, D.S.O.). A Memoir. By his Sister, Mrs. A. G. BOVILL, and G. R. ASKWITH, M.A., F.R.G.S.
 "Of all the young men that we have spent in Africa, there was never one lost more simple-minded and earnest-hearted than 'Roddy Owen.'"—Daily Chronicle.
 "I was well aware—no one perhaps better—of the admirable service which he performed under circumstances the most trying. No more gallant fellow ever left these shores."
 LORD SALISBURY.
 "He was certainly universally beloved, and was regarded by his comrades as one of the best and the bravest."—Westminster Gazette.
 "From every point of view a life of 'Roddy Owen' was sure of a welcome.....a more popular sportsman never breathed."—Pall Mall Gazette.
 "In the person of this gallant officer were crystallised the best of those qualities that have helped to make the fame of this country."—Morning Post.

With Portrait and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 18s. Just out.
THE LIFE OF WILLIAM PENGELLY, of Torquay, F.R.S., Geologist. With Selections from his Correspondence. By his Daughter, HESTER PENGELLY. And a Summary of his Scientific Works, by Professor BONNEY, F.R.S., F.G.S., &c.
 "Pengelly's name is inseparably linked with the history of caves and the annals of primeval man; while his memory will ever remain in the minds of those who knew him as that of the genial presence, the kindly spirit, and the playful wit, which could brighten every gathering, and give a zest to the driest subject."

EXTRACT FROM PROFESSOR BONNEY'S PREFACE.
 "Though we have read many records of Pengelly's work, we have never seen anything so clear and concise, and yet comprehensive.....The life is one to be treasured by all interested in the progress of geology."—Western Morning News.
 "A work which specialists will value and laymen enjoy."—Glasgow Herald.

With Portraits and Maps. Crown 8vo, 9s. Just out.
UNDER the RED CRESCENT. Adventures and Experiences of an English Surgeon in the Service of the Turkish Government during the Sieges of Plevna and Erzeroum, 1877-78. Related by CHARLES S. RYAN, M.B., C.M. Edin., in association with his friend, JOHN SANDES, B.A. Oxon.
 "A vivid picture of the dark side of the last great battles that have been fought in Europe."—Daily News.
 "This book has certainly held our attention as La Diablesse, with all its wealth of other than merely horrific incidents never did."—Westminster Gazette.
 "Dr. Ryan's experiences deserved to have all the aid of the artist in words, for they are most striking and memorable. It is impossible in a brief review to do justice to the multiplicity of his experiences, or to the vividness and vigour with which they are set forth. One can only recommend the reader to make acquaintance for himself with this fascinating book."—World.

R E C E N T P U B L I C A T I O N S .

Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.
FRENCH STUMBLING-BLOCKS and ENGLISH STEPPING-STONES. By FRANCIS TARVER, M.A., late Senior French Master at Eton College. An entirely New Book on a New Plan.
 Mr. Francis Tarver's skill as a teacher of French to Englishmen is well known. His thorough knowledge of both languages and his thirty years' experience as a master at Eton have afforded him exceptional opportunities of judging what are the difficulties, pitfalls, and stumbling-blocks which beset the path of an Englishman in his study of French.
 It contains a list of 3,000 idiomatic expressions most invaluable to the student and traveller.
 "An excellent little compendium."—Athenaeum.

With Illustrations, crown 8vo, 6s.
HOW to LISTEN to MUSIC: Hints and Sug- gestions to Untaught Lovers of the Art. By HENRY EDWARD KREHBIEL, Author of "Studies in the Wagnerian Drama," &c. With a Preface by Sir GEORGE GROVE, C.B., D.C.L., Editor of "Dictionary of Music and Musicians."
 "It is not too much to say that the object of the title has never been so thoroughly or so ably accomplished before."—Guardian.
 "The book may be recommended very cordially as fulfilling with singular success every purpose it set out to accomplish."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.
WASTE and REPAIRS in MODERN LIFE.
 A Series of Essays on the Maintenance of Health under Conditions which prevail at the Present Time. By ROBSON ROOSE, M.D.
 Wear and Tear of Modern Life—Rest and Repair in London Life—The Art of Prolonging Life—Health Resorts and their Uses—Infection and Disinfection—Clothing as a Preventive against Cold—A Contribution to the Alcohol Question—The Physiology of Fasting—The Spread of Diphtheria—The Metropolitan Water Supply—The Propagation and Prevention of Cholera.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
SOME THOUGHTS on the CRITICISM of the TEXT of the NEW TESTAMENT. By Professor GEORGE SALMON, D.D., Provost of Trinity College, Dublin.

Third Edition. With Portraits and Illustrations, 2 vols., demy 8vo, 32s.
THE LIFE of the REV. BENJAMIN JOWETT. By EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., LL.D., and the Rev. LEWIS CAMPBELL, M.A., LL.D.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
THE SERMON on the MOUNT. A Practical Explanation. By the Rev. CHARLES GORE, D.D., Canon of Westminster.
 Contents: The Sermon—The Beatitudes in General—The Beatitudes in Detail—The Deepening of the Law—The Christian Motive—The Lord's Prayer—Unworldliness—Christian Characteristics—Concluding Warnings.

Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.
THE STORY of a GREAT AGRICULTURAL ESTATE. An Account of the Origin and Administration of the "Beds and Bucks" and "Thorney" Estates. By the DUKE of BEDFORD.

S T A N D A R D W O R K S .

By the DUKE of ARGYLL.
THE UNSEEN FOUNDATIONS of SOCIETY: an Examination of the Fallacies and Failures of Economic Science due to Neglected Elements. 8vo, 18s.
UNITY of NATURE. 8vo, 12s.
REIGN of LAW. Crown 8vo, 5s.
IRISH NATIONALISM. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
THE BURDENS of BELIEF, and OTHER POEMS. Crown 8vo, 6s.
PHILOSOPHY of BELIEF; or, Law in Christian Theology. 8vo, 16s.

By JOHN AUSTIN.
GENERAL JURISPRUDENCE; or, the Philosophy of Positive Law. By JOHN AUSTIN. Edited by ROBERT CAMPBELL. 2 vols., 8vo, 32s.
STUDENT'S EDITION of AUSTIN'S JURISPRUDENCE. Compiled from the above Work by ROBERT CAMPBELL. Post 8vo, 12s.
ANALYSIS of AUSTIN'S JURISPRUDENCE. By GORDON CAMPBELL. Post 8vo, 6s.

By JAMES FERGUSSON.
HISTORY of ARCHITECTURE in all COUNTRIES from the EARLIEST TIMES. By JAMES FERGUSSON. A New and thoroughly Revised Edition. With 1,700 Illustrations. 5 vols., medium 8vo.
 Vols. I. and II. Ancient and Medieval. 2 vols., 63s. New Edition. Edited by PRÆST SPIERS. III. Indian and Eastern. 31s. 6d. IV. Modern. 2 vols., 31s. 6d.

By PROFESSOR J. J. BLUNT.
 Crown 8vo, 6s. each.
UNDESIGNED SCRIPTURAL COINCIDENCES.
THE PARISH PRIEST: his Acquirements, Obligations, and Duties.
THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH DURING the FIRST THREE CENTURIES

By GEORGE BORROW.
 2s. 6d. each.
THE BIBLE in SPAIN. With Portrait.
THE GYPSIES of SPAIN.
LA VENGRO: the Scholar—Gipsy—and Priest.
THE ROMANY RYE. A Sequel to Lavengro.
WILD WALES: its People, Language, and Scenery.

By LORD CAMPBELL.
 Post 8vo, 6s. each vol.
LIVES of the LORD CHANCELLORS. 10 vols.
LIVES of the CHIEF JUSTICES. 4 vols.

By GEORGE GROTE.
HISTORY of GREECE. Portrait and Plans. 10 vols., crown 8vo, 5s. each.
PLATO. 4 vols., crown 8vo, 5s. each.

By HENRY HALLAM.
 Post 8vo, 4s. each vol.
HISTORY of ENGLAND. 3 vols., post 8vo.
EUROPE DURING the MIDDLE AGES. 3 vols.
LITERARY HISTORY of EUROPE. 4 vols.

By DEAN MILMAN, D.D.
 Post 8vo, 4s. each vol.
HISTORY of the JEWS. 3 vols.
HISTORY of EARLY CHRISTIANITY. 3 vols.
HISTORY of LATIN CHRISTIANITY. 9 vols.

By SIR HENRY S. MAINE, K.C.S.I.
ANCIENT LAW. 8vo, 9s.
VILLAGE COMMUNITIES. 8vo, 9s.
EARLY HISTORY of INSTITUTIONS. 8vo, 9s.
EARLY LAW and CUSTOM. 8vo, 9s.
POPULAR GOVERNMENT. 8vo, 7s. 6d.
INTERNATIONAL LAW. 8vo, 7s. 6d.
LIFE, SPEECHES, and MINUTES of SIR HENRY S. MAINE, K.C.S.I.
 By Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF and Mr. WHITLEY STOKES. 14s.

By HON. J. E. MOTLEY.
 Post 8vo, 6s. each vol.
HISTORY of the UNITED NETHERLANDS. Portraits. 4 vols.
LIFE and DEATH of JOHN BARNEVELD. Illustrations. 2 vols.

By CANON ROBERTSON.
HISTORY of the CHRISTIAN CHURCH, from the Apostolic Age to the Reformation. 8 vols., post 8vo, 6s. each.

By EARL STANHOPE.
HISTORY of ENGLAND, from the Accession of Queen Anne to the Peace of Versailles, 1701-83. 9 vols., post 8vo, 5s. each.
THE REBELLION of 1745. Post 8vo, 3s.
HISTORY of BRITISH INDIA. Post 8vo, 3s. 6d.
HISTORICAL ESSAYS. Post 8vo, 3s. 6d.

By PROFESSOR E. B. TYLOR.
RESEARCHES into the EARLY HISTORY of MANKIND and DEVELOP- ment of CIVILISATION. Third Edition. 8vo, 12s.
PRIMITIVE CULTURE: the Development of Mythology, Philosophy, Religion Art, and Custom. Third Edition. 2 vols., 8vo, 21s.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1332.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

CHOICE BOOKS—Just published, a CATALOGUE (No. 11) of a FINE COLLECTION of BOOKS, chiefly from the library of the late THOMAS WESTWOOD, Esq., of Brussels, including RARE EDITIONS of the EARLY PRINTERS' WORKS, EMBELLISHED by the GREAT FRENCH ILLUSTRATORS, &c., nearly the whole of which are in BEAUTIFUL BINDINGS, 50 pp., 8vo, with 12 full-page facsimiles, post free from H. SOTHERAN & Co., 37, Piccadilly, W.; and 140, Strand, W.C.

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General Literature (No. 117, for OCTOBER), at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS of FOREIGN BOOKS, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 30, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford. CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN, FOREIGN BOOKSELLER, 45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum), Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices. CATALOGUES on application.

W. THACKER & CO., PUBLISHERS, 2, Creed Lane, London, E.C. And at Calcutta, Bombay, and Simla. MSS. considered for Publication. (Established 1819. A large Orientale in all parts of the East.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 34, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

MR. MOSHER'S New and Complete Descriptive LIST of BOOKS is Now Ready. It is issued in narrow 8vo, with Facsimile Titles in Red and Black, done up in French hand-made paper wrappers, with original cover design. Those who have yet to see these Editions published by Mr. Mosher should favour him with their names that the new List may be mailed them, post paid.

THOMAS B. MOSHER,
45, EXCHANGE STREET, PORTLAND, MAINE, UNITED STATES.

TYPE-WRITING work of every description done with accuracy and despatch. Author's MSS., Technical and Legal Copying, Indexing, Specifications, Tracing, Translating, Addressing, Type-written Mimeographed Copies, &c., &c.—The Messrs E. & J. PUTZ, 435, Mansion House Chambers, London, E.C.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. 10d. per 1,000 Words. Samples and references. Address Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

SCHOLARLY TYPE-WRITING by a Graduate. Greek, Latin, Foreign MSS., Poems, Plays, Translations.—E. W. LUMMIS, Beeches Road, West Bromwich.

TYPE-WRITER.—GREAT BARGAIN. £9 for £3.

Send for full particulars of above Splendid Machine, sold through Liquidation. Quite new and perfect. A most beautiful, strong, practical machine. Anyone can learn in half an hour.

Messrs. KING, SELL, & RAILTON, WHOLESALE STATIONERS,
12, Gough Square, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD. (The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.) Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)
Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
President—The Right Hon. Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.
THURSDAY, November 18th, at 5 p.m., at the MUSEUM of PRACTICAL GEOLOGY, Jernyn Street, S.W., the following Paper will be read:—"THE BATTLE of MARSTON MOOR," by Mr. C. H. FIRTH. HURST HALL, Director and Hon. Secretary.
115, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE (A CONSTITUENT COLLEGE of the UNIVERSITY of WALES).

The Council invites APPLICATIONS for the PROFESSORSHIP OF GREEK.
Applications and testimonials should be sent on or before TUESDAY, NOVEMBER the 23rd, 1897, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.
J. AUSTIN JENKINS, B.A., Secretary and Registrar.
University College, Cardiff, October 19th, 1897.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch P. W. D., and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways.
For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

BEDFORD COLLEGE, LONDON, for WOMEN, YORK PLACE, BAKER STREET, W.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the PROFESSORSHIP of MENTAL and MORAL SCIENCE. Applications, with one copy of testimonials, should be sent, on or before Monday, 22nd November, to the Honorary Secretary at the College, from whom all particulars may be obtained.
LUCY J. RUSSELL, Honorary Secretary.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 5, Farnhill Street, London, E.C.

WANTED.—GIRL of 17 or 18 to join Four others who are studying French, Music, Singing, Painting, in FRANCE, in charge of an unexceptional English Chaperon. Highest references given and required. Terms for Pension and French, 10 Guineas monthly.—CHAPMAN, "ACADEMY" Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 6d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS PURCHASED. A large assortment of all kinds FOR SALE. Lists free.—Scott, 17, Crandon Road, Fulham, S.W.

BRITISH WEATHER CHART—1898.

By R. E. JENKINS, F.R.A.S.
Spectator—"Unfortunately he is no random guesser, but a scientific meteorologist who merits our attention."
At the Bookstalls, or for 6d. from R. MORGAN, Publisher, Norwood, S.E.

MODERN LANGUAGE QUARTERLY.—The Second Number is now ready, price 2s., of all Booksellers. Among the Contributors are Prof. SEERAT, Prof. NAPLES, Prof. HALEM, Mr. HENRY BRADLEY, Mr. PASTOR TOYNBEE, Prof. FIDLER, Dr. BRUL, Prof. VICTOR SPIES, and others.
Messrs. SIMPSON, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

PRODUCERS and PUBLISHERS of PERMANENT CARBON PHOTOGRAPHS OF FAMOUS WORKS OF ART.

Catalogues and Price Lists upon application.

THE NORWICH SCHOOL of PAINTING. A Series of Plates, printed in various Colours, after Cotman, Crome, Leman, Lound, Bright, Stark, Vincent, etc. [Will be ready shortly.]

THE TATE COLLECTION (NATIONAL GALLERY of BRITISH ART). A large number of the Pictures now Exhibited at Millbank have been published in Autotype, including the Chief Works of G. F. WATTS, R.A. Further additions are being made, and will be announced shortly.

BRITISH ARTISTS of the VICTORIAN ERA. From the recent Guildhall Loan Collection. Average size 18 x 15 inches. Price 12s.

PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, and SCULPTURE by the OLD MASTERS. A large Collection of Permanent Photographs of the Chief Treasures of Art contained in the Public and Private Collections of Europe. Paintings and Sculpture in one uniform size, price 12s.; Drawings on the Scale of the Originals at prices ranging from 1s. 6d. to 10s. each.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY will be pleased to advise upon, and to undertake, the REPRODUCTION of WORKS of ART of every character, both for Book Illustration, and on a larger scale for the Portfolio or for Mural Decoration. Price Lists and Estimates free upon application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY FINE ART GALLERY, 74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum. LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.	COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum. N.B.—Two or Three Friends may unite in ONE SUBSCRIPTION and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.
--	---

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms. Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

Now Offered at

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited. 30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 341, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 45, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.; and 21, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERB RANFT, ENGL., of Munich. The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS for the PURPOSE of ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS.

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c. &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW LIST.

NEW ILLUSTRATED WORK ON THE CIVIL WAR.
In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, price 10s. 6d.

EAST ANGLIA and the GREAT CIVIL WAR. The Rising of Cromwell's Ironsides in the Associated Counties of Cambridge, Huntingdon, Lincoln, Norfolk, Suffolk, Essex, and Hertford. With Appendices and Illustrations. By ALFRED KINGSTON, F.R.Hist.S., Author of "Hertfordshire during the Great Civil War."

"Every page of the work bears evidence of painstaking research and a desire to present an historically accurate picture. Some pages, indeed, may be regarded as parallel to the graphic pictures presented in the late Mr. J. R. Green's notable volumes on 'The Making of England.'"
East Anglian Daily Times.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

The LIGHT of SHAKESPEARE: Passages illustrative of the Higher Teaching of Shakespeare's Dramas. By CLARE LANGTON.

NEW VOLUME OF THE POPULAR COUNTY HISTORY SERIES.

In demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.; Roxburghe, 10s. 6d.; Large-Paper Copies, 21s. net each Volume.

A HISTORY of CAMBRIDGE.

By the Rev. EDWARD CONYBEARE, Vicar of Barrington, Cambridge.

Issued in 2 vols., demy 8vo, bound in fine buckram cloth, gilt tops, price £1 1s. net.

THE LIFE of MARGUERITE of NAVARRE (MARGUERITE D'ANGOULEME), Duchess d'Alençon and de Berry, Sister of Francis I. of France, and Author of the Heptameron. From numerous Unpublished Sources, including MS. Documents in the Bibliothèque Impériale and the Archives du Royaume de France, also the Private Correspondence of Queen Marguerite with Francis I., &c. By MARTHA WALKER FREER.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

TRANSATLANTIC TRAITS.
Essays by the Hon. MARTIN MORRIS.

Now ready, One Volume 8vo, cloth, price 10s. 6d. net.
SOME CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN THE GOVERNORS AND TREASURERS OF THE NEW ENGLAND COMPANY in LONDON, and the Commissioners of the United Colonies in America, the Missionaries of the Company, and Others, between the Years 1657 and 1712, to which are added the Journals of the Rev. Experience Mayhew in 1713 and 1714.

"The correspondence that Mr. Ford has printed throws an important light, generally, on missionary work amongst the Indians in America."—Morning Post.

In crown 8vo, tastefully printed and bound, with Illustrations, SECOND EDITION, price 6s.

DANTE'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS; or, "The Passage of the Blessed Soul from the Slavery of the Present Corruption to the Liberty of Eternal Glory." With Notes on the Way by EMELIA RUSSELL GURNEY.

"The book is a beautiful production throughout, and Mr. Shields' design of the cover and of the three types of heart—printed in gold and colours—deserve special mention."
Bookseller.

In foolscap 8vo, tastefully printed in antique type, and bound in cloth, price 6s. 50 Large paper copies, £1 1s. each.

IN PRAISE of MUSIC. An Anthology. Prepared by CHARLES SAYLE, M.A.

"In Praise of Music" presents a series of extracts selected with considerable care from the greatest and most appreciative writers on the subject during the centuries.

"Lovers of music and lovers of literature will agree to bless Mr. Sayle for his book."—British Weekly.

"The work is well done, and there is no page in which is not written down some noble or suggestive thought about the mysterious influence and nature of the art of music."
Scotsman.

In crown 4to, paper cover, price 1s. net.

THE DAFFODIL BLOTTER and ALMANAC for 1898.

LONDON: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE'S LIST.

THEOLOGICAL TRANSLATION LIBRARY.

THIRD YEAR, NEW SERIES.

Recently published, Vol. II. of the Third Year. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

A HISTORY of DOGMA.

Vol. III. By Dr. ADOLPH HARNACK, Ordinary Professor of Church History in the University, and Fellow of the Royal Academy of Science, Berlin. Translated from the Third German Edition by the Rev. NEIL BUCHANAN. Edited by Rev. Dr. A. B. BRUCE. With a Preface specially written for this Edition by the AUTHOR.

Earlier Volumes of the New Series.

HISTORY of DOGMA. Translated from the Third German Edition by Rev. NEIL BUCHANAN. Edited by Rev. Dr. A. B. BRUCE, with a Preface specially written for this Edition by the AUTHOR. Vols. I. and II. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. each.

A HISTORY of the HEBREWS. By B. KITTEL, Ordinary Professor of Theology in the University of Breslau. Translated by the Revs. HOPE W. HOGG, B.D., and E. B. SPIERS, B.D. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. each.

THE APOSTOLIC AGE of the CHRISTIAN CHURCH. By CARL VON WEIZSACKER, Professor of Church History in the University of Tübingen. Translated from the Second and Revised Edition by JAMES MILLAR, B.D. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, each 10s. 6d.

THE COMMUNION of the CHRISTIAN with GOD. A Discussion in Agreement with the View of Luther. By W. HERMANN, Professor of Dogmatic Theology in the University of Marburg. Translated from the Second German Edition, with Special Annotations by the Author, by J. SANDYS STANTON, M.A. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

PHILO JUDEUS: or, The Jewish Alexandrian Philosophy in its Development and Completion. By JAMES DRUMMOND, LL.D., Principal of Manchester New College, Oxford. Two vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 21s. "This treatise of Mr. Drummond fills a place of its own in the English language, and may be put beside, or even above, the best German books on the subject."—Athenæum.

DIGEST of MR. HERBERT SPENCER'S WORKS. FOURTH AND ENLARGED EDITION.

THE PHILOSOPHY COMPLETED, NOW READY.

8vo, cloth, 21s.

EPITOME of the SYNTHETIC PHILOSOPHY of HERBERT SPENCER. By F. HOWARD COLLINS. With a Preface by HERBERT SPENCER.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

POSTERITY, its VERDICTS and its METHODS; or, Democracy, 2100 A.D.

Recently published, demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE IDEA of GOD and MORAL

SENSE in the LIGHT of LANGUAGE. Being a Philological Inquiry into the Rise and Growth of Spiritual Concepts. By HERBERT BAYNES, M.R.A.S., Author of "The Evolution of Religious Thought in Modern India," "Dante and his Ideal," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

"Mr. Baynes has rendered a great service to students and scholars in presenting them with this very pregnant if not perfect statement of an important yet obscure subject."

The Imperial and Asiatic Quarterly Review.

Crown 8vo, 340 pages, cloth gilt, 6s.

MODERN THOUGHTS on RELIGION and CULTURE. Selected and Compiled by H. W. SMITH. A Collection of the Recorded Beliefs and Aspirations of Leaders of Thought in the Nineteenth Century, especially illustrating the Transforming Influence of Science on Religion and Morals.

Also, uniform with the above,

MODERN THOUGHTS on LIFE and CONDUCT. A Collection of above 400 Extracts, designed to bring into prominence the permanent elements which go to make and improve our social life.

Dundas Advertiser.—"Books likely to become the treasured companions of a lifetime."

Now ready, price 4s.

PROBLEMS of NATURE. By Gustav JAGGER, M.D. Selected, Edited, and Translated by H. G. SCHLICHTER, D.Sc., with a Facsimile of a Letter from CHARLES DARWIN to the Author.

The following are some of the Subjects treated:—

THE ORIGIN and DEVELOPMENT of the FIRST ORGANISMS.

SEXUAL SELECTION.

INFLUENCE of FORCE of GRAVITATION on DEVELOPMENT of the ANIMAL KINGDOM.

SOURCE of the VITAL FORCES.

DOCTRINE of INFECTION.

DEVELOPMENT of INFANTS.

ORIGIN of the HUMAN LANGUAGE.

DARWINISM and RELIGION.

Literary Guide, June 1, 1897: "Dr. Jaeger has given us the best and ablest treatise we have ever met with on 'The Origin of the Human Language.'"

The Zoologist, June 15, 1897: "Brimful of original suggestions and fresh points for consideration."

Westminster Gazette, July 20, 1897: "One of the most interesting chapters to scientific readers is that dealing with the influence of the force of gravitation on the development of the animal kingdom."

Pall Mall Gazette, August 16, 1897: "His speculations contain much very sound sense, and a great deal of highly original thought."

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,

14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London;
20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh; and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

DEDICATED BY PERMISSION TO HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

The QUEEN'S HOUNDS and STAG-HUNTING RECOLLECTIONS. By LORD RIBBLESDALE, Master of the Buckhounds, 1892-95. With an Introduction on the Hereditary Mastership by EDWARD BURROWS. Compiled from the Brocas Papers in his possession. With 24 Plates and 35 Illustrations in the Text, including Reproductions from Oil Paintings in the possession of Her Majesty the Queen at Windsor Castle and Cumberland Lodge, Original Drawings by G. D. Giles, and from Prints and Photographs. Royal 8vo, 25s.

The AUTHORESS of the ODYSSEY:

Where and When She Wrote, Who She Was, the Use She made of the Iliad, and how the Poem Grew under her Hands. By SAMUEL BUTLER, Author of "Erewhon," &c. With 4 Maps and 14 Illustrations. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

NEW VOLUME OF S. R. GARDINER'S
"COMMONWEALTH."

HISTORY of the COMMONWEALTH and PROTECTORATE, 1619—1660. By SAMUEL RAWSON GARDINER, D.C.L., LL.D. Vol. II. 1651—1654. With 7 Maps. 8vo, 21s.

"We close this further instalment of his great work with renewed conviction of the worthlessness of any other historical method by the side of his, and with renewed reverence for its author."
Athenæum.

LAYS of IONA, and Other Poems.

By S. J. STONE, M.A., Rector of All Hallows-in-the-Wall, Author of "The Knight of Intercession," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE SUPERNATURAL in NATURE:

a Verification by Free Use of Science. By JOSEPH WILLIAM REYNOLDS, M.A., Past President of Sion College; Prebendary of St. Paul's Cathedral. New and Cheaper Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE SERVICE of GOD: Sermons,

Essays, and Addresses. By SAMUEL A. BARNETT, Warden of Toynbee Hall, White-chapel; Canon of Bristol Cathedral; Select Preacher before Oxford University. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW STORY BY EDNA LYALL.

WAYFARING MEN. By Edna Lyall, Author of "Donovan," "Dorcen," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The book is eminently readable, and its genuinely high moral tone gives it a certain dignity and interest."—Manchester Guardian.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. WALFORD.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

IVA KILDARE: a Matrimonial

Problem. By L. B. WALFORD, Author of "Mr. Smith," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"As a society novel 'Iva Kildare' is of high merit. Lady Kildare and her daughter Iva are capital portraits in their diverse ways, and the men of the story are persons whom there is no difficulty in accepting as real."—Scotsman.

A TSAR'S GRATITUDE: a Story of Modern Russia. By FRED J. WHISHAW, Author of "A Boyar of the Terrible," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.,
London, New York, and Bombay.

Perhaps the most sumptuous Book of the Season will be Mr. WALTER JERROLD'S Edition of Voltaire's masterpiece, CANDIDE. It is illustrated with 62 Vignettes and an Etched Frontispiece by Adrien Moreau. The Large-Paper Copies, of which only 62 are for sale in Europe, are printed upon Japanese vellum, and include 32 India Proofs in Colour. The binding (crimson watered silk) is certainly the most expensive covering ever put on a book as a substitute for "publisher's cloth." The subscription price is One Pound for Small and Two Pounds for Large Paper Copies, net prices. [GEORGE REDWAY, London.]

Mr. CLIFFORD HARRISON, the well-known Reciter, has written an exquisite book on Mysticism, which he calls NOTES on the MARGINS, being Suggestions of Thought and Enquiry. Price 5s. net. [GEORGE REDWAY, London.]

Admirers of MARIE CORELLI—their name is legion, in spite of the critics—will be glad to have "the best bits" gathered together in a pretty volume suitable for the boudoir. Such a book has been prepared by Miss ANNIE MACKAY with the Author's concurrence (though not at her suggestion), is called The BEAUTIES of MARIE CORELLI, and will be found one of the cheapest and most appropriate Gift-Books for Christmas. Price 2s. 6d. net. [GEORGE REDWAY, London.]

Mr. ADAIR FITZGERALD'S Book of Bohemian Stories (a strong bit of work, say the critics) is called A TRAGEDY of GRUB STREET. Price 3s. 6d. net. [GEORGE REDWAY, London.]

A thoroughly practical and up-to-date book on Mesmerism or Hypnotism has long been a desideratum. Such a book is Prof. JAMES COATES' HUMAN MAGNETISM; or, How to Hypnotise, which is illustrated with large Photographs specially taken while experiments were being made. From this book the art can be learnt and usefully practised by most healthy, well-disposed, and intelligent persons. Price 5s. net. [GEORGE REDWAY, London.]

A New Poetry Book has appeared, called the RHYMES of IRONQUILL, in the same pretty form as Cotsford Dick's "Ways of the World." IRONQUILL is the poet of the Transmissouri, a native of Kansas, in which part of the world his name is a household word. Mr. W. D. Howells hailed him as a real poet, an original singer. He now appeals to a British public for the first time. Price 3s. 6d. net. [GEORGE REDWAY, London.]

The Rev. AUGUSTUS JESSOPP has written an Introduction to Mr. DITCHFIELD'S New Book, The STORY of OUR ENGLISH TOWNS, which is a very successful attempt to summarise in a popular form the main results which the labours of experts have arrived at. The Frontispiece shows the earliest Norman Keep still in existence. Price 6s. net. [GEORGE REDWAY, London.]

The CONNOISSEUR, a Volume of Essays on the Romantic and Picturesque Associations of Art and Artists, has a peculiar value from the fact that the Author, Mr. FREDERICK S. ROBINSON, has been considerably assisted by his Father, Sir Charles Robinson, H.M. Surveyor of Pictures, to whose fine taste and zeal as a Collector the nation is mainly indebted for the treasures at South Kensington. The Times, Spectator, Athenaeum, and Academy have highly praised the work. Price 7s. 6d. net. [GEORGE REDWAY, London.]

MR. CHARLES DIXON, the veteran Ornithologist, has written another popular book on Birds, entitled CURIOSITIES of BIRD LIFE. As the Academy says, "The author is an old hand—a pre-Jefferiesian open-airist who has had opportunities of observing the birds of many lands." [GEORGE REDWAY, London.]

Lovers of the chase will welcome Mr. FOX RUSSELL'S two volumes, SPORTING SOCIETY, at which the Times exclaims, "A constellation of talent." It is illustrated by Randolph Caldecott, and its contributors include Sir Courtenay Boyle, Old Calabar, Alfred E. T. Watson, G. Christopher Davies, and Olive Phillips-Wolley. [GEORGE REDWAY, London.]

TRAVEL and BIG GAME is the very apposite title given to a volume containing the experiences of Mr. PERCY SELOUS as a sportsman in South Africa, North America, and Canada, where he shot or trapped Lions, Leopards, and Grizzlies. Hippos and Giraffes, Rhinoceroses and Zebras. Mr. H. A. BRYDEN contributes Two Chapters, and Mr. Charles Whymper has made some life-like pictures of the most stirring scenes. Price 10s. 6d. net. [GEORGE REDWAY, London.]

There is only one authority on what are called Secret Societies, namely, Mr. CHAS. W. HECKETHORN, every copy of whose big work on the subject, published twenty-five years ago by Mr. Bentley, has long been absorbed by public libraries. It is now quite out of date as regards living organisations, and the Author has incorporated in his New Book, The SECRET SOCIETIES of all AGES and COUNTRIES, everything that is true to-day of those communities with which a great politician said Europe was "honeycombed." Mr. Heckethorn's important work should be placed in every library for public use. Price 31s. 6d. net. [GEORGE REDWAY, London.]

Living Actors on their art is the best description of a volume which comes out with the name of Mr. HAMMERTON as Editor. The heads of the profession in The ACTOR'S ART give their deliberate opinion on acting, a subject of interest to the vast numbers of people who patronise the drama and the very numerous body of those who aspire to "play" before an audience as amateurs. To each original article is appended a facsimile of the writer's signature. Mr. Clement Scott says: "It should be universally read," and Sir Henry Irving, in his Prefatory Note, says: "This little book seems to me to be an excellent manual of the actor's art." Price 6s. net. [GEORGE REDWAY, London.]

The next volume of "THE COLLECTOR SERIES" will deal with Postage Stamps. The Authors are Mr. W. J. HARDY and Mr. E. D. BACON. (Shortly.) [GEORGE REDWAY, London.]

CHATTO &amp; WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

MARK TWAIN'S NEW BOOK.—To be ready immediately, crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.
MORE TRAMPS ABROAD.

By MARK TWAIN.

Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s.
BY THE RISE OF THE RIVER.

By AUSTIN CLARE, Author of "For the Love of a Lassa," &c.

CHRISTIE MURRAY'S NEW NOVEL.—On November 19, crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s.

THIS LITTLE WORLD.

By DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY, Author of "Joseph's Coat."

A RAILWAYMAN'S ROMANCES.—Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE EXPRESS MESSENGER,
 And other Tales of the Rail.

By CY WARMAN.

THE THREE DISGRACES, &c. By Justin McCarthy, M.P.,
 Author of "Dear Lady Disdain." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE DRAM-SHOP (L'ASSOMMOIR). By Emile Zola. Authorised Version. With an Introduction by ERNEST ALFRED VIZETELLY. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE WITCH-WIFE. By Sarah Tytler, Author of "The Macdonald Lass," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
 "A story of the highest merit."—Glasgow Herald.

TALES FROM THE VELD. By Ernest Glanville, Author of "The Golden Rock," &c. With 12 Illustrations by M. Nisbet. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE SECRET of WYVERN TOWERS. (The GENTLEMAN'S ANNUAL for 1897.) By T. W. SPEIGHT, Author of "The Mysteries of Heron Dyke." Demy 8vo, decorated cover, 1s.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

NOTICE.

On Monday next will be published, "THE RISE of DEMOCRACY," by J. HOLLAND
 ROSE, M.A., crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d., being the First Volume of THE VICTORIAN ERA SERIES.

The subsequent Volumes of the Series will be published successively on the 15th of each month.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, 50, OLD BAILEY.

NEW NOVEL BY A NEW WRITER.

DUST O' GLAMOUR.

By H. SIDNEY WARWICK.

Just published.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 338 pp., price 3s. 6d.

BRISTOL: J. W. ARROWSMITH.

LONDON: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & CO., LTD.

SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN &amp; CO.

FOR the LIFE of OTHERS: A Novel.

By G. CARDELLA, Author of "A King's Daughter." 6s.
 FIRST REVIEW.—"A gloomy theme treated with a far more wholesome sentiment than some other conspicuous lady novelists have applied to similar cases. Given such a theme, it is not easy to imagine how it could be more successfully handled. The book will please a reader who likes to have his feelings stirred by a work that depicts with sombre austerity the darker chambers of the heart and brain."—Scotsman.

SECOND REVIEW.—"A crusade against the curse of hereditary madness. It is a book strong in purpose; it sets up a high ideal of renunciation. . . . There is both sincerity and refinement in the work."—Manchester Guardian.

NEW IRISH TALES.

ST. KEVIN, and other Irish Tales. By R. D. ROGERS. 6s. "The author has struck the Irish chord to the echo. About as amusing a collection of Irish yarns as we have read for a long time. They are really good, and, what is more, they happen not to be old chestnuts."—Shooting Times.

The SECRET HISTORY of the OXFORD MOVEMENT. By W. WALSH. 8vo, 10s. 6d.
 net. "If the life of Cardinal Manning by Mr. Purcell created an excitement, this book ought to produce a veritable sensation throughout the land. Few are probably aware of how great an influence and how widely spread are the Romanizing societies with which the Church of England is honeycombed. In this volume we have indisputable proof, from the secret documents of the societies themselves, that there are hundreds, perhaps thousands, of clergymen now in the Church of England deliberately straining every nerve to bring her back into corporate reunion with the Church of Rome."
 —Rock. "The volume is one which Churchmen would do well to consult for themselves. Its revelations are extraordinary, its proofs indisputable; its teaching lies on the surface and should be a powerful preservative from the fate which overtook Newman and Faber and Manning. The author has done his work well, and deserves the gratitude of Churchmen."—Western Times.

CHRONICLES of the BANK of ENG-LAND. By B. B. TURNER, of the Bank of England
 With Reproductions of Old Prints from the Bank Records, &c. 7s. 6d. "A popular sketch of the origin and progress of the Bank. . . . Great panics furnish, of course, much material. Commercial crises also figure largely, while the romance of the subject is liberally supplied by narratives of the daring frauds of bank-note forgers and dishonest employees and others. The narrative closes with the resignation of Mr. May."—Daily News.

WUNDT'S "ETHICS." Translated by or under the Supervision of Prof. E. B. TITCHENER.

Vol. I. INTRODUCTION; and FACTS of the MORAL LIFE. 7s. 6d.

Vol. II. ETHICAL SYSTEM. 6s.

IMMIGRANT ALIENS in ENGLAND.

By W. CUNNINGHAM, D.D., Hon. Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Author of 'The Growth of English
 Industry.' Illustrated. 4s. 6d. (shortly).
 [Social England Series.]

BIBLIOGRAPHIES from 'The BEST

BOOKS' and 'A READER'S GUIDE.' By WM. SWAN
 SONNENSCHNEIN. 4to. boards; prices net:—THEO-LOGY (pp. 22-), 6s.; MYTHOLOGY and FOLK-LORE
 (pp. 63), 2s. 6d.; PHILOSOPHY (pp. 40), 2s. 6d.;
 SOCIETY: Law, Political and Social Science, Education
 (pp. 210), 6s.; GEOGRAPHY (pp. 137), 4s. 6d.;
 HISTORY (pp. 134), 4s. 6d.; ARCHEOLOGY (pp.
 43), 2s. 6d.; SCIENCE (pp. 120), 3s. 6d.; MEDICINE
 (pp. 63), 2s. 6d.; ARTS and TRADES (pp. 183), 5s.;
 LITERATURE, MODERN (pp. 176), 5s.; PHILOLOGY and ANCIENT LITERATURE (pp. 368), 10s. 6d.

* THE BEST BOOKS, Fourth Edition, 1896, sells at
 31s. 6d. net; THE READER'S GUIDE, 1896, at 25s. net.
 Each supplements the other.

PRIMITIVE CIVILISATIONS. By

E. J. SIMCOX. Cheaper Edition. 2 vols. 8vo. 21s.
 "An extremely interesting and able work; sums up with clearness the current knowledge we possess of the civilisations of Egypt, Babylonia, and China."—Nature.
 "A contribution to economical and social history of exceptional value and importance."—Times.

MASON (Can. G. E.) CLAUDIA, the CHRISTIAN MARTYR: a Tragedy. 2s.; paper, 1s. 6d.

S. (M. H.) OPTIMUS, and other Poems.
 Portrait. 2s. 6d.

READY SHORTLY.

HILL (Dr. A.) A RUN ROUND the EMPIRE: being the Log of Two Young People who Circumnavigated the Globe. Written out by their Father, ALEX. HILL, M.A., M.D., Master of Downing College and Vice-Chancellor Elect of the University of Cambridge. With many illustrations. 7s. 6d.

HORNER (SUSAN). GREEK VASES:
 Historical and Descriptive. With Prefatory Note by Dr.
 A. S. MURRAY. 45 illustrations and a Map. 3s. 6d.

SIDGWICK (Prof. H.). PRACTICAL
 ETHICS. 4s. 6d.

SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & CO., LTD., London.

WALTER SCOTT'S NEW BOOKS.

THE SCOTT LIBRARY.

Crown 8vo, gilt top, cloth elegant, price 1s. 6d.
108th VOLUME NOW READY.

RENAN'S LIFE of JESUS. Translated, with an Introduction, by WILLIAM G. HUTCHISON.

This is an entirely new translation of Renan's work, by the translator of "The Poetry of the Celtic Races, and other Studies by Ernest Renan."

RECENTLY ISSUED.

101st VOLUME.

CRITICISMS, REFLECTIONS, and MAXIMS of GOETHE. Translated, with an Introduction and Biographical Note, by W. B. BONNFELDT.

Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, gilt top, price 1s. 6d.

[Now ready]

"Any competent critic or editor, therefore, who aims at imparting to us a better understanding of one of the greatest of moderns is a genuine benefactor; and this is what Mr. Bonnfeldt has accomplished, not without success, in the present little volume."—Chronicle.

102nd VOLUME.

ESSAYS of SCHOPENHAUER.

Translated by Mrs. RUDOLF DIRCKS. With an Introduction.

This is a collection of Schopenhauer's most representative Essays, including Authorship and Style—Education—Reading and Books—Women—Thinking for Oneself—Immortality—Religion—Metaphysics of Love—On Physiognomy—On Suicide—On the Emptiness of Existence, &c.

THE CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.

FOUR IMPORTANT NEW VOLUMES.

Just issued, and First Large Edition nearly exhausted.
Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d., with Diagrams.

SLEEP: its Physiology, Pathology, Hygiene, and Psychology. By Dr. MARIE DE MANAGINE (St. Petersburg).

"A most interesting study of the phenomena of sleep."—Spectator.
"Apart from its strictly scientific research, the book deals with matters so intimate to the mass of mankind as the question of the amount of sleep necessary for individuals of various ages, physiological conditions, and temperaments; the vital subjects of insomnia, of sleep for children, and a hundred other matters which the average man or woman is confronted with every day."—Daily Mail.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

HALLUCINATIONS and ILLUSIONS: a Study of the Fallacies of Perception. By EDMUND PARISH.

"This remarkable little volume."—Daily News.

Crown 8vo cloth, price 6s.

THE PSYCHOLOGY of the EMOTIONS. By Prof. T. H. RIBOT.

"Prof. Ribot's treatment is careful, modern, and adequate."—Academy.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. 124 Illustrations.

THE NEW PSYCHOLOGY. By E. W. SCRIPTURE, Ph.D. (Leipzig).

"We have at present no work in English which gives in so compact a form so comprehensive a view of the subject."—Liverpool Post.

LIFE in NORTHUMBERLAND

during the SIXTEENTH CENTURY. By W. W. TOMLINSON, Author of "Comprehensive Guide to Northumberland," &c. Crown 8vo cloth, price 4s. net.

"An account of the agriculture, the social condition, the arts and literature, the food, raiment, and domestic furnishings, the outdoor and other games, and, generally, the character, condition, and modes of life of the inhabitants of Northumberland in the Tudor days, which is both readable as well as valuable."—Scotsman.

THE WORLD'S GREAT NOVELS.

Large crown 8vo, illustrated, price 3s. 6d. per Volume.

IMPORTANT NEW ADDITION.

LES MISÉRABLES. By Victor HUGO. 1,384 pages, 12 Full-Page Illustrations, including Frontispiece.

SPECIALLY SUITABLE AS GIFTS.

THE CANTERBURY POETS IN ANTIQUE LEATHER BINDING.

A special selection from the Volumes of this Series, issued in an Antique Leather Binding, with a quaint and richly-embossed antique pattern (period, sixteenth century), with gilt edges and gilt roll. The selection includes Volumes of Chaucer, Spenser, Shakespeare, George Herbert, Cavalier Poets, Herrick, Wordsworth, Shelley, Coleridge, Arnold, Browning, and others. Complete List sent free on application to the Publishers.

London:

WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED, Paternoster Square.

JOHN C. NIMMO'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW WORK ON ENGLISH MONASTIC HISTORY.

In Two Volumes, demy 8vo, cloth, 21s. net.

THE ENGLISH BLACK MONKS of ST. BENEDICT.

A Sketch of their History from the Coming of St. Augustine to the Present Day. By the Rev. ETHELRED L. TAUNTON.

Literature.—"We are struck with the skill with which he has mastered the details of a somewhat complicated story, and the clear way he has set it down for the benefit of his readers."

Times.—"The book is written from a Roman Catholic standpoint, but its tone is fair and reasonable."

Monitor.—"Not only a very valuable contribution to English ecclesiastical history, but most timely and pertinent to the needs of the hour."

Catholic Times.—"A work of no ordinary importance. Will form a lasting monument of what the Benedictines have done for England."

NEW LIBRARY EDITION OF STEELE AND ADDISON'S "SPECTATOR."

In Eight Volumes, extra crown 8vo, with Original Engraved Portraits and Vignettes, buckram cloth, 7s. net per Volume. Subscribers' Names for the Eight Volumes only accepted.

THE SPECTATOR. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by GEORGE A. AITKEN, Author of "The Life of Richard Steele," &amp;c.

Pall Mall Gazette.—"Undoubtedly the best library reprint of this famous periodical that has been published."

Daily News.—"If handsome print, paper, and binding, together with careful annotation, have attractions in the eyes of lovers of standard books, there ought to be a good demand for the new edition."

Scotsman.—"An edition in which it is a pleasure to read, and one which would adorn any library."

NEW WORK ON THE HISTORY OF POPULAR SONGS AND BALLADS.

Extra crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 7s. 6d.

STORIES of FAMOUS SONGS. By S. J. ADAIR FITZ-GERALD.

Times.—"Sure of a welcome from a great number of readers. It was a good idea to collect the many legends that have grown up, or histories that have actually taken place, in connection with various popular ditties, both British and foreign."

Glasgow Herald.—"Mr. Fitz-Gerald shows a wide knowledge of his subject, and conveys a vast deal of varied information in a pleasing and popular style."

Musical Courier.—"Should prove a valuable work of reference. Its need is evident when we find so many songs and ballads ascribed to the wrong people."

BY THE LATE MISS MANNING.

In crown 8vo, with Introduction by Rev. W. H. HUTTON B.D., and 26 Illustrations by JOHN JELlicoe and HERBERT RAILTON, price 6s., cloth elegant, gilt top, uniform with "The Household of Sir Thos. More," and "Cherry and Violet: a Tale of the Great Plague."

THE MAIDEN and MARRIED LIFE of MARY POWELL (afterwards Mistress Milton), and the Sequel thereto, DEBORAH'S DIARY.

Illustrated London News.—"No doubt this beautifully printed book, with its charming illustration, will have a great vogue in the Christmas season."

Scotsman.—"Beautifully illustrated and nicely got up, while the Rev. W. H. Hutton supplies a genial and informing introduction."

Guardian.—"A charming edition of a charming book."

Public Opinion.—"A work of exceptional literary worth."

Cheap Illustrated Edition in 24 Vols. of the Large Type Border Waverley Novels.

In crown 8vo, cloth, with 250 Illustrations by Eminent Artists. Now Publishing in Monthly Volumes, price 3s. 6d. per Volume. Any Volume may be had separately.

THE LARGE TYPE BORDER EDITION OF THE WAVERLEY NOVELS. With Introductory Essays and Notes by ANDREW LANG, supplementing those of the Author.

Bookman.—"Mr. Nimmo's re-issue is a marvellous production, and deservedly a favourite this season."

Times.—"Bids fair to become the classical edition of the great Scottish classic."

Scotsman.—"Even a man with fastidious tastes could not but like so well-appointed a copy as this."

Spectator.—"We trust that this fine edition will attain the high popularity it deserves."

LONDON: 14, KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND.

HODDER &amp; STOUGHTON'S NEW WORKS.

MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS,

FROM HER BIRTH TO HER FLIGHT INTO ENGLAND. A Brief Biography, with Critical Notes, a Few Documents hitherto Unpublished, and an Itinerary.

By DAVID HAY FLEMING.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"This is the best book yet written upon Mary Queen, of Scots... a book that will bear reading more than once, for it is full of excellent matter, well expressed."—Manchester Guardian.

"Mr. Hay Fleming has done historical and political students a signal service."—Daily News.

"A remarkable book."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"The learning exhibited in these notes is prodigious."—Glasgow Herald.

OUTLINES OF A PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION.

Based on Psychology and History.

By AUGUSTE SABATIER,

Dean of the Faculty of Protestant Theology, Paris.

Authorised Translation by the Rev. T. A. SEED.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"This is a striking book."—Literature.

"It contains matters of surpassing interest. The volume is an attractive one, and the translation well accomplished."—Expository Times.

"It is undeniably able and suggestive and brilliantly written."—Glasgow Herald.

THE EXPOSITOR'S GREEK TESTAMENT.

EDITED BY THE

Rev. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A. LL.D.,
Editor of "The Expositor," "Expositor's Bible," &c.

The First Volume of 880 pages, handsomely bound in buckram cloth, consists of THE GOSPEL of ST. MATTHEW, THE GOSPEL of ST. MARK, THE GOSPEL of ST. LUKE, by the Rev. Professor A. B. BRUCE, D.D.; and the GOSPEL of ST. JOHN, by the Rev. Professor MARCUS DOUGLAS, D.D.

The price of each volume will be 28s., but for those who SUBSCRIBE IN ADVANCE the price for TWO VOLUMES will be THIRTY SHILLINGS.

A full Prospectus, with Specimen Sheets, of this important work is now ready, and will be forwarded on application to the Publishers.

"The best book on the synoptics a minister could consult. It can be read through with delight, with exhilaration, with a constant wonder at its freshness, fertility, insight."—Dr. DAWSON, in the British Weekly.

"The names of the authors are a guarantee both for accuracy of scholarship and for a treatment of the text at once learned and popular, reverential, and thoroughly up to date. The book may be cordially recommended to students of the Greek Testament, to whom it will unquestionably prove an immense boon."—Scotsman.

THRO' LATTICE WINDOWS

By W. J. DAWSON,

Author of "London Idylls," "The Makers of Modern English," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"It must suffice to express gratification at the success of a bit of distinctively English literary work, that in more aspects than one is reminiscent of what Mr. J. M. Barrie has done for Scotland."—Scotsman.
"This is Mr. Dawson's very best book."—British Weekly.

"The value of such a book as this is not easily estimated..... This book is one of lasting interest."—Dundee Advertiser.

THE PROVIDENTIAL ORDER OF THE WORLD.

THE GIFFORD LECTURES, 1887.

By ALEXANDER BALMAIN BRUCE, D.D.,

Professor of Apologetic and New Testament Exegesis in the Free Church College, Glasgow.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"Deserves to be called a noble book."—Glasgow Herald.

"His lectures are excellent literature, and will add to the reputation he already enjoys as a scholar and theologian."—Scotsman.

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON,
27, Paternoster Row, E.C.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS.

A HISTORY of BRITISH COLONIAL POLICY. By H. E. EGERTON, M.A. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

THE HILL of the GRACES; or, The Great Stone Temples of Tripoli. By H. S. COWPER, F.S.A. With Maps, Plans, and 75 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

A SHORT HISTORY of the ROYAL NAVY, from Early Times to 1668. By DAVID HANNAY. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

The STORY of the BRITISH ARMY. By Lieut.-Colonel COOPER KING, of the Staff College, Camberley. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE DECLINE and FALL of the ROMAN EMPIRE. By EDWARD GIBBON. A New Edition, edited, with Notes, Appendices, and Maps, by J. B. BURY, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin. In 7 vols., demy 8vo, gilt top, 6s. 6d. each; crown 8vo, 6s. each. Vol. IV.

LIGHT and LEAVEN: Historical and Social Sermons. By the Rev. H. HENSLEY HENSON, M.A., Fellow of All Souls', Incumbent of St. Mary's Hospital, Ilford. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE LIFE of ERNEST RENAN. By Madame DARMESTER. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE GOLFING PILGRIM. By HORACE G. HUTCHINSON. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NURSERY RHYMES. With many Coloured Pictures. By F. D. BEDFORD. Small 4to, 6s.

THE BENIN MASSACRE. By Captain BOISRAGON. With Maps, &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A LIFE of DONNE. By Augustus JESSOPP, D.D. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Leaders of Religion Series.]

VOCES ACADEMICÆ. By C. Grant ROBERTSON, M.A., Fellow of All Souls', Oxford. With a Frontispiece. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A PRIMER of the BIBLE. By Prof. W. H. BENNETT. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

A PRIMER of WORDSWORTH. By LAURIE MAGNUS. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

SPORTING and ATHLETIC RECORDS. By H. MORGAN-BROWNE. Crown 8vo, 350 pp., paper, 1s.; cloth, 2s.

ENGLISH LYRICS. Selected and Edited by W. E. HENLEY. Crown 8vo, 6s.

MESSRS. METHUEN have just published, crown 8vo, 6s., BYEWAYS, by ROBERT HICHENS.

Fourteen Popular Novels.

SIX SHILLINGS EACH.

LOCHINVAR. S. R. Crockett.
A PASSIONATE PILGRIM. Percy White.
A CREEL of IRISH STORIES. Jane Barlow.
SECRETARY to BAYNE, M.P. W. P. Ridge.
A DAUGHTER of STRIFE.

Jane H. Findlater.
OVER the HILLS. Mary Findlater.
BLADYS. S. Baring-Gould.
THE LADY'S WALK. Mrs. Oliphant.
THE BUILDERS. J. S. Fletcher.
THE CLASH of ARMS. J. Bloundelle-Burton.
THE SINGER of MARLY. I. Hooper.
THE FALL of the SPARROW.

M. C. Balfour.
BY STROKE of SWORD. A. Balfour.

THREE-AND-SIXPENCE.

THE POMP of the LAVIETTES. Gilbert Parker.

Messrs. METHUEN'S CATALOGUE and NEW BOOK GAZETTE sent to any address.

METHUEN & CO., 36, Essex Street, W.C.

SOME OF MR. GRANT RICHARDS'S Recent and Forthcoming Publications.

TWO NEW ANTHOLOGIES.

(I.) THE FLOWER of the MIND: a Choice among the Best Poems. By Mrs. MEYNELL. With Cover Design by Laurence Housman. Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

(II.) A BOOK of VERSES FOR CHILDREN.

Compiled by EDWARD VERRALL LUCAS. With Cover, Title-Page and End-Papers Designed in Colours by F. D. Bedford. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

BY GRANT ALLEN.

The EVOLUTION of the IDEA of GOD: an Inquiry into the Origins of Religions. Demy 8vo, cloth, 20s. net.

"THE DUMPY BOOKS FOR CHILDREN."

(I.) The FLAMP, the AMELIORATOR and the SCHOOLBOY'S APPRENTICE.

By E. V. LUCAS.

(II.) MRS. TURNER'S CAUTIONARY STORIES.

16mo, cloth, 1s. 6d. each.

A BIOGRAPHY of THE PRINCE.

H.R.H. THE PRINCE of WALES: an Account of his Career, including his Birth, Education, Travels, Marriage and Home Life; and Philanthropic, Social and Political Work. With nearly 100 Portraits and other Illustrations. Royal 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. [December 1st.]

BY RICHARD LE GALLIENNE.

The RUBAIYAT of OMAR KHAYYAM: a Paraphrase from several Literal Translations. Long fcap. 8vo, parchment cover, 6s.

BY LOUIS WALDSTEIN, M.D.

THE SUBCONSCIOUS SELF, and its RELATION to EDUCATION and HEALTH. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

BY W. T. STEAD

REAL GHOST STORIES. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

BY W. J. STILLMAN.

THE OLD ROME and the NEW, and Other Studies. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

BY LAURENCE ALMA TADEMA.

REALMS of UNKNOWN KINGS: Poems. Fcap. 8vo, paper covers, 2s. net; buckram, 3s. net.

BY HELMUTH SCHWARTZE

THE LAUGHTER of JOVE: a Novel. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

BY ARABELLA AND LOUISA SHORN

POEMS by A. and L. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. net.

BY MRS. LEAKE

The ETHICS of BROWNING'S POEMS With an Introduction by the BISHOP of WINCHESTER. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

VOLUME III. OF THE ETHICS OF THE SURFACE SERIES.

CUI BONO? By Gordon Seymour. 16mo, buckram, 2s.

GRANT RICHARDS, 9, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NINTH THOUSAND.

ALFRED LORD TENNYSON: A MEMOIR.

By HIS SON.

With Photogravure Portraits of Lord Tennyson, Lady Tennyson, &c.

Facsimiles of Portions of Poems.

And Illustrations after Pictures by G. F. Watts, R.A., Samuel Laurence, Mrs. Allingham, Richard Doyle, Biscoombe Gardner, &c.

2 vols., medium 8vo, 36s. net.

TENNYSON'S POETICAL WORKS.

People's Edition, in 23 vols., cloth, in cloth case, 25s. net; leather, in cloth cabinet, 37s. net.

NEW NOVEL BY F. MARION CRAWFORD. CORLEONE: a Tale of Sicily.

In 2 vols., globe 8vo, 12s.

Gilt backs, in cloth box, 31s. net.

GOLDEN TREASURY POETS.

In 8 vols.

MATTHEW ARNOLD.
BYRON.
COWPER.
KEATS.

LONGFELLOW.
SHELLEY.
SOUTHEY.
WORDSWORTH.

NEW VOLUME of SERMONS.

By the late Dean VAUGHAN.

UNIVERSITY and OTHER SERMONS. By C. J. VAUGHAN, D.D., late Dean of Llandaff. With a Preface, by an OLD FRIEND and PUPIL. Crown 8vo, 6s.

MODERN READERS' BIBLE.—New Volume. Pott 8vo, 2s. 6d.

SELECT MASTERPIECES of BIBLICAL LITERATURE. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by Prof. RICHARD G. MOULTON, M.A. (Camb.), &c.

Text of the Revised Version is used by special permission of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge.

FOREIGN STATESMEN SERIES.

New Volumes.

Edited by Prof. BURY, Trinity College, Dublin. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. each.

CHARLES the GREAT. By Thomas HODGKIN, D.O.L.

WILLIAM the SILENT. By FREDERIC HARRISON.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"It would be difficult to appraise the value of Mr. Harrison's work too highly. It seems to us to be in many ways the model of what an historical character-study ought to be."

PHILIP II. of SPAIN. By Martin A. S. HUME. PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"A very able and comprehensive biographical sketch."

NEW BOYS' BOOK BY THE HON. J. W. FORTESCUE.

Pott 4to, cloth extra, 4s. 6d.

THE STORY of a RED DEER. By the Hon. J. W. FORTESCUE.

NEW BOYS' BOOK BY JOHN BENNETT. MASTER SKYLARK. A Story of Shakespeare's Time. By JOHN BENNETT. With Illustrations by Reginald B. Birch. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

WORKS by the late REV. T. E. BROWN.

FO'C'SLE YARNS, including BETSY LEE, and Other Poems. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE MANX WITCH, and Other Poems. Crown 8vo, 6s.

OLD JOHN, and Other Poems. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The ACADEMY (Nov. 6) commenting on Mr. Brown's death says:—"The form of these stories of lowly life is rough, the language is really idiomatic. The rhyming of the simplest, but there is much concealed art in the telling, and the knowledge of human nature exhibited therein is profound.... Readers who are not acquainted with these moving little dramas should make good the defect. There is waiting for them much rich humour and rare humanity." "Q." in the SPEAKER on the same date says: "I believe that Brown is a poet for as many people as can be persuaded to read him. A very genuine, a more homely man—in the best sense—never lived. And his song came from the depths of the man as clear as a brook from its native hills."

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, LONDON.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS	PAGE
A New Anthology ... ..	391
Mr. Gosse on English Literature... ..	392
Tedious and Unpleasant ... ..	393
Elements of the Science of Religion ... ..	393
William Morris ... ..	394
An Oxford Don ... ..	395
The New Psychology ... ..	396
Journalism on Literature ... ..	397
BRIEFER MENTION ... ..	397
NOTES AND NEWS ... ..	399
AN ACADEMY OF LETTERS ... ..	401
T. E. BROWN (Second Notice) ... ..	404
MR. RALEIGH ON STYLE ... ..	404
THE LONDON OF THE WRITERS: III., The Society of Arts' Memorial Tablets ... ..	405
THE BOOK MARKET ... ..	406
DRAMA ... ..	407
THE WEEK ... ..	408
NEW BOOKS RECEIVED... ..	409
FICTION SUPPLEMENT ... ..	105-108

REVIEWS.

A NEW ANTHOLOGY.

The Flower of the Mind. A Choice among the Best Poems. Made by Alice Meynell. (Grant Richards.)

ANTHOLOGIES, these latter years, come thick as leaves in Vallombrosa. Within a lustre we have had Mr. Beeching's Paradise of English Poetry and his Lyra Sacra, Mr. Quiller-Couch's Golden Pomp, Mr. Churton Collins's Treasury of Minor British Poetry, together with innumerable others less wide in scope or less distinguished in achievement. By the side of Mrs. Meynell's Flower of the Mind we may set Mr. Henley's English Lyrics. To our personal taste the more the better; they are all welcome.

For the making of an anthology is not merely the prettiest of literary amusements, it is also a delicate and fine mode of criticism. To select is to judge; tacitly, but no less deliberately. Admission or exclusion becomes the last word of a patient investigation, in the course of which tests for genius are devised, and many an established reputation fails to sustain the ordeal. A history of anthologies would be a curious chronicle of the slow but inevitable determination of greatness. It need hardly be said that when the tribunal is in a mind so pre-eminently critical, so acutely sensitive to the enduring qualities of poetry as that of Mrs. Meynell, the advance made in this process of evolution is a notable one. Mrs. Meynell sets her standard extremely high, sets it, indeed, at the best; and, with scarcely an exception, the poems she has included victoriously brave the challenge. She has taken her courage in both hands, and has dismissed once for all the old men of the sea who have burdened her predecessors. Of Byron and his poetry of rhetoric she makes a pretty clean sweep, admitting only the "Isles of Greece," and for the rest referring him courteously to some secondary anthology in which also Gray's "Elegy" should have an honourable place. And with Gray at their head go also the whole tedious train of eighteenth century versifiers, whose authority we have long since formally renounced, but whose tradition has, as a matter of fact, asserted itself over the better judgment of every previous anthologist. From the eighteenth century, between Dryden and Blake, Mrs. Meynell admits only four pieces—Addison's "Hymn," an "Elegy" of Pope's, Cowper's "Lines on his Mother's Picture," and Mrs. Barbauld's fragment on "Life." No Johnson, no Swift, no Thomson, no Goldsmith, no Gray, and even—for it is here that we would have made the exception—no Collins. On the whole, we can bear the loss with equanimity. The eighteenth century poetry has many merits; it is intelligent, polished, elegant, urbane—it lacks only inspiration. And inspiration is the sole passport to Mrs. Meynell's anthology.

Mrs. Meynell earns our gratitude, then, by the silent criticism of her generous exclusions. She earns it also by the felicities of spoken criticism, with which, like miniatures on what Browning chose to call a "missal-marge," she decorates her notes. We could wish there had been more of them, for beyond all critics she has the gift of going straight to the heart of her subject, and of wrapping up the essential in briefest phrases. But she has not chosen to be lavish in this kind of comment. Yet of Vaughan she says that his "imagination suddenly opens a new window towards the east"; and of Cowley's Alexandrine line that it should have been "the light pursuing wave that runs suddenly, outrunning twenty, further up the sands than these, a swift traveller, unspent, of longer impulse, of more impetuous foot, of fuller and of lustier breath, more eager to speak, and yet more reluctant to have done."

And of Drummond:

"A poem of Drummond's has this auroral image of a blush. Anthea has blushed to hear her eyes likened to stars (habit might have caused her, one would think, to bear the flattery with a front as cool as the very day-break), and the lover tells her that the sudden increase of her beauty is futile, for he cannot admire more. 'For naught thy cheeks that morn do raise.' What sweet, nay, what solemn roses!"

"Again:

'Me here she first perceived, and here a morn
Of bright carnations overspread her face.'

The seventeenth century has possession of that 'morn' caught once upon its uplands; nor can any custom of aftertime touch its freshness to wither it."

In a preface, short, but full of matter, Mrs. Meynell lays down a principle of anthology-making which has its application to every form of criticism. She will not have her work to be an arbitrary thing. "Done, finally, in the mental solitude which cannot be escaped at the last," it is yet done, in virtue of the studious training of a lifetime, "on the responsibility of one, but on the authority of many." Surely a true and vital critical formula, the mediating formula between that old conception of criticism as merely the application of authority, and that modern conception of it as merely an expression of personal preferences or prejudices! Call criticism "the adventures of a soul among masterpieces," if you will; but let it be clearly understood that the only valuable adventures are those of the man who is qualified to have them, just as for Aristotle the only valuable moral judgment was that of the man who was fitted by nature and training to express a judgment. And in the consensus of such judgments, all personal, but with an authority more than personal behind them, must be here the ultimate critical, as there the ultimate moral, criterion.

If an anthology could be exhaustive, inclusive of all the best, there would probably be little difference between anthologies. It is not so, and with the necessary choice among the best comes in that very different thing from the personal judgment, the personal liking. It is really in watching the direction which this personal liking takes that the interest of a new anthology consists. Through its exercise an anthology becomes, beyond pastime and beyond criticism, in some degree a confession. We do not propose to upbraid Mrs. Meynell, because in many respects her personal liking is not as ours. Certainly an anthology is to us the poorer without a dozen things that could be named—Wyatt's "My lute, awake," and Lamb's "Old Familiar Faces," for instance. We should have wished some Browne, Habington, Wotton, and some more Raleigh, Drayton, Landor, Wither. But it is nearer to the point to note some characteristics of Mrs. Meynell's self-revelation. She loves, we think, brocaded verse—intricate, solemn, and stately in diction and imagery. She loves the liberal sweep of the great ode. "Written with passion," she says, "it is the most immediate of all metres: the shock of the heart and the breath of elation or grief are the law of the lines." And certainly she loves those "fair and flagrant things" which the plain man calls "conceits," but which really testify to a type of poetic imagination that beholds the world shot through and through with symbolism and caught in a network of strange relations beyond the plain man's understanding. Crashaw, and, in a less degree Marvell and Lovelace, are far more liberally represented than in most anthologies. On the other hand, the pastoral motive—in the earlier, more naïve, more simple shape which it took among the Elizabethans proper—does not seem particularly to appeal to her. She loves a simplicity, but it is a simplicity "not at all childlike, but adult, large, gay, credulous, tragic, sombre, and amorous." It is the second simplicity, not the first; the simplicity of a soul tried in the furnace, of a St. Francis, not a Miranda; of Campion, Vaughan, Coleridge, not of Breton and Greene. The exclusion of Chaucer was determined, we suppose, by a rule against extracts: the slight account of Donne is less easy to understand; for on Donne, with what Mr. Gosse calls his "subterranean" influence, Crashaw, Lovelace, and their fellows all ultimately depend. It was not Mrs. Meynell's object, of course, to lay stress on historical evolution in literature; but another half-dozen of those fine-hearted lyrics in which the ardour of passion or thought fuses line after line of the rugged metre, would surely have been no more than the due of a wronged master. Only Mr.

Beeching, of recent anthologists, has done full justice to Donne. The Golden Treasury—and it is a criticism—knows him not. Of quite new claims to fame Mrs. Meynell has few to prefer. The day for discovering forgotten delights is, one fears, over. There is a fine sonnet by Charles Best; there is a variation by Sir Francis Kynaston on the familiar Caroline theme, so perfectly handled by Carew in his "Ask me no more"; and more important than these, there is a Blake-like "Tom o' Bedlam" song, as to the provenance of which Mrs. Meynell vouchsafes no information. Here are three stanzas; we would gladly quote the whole:

"I know more than Apollo;
For oft when he lies sleeping,
I behold the stars
At mortal wars,
And the rounded welkin weeping.

"With a heart of furious fancies,
Whereof I am commander;
With a burning spear,
And a horse of air.
To the wilderness I wander.

"With a knight of ghosts and shadows,
I summoned am to tourney:
Ten leagues beyond
The wide world's end;
Methinks it is no journey."

One fault we are inclined to find with Mrs. Meynell, where so much calls for praise. She is not, in one instance, at least, enough of a precisian as to her texts. The collection opens with a modernised and mutilated version of the exquisite thirteenth century carol, "Sumer is i-cumen in." This is the second verse as given by Mrs. Meynell:

"Ewe bleateth after lamb,
Loweth cow after calf;
Bullock starteth, buck verteth;
Merry sing, cuckoo!
Cuckoo! cuckoo!
Nor cease thou ever now.
Sing, cuckoo, now!
Sing, cuckoo!"

And this is the real thing:

"Awē bleteth after lamb,
Lhouth after calvè cu;
Bulluc starteth, buckē verteth,
Murie sing cuou!

"Cuccu, cuccu, well singes thu, cuccu,
Ne swike thu never nu;
Sing, cuccu, nu, sing, cuccu,
Sing, cuccu, sing, cuccu, nu!"

We do not wish to insist on the thirteenth century spelling, but alterations and omissions which blur the rhyme and rhythm of the piece seem to be inadmissible. Lovers of Richard Feverel will not think the point unimportant. In the case of Crashaw's beautiful fragment of a Christmas mystery, again, we doubt whether the version chosen by Mrs. Meynell is as good as the earlier one. Let two verses endure the comparison. Mrs. Meynell has:

"Come, we shepherds whose blest sight
Hath met Love's morn in Nature's night;
Come lift we up our loftier song
And wake the sun that lies too long.

"To all our world of well-stol'n joy
He slept, and dreamt of no such thing,
While we found out Heaven's fairer eye,
And kissed the cradle of our King:
Tell him he rises now too late
To show us aught worth looking at."

The earlier version is:

"Come, we shepherds, who have seen
Day's king deposed by night's queen;
Come, lift we up our lofty song,
To wake the sun that sleeps too long.

"He, in this our general joy,
Slept, and dreamt of no such thing,
While we found out the fair-eyed Boy,
And kissed the cradle of our King:
Tell him he rises now too late,
To show us aught worth looking at."

It is, of course, a matter of opinion, and it must be admitted that the "obsequious Seraphim" of one of Mrs. Meynell's later stanzas is better than the "officious angels" of the earlier version.

We might differ on details until doomsday, and not forget our gratitude. It is a rare pleasure to be brought into touch with such a mind as Mrs. Meynell's upon the things that really matter. For to her poetry is not a mere recreation or a profession, but in her own words "veritably the complementary life." And of such are the chosen interpreters of the House Beautiful.

MR. GOSSE ON ENGLISH LITERATURE.

A Short History of Modern English Literature.
By Edmund Gosse. (William Heinemann.)

MR. GOSSE'S History of English Literature has the qualities of ingenuity and dexterity which might be looked for in any work of his, and it cannot be denied that he has succeeded in his difficult task, if it is success to have written a book that is interesting in every paragraph. There is hardly a page that does not contain some disputable matter of opinion, but those challenges to the reader are fairly stated, while the general plan of the history is one that commands attention. Mr. Gosse has committed himself without reserve to the view that traces out the succession of literary schools, the influence of large impersonal forces, of common aims and ideas. Evolution is the name for it; and one of the most remarkable passages in the book is the singularly clear account of the author's principles in the "Epilogue." In his execution of his plan, Mr. Gosse has probably had in mind the success of Mr. S. R. Gardiner in his Introduction to English History, where the "evolution" of English History is represented in a clear abstract form, with the proper names and personalities as much as possible cleared away. However that may be, Mr. Gosse has studied carefully the general design of his history, and his argument proceeds securely and without hesitation, because he knows his own policy thoroughly from beginning to end.

On the other hand, it may be objected that his policy is not quite consistent, and perhaps not quite as easy for the reader as for the author; that the philosophical framework is not always quite fairly treated in the illustrations and flowers of rhetoric with which it is garnished. It is a question of scale and proportion; and Mr. Gosse appears at times to change his focus too suddenly, and to lapse from the place of the scientific demonstrator into the colloquial manner which is suited to a different line of history, without any "evolution" or "environment" or any other solemnity. The general design is simple and austere; but the contents are sometimes rather incongruously mingled, and some of the criticisms are on a scale that would require a score of volumes in place of this narrow room of 400 pages, which is all that the author has allowed himself for his picture of five centuries. An instance may be found in the account of Carlyle. The appreciation of Carlyle's strength is not affected by Mr. Gosse's evident distrust of Carlyle's teaching. The genius of Carlyle as a man of letters is not slighted in Mr. Gosse's narrative. But his criticism leaves a sense of disproportion and irrelevance, because it is a fragment of personal criticism thrown into an evolutionary history, because it is coloured too strongly by antipathy, and because the critic is too hurried to stop and explain and defend his opinion:

"Yet it is difficult to decide what Carlyle has bequeathed to us, now that the echoes of his sonorous denunciations are at last dying away. Standing between the Infinite and the individual, he recognises no gradations, no massing of the species; he compares the two incomparable objects of his attention, and scolds the finite for its lack of infinitude, as if for a preventable fault. Unjust to human effort, he barks at mankind like an ill-tempered dog, angry if it is still, yet more angry if it moves. A most unhelpful physician, a prophet with no gospel, but vague stir and turbulence of contradiction . . . a voice and nothing more, yet at worst what a resonant and imperial clarion of a voice!" (pp. 345).

If there is any error in this judgment, there is nothing that is not fair matter for argument. But it is criticism of a kind that belongs to a wholly different sort of book. It is too lively for evolution; and it is uncomfortably penned within its scholastic limits. Besides, it takes up the room that ought to have been given to Carlyle's literary ancestry; Carlyle's style is described without a reference to Sterne or Jean Paul Richter; one would imagine, from Mr. Gosse's account on p. 333, that Sartor Resartus was wholly Carlyle's own invention. This is the fault, if it be one, of the book as a whole. "Evolution" in literary history requires a great many things that are commonplace and well known; it is through a shuffling and re-arrangement of commonplaces that change of literary types is brought about: the change from Chaucerian to Spenserian form, from the novel of Fielding to the novel of Scott, and so forth. Mr. Gosse has explained all this, and more, in his "Epilogue." But in his History itself he has rather evaded all this business. The scope of his book required some more restraint in the matter of personal impressions and more attention to historical commonplaces; in short, the form chosen is an inconvenient one, and Mr. Gosse (it is rather difficult to see why) has gone out of his way to put himself in the cramped position of the tenant of the Castle of Otranto, in a house with no elbow-room. The reader is baulked at every turn, and thinks with regret of the essays in literary history where Mr. Gosse had a freer hand—his essays on seventeenth century poets, and, still more, the "Northern Studies," in which Ibsen was first introduced to English readers. The same sort of grievance is felt by readers of the companion volumes in this series. Mr. Murray on Greek and Mr. Dowden on French Literature, though their methods are unlike, are equally impeded by the conditions of their work. Why should they be in bondage to a series? Why not choose their own length of line and say what they mean, and what they really wish to say?

TEDIOUS AND UNPLEASANT.

The Beth Book. By Sarah Grand. (W. Heinemann.)

WE can give our opinion of The Beth Book in nine words—one half is intolerably tedious, the other half unpleasant. It purports to tell the story of Elizabeth Caldwell Maclure, known as Beth, beginning at the day before her birth, "a serene, grey day, awesome with a certain solemnity, and singularly significant to those who seek a sign," and ending only after five hundred and twenty-seven pages, when Beth meets her "son of the morning"—one Mr. Brock. The unpleasant portion of the book is mainly concerned with Beth's marriage to a blackguard, called by one of the characters a "plausible hog." When Mme. Grand sets herself to describe a foul man she does it with a will. Dr. Dan. Maclure is pictured with so much animus that he ceases to be human. None of the males has verisimilitude. That is inevitable when an author is obsessed by so obvious a prejudice. Characters come and go through the interminable pages; but Beth and her mother are the only two that live. Stay: we except the boy Sammy, Beth's first sweetheart. It was Sammy who said to her, "If you wasn't a girl, I'd punch your 'ead!" Beth is described on the title-page as a woman of genius. We should never have guessed it, although we are told that she was a mighty orator and a great writer. Also, Mr. Pounce remarks casually, that Beth promises to be to England "what Georges Sand was to France." Mme. Grand mercifully spares us a report of Beth's speech to an assembly of women on "The Desecration of Marriage."

We are sorry for Beth. Her punishment was severe; but when a woman marries a man who had scraped acquaintance with her brother in a public billiard-room, whose full name "she hardly knew," it was not to be expected that her married life would be compact of the perfect felicity she is now enjoying with that "son of the morning"—Mr. Brock. We fear the fastidious Beth had in full measure the prurient curiosity which is the least agreeable characteristic of the femme inouïe. At school she "hurried over all the hateful words and passages in the Bible and Shakespeare"; but after marriage she permitted her husband to show her sights, and to narrate in conversation the gamut of his experience of depraved life. She permitted him, did pure-minded, fastidious Beth. Says our authoress:

"In speaking of such women he used epithets from which Beth recoiled. She allowed them to pass, however, in consideration of the moral exasperation that inspired them, and the personal rectitude his attitude implied. The subject had a horrible fascination for her, yet she could not help listening . . . she listened in silence . . . collecting material—"

Faugh!

The first two hundred pages about Beth's early childhood are simply dull. She is a precocious nuisance—that is all. Maggie Tulliver shines immortal beside this clay. This is the sort of thing gravely catalogued: "Once a piece of apple-dumpling Beth was eating slid off her plate on to the gravelled walk. Someone picked it up and put it on her plate again, all covered with stones and grit, and the sight of hot apple-dumpling made her think of gravel ever afterwards, and filled her with disgust." Likewise: "She had a great aversion to (sic) bread and butter, too, for a long time, but that she got over." We prefer even such passages to the "sex" discussions that abound. The characters cannot get away from the uninviting round of views about marital relations, sexual problems, and the Contagious Diseases Acts. "Nowadays, when I see ladies together in a corner, talking earnestly, I always suspect that they are discussing the sex question," observes Mr. Hamilton-Wells. "Sex is a thing to be endured and enjoyed," Ideala exclaims. "I keep a separate compartment in my mind for the sex question," says Beth. We are told that when Beth retired to bed after a bout of such talk, "she was like one who has been bathed and perfumed after the defilements of a long and dusty journey." Our feeling is that bathing and perfuming is what we need.

Books like this are not wanted. They do not amuse; they do not instruct; they do not edify. To make all men either prigs or blackguards; to play with nasty subjects, to treat a few vile types as normal products, is not art. Not thus do the masters work. They square their shoulders with the crowd, giving to evil counsel and forgiveness, not vituperation and neurotic scolding.

THE GIFFORD LECTURES (EDINBURGH) FOR 1896.

Elements of the Science of Religion. Part I., Morphological. By C. P. Tiele, Theol. D., &c. (Blackwood & Sons.)

THE title-page of this book ought to make every patriotic scholar blush. The science of which it treats was invented in England some twenty-five years ago, when Prof. Max Müller—always alive to the signs of the times—first published his Introduction to the Science of Religion. Since then chairs for its teaching have sprung up in France, in nearly every University in Germany, in America, and even in Holland. Only England remains without a professor, and, as it seems, without a proficient of the science. When the Gifford Trustees, by a spirited wrench of the terms of their trust, decided to deal with it, they had to bring Dr. Tiele over from Leyden to deliver the lectures before us. A similar difficulty arose when an article on religion was required for the Encyclopædia Britannica, and was, if we remember rightly, overcome in the same way.

In the present instance this importation of foreign labour does not seem to have been justified by the result. Dr. Tiele, though a professor of the science in his own university for many years, has dealt with it in his Gifford Lectures in a way which, to our mind, is both confusing and unscientific. In a work on the "elements" of a science we naturally look for definitions. But religion is not here defined, nor the science of religion, save that it is said to be what Lord Gifford meant by natural theology. Dichotomy of the subject discloses, according to Dr. Tiele, the two categories of nature religions and "ethico-spiritualistic revelation" religions. Nature religions die with the races among which they are born, while the ethico-spiritualistic revelation religion is always a development or reformation of the nature variety. Religion, like everything else, follows, on the same authority, certain laws of development or growth, which may be traced by the usual scientific methods. Yet we are told on almost the last page that "in the more highly developed religious minds the conviction gradually gains ground that the province of religion is a unique province, in which scientific or philosophical arguments hold as little sway and are as needless as in that of art." As to the laws of its development, "religion has never really developed except when a number of different religions have come into contact," and the course of development shows "a continual movement from uniformity to ever greater diversity." But "the appearance of Christianity inaugurated an entirely new epoch in the development of religion . . . all the streams of the religious life of man, once separate, unite in it."

The only explanation we can find of these inconsistencies is that Dr. Tiele, in spite of many disclaimers, is speaking not as a man of science, but as a theologian. Like most theologians, he is trying to bring out not the whole truth, but the truth on a few points carefully chosen by himself. He hints that it is not necessary to waste time over the study of "the lower religions," but that we should go at once to the most highly developed, which is, of course, his own. "You and I," he says, "are convinced that the purest and most genuinely human form of religion has been brought to light by the Gospel." But what becomes of his theories if we neglect his hint, and do apply them to the lower religions? Let us take, for instance, the Egyptian, which first (so far as we know) taught the doctrine of the future life—not, as Dr. Tiele says, the immortality—of the soul. It was not a revelation religion, so it must have been a nature religion. It came in contact with nearly every religion of antiquity, yet it did not develop into a higher form. Very early it passed not from uniformity to diversity, but from a quantity of provincial cults to one State religion, which in all but name was a monotheism, manifesting itself to the vulgar as a systematised sorcery. After thus remaining unchanged for at least 4,000 years, it suddenly and completely died before the race which gave it birth, which is in fact alive and flourishing at the present day. Nor do Dr. Tiele's theories work satisfactorily if applied to Christianity itself. Protestantism, to which he and his hearers belong, is the development of Catholicism. Yet Catholicism came into contact, and pretty violent contact, with Paganism, Mohammedanism, Judaism, and Manichæism, and did not give birth to Protestantism until these struggles had long been over. Dr. Tiele himself seems to feel the awkwardness of this, but accounts for it thus:

"It [i.e., the complex phenomenon of the development of religion] consists in differentiation or continual detachment from the original chaotic unity, manifesting itself in the formation of ever greater wealth and more pronounced individuality of varieties, and in ever greater independence of the other operations of the human mind, and this is coupled with an earnest striving for the inward—that is, the essential—unity of what is now externally separated. I believe [he goes on with paternal pride] that this solution throws light on the process of development, including that of religion, and enables us to understand it better."

Perhaps. It at any rate enables Dr. Tiele to represent his own relatively small sect as the flower of Christianity. But in the meantime, what about Science? And what about the Gifford Bequest, which was not to be used for the teaching of the creed of any Church or sect?

We are promised another volume, containing Dr. Tiele's lectures on the ontology of religion. Let us hope that in it he will not attempt to enrich our language by such awful words as "repristinate." We think, too, that as the Oriental names in the present volume bristle with diacritical marks, he might avoid in future the annoying practice of writing Greek words in italic letters.

WILLIAM MORRIS.

William Morris, His Art, His Writings, and His Public Life: a Record. By Aymer Vallance. (George Bell & Sons.)

MORRIS's indirect influence will certainly outlast his brief vogue. Brief was that vogue, for it came late, and he lived to see it disappear from its first and most conspicuous conquest—colour. He taught the durability, beauty and simplicity of the older (chiefly vegetable) dyes, and saw them "boomed" so eagerly that the aniline colours were wiped off the face of the earth, except only that they were smuggled into use to make deadly mixtures intended to imitate the beautifully imperfect vegetable dyeing, with all their once boasted brilliance foregone, grinding each other to a neutral powder. It seemed as though coal-tar would never reappear undisguised. But its suppression was but a fashion, and the opposite fashion swung into vogue again with irresistible impetus. Never have the aniline colours, since the day of their discovery, been so popular or so intense as they have now become; they are redoubled in strength, multiplied in number, the reproach of their vulgarity is taken away, and, for all the world cares, William Morris might never have written the praise of indigo and chips. The change he wrought in form may, perhaps, be more lasting, but probably merely because things constructed are generally more durable than things coloured. People may cease to think it distinguished to live in a house designed by an architect, and may return, in their hearts, to the house of their true delight as the builder designed it, its columns and its portico; but they nevertheless remain in the dwelling Norman Shaw made for them, and do not pull it down. The fashion of better dwellings, as it chances, was a strong one and a long one. A considerable part of London was rebuilt while it reigned, and there the streets and squares must stand for no small space of time. In a word, when art, beauty, simplicity, colour, form, and use have to be taught by words to a people that has lost the instinct and the luck of these things (and, whether we like it or not, the people of modern Europe are in that case), there is little to be done except by the flux and reflux of fashion and habit. We must make the best of that fact, and be glad if a good fashion is preached once or twice in our own day, and not set our hopes upon changes and "returns" and "reforms" and "revivals." The very name of these efforts, and the need for them, speak for themselves, and limit the expectations of the wise.

William Morris was certainly one—perhaps the chief one—of those who made efforts to rebuke the singularly vulgar and ugly habits which they found prevalent. Others, his contemporaries, worked too, but he was certainly an early revivalist. Too young to be one of the pre-Raphaelites, he inspired himself from their initiative, but did what they never attempted. The Brotherhood seem to have accepted the "turned" table-legs, the white and crimson, and the bead mats as they found them; at least one must suppose so, by the case of an interior painted by Mr. Holman Hunt as his idea of a "handsome" drawing-room in the fifties. They needed a lead for the leap over the customs of expensive vulgarity; and William Morris seems to have given it later—in the sixties. It took ten more years for domestic art to come to popularity, the first step towards the rush to destruction.

Mr. Aymer Vallance writes frankly in the tone of an eulogist; and his services as a zealous showman are very welcome while it is a question of wall-papers, dyes, oilcloths, tapestries, and even architecture. We need the illustrations, which are most carefully produced, and we are generally well inclined toward an expert explanation or commentary. But it is otherwise with the poetry. There are critics of poetry, and they have their own expertise, but the author of William Morris would certainly not claim to be one of the few, and his essay on Morris's poetry is the only section of his otherwise excellent book that might have been dispensed with.

Because the subject of the Memoir was poet and designer both, it does not necessarily follow that the author, being a student of design (as Mr. Vallance evidently is), should also be a writer of authority on poetry. What would Mr. Vallance think of a Professor of Poetry (even) who should undertake to deal with the wall-papers? Morris's great range of work does not bestow a like comprehensiveness upon any one of his appreciators.

Morris was stern towards the thing called "taste" in France, and his domestic decoration was exclusively fitted for English houses, English towns, and the surrounding of English orchards and gardens—"garths and closes," we should say. Wood is the most important of the materials of an interior in the Morris fashion, and the surfaces are all homely, humble, and opaque. Lucid marbles, effects of burnishing or metal, are not in the Morris scheme, and serge seems more suitable than silk. Morris himself went so far as to charge marble with a certain measure of vulgarity, and this in itself is a rather curious sign of insularity; it betokens an association—a London association—of gold and marble with the restaurant. Gold and marble and ivory in the South have a widely different tradition. But is a Morris room in Italy a thinkable thing? However, as we in England do, as a matter of fact, fit our houses with wood and spread thin paper upon our gritty walls (the combination is really a deplorably inappropriate one), and are glad to get cotton printed because we cannot have linen embroidered, Morris was precisely the reformer we needed. He accepted the lowly materials and taught us to like them for their own qualities and to treat them accordingly. We—personally—have a quarrel with him for his love of "patterns," or repeating designs. In despite of the most respectable precedent, we are strongly of opinion that a diaper is very well, and that a plain and blank surface is very well, but that a design of any kind of sequence, multiplied without a beginning or end, is at best a doubtful good. We have this doubt about the very cover of Mr. Vallance's handsome book. What is the matter, we ask, in the peculiarly apt phrase of choice American—what is the matter with a plain colour when it is a good one (and all thanks to Morris for helping us to good ones)? Why, nothing is the matter with it—it looks so well—until the Morris pattern is applied to it, and then it really pleases less. The repeating pattern is the child of machinery; it is modern, modern. Whereas we had corrupt, foolish, tedious, and vulgar repeating patterns before Morris came, and have had exceedingly taking, naïf, innocent, and clever repeating patterns since his coming, we are much in his debt. He prepared for us many a charming corridor of yellow and white and blue and white, so that the opening of the front door gives us a welcome, and he has chastened the average drawing-room and made it take its middle-class place gracefully, so losing its reproach. But there is a further simplicity, a region of taste where the coloured is more favoured than the papered Morris wall.

Mr. Vallance shows us how Morris arranged his Kelmscott printed page, but does not convince us that the shortening of the spaces between words, in order to avoid the effect of white, is not a hindrance to pleasant legibility; nor will he persuade the poets to write nothing but metre that shall cover the paper completely. It is distressing to think of the amount of white quite unarchitecturally placed, and, indeed, at random as regards the construction of the print, which the ode must expose where a thoughtless poet has taken a very short line for a cadence.

Into some inconsistencies the revivalist is obliged to fall, and it would be too easy to display Morris's. He heads the first poem in his own book, "Here begin Poems By the Way, Written by William Morris. And first is the Poem called From the Upland to the Sea," and we know the style of his prose. But off duty, he could write English that was not only usual but common—for instance, "The structure may be more or less masked, and some designers take a great deal of pains to do so." This is not old English, and neither is it precisely grammar. But whithersoever he went his biographer follows him loyally. Mr. Vallance has done his work not only with enthusiasm, but with discretion, and his success is assured by thorough labour in a considerable task.

AN OXFORD DON.

The Philosophical Lectures and Remains of Richard Lewis Nettleship. Edited, with a Biographical Sketch, by A. C. Bradley and G. R. Benson. In 2 vols. (Macmillan.)

A SINGULARLY attractive personality is revealed in Prof. Bradley's "Biographical Sketch" of Richard Lewis Nettleship. The memoir has the advantage over most memoirs, in that it is contained in some fifty pages instead of a couple of volumes, and within these narrow limits of space Prof. Bradley contrives to draw a portrait which goes far to attain the expressed object with which it was undertaken. This is, in the biographer's own words, to "explain in some degree the great influence he exerted on his pupils and friends, and the impression of 'uncommonness' which he almost invariably left even on acquaintances."

The external history of Lewis Nettleship's life is, except for its tragic end, of the slightest and most uneventful. After a brilliant career at Uppingham and Balliol, he had purposed to write upon art and to work among the poor in London. An offer of a Balliol tutorship induced him to stay in Oxford, and in Oxford he remained until his death, teaching philosophy, and gradually becoming, after T. H. Green's death, "the strongest intellectual and spiritual force felt within the college." In 1893 he went, as he was fond of doing, to the Alps. He made several ascents, and the guides noticed that he was generally silent in the valley, but "as soon as they got up into the high air he seemed to be another person, so joyous and full of song and talk." On August 24 he started to go up Mont Blanc by the Aiguille and Dôme du Goûter. A violent storm came on, and the party spent the night in a hole cut in the ice. This is Prof. Bradley's account of the end:

"Nettleship acted in his last hours as his friends would have expected of him. During the night he was cheerful: the guides were too depressed to sing, and he sang to them. In the morning he ate, and pressed them in vain to eat. After a while as the storm showed no sign of abating, he proposed to start; some such words as 'Il faut faire quelque chose: mourir ici ce serait mourir en lâches,' were almost his last. The guides objected; but he answered only, 'Allons,' and stepped into the storm, and they followed him. They had thought him the strongest of the three, but it was not long before he fell, and, when they ran to him, grasped them each by a hand, and died."

Nettleship was a man who was felt by all who knew him to be living on a high plane. He took existence seriously, was concerned with its problems and its meanings. The ultimate expression of his nature, as with Browning's grammarian, was the desire to know truth. A man of the world he was not, hardly even a man of books. Second-rate books, like second-rate philosophy, he detested. His travelling companions on his last journey to Switzerland were Spinoza's Ethics and the shilling selection from Browning. He was fond of art, and still more fond of music: the hearing of music seemed to him "almost the only reasonable form of worship." He was not a markedly social man; at afternoon teas "a feeling of unreality and futility came over him and made him dumb"; but he made close friendships, and liked digging in his garden, children, moors, and mountains. Though a serious man, he was far from a prig: he rowed—one remembers him taking a regular oar in the "Ancient Mariners" crew; he had a sense of humour, and enjoyed sunshine and laziness. Those who did not know him sometimes thought his moral judgments unduly lax; but he had the imagination which sees all round a case. Nor was he in any way a pedant. Says Prof. Bradley:

"Another might notice that he did not use philosophical formulas, would even put them aside with a certain impatience, and would discuss anything that concerned human nature with the interest of a novelist, with almost startling frankness, and with a ready sympathy for well-nigh any kind of passion or difficulty. He would have winced to know it, but it is the fact that he gave the impression of living on a height, and of carrying something of an ideal atmosphere into the most every-day occupations."

As is so often the case with a famous Oxford don, Nettleship's actual literary achievement was very slight when compared with his abilities. He took a part in the translation of Lotze's Logik; he began a history of the Normans in Italy, but set it aside when called upon to write a Memoir of T. H. Green, and never took it up again. This Memoir was, perhaps, his finest bit of work. At an earlier date he had written an essay on Plato's Theory of Education in a volume called Hellenica, and had been invited to return to the subject in a small book on Platonism for the S.P.C.K. The scope of the design grew, but before his death he had completed the section dealing with Plato's Ethics. This is now printed among his Remains, and to it Prof. Bradley, who is responsible for the first volume of the book, adds a few letters and brief papers on philosophical subjects, and a set of lectures on Logic. In the second volume Mr. G. R. Benson prints a longer and more elaborate set of lectures on Plato's Republic. Nettleship was in the habit of lecturing from the briefest notes, and the editors have, therefore, had recourse to the very full reports made by several of his hearers—not in every way, perhaps, a very satisfactory process. Thus the finished literary work now offered us is very slight, and one regrets it the more, because both the essays on Plato's Ethics, and the letters, in their several ways, give evidence of no inconsiderable skill with the pen. This is from a letter written in Italy:

"Yesterday the weather got splendid again, and I went out for five hours in the afternoon and got right away among the hills, where little country roads wind in and out, letting you see down deep valleys with tiny tumbling brooks, and here and there a sudden sight of Florence, like a glorified Oxford from a glorified Stow Wood, and every now and then a patch of poplars breaks the greyiness of the olives into golden spray, and you hear now and then a nightingale in the blazing sunlight which would burn you up if there weren't a great wind which makes you almost drunk with its buoyancy, and the clearness of the hill-lines against the sky makes you jump every time you look up, and gradually the sun goes down and the wind with it, and the hills get purple, and the whole great valley of the Arno brims with a level light."

It cannot be said that these Remains go far to explain Nettleship's Oxford reputation as the successor of Green and the champion of idealistic thought. The essay on Plato's Ethics and the lectures on the Republic are both of them excellent, real contributions to the already considerable body of Oxford writing on the subject. But they are mainly expository, and in a less degree critical; in no sense constructive. It is in Logic, of course, that an Oxford lecturer declares himself, Logic being interpreted, by the custom of the place, as covering not merely scientific and dialectic method, but also the psychology of cognition and that part of metaphysics which deals with the ultimate nature of knowledge. But we venture to doubt whether the Logic lectures here given were really worth printing in their present form. They are vague, indefinite, unsatisfying; they neither state clearly nor attempt to decide the central problems on which the lecturer's opinion would be valuable; they are certainly too much concerned with purely verbal discussions. The fact is, that, as is so often the case, the educational force in Nettleship was not his lectures, but his personality. Those who heard him will tell you: "There wasn't very much in his lectures, and he generally contradicted himself once or twice in the morning, but it was good to see the man thinking the thing out there before you"; and Prof. Bradley lays stress on the way in which, like a second Plato, he would help those pupils who came into direct contact with him in working out their difficulties. They were "led into a joint attempt to examine the position stated, and to get from it nearer to the truth which they were believed to be anxious to find." This is stimulus, and, after all, stimulus, rather than the inculcation of particular theories, is the proper business of the educator.

THE NEW PSYCHOLOGY.

The New Psychology. By E. W. Scripture, Ph.D. "Contemporary Science Series." (Walter Scott.)

It is well known that in America the study of psychology is prosecuted with zeal and enthusiasm. In addition to other modes of training and discipline in this department of scientific inquiry, there is scarcely a university or college of note in the United States which has not its well-equipped psychological laboratory. Energetic disciples of Wundt—the master in Leipzig—are scattered over the country: Von Münsterberg has himself been working and teaching at Harvard. And the spirit of enthusiasm which actuates the teachers has been caught by a large and increasing body of students.

Here in England the case is different. Some of Mr. Francis Galton's admirable anthropometric investigations deal, indeed, with problems similar to those which are exercising the patient ingenuity and skill of American investigators. At Cambridge there has been for some three or four years a psychological laboratory; and one is projected in London in connexion with University College. It cannot be said, however, that in England generally either teachers or students show that lively and energetic zeal in this department of psychological study which characterises our cousins on the other side of the Atlantic. No doubt, that tyrannical and ubiquitous person, the examiner, is partly to blame, if blame there be, for this state of matters. But the examiner is the product of his time—the expression of the Zeitgeist of his age and country. Why, then, is it that laboratory work in psychology is less devotedly prosecuted here than in America? Is it that we regard the results hitherto attained as incommensurate with the labour and cost which have gone to their production? Or is it that these results have been hidden from the public eye in technical journals and specialist reviews? If this be the reason, Dr. Scripture's work descriptive of the methods and outcome of laboratory psychology is especially opportune. We here have facilities for gauging the work done, and the means by which it has been accomplished.

The title of Dr. Scripture's work—The New Psychology—seems to imply that the whole of psychology is to be rebuilt on the new foundations securely laid in the laboratory. Others may perhaps hold that the keynote of modern psychology is the genetic treatment which has been introduced by the conception of evolution—a genetic treatment for which accurate analysis is but the preliminary discipline. Of this there is little or nothing in Dr. Scripture's work. Genetic problems are conspicuous by their absence. Nor is there any attempt at analysis of the so-called mental faculties which teacher and student alike must employ in dealing with the results of psychological experiment. Dr. Scripture's attitude is here somewhat peculiar and characteristic:

"In using the word 'sensation,'" he says, "I am not introducing any of the technical terms usually employed in psychology. We here have nothing to do with the usual distinction between 'sensations' as elements of mind, 'percepts' as compounds, &c. In practice this distinction is not carried out. The subject of colour is treated under the heading of sensation, whereas much of the colour work deals with highly compound mental facts. Again, under the heading 'perception' you will find, for example, the whole treatment of space, whereas the elements of space are as simple as anything in mental life. With terms such as sensation, perception, intellection, emotion, conation, &c., we have nothing to do. We shall find all the facts of mental life in their proper places, and—I venture to hope—in connexions more natural and intelligible than when arranged grouped to suit a particular scheme of classification. Therefore, when I use a word like sensation, feeling, emotion, &c., I do so only in the meanings implied in common speech."

A little further on, in speaking of judgment, he says:

"Here, again, I use a term in the meaning given to it by everybody. Speculate as much as you please about the processes of logical thought involved; but, when I lift two weights and say 'unequal,' I know nothing of such processes. I have a very definite feeling that I express by saying 'unequal,' and it is this feeling that I term judgment. The expression for this feeling is found, for this particular case, in a certain difference between weights. Inaccuracy of judgment is the term applied to this difference."

Coming to closer quarters, however, with the methods and results of the new psychology, we may say that the methods are: first, the employment of experiment in place of unlimited observation; secondly, the use of instruments and apparatus of physical precision; and thirdly, the application to the data thus obtained of accurate and approved statistical treatment. Of these we may say that they are in themselves good and essentially scientific. Anything which conduces to the disentangling of special problems from the intricate web of phenomena presented to observation, anything which serves to make our experiments precise and their results capable of exact expression, anything which enables us to deal accurately with masses of data, is to be welcomed. But when we inquire how far these excellent methods are applicable in the study of mental phenomena we can scarcely fail to be struck by the narrow limitations of the field in which they have hitherto been employed with success. The time element in certain relatively simple mental processes has been ascertained with praiseworthy exactitude; and its bearing on the personal equation in astronomical observation is sufficiently well known. But have these time-reaction observations served to throw much illuminating light on the essential nature of psychological processes as such? If, as a matter of opinion, we must answer this question in the negative, we do so with no desire to underrate the value of the facts in themselves. Every accurately determined fact is of value. Of such is science built. But we may fairly ask how far any given fact is of importance to the building as a whole! This is the kind of question we feel bound to ask with regard to the bearing of the time element on our conceptions of human psychology. Or we may put the question in this form: If we were still ignorant of these time-facts by how much would the science of psychology, as a whole, be the poorer?

There is a good deal that is interesting in Dr. Scripture's treatment of Energy in Part III., and of Space—bodily, tactual, monocular, and binocular—in Part IV. Everywhere the same informing purpose is evident—to reach quantitative results by physical processes. There is, indeed, as it seems to us, some failure on the author's part to distinguish clearly the objective aspect of experience from the subjective aspect:

"Is the standard of energy," he asks, "a physical or a psychological one? Just as in the case of time, the establishment of standards of energy is made on the basis of our mental experience. By an effort, by the exertion of force, we push and pull objects about; we thus derive our notions of bodies as exerting forces on one another. In lifting a weight we feel the force of gravity; in stopping a flying ball we feel the work of resistance. Modern mechanics defines force in terms of mass and acceleration—i.e., the movement of a given mass through a given distance in a given time. In this way we regard it only as an unknown factor related to motion; but this abstraction does not mean anything to us mentally till we imagine some muscular force behind it. The standard of energy is thus both a physical and a psychological one. It is physical because it is ultimately established by instrumental means; it is psychological because no step of the process goes outside of our experience."

Our impression is that there is a good deal here that is as debatable physically as it is psychologically. We thought that mechanics, having defined force in terms of mass and acceleration, cheerfully left the "unknown factor related to motion" to the metaphysician. This, however, is a question for physicists to discuss. We turn rather to the psychological question. If the standard of energy "is a psychological one because no step of the process goes outside of our experience," what in the whole range of the physical and natural sciences, securely founded, as we believe, on experience, is not psychological? Our common experience presents an objective aspect with which the physical and natural sciences properly deal, and a subjective aspect which it is the business of the psychologist to elucidate. The identification of the two because they both fall under the general head of experience, can result in nothing but confusion.

We are of opinion that those who advocate laboratory methods in psychology, where physical processes and instruments are so largely used, must steadily keep this distinction in view. The experience they gain in the laboratory, in common with all our experience, has a psychological aspect, and it is in this aspect alone that their results are of value for the science of mind. Here again, therefore, we must ask, how far have the quantitative results hitherto obtained in the psychological laboratory, interesting and valuable in themselves, tended so completely to modify our conceptions of the science as to justify the claims of the New Psychology? We freely admit the great importance of Weber's law as generalised by Fechner and his successors; but can one seriously maintain the view that this generalisation, or all the generalisations set forth in Dr. Scripture's book, taken collectively, have served to remodel psychology, and thus to render valid the pretensions of the "New" science? If we answer this question in the negative we may perhaps find herein the reason why English psychologists have been seemingly unable to share to the full Dr. Scripture's picturesque enthusiasm for his special department of research. For him it is essential; for them accessory.

Lest it should seem from the tone of these remarks that we are out of sympathy with investigations such as are described in the work under consideration, it may be said in conclusion that this is not the case. We believe ourselves to be in sympathy with all good, honest scientific work; and much that deserves this praise has been done by Dr. Scripture and his compères. We hope that the Psychological Laboratory in Gower-street will fulfil the most sanguine expectations of its founders, and will train young men in accuracy of method and of thought. But we should deem it a misfortune if these young men, in their devotion to the new psychology, should neglect the old, and should fancy that the necessarily restricted plot of the laboratory ground were an adequate sample of the far wider and richer field which psychology has to offer for their patient and careful study. In a word, we regard the science which takes for its province the interpretation of mental phenomena as so extensive and varied that many workers on many methods may find ample scope for their diverse labours. By all means let us have laboratory work and laboratory instruction. But let us not suppose that this is the whole of psychology, or even that the science of mental phenomena is likely to be entirely reconstituted on new foundations.

JOURNALISM ON LITERATURE.

Victorian Literature. By Clement K. Shorter (James Bowden.)

MR. SHORTER is one of the few men who would have dared to undertake this work. To review critically so many and diverse living writers, and writers recently living, as those treated of in these pages requires no little courage. Mr. Shorter has not shirked his task; but we cannot think that he has adequately performed it. A book issued under such a title as this must be one of two things: either it must justly appraise the work covered by the term "Victorian Literature"; display the general trend of the period; make clear the advance or retrogression, and throw a strong light on the leading influences; or it must serve a useful purpose as an extensive and authoritative collection of names, dates, and facts. Mr. Shorter's volume seems to us to fall between these two requirements. It is too small and incomplete to be of use on the reference shelf; while, although many of his judgments are sound, we miss in Mr. Shorter, as critic, any comprehensiveness of outlook. He can dogmatise superficially on each writer under immediate notice, but you look in vain for an intelligent grasp of the essential qualities of the makers of the era of which he treats. He says nothing of their action and reaction upon each other. Let us take an example. One of the most conspicuous literary features of the past ten years has been the rise of what may be called the Greater Britain School of fiction. Under the influence of a new writer fiction (and the Victorian age is the age of the novel) suddenly shook itself free of certain old conventions. There is no need to enumerate the tenets of this school. It suffices to say that its exponents aim at setting forth facts as they are, and that Mr. Rudyard Kipling is at the head of it. Yet this is how Mr. Shorter dismisses Mr. Kipling:

"Another living poet who has been well and justly praised is Rudyard Kipling. He made his earliest fame as a writer of short stories of Indian military life. 'Soldiers Three' and 'Wee Willie Winkie' have entirely captivated the imagination of Mr. Kipling's contemporaries. It is as a poet, however, that he will perhaps longest retain his hold upon them. His 'Barrack-room Ballads' (1892) are finely touched with that martial spirit which so strongly appeals to the heart of our nation."

Nothing, you perceive, of Mr. Kipling's impingement upon his brother novelists—nothing of The Seven Seas. The truth probably is, that Mr. Shorter does not care for Mr. Kipling's style, and deprecates, as he has every right to do, his vogue. But, this being so, how much more valuable his book would be had he made it a genuine reflection of his own creed throughout, instead of sometimes passing an opinion of his own and sometimes merely recording the commonplace verdict of contemporary journalism! An honest, if heretical, book is worth a thousand hurried compilations.

Concerning many of our points of difference we will say nothing; but Mr. Shorter occasionally invites something more than disagreement. For example, this is not the way to write of the Hon. Mrs. Norton: "Mrs. Norton—'the Byron of poetesses,' as Lockhart described her—wrote several novels, Stuart of Dunleath and Lost and Saved being perhaps the best known in their time, but she lives now mainly in George Meredith's Diana of the Crossways." Does not Mr. Shorter know that this story has been denied both by Lord Dufferin and Mr. Meredith? Again, it is not correct to call Borrow "the most famous traveller of the reign." Sir Richard Burton, whose name is not mentioned by Mr. Shorter, was a greater. Wilson is included, but without reference to the Noctes Ambrosianæ. Dr. John Brown has no place in Mr. Shorter's pages, nor has the late T. E. Brown. Too often Mr. Shorter permits success or popularity to be his measure of merit.

BRIEFER MENTION.

The Founders of Geology. By Sir Archibald Geikie. (Macmillan & Co.)

THE geologists treated of in these lectures belong mainly to the last half of the eighteenth century and the first two decades of the nineteenth. Their facts and their theories have long been absorbed or refuted by modern science, and their personalities almost forgotten. Sir Archibald Geikie has found it a pious and a profitable task to recall some memories of men to whom their successors owe much, and from whose careers they may yet learn some lessons. With an unrivalled knowledge of his subject, and a considerable faculty of lucid and happy exposition, Sir Archibald tells the tales of Guettard and his early geological maps; of Desmarest and the great controversy as to the nature of basalt; of the rival schools of Neptunists and Vulcanists that clustered round Werner and Hutton; of Smith, Sedgwick, and Murchison and the stratigraphy of the English beds. The lectures were originally delivered at the John Hopkins University in the United States, and Sir Archibald Geikie speaks with enthusiasm of the great field open to geological science in America, and of the good work which American geologists are already doing.

France. By Mary O. Rowsell. "The Children's Study." (T. Fisher Unwin.)

THIS little book is a difficult piece of work well done. To tell the story of a great nation which has existed for more than fifteen hundred years, and to do this in a short compass and with a studied simplicity, is not an easy task. Miss Rowsell seems to have succeeded excellently. She has wisely kept her tale to the more stirring side of history, and added the many traditions, well-founded if not always true, which to the ordinary reader stand in place of fact. It is a record of conquest and battle and wild deeds, delightful to any child to whom States-General and Pragmatic Sanctions are things of abhorrence. And, though it is full of the gossip of history, and though, as is right, the Rolands and Bayards have the prominent places, there is no lack of method, and the book is an excellent little epitome of the facts on the subject.

Historical Portraits. By Henry B. Wheatley. (George Bell & Sons.)

WE possess no detailed history of our famous portraits, and Mr. Wheatley has made no attempt to supply the want. His book is an entertaining gossip upon historical portraits and their painters, illustrated with some seventy reproductions. He has conscientiously gone over many collections and brought together a surprising amount of interesting details. After a slight summary of the foremost British portrait painters he has chapters on "Portrait Exhibitions" and "Portrait Collections," and notes on the chief men and women in each walk of life whose features have been perpetuated. He wisely refrains from art criticism—in which we should doubt his excellence—and confines himself to biography and anecdote. The book supplies a real want, and is light and attractive enough for the most casual reader. It forms besides a portfolio of excellent pictures. There are only two omissions which one might deplore. Surely a Slaughter and a Pickersgill might have been omitted for the sake of an example of Raeburn, whose work in this sphere has often an extraordinary quality of power? And why is there no portrait of that best portrayable of men, the Marquis of Montrose? Either the 1640 by Jameson, the 1644 Dobson, or the famous 1649 picture by Honthorst might have been selected.

The French Revolution. Vols. III. and IV. By Justin H. McCarthy. (Chatto & Windus.)

THE publication of these two volumes brings to an end Mr. McCarthy's somewhat ponderous history of the French Revolution. Few people, we think, will find time to read it; nor can we honestly regret the fact very much. The fact is, the book is ridiculously long and diffuse. In it Mr. McCarthy has carried the vice of repetition and surplusage to its highest point. It is conceivable that some historian of monumental research and erudition could have filled four portly volumes of hard on four hundred pages each with the history of a couple of years (Mr. McCarthy's book only deals with the period of 1789-1791), in which, while every important fact and inference was included, none was dwelt on at undue length; but that historian is not Mr. McCarthy. The book is, of course, strongly tinged with its author's political views, and as these views, as applied to the French Revolution, are by no means generally accepted, the result is a picture of the events of this period which is not altogether convincing. But though we cannot congratulate Mr. McCarthy on his work as a whole—indeed, we find a difficulty in discovering what justification could be pleaded for the publication of these four portly volumes on a period which has been very fully dealt with by historians already—we gladly acknowledge the evidences of industry and wide reading which the book displays. Mr. McCarthy has studied conscientiously everything bearing upon his subject, and his book is a storehouse of facts, though the statement of them leaves much to be desired in directness.

Fletcher's The Faithful Shepherdess. Edited by F. W. Moorman. ("Temple Dramatists." J. M. Dent & Co.)

THIS edition of Fletcher's finest work, and one of the most beautiful of all pastoral dramas, is a welcome addition to the "Temple Dramatists." Mr. Moorman provides a brief, though perhaps sufficient, introduction and a few pages of notes. In mentioning the English attempts at pastoral drama which preceded Fletcher's, it was surely odd to include Peele's lost "Hunting of Cupid" and omit his extant and important "Arraignment of Paris." We fail to understand why this edition was advertised only a week or so before it appeared as edited by Prof. H. J. C. Grierson.

The Age of Tennyson. By Hugh Walker. ("Handbooks of English Literature." G. Bell & Sons.)

THIS does not come up to the level of some of the earlier volumes of the series—notably, to that of Prof. Herford's Age of Wordsworth. It was a difficult task to essay. The absence of a perspective militated against the casting of things into their proper proportion or the formation of broad general views. And the host of minor writers who had to be marshalled somehow almost necessarily turned several chapters of the book into the semblance of a biographical catalogue. But, to be frank, we doubt whether Prof. Walker has those brilliant gifts of literary exposition which would have enabled him to triumph over these obstacles. He knows his subject, of course—that, we suppose, is why he is a professor of it—but even in the passages where he has elbow-room, such as the accounts of Carlyle, Tennyson, Browning, he does not display any particular freshness of perception or any particular critical insight. He is shown at his best, perhaps, in a very true analysis of the mental attitude of John Henry Newman; but for the most part he is trite, commonplace, unsatisfying, anything but illuminative, or even suggestive. And we must confess that we have come not to look for the higher literary qualities in the majority of these innumerable handbooks, written as so many of them must be, not from any inward prompting, but merely upon request, to fill a place in a series.

Gleanings in Buddha Fields: Studies of Hand and Soul in the Far East. By Lascadio Hearn. (Harper.)

DESPITE its catchpenny title, it is impossible to read a chapter of Mr. Hearn's slight volume without becoming aware that one is in the presence of a writer whose acquaintance with the manner of life and mode of thought which obtain in the fascinating island which for so many years he has made his home is more than skin-deep. His sympathy is warm towards this gentle race; his comprehension of its ideas, his reverence for its ideals, spring out of his anxious study of both; he has so imbibed its spirit as, by the aid of a pre-existing foundation of Western culture, to be an admirable exponent of its philosophy and its theories of life. Of his eleven chapters three have chiefly interested us: the fifth, upon faces in Japanese art; the eighth, upon the Buddhistic allusions in Japanese folk-songs (of which the author gives us a number of specimens very deftly Englished); and the ninth, in which are treated with a surprising lucidity the distinctions between the popular and the esoteric Buddhism, and in particular the extremely recondite concept of Nirvana. It need hardly be pointed out here that his exposition of this subject has nothing in common with what is popularly prated at the Queen's Hall and elsewhere. Mr. Hearn sets before us a people of extraordinary tenderness and sensibility, inspired with a faith and hope of extreme beauty. One incident exemplifies a native refinement that must put to the blush the shallow clamorousness of the West. Mr. Hearn graphically tells us how when the war-worn troops returned from the late campaign they were suffered to pass in absolute silence through the throng of the citizens—patriotic exaltation was too lofty and too sacred an emotion to express itself through a shout. And we have yet to learn not to drown the last pulsations of a symphony with meaningless applause.

A System of Medicine. By Many Writers. Edited by Thomas Clifford Allbutt. Vol. IV. (Macmillan & Co.)

THIS volume was to have been the penultimate one in Messrs. Macmillan's important series of red-backed medical books. But the editor now intimates that the work will not accommodate itself in the five volumes originally proposed. A sixth will be needed; but there is little danger of the subscribers complaining, for it is evident that the great object of the publication is likely to be attained—namely, to produce a System of Medicine which shall be within the means of every practitioner.

Cassell's Family Doctor. By a Medical Man.

THIS book, as the title implies, is intended for discreet use by the heads of a family. It is claimed that with its aid the common ailments can be recognised and dealt with properly up to a certain point. Two chapters are devoted to home nursing, and these are eminently clear and practical. There is also a valuable concluding chapter on accidents and emergencies.

NEW EDITIONS.

The History of the Foreign Policy of Great Britain. By Montagu Burrows. (William Blackwood & Sons.)

MR. BURROWS is the Chichele Professor of Modern History at Oxford, and the chapters of this book, which is now issued at a lower price, are adapted from lectures. Mr. Burrows says that since the first edition was published, more than a year ago, the principles of British foreign policy, as traced in this book, have been most remarkably elucidated by events.

STANFORD'S COMPENDIUM OF GEOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL (New Issue).—North America (Vol. I.): Canada and Newfoundland. By S. E. Dawson. (Edward Stanford.)

THE Jubilee of the Queen's reign is advanced in justification of this undertaking. The Empire "has become for the first time conscious of its vast extent"; and hence the need of accurate statements of the physical peculiarities of great tracts of the world's surface dominated by the British flag. Such a statement is here attempted in respect of our North American dependencies; and it is very properly founded on "the latest reports presented to the Parliament of Canada by the men, officials for the most part, who are engaged in exploring the newer territories or in collecting the information necessary for the Dominion and of its integral provinces." The illustrative maps are both numerous and good.

THE ACADEMY FICTION SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1897.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

ONLY sixteen novels this week. Can it be that the strike among the printers of Edinburgh is damming the tide of fiction also? Sixteen suffices; but we have chronicled double that number in seven days before now.

THE LION OF JANINA.

By MAURUS JOKAI.

Another of Mr. Nisbet Bain's translations of the Hungarian novelist. The previous one was Pretty Michal. The Lion of Janina is Turkish: its sub-title is "The Last Days of the Janissaries." In the original it was called Janicsárok végnapjai, which makes us glad it has been translated. The hero of the romance is Ali Pasha of infamous memory. A portrait of Jokai precedes the story, and a very necessary glossary of Turkish words follows it. (Jarrold & Sons. 324 pp. 6s.)

A PASSIONATE PILGRIM.

By PERCY WHITE.

A slight, bright love-story by the author of Mr. Bailey-Martin. It is told autobiographically. The Passionate Pilgrim falls in love with Sylvia, who jilts him to marry a Lord. The Passionate Pilgrim inherits £50,000. The Lord dies. The Passionate Pilgrim returns to Sylvia, and finds her arms are still open. They fold around him; and he at once proceeds to long for "the fresh, pure heart of two years ago." Some people are never satisfied. We are satisfied that the author of Mr. Bailey-Martin can do better than this. (Methuen & Co. 316 pp. 6s.)

PEACE WITH HONOUR.

By SYDNEY C. GRIER.

"Mr." Grier is credited with three books on the title-page of this story, and of these we remember An Uncrowned King and His Excellency's English Governess. In the story before us we have a blend of two motives: the New Woman and a military "Ethiopian Mission," to which the heroine, a lady doctor, is attached. The improbability of this appointment is on a par with the vagueness of the mission, of the locality to which it is sent, and of the operations which are conducted there. But it is demonstrated in the end that a British officer may so far conquer his prejudices against a New Woman as to marry her. There is an abundance of incident, and the setting of the story lends it freshness. (William Blackwood & Sons. 413 pp. 6s.)

THE STORY OF AB.

By STANLEY WATERLOO.

As a change from the historical romance, now so much in vogue, Mr. Waterloo, who is a popular American author, has written a pre-historical romance. His characters belong to the period of which Mr. E. T. Reed has given the readers of Punch such droll glimpses; but they are a less amusing tribe of cavemen than his. The story is sensational: it abounds in mammoths and excitements, and is most admirably illustrated by Mr. S. H. Vedder. (A. & C. Black. 363 pp. 6s.)

AT THE TAIL OF THE HOUNDS.

By MRS. EDWARD KENNARD.

Mrs. Kennard is a well-known novelist of the hunting-field. The Catch of the County, The Hunting Girl, and The Sorrows of a Golfer's Wife have found readers. In a hunting novel one does not look for subtleties or miss them. Good, sound, slangy human nature, and the tiger-hunting qualities generally—these we expect to find depicted; and the love element should be strong and fibrous rather than sentimental. Of such things is this story of the drawing together of Mrs. Wentworth, a widow, and Major Gruffoldi, a bachelor, woven. The atmosphere of the stables and the rapture of "kills" invade the love-story; which is as it should be, for the art of a hunting novel is to know when to cut love-making and come to the 'osses, and when to cut the 'osses and come to marriage bells. Mrs. Kennard knows. (F. V. White & Co. 310 pp. 6s.)

OVER THE OPEN.

By W. PHILLPOTTS WILLIAMS.

Another hunting story, by the author of Poems in Pink. Mr. Williams knows what hunting is, for he was formerly Master and Huntsman of the Netton Harriers. And he seems to know what youth and love are. The blending of the two interests is of the closest, from the day when Violet boldly goes into raptures over her first horse to the day when—but the story is for its readers. (F. V. White & Co. 294 pp. 6s.)

PAUL MERCER.

By JAMES ADDERLEY.

This story by the author of Stephen Remarz is dedicated to Canon Gore. One has only to read the first two chapters describing the "Pilgrims" of Bunster and their leader, a millionaire soap-maker, to realise that it is a marrowy book. The figure of Peter Gowle, an unctuous preacher from Clapham, is stamped on the memory at once. "He was so terribly afraid of being justified by works that he seemed to favour an entirely passive existence, in which you must abstain even from doing what was right, lest you should run the risk of thinking there was any merit attached to your actions." It was after hearing Mr. Gowle tell the story of his conversion that Paul, the millionaire's little boy, said to Joan, his little sister: "I hate hearing about God, don't you?" (Edward Arnold. 234 pp. 6s.)

SAINT PORTH.

By J. HENRY HARRIS.

This is a novel of local customs and ways of thought. The author knows thoroughly, and loves correspondingly, the stretch of Cornish coast between Cawsand and the Land's End. His story tells how a young widow, Grace Trevail, toiled for the future of her little son, Silas, when bereft of her husband. The story is told not wholly for its own sake. The author is anxious to steep us in the simple life of these Cornish villages. We see the boats building and smell their new paint, we see the pilchards lying embalmed in their "press-beds" for the Italian market, and we are given many a quaint local saying, such as this:

"The Queen's nothin so uncommon,
But just like another woman
What's got a mouth and eyes."

Of course, there is a love interest—indeed, "The Wooing of Dolly Pentreath" is the sub-title of the story. (John Milne. 320 pp. 6s.)

SIR GASPARD'S AFFINITY.

By MINA SANDEMAN

Lurid and unlikely. There is a governess in the story who talks to her two charges like this:

"Thank Heaven that I am English born and bred, a true Briton, a daughter of Albion to the core! No incomprehensible, outlandish, indecorous foreign ways for me, therefore I wish to put it clearly before you, Victoria (and she emphasised her forcible discourse by tapping vigorously on the floor with her beetle-crushing, elastic braced foot) that I will not allow you (if I can avoid it) to acquire any French tricks; and you Cecilia . . . who are, alas! so soon to leave my sheltering wing for the gay and deceptive world . . . beware of Jesuitical Papists!"

Sir Gaspard and his affinity seem to have made a wedding of it, whereat "everything was rose-tinted and joyous." We had not patience to ascertain what becomes of Mr. Dawkins.

Dawk. But the name fascinates us. (Digby & Long. 204 pp. 3s. 6d.)

IN SIMPKINSVILLE.

BY RUTH McENERY STUART.

The American character tale, with its rendering of life in what this writer calls "secluded spots still reckoned upside down," is refreshing. When such a tale contains a deacon, and an old maid named Euphemia Twiggs, and the question is whether the deacon's habit of finding Miss Twiggs's hymns for her in church will come to anything, we at once surrender ourselves to the story. It was the Rev. Mr. Bowen who calculated that Deacon Hatfield's "book-swappin's" with Euphemia in twenty-three years totalled up to 12,000; and it was the rumour of this calculation that revived the hopes of a match in the congregation. But at the critical service Euphemia saved a delicate situation by going to a remote pew, and the village did not know what to make of it. "I don't say she didn't act ca'm," said one, "but in my opinion a little fluster is sometimes mo' becomin' to a woman 'n what this everlastin' ca'mness is." Of such quaint humour these stories—there are five—are compact. (Harper & Brothers. 244 pp. 5s.)

DUST O' GLAMOUR.

BY H. SIDNEY WARWICK.

We have little doubt that Mr. Warwick is a young writer. There are five or six plots in this book, and "problems" enough for all. There is a rector with a guilty secret; and there is a union unblest by the Church; and there is a broken engagement in another quarter; and there is an East-end parson who drinks and reclaims outcasts; and there are hints of dark doings in Colorado; and what not. Mr. Warwick has the courage to tackle half a dozen motives; he lacks the experience to deal effectively with one. Anything more crude than the story of how Geoffrey Gray and Irene Tempest dispensed with marriage we have seldom read. Yet Mr. Warwick has stuff in him. What he needs to get rid of is that dust o' glamour of life. (J. W. Arrowsmith. 338 pp.)

THE SACK OF MONTE CARLO.

BY WALTER FRITH.

This story purports to tell how certain daring spirits raided the gaming rooms at Monte Carlo. The idea occurred to the narrator in bed one morning; and it is carried out quite successfully. The "swag" as one of the party called it, or the "boodle" as another designated it, was enormous, and the story of its capture is told with a gallop and an accompaniment of pretty yatchswomen. (Arrowsmith. 298 pp. 3s. 6d.)

A DESERTER FROM PHILISTIA.

BY E. PHIPPS TRAIN.

A publisher's note, which we are in doubt whether to believe or not, or whether we are expected to believe or not, states that this story is printed from a MS., the property of a famous actress, bought at an auction, and now edited for the public. This may or may not be the case. If not, the ruse is very silly. The story is told in the first person by a woman of singular frankness. She also had "a flowing chestnut mane" and greenish-grey eyes. Her adventures on and off the stage make the book. (James Bowden. 282 pp.)

THE MILLIONAIRE OF PARKERSVILLE.

BY MARSHALL G. WOOD.

A Californian story. Scene: the Blue Jump Claim and elsewhere. Dialect: "kin" for "can" and "thet" for "that." Class: melodrama. Gambler: Poker Jake. (J. W. Arrowsmith. 192 pp. 1s.)

THE JOY OF MY YOUTH.

BY CLAUD NICHOLSON.

This book is all ejaculation, and the pages are peppered with mon ami, voilà, sapristi, and allons donc. It is a sort of rhapsody on youth by an old man looking back on his own adolescence. (Elkin Mathews. 296 pp.)

A MATRIMONIAL FREAK.

BY EDITH M. PAGE.

Miss Page lacks experience. She finds a tissue of incidents—many of them unhappy—upon an impossible "marriage" between an Oxford undergraduate and a young girl of seventeen, conducted by themselves in an empty church. (Digby & Long. 310 pp. 6s.)

REVIEWS.

At the Cross Roads. By F. F. Montrésor.
(Hutchinson & Co.)

This is a tale of the making of the "choice which is life's business," the beginning of the conscious impulse toward virtue. The man is condemned on a false charge, lengthens his imprisonment by a violent attempt at flight, and finally, in a remote land, comes to immense wealth. The woman believes in him in spite of her kin, and receives him gladly when he returns. Her love is his salvation. They set themselves together to face the world, but after the birth and death of their one child she falls into a sort of bitterness with life, and hardens into worldly wisdom. Their courses begin to lie apart, till both feel the folly of it, and the wife, who had once drawn the man from the deeps, is now by him saved from a more fatal apathy.

The problem is real, the work is undeniably strong, and yet one cannot lay the book down with entire satisfaction. The end is simply not adequate. One demands a certain emphasis in the crisis, a certain obvious and real decline to make the salvation dramatically effective. It is not quite apparent wherein the exact heinousness of Gillian's conduct lay, or how and why she repented and turned from it. Indeed, it looks as if the writer, wearied with a long story, had left the end vaguely indeterminate. Again, the stage is overcrowded with figures, many of whom work out their own dramas in a way only remotely relevant to the main issue. In one type of story such a fault is slight, but here the interest lies in a struggle of impulses in two souls, and we demand that every part contribute to the central theme. Smaller blemishes, too, irritate, such as the many awkwardly introduced explanations to atone for previous omissions in the narrative, and the habit of naming the chapters by trivial tags of verses. But with such complaints our fault-finding ends. Miss Montrésor's slow and careful evolution of character is wholly admirable. If the hero does not always convince, Gillian is excellent, and her mother is drawn with the cruel insight of genuine dislike. Stephen Molyneux is finely and tenderly done, and Mr. Strode, the vicar, is an austere conscientious portrait. Of the many minor characters there is scarcely one which is not treated with care and sympathy. The style now and then comes near verbosity, but at its best it has a sort of gnomic wisdom which is rare in novels of the day. The book has genuine power, and if the interest of the ethical problem is scarcely sustained, there can be no question about the excellence of the mere narrative.

* * * *

The Builders. By J. S. Fletcher.
(Methuen & Co.)

It is difficult at first to tell what exactly is wrong with this book, for on a hasty reflection there seems nothing particularly right. The impression on closing it is one of entire dissatisfaction. Afterwards one remembers that there are some pleasing, if rather sing-song and undistinguished, descriptions of nature, and that the author has undoubted clearness and order in his narrative. It is a plain story of a young man in training for the Methodist ministry, who, when on a visit to his uncle's house, seduces a girl in the village, marries her, and gives up his career. He becomes a clerk in a neighbouring town, but soon his wife quarrels with him and leaves him. He believes that she is dead, and returns to his uncle's house, where he in time inherits the property and becomes a successful farmer. A nurse comes along who initiates him into the mysteries of culture, and soon they are about to be married. But by chance he finds his former wife on the London streets, takes her home with him, and has severe brain fever. The poor woman sees that she stands between him and his love, and commits suicide on his recovery; after an ineffectual attempt to shoot himself, he marries the nurse, and the story closes to slow music—literally to slow music, for Mr. Fletcher falls into the indefensible trick of printing several extracts from Chopin on the last page.

The most obvious fault in the book is the weakness and commonness of most of the scenes. There is something dreadfully familiar in the cripple-boy who dies with the Lord's Prayer (printed in italics on his lips, and the neglected wife who rushes out in the darkness to the nearest pond—not that there is anything wrong in the things themselves, but they have been so staled by ignoble use that an author need have extraordinary freshness and insight before he can use them with good effect, and it is just this fresh quality that Mr. Fletcher does not possess. His analysis is jaded commonplace, his passion mere reiterated catchwords, and his pity simply popular pathos. And the root of the whole error is that he does not think of his men and women as living souls, to be painfully and carefully made to live again in his pages with such knowledge of life and his art as he may possess, but as vague embodiments of certain sentiments and tendencies which he likes or hates. The book may be described as the history of the conversion of an abstract entity from Primitive Methodism to village hospitals, culture, and a wider view of life. To write the story the author must have incident, so, having as his primary subject, not reality, but sentiment, he falls into the easy trick of using the conventional scenes of circulating-library fiction: and if the result be something less than convincing, who can wonder?

Iva Kildare: a Matrimonial Problem. By L. B. Walford.
(Longmans & Co.)

In the reviewer's lexicon there should be no such word as delightful; but really it applies so well to the pleasant folk and the tender sentiment of Mrs. Walford's story that the point may be stretched. Indeed, it is the best word, for it indicates the limitations no less than the strong points of the book. The "problem" of the title is, the reader is glad to find, quite of the old-fashioned order. Iva Kildare and Reggie Goffe discover on the eve of the young gentleman's departure for India that they are in love. The fates are unkind, and it looks like a case of life-long separation. Iva's mother, Lady Tilbury, was not informed of the attachment. Perhaps if she had been she would not have interfered, for her own experience of two husbands presented something of a "problem":

"I know you were happy with Sir Thomas?" murmured Iva inquiringly.

"That I was, honour bright, Iva."

"Yet you did not love him as you loved my father?"

"Your father didn't deserve the love I gave him," said the widow promptly. "He would have broken my heart if —"

"I know—but you loved him."

"Oh, I loved him—more shame to me."

"S, you loved him and were not happy with him—and you did not love Sir Thomas and were happy with him. 'Tis a queer world," said Iva, with a queer little quavering smile."

Meanwhile Mr. Jabez Druitt gives up business in Manchester and, buying the ancestral hall of the impoverished Goffes, sets himself to the wooing of Iva. A fine character this, and carefully drawn—as, indeed, are all in the book. He reminds one more of the benevolent Jarndyce than of any other middle-aged hero in fiction. When at the last Reggie turns up from India and Mr. Druitt learns the truth nothing will satisfy him but that they must accept the family mansion at his hands. The news of the act of self-sacrifice sends Lady Tilbury all speed to the Hall:

"It was a raw, misty evening: but Lady Tilbury, heedless of weather and of the gathering darkness, hurried along, engrossed solely by the purpose which took her abroad. She was going to tell Mr. Druitt what she thought of him, if ten thousand obstacles stood in the way."

Mr. Druitt was alone; and—oh, how terribly alone he looked!—such a little, solitary figure in the huge hall. And Lady Tilbury had been used to seeing him upon horseback, or driving about in his high dog-cart—or, at any rate, stepping about erect and gay, with head well up, and shoulders well thrown back: she had never thought of him as a little man before.

But, crouching over a low fire, with a forlorn droop in every feature, and—truth compels the detail—only a pair of thin old slippers on his feet, which took off at least an inch from his height, he presented such a picture of pitiful insignificance that her woman's soul was stirred within her.

She could not blame Iva. How should a girl of Iva's age look below the surface? Yet here was one of the finest natures God ever made, encased in a small, shrunken, grey-coated figure! Her eyes swam; her hands involuntarily went out before her."

And Lady Tilbury proposed—a strange thing to do, perhaps; but the author makes it the most natural thing in the world, as well as one of the prettiest scenes you will find in a season's fiction. Mrs. Walford has seldom been more happy than in this quaint conclusion.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S LIST.

Just published, in 2 vols., with Portraits, crown 8vo, 15s. net.

The Letters of Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

Edited, with Biographical Additions,

By FREDERIC G. KENYON.

From the ACADEMY.—"To the historian of English poetry these volumes will be invaluable; and to us, to whom the memory of the Brownings is still fresh, they are full of new lights and new beauties."

From the TIMES.—"The series of letters, it will easily be understood, gives a very complete picture of Mrs. Browning's life, so far as it can in any sense be said to have belonged to her friends and the world. The editor, whose name is a guarantee that he is the right man for the work, has supplemented her letters with a slender thread of narrative, sufficient to make of these two volumes a thoroughly adequate biography. The selection of the letters and the interposed narrative are both done with excellent taste."

CHEAPER EDITION OF MRS. BROWNING'S WORKS.

On November 17th, complete in 1 volume, with Portrait and Facsimile of a "Sonnet from the Portuguese," large crown 8vo, bound in cloth, gilt top, 7s. 6d.

The Poems of Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

* * This Edition is uniform with the Two-Volume Edition of Robert Browning's Complete Works.

A RECORD OF BRAVE ACTIONS.

In a few days, with 16 Portraits and 11 Plans, crown 8vo, 6s.

DEEDS THAT WON THE EMPIRE.

By the Rev. W. H. FITCHETT ("VEDETTE").

These Tales are written not to glorify war, but to nourish patriotism. Each sketch is complete in itself; and though no formal quotation of authorities is given, yet all the available literature on each event described has been laid under contribution. The sketches will be found to be historically accurate.

THE WAR of GREEK INDEPENDENCE, 1821-1833.

By W. ALISON PHILLIPS, M.A., late Scholar of Merton College, Senior Scholar of St. John's College, Oxford. With Map. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

FRIENDSHIP'S GARLAND. By Matthew Arnold. Second

Edition. Small crown 8vo, bound in white cloth, 4s. 6d.

THE GREY LADY. By Henry Seton Merriman, Author

of "The Sowers," "With Edged Tools," "In Kedar's Tents," &c. With 13 Full-Page Illustrations by ARTHUR RACKHAM. Crown 8vo, 6s.

MARCELLA. By Mrs. Humphry Ward. Cheap Popular

Edition. Crown 8vo, bound in limp cloth, 2s. 6d.

TWELVE YEARS in a MONASTERY. By Joseph McCabe,

late Father Anthony, O.S.F. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

[On Monday next.]

LORD COCHRANE'S TRIAL BEFORE LORD ELLEN-

BOROUGH in 1814. By J. B. ATLAY. With a Preface by EDWARD DOWNES LAW, Commander, Royal Navy. With Portrait. 8vo, 18s.

[Shortly.]

THE STORY of the CHURCH of EGYPT: being an Outline of the History of the Egyptians under their successive Masters from the Roman Conquest until now. By E. L. BUTCHER, Author of "A Strange Journey," "A Black Jewel," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 18s.

[Shortly.]

POT-POURRI from a SURREY GARDEN. By Mrs. C. W.

EARLE. With an Appendix by Lady CONSTANCE LYTTON. Seventh Edition. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

ANATOMY for ARTISTS. By the late John Marshall,

F.R.S., F.R.C.S., Professor of Anatomy, Royal Academy of Arts; late Lecturer on Anatomy at the Government School of Design, South Kensington; Professor of Surgery in University College, London; Senior Surgeon to University College Hospital, &c., &c. Illustrated by 300 Original Drawings by J. S. Cuthbert, engraved by J. and G. Nicholls. Third Edition. Imperial 8vo, price 31s. 6d.

JAN: an Afrikaner. By Anna Howarth. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A most interesting book, full of excellent pictures of African and English life..... The influence which the nobler or more civilised character has on the savage survivals in Jan is a masterly study."—Pall Mall Gazette.

IN KEDAR'S TENTS. By Henry Seton Merriman, Author of "The Sowers," "With Edged Tools," &c. FOURTH EDITION. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Mr. Merriman is at his best in his new book. It is full of adventure, of humour, and of vigour; and the scene, which is laid in Spain during the Carlist war, will be quite new to most readers..... In short, we have nothing but praise for 'In Kedar's Tents.'"

Guardian.

DEBORAH of TOD'S. By Mrs. Henry de la Pasture,

Author of "A Toy Tragedy," "The Little Squire," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

[Next week.]

LONDON: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.

THE ARTISTS and ENGRAVERS of BRITISH and AMERICAN BOOKPLATES. By H. W. FINCHAM, Vice-President of Ex-Libris Society.

Edition limited to 1,500 Copies for England and America, with examples by C. W. Sherborn, E. D. French, Aubrey Beardsley, and others. Price 21s. net.

This work gives a list of about 1,400 Artists and Engravers, and a description of more than 5,000 Bookplates. The work will be fully illustrated with signed examples of all periods, some printed from the original copper-plates. Biographical Notes will be given wherever possible, and a complete Index of the Bookplates added.

A STUDY OF ETCHING.

ETCHING. By William Strang and Dr. Singer. Crown 4to, Illustrated, 10s. 6d. net. A Practical, Technical, and Historical Account of the Art of Etching and the Allied Processes. With 6 Original Plates by the Author, each illustrating a different Process, and 8 Woodcuts, also executed by Mr. Strang.

Also a SPECIAL EDITION, 25s. net.

These prices will be raised immediately after publication to 15s. net and 42s. net.

A NEW EDITION OF

NATURAL CAUSES and SUPERNATURAL SEEMINGS.

By R. MAUDSLEY, M.D. Third Edition, Revised and Rewritten. Price 12s.

"Mr. Maudsley's book is a most valuable corrective."—Scotsman.

NEW VOLUME OF "THE PHILOSOPHICAL LIBRARY."

FICHTE'S SCIENCE of ETHICS. Translated by A. E. KROEGER, and Edited by Professor the Hon. T. W. HARRIS. Post 8vo, 8s.

STUDIES in PSYCHICAL RESEARCH. By Frank Podmore. With Plans and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s.

"His book is one not only of the utmost interest, but one of sound practical value."—Scotsman.

COLLECTED POEMS. By Austin Dobson With a Portrait. Crown 8vo, price 6s.

"No gift more charming than these 'Collected Poems' can very readily be conceived."—Globe.

A NOVEL DEALING WITH THE CRIMINAL LAW OF ENGLAND.

MARCUS WARWICK—ATHEIST. By Alice M. Dale. Crown 8vo, 6s.

This is a story of the new Socialism and of Heredity. The hero is an Atheist and an opponent of criminal law, and the story shows how, by a wonderful recompense of the Divine vengeance, he was led to believe in the necessity of Christianity and of the moral code. The plot is of an absolutely original character.

A GREAT CANADIAN HISTORICAL NOVEL.

THE FORGE in the FOREST. By Professor Charles G. D. ROBERTS. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"The book may be recommended to all readers as a good, exciting story, written with a scholarly pen, and especially to those readers who love a study of fresh woods and pastures new."—Literary World.

A STORY OF THE BRONTË COUNTRY.

A MAN of the MOORS. By Halliwell Sutcliffe, Author of "The Eleventh Commandment." Crown 8vo, 6s.

DOWN by the SUWANEE RIVER. By Aubrey Hopwood. A Tale of Adventure and Romance among the Orange Plantations of Florida. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The situations are happily conceived and worked out with dramatic effect."—Scotsman.

THE JOURNAL of COUNTESS FRANCOISE KRASINSKA. Great-Grandmother of Victor Emmanuel. Translated by KASIMIR DZIEKONSKA. The only Authorised Edition. With a Portrait and other Illustrations. 16mo, gilt top, deckel edges, and a special cover design, 5s.

"This is a quaint little book full of delicate charm."—Academy.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF HEGEL.

THE WISDOM and RELIGION of a GERMAN PHILOSOPHER: being Extracts from the Works of Hegel. Translated and Arranged by ELIZABETH S. HALDANE. With a Portrait. Crown 8vo, 5s.

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.—VOLUME 84.

THE ELEMENTS of HYPNOTISM: the Induction, the Phenomena, and the Physiology of Hypnosis. By RALPH H. VINCENT. With 17 Illustrations. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Crown 8vo, 5s.

Full particulars of the above Series will be sent gratis on application.

HAWTHORNE'S FIRST DIARY. With an Account of its Discovery and Loss. By SAMUEL T. PICKARD, Author of "The Life of John Greenleaf Whittier." 16mo, 3s. 6d. net.

WITH A COVER IN COLOURS.

THE BOOK of the DUMPIES. By Albert Bigelow Paine. With numerous Illustrations on every page by Frank Verbeck. Oblong 4to, 3s. 6d.

These delightfully original little people, who made their first English appearance in the pages of the "Sketch," are sure to make new friends for themselves in book-form. No more amusing literature has been provided for the young of all ages since Mr. Palmer Cox introduced us to the memorable Brownies.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO., LTD., Paternoster House, Charing Cross Road, W.C.

A. & C. BLACK'S LIST.

THE MAKING of ABBOTSFORD. By the Hon. Mrs. MAXWELL SCOTT. With Photogravure Frontispiece and Vignette of Abbotsford. 374 pages, square crown 8vo, price 7s. 6d. net.

IN NORTHERN SPAIN. By Dr. Hans Gadow, M.A., Ph.D., F.R.S. 438 pages. Containing Map and 89 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 21s.

"About the best book of European travel that has appeared these many years."—Literary World.

"Mr. Gadow has all the equipment of a really desirable travelling companion. As befits a Fellow of the Royal Society, he is a trained and accurate observer. He is a botanist and a naturalist, a philologist and an archaeologist with a taste for ethnology, and is a well-read man to boot.....a most comprehensive and practical volume."—The Academy.

AN INTRODUCTION to STRUCTURAL BOTANY

By D. H. SCOTT, M.A., Ph.D., Honorary Keeper of the Jodrell Laboratory, Royal Gardens, Kew.

FLOWERING PLANTS. Fourth Edition. Illustrated with 113 Figures.

FLOWERLESS PLANTS. Second Edition. Illustrated with 114 Figures.

A short account of the discovery, by the Japanese botanists, Hirase and Ikeno, of the occurrence of spermatozooids in certain Gymnosperms has been inserted, and illustrated by sketches from preparations which these observers generously gave to the author. This great discovery bridges over, in the happiest way, the gap between Flowering and Flowerless Plants.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. each.

HORÆ SUBSECIVÆ. By John Brown, M.D., LL.D. New Edition in 3 vols. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. each.

THE NURSE'S HANDBOOK of COOKERY.

A Help in Sickness and Convalescence. By E. M. WORSNOP, First Class Diplomée of the National School of Cookery, South Kensington, and for sixteen years Teacher of Cookery under the London School Board. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d.

"A useful little manual of invalid cookery is 'The Nurse's Handbook of Cookery.' Especially valuable will be found the chapters dealing with the differing nutritive properties of the various foods."—Black and White.

THE STORY of AB: a Tale of the Time of the Cave Men. By STANLEY WATERLOO, Author of "A Man and a Woman," "An Odd Situation," &c. With 10 Full-Page Illustrations by Simon Harmon Vedder, and Cover Design by Will Bradley. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

EXILED from SCHOOL; or, for the Sake of a

Chum. By ANDREW HOME, Author of "From Fag to Monitor," &c. With 10 Full-Page Illustrations by Stephen Reid. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

SONGS of the SEA and LAYS of the LAND.

By CHARLES GODFREY LELAND. New Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

BLACK'S GUIDE to BATH and BRISTOL.

Sixth Edition. Edited by A. R. HOPE MONCRIEFF. Illustrated with New Maps and Plans. Fcap. 8vo, paper covers, price 1s.

R E - I S S U E.

DRYBURGH EDITION of THE WAVERLEY NOVELS.

To be completed in 25 Monthly Volumes, each containing Photogravure Frontispiece on Japanese Vellum Paper, 8 Page Woodcuts, and Vignette Title.

Large crown 8vo, bound in buckram, price 3s. 6d. per volume.

Volume I. now ready.

A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square, London.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1897.

No. 1332, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . .	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Office: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

IT may interest our readers to be reminded that with this number the ACADEMY begins its second year under the present control. The first number of the new series was dated November 14, 1896. During the past year we have endeavoured to be both just and generous; and now more than ever are we intent upon the discovery and encouragement of genuine merit in literature.

MR. JOHN MORLEY is about to account and atone for his long silence by the publication of a rather important volume. It is a contribution to modern polemics, but, as the author hopes, from the standpoint of a philosopher rather than from that of an ex-Minister. One of his chapters will be devoted, in this spirit, to a study of the subject of Home Rule.

THE strike of the Edinburgh printers (to be precise, the machine-minders) has assumed a strong literary interest. Many important books are delayed—books for which the public are eager. We hear that the plates of an important edition of the Waverley Novels have been withdrawn from Edinburgh and have been sent to Guildford. Plates for four other important books have come South, and it is not considered likely that they will cross the Border again.

It is feared that the strike portends nothing less than a transference of Edinburgh's power and prestige in the book-printing trade to London or elsewhere. The odd thing is that the London men, by supporting the Edinburgh strikers, are doing their masters a very good turn; seeing that every day of the strike sees the Edinburgh presses growing slacker and the London and English presses busier. It will be curious if the balance of power is materially altered; for there is no denying the present supremacy of Edinburgh in the printing of books. Three such firms as Messrs. Ballantyne & Hanson, Messrs. R. & R. Clark, and Messrs. Constable (which are all affected by the strike) are not to be easily matched south of the Tweed. The extensive printing of English books in Edinburgh took its rise when the original issues of the Waverley Novels advertised the name of Ballantyne everywhere. A circumstance in Edinburgh's favour—but Edinburgh made it—has been that the printing-works there are lighter, airier, cleaner, and in every way better fitted for careful bookwork than London establishments. At least, Edinburgh says so.

As to the causes of the present strike, they are such as to compel sympathy with the masters. The men demand a 50-hour week, without reduction of wages. Hitherto the Edinburgh week has been one of 52½ hours, as compared with the 54-hour week which still prevails in London. Indeed, a 56-hour week is the rule of some London firms, and many provincial ones. The Edinburgh masters were therefore already at a disadvantage when this new demand was sprung upon them in August. They assert that it is quite impossible to grant a week of 50 hours while rival London firms are getting 54 hours' work out of their men for the same wages. It may be believed, however, that masters and men, between whom great respect exists, will settle their differences speedily.

MANY strange things have been done in the name of Jubilee, but few are more odd than the publication of The Imperial Souvenir, which lies before us. Mr. Nutt puts it forth, Prof. Salmoné has "devised and edited" it, and Mr. Richmond, R.A., contributes a design. The deviser's task has been to procure translations of the third stanza of the National Anthem in fifty of the most important languages spoken in the British Empire, and to serve them up here. In shape the book is impossible—one of those unwieldy things, broader than they are tall—and we have some difficulty in believing that its contents will be treasured by anyone. There is no reason why Prof. Salmoné should not attend a feast of languages, but we cannot see why he should ask others to buy the scraps.

THE opinions of cultured Indians concerning the work of Mrs. Steel and Mr. Kipling are naturally interesting. It is the privilege of these writers, as it is of all who use remote foreign backgrounds, to postulate with more freedom than can the stay-at-home novelist. Very few readers, even among Anglo-Indians, are in a position to corroborate or deny their statements. Hence it is well that now and then a native should be afforded an opportunity of speaking. It was under this belief that we asked Prof. A. S. Ghosh, of the University of Calcutta, to comment upon Mrs. Steel's new book, In the Permanent Way.

PROF. GHOSH praises the book highly, not only for its dramatic qualities, but for the understanding and sympathy it reveals. But he has one or two faults to find. He writes:

"I think, however, that the sorrows of a childless wife in India are not nearly so great as Mrs. Steel describes them to be, simply because of that 'curious resignation, that impassive acquiescence, which,' she says, 'does more to separate East from West than all the seas which lie between England and India'; and because, even if the barrenness of the first wife necessitates the marrying of a second (with a view to the future performance of religious rites), there can be no jealousy between the two; for to them 'marriage has for its object the preservation of the hearth fire, not the fire of passion, and the jealousy which is a virtue to the civilised is a crime to these barbarians.' Mrs. Steel, I fear, has also fallen into the common error (it would have been a marvel had she not) of assuming that every graduate of an Indian University is a prig. The Indian graduate is also the pet aversion of Mr. Rudyard Kipling. But both are wrong in their assumptions. In the discharge of my academical duties, not so very long ago, I came daily into contact with more than seven hundred undergraduates of the Calcutta University, and I did not notice in them as a class any particular priggishness, anything which would differentiate them in that respect, say, from English 'Varsity men.'"

THE recent fogs have again reminded readers at the British Museum of the tardiness of the officials in arranging for some system of artificial illumination, which shall supplement the loss of daylight in their subterranean book-rooms. Under present circumstances no sooner is London wrapped in fog than shelves and shelves of volumes become inaccessible. The electric current which supplies the large lamps suspended from the reading-room ceiling is notoriously bad, and must by this time have made the fortune of several oculists and opticians, but the incandescent lamps which light the desks burn steadily enough. Cannot similar lamps be fixed downstairs? Or if not, might not the attendants carry electric lanterns? It seems ridiculous that at this advanced day a fog should be permitted so to embarrass visitors to the finest library in the world. In the newspaper room in gloomy weather work is reduced to nothing.

At this time of year, when every minute a book is born, it is no wonder that reviewers are hasty; and we have noticed a curious instance of reviewer's haste in the past few days. In two journals—one a critical weekly of old standing, and the other a people's daily—we have seen a book entitled Brer Mortal included among books for children. The second organ, indeed, effusively bids the reader, "be he ever so young," thank the author most "devoutly" for the treat offered. This is very comic. We happen to have read Brer Mortal with some interest, and, therefore, we know that a child might as well be offered The Battle of the Books as Ben Marlas' allegory of evolution. In order to heighten his effect, the author has adopted the formula of Uncle Remus; beyond that there is nothing to suggest juvenile appreciation of the book. It is a facetious satire, intelligible only to minds conversant with the clash of creeds. It could do no harm to children, because of its incomprehensibility. But to place it in their hands would be a cruel act.

THE ingenious gentleman who devised the San Francisco Lark, and subsequently migrated East, has now prepared a successor. This he calls L'Enfant Terrible. The editor is a committee of three: Mr. Gelett Burgess, the original San Francisco eccentric; Mr. Oliver Herford, a clever humorous artist; and Mr. J. J. Roche. The contents of the new paper are to be chosen in a manner sufficiently unconventional. "Once a week the editors are to dine together, and on this evening the matter for the next number of the publication, both text and illustrations, will be conceived and expressed on paper, the staff being pledged not to leave the room until the entire copy is ready for the printer." We can only say that we trust the morrow's proof-reading will be rigorous.

A CORRESPONDENT sends us the copy of a note written by Mr. Kipling to a literary aspirant in New Zealand, which throws some light, he remarks, on the liberties taken with a novelist's good-nature and leisure. It runs: "No man's advice is of the least benefit in our business (and I am a very busy man). Keep on trying till you either fail or succeed." The author, adds our correspondent, deemed this missive "encouraging."

IN connexion with this matter we might quote two or three of the letters printed in the Forum from the recent post-bag of a well-known American author. They show fairly enough one part of the penalty of popularity:

"DEAR SIR,—Will you be kind enough to answer the following question?—In your estimation, is 'Portia' the judge in the trial scene in the 'Merchant of Venice' or the 'Duke'? Can you cite me some good authority on this point?—Yours very truly,
"A. B."

"DEAR SIR,—I enclose you under separate cover a manuscript, entitled 'X. Y. Z.' It will take you about forty-five minutes to read it. That, to a busy man, is a great deal of time, I know; but, nevertheless, I am going to ask of you the very great favour of giving me that much of your time, reading the manuscript and telling me if it is worth anything—if it would be worth while even to try again. I do not like to ask such a favour. If I had it to do in person, probably my courage would fail me; but necessity knows no law—I want criticism—and I take advantage of the friendly cover of a letter. I trust some time in the future to be able to render you a quid pro quo for the time spent. Your kindly criticism and advice I can repay only with thanks.—Very respectfully,
"K. L."

"Will you please give me your personal opinion as to the sanity or insanity of Shakespeare's 'Hamlet,' and oblige
"C. D."

SIR LEWIS MORRIS appears in a new rôle in the current Forum. He contributes a light essay on "The Disuse of Laughter," which is by way of being a plea for the revival of the broad humour of Dickens. Sir Lewis should try Many Caravans. Incidentally, we gather that among his dislikes are the humorous articles of a well-known contemporary writer of the school of Thackeray. "When I read them," he says, "I cannot help wondering how the old lion would have liked to see his mane on papillotes and to hear his own roar reproduced, as it were, in falsetto, and ending in the polite little snigger which is almost inevitable in these productions. It is Thackeray, no doubt, but with a difference—with quite as much classical learning and power of literary allusion, with much graceful badinage, and not unfrequently a pleasant subacid humour. But it is much what Sydney Scraper, the genteel and briefless Chancery barrister—his mother, you will remember, was Lady Susan—would have written if he had had genius and knowledge enough; and anything like a hearty laugh is not to be got out of it. The utmost it can elicit is a well-bred and somewhat sickly smile." There seems to be an attack here on someone. Who can it be?

NOR long ago a gentleman astonished the world, and tested the fortitude of his friends, by reciting from memory the whole of Dante's Divine Comedy. The feat was accomplished in twenty-six hours, and was sufficiently novel and undesirable. But in eccentricity a reciter, who recently has performed before Miss Ellen Terry, goes further. This enthusiast called on the actress and insisted upon reciting Thomson's Seasons entirely by facial expression. The poem is not peculiarly rich in dramatic opportunities, but he forged remorselessly to the end, although long before he reached it his listener had to consult the text. A single facial expression can mean so many things.

THE New Century Theatre's second series of performances will be given at the Avenue Theatre on the afternoon of Monday, November 29, Tuesday, November 30, Wednesday, December 1, Thursday, December 2, and Friday, December 3. The programme will consist of a one-act play by Miss Margaret Young, entitled "Honesty," and "Admiral Guinea," by Mr. W. E. Henley and the late R. L. Stevenson.

MISS HANNAH LYNCH writes:—"I see by your paragraph in this week's ACADEMY, and by Mr. Austin's remarks in the Sketch, that Amitié Amoureuse is regarded in London as a new French book over which Paris is at present greatly excited. The book appeared in the beginning of last February, when I sent my article about it to the Fortnightly Review. Then, in a restricted literary set, it did create some emotion, and was accepted as Maupassant's love-correspondence by those who had known him personally as well as the lady said to be Denise. The publishers, Messrs. Calmann Levy, never advertised it as Maupassant's letters, the book being anonymous. I have not seen Mr. Swift's letter to the Bookman, and shall await a more authoritative announcement of its authorship to believe there was no justification of the very definite rumour which on all sides associated Maupassant's name with the book. The reasons Mr. Austin gives in denial of this connexion are by no means conclusive. If it were meant to conceal Philippe's identity, such details as he mentions would naturally be invented; and a man so slow to publish as Maupassant would be likely enough to pose as an idler during the severe probationary period. The book is one of the most charming ones of the year, and if it were fiction would, I imagine, long ago have been claimed publicly by its author."

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. will publish in a few days a book of natural history and adventure, by Mr. R. Kearton, entitled With Nature and a Camera. It will be illustrated with about 180 pictures photographed direct from Nature, showing wild birds on their roosts at night (photographed by flashlight), in the act of feeding their young, in full flight, at rest on roosts, waiting for their prey, sitting on their nests, wild animals at home, poachers snaring and netting game, wildfowls, cage-bird catchers, and duck decoymen all actually at work.

THE popularity of the Lecture, which has lately been revived in this country, has led to a curious development. A committee of influential residents in Holland has arranged with a London lecture agency for a number of English lecturers to visit Amsterdam, Rotterdam, The Hague, and Arnhem during the winter. Those who have already been invited are Mr. Zangwill, who will speak on "The Ghetto," Max O'Rell (on "John Bull"), and Mr. Kerr (on "Wireless Telegraphy.") The scheme has the approval and patronage of Mr. Howard, C.B., the British Minister, and others. The young Queen Wilhelmina is also interested in the matter, and has expressed the hope that she may be present at one or more of the lectures if circumstances permit.

MR. GEORGE H. ELY writes: "You will be interested to hear that all the grumblings have produced no improvement in the 'reading' of the limited 'Meredith.' In the Amazing Marriage, vol. i., p. 84, line 13, 'modestly urged' has been replaced by 'modestly urged'; on p. 90, line 20, 'had nothing to say but "Gorgon!"' has become 'about "Gorgon!"'—in each case making absolute nonsense. The erewhile 'reader,' who 'read for sense' has evidently given way to the mechanical dolt whose accomplishment goes no further than spotting turned letters and batters. The detriment to a limited edition is disgusting."

MR. WILLIAM WATSON's new volume, entitled The Hope of the World, and Other Poems, will be published by Mr. John Lane during the present month. It will include several new poems in addition to the one from which the book receives its title, also "The Unknown God" and "Ode in May."

AN ACADEMY OF LETTERS.

VARIOUS VIEWS.

WE have received a large correspondence in response to our request for comment on the list of suggested members for an ACADEMY OF LETTERS published last week. Of this correspondence a selection is printed below, and we beg to assure those correspondents whose communications have been crowded out that their opinions will be considered in the formation of the final list, which will be published in this journal on December 3. In that issue we shall make a statement as to the method of conferring the awards of ONE HUNDRED GUINEAS and FIFTY GUINEAS upon the authors of two books of signal merit published during the year. The list submitted last week was as follows:—

John Ruskin.	W. E. H. Lecky.
W. E. Gladstone.	S. R. Gardiner.
Herbert Spencer.	Bishop Creighton.
Duke of Argyll.	Bishop Stubbs.
A. C. Swinburne.	Rev. Aidan Gasquet.
George Meredith.	W. E. Henley.
John Morley.	Andrew Lang.
Thomas Hardy.	William Archer.
James Bryce.	H. D. Traill.
Sir G. O. Trevelyan.	Edmund Gosse.
Leslie Stephen.	Mrs. Meynell.
George MacDonald.	Mrs. Humphry Ward.
R. D. Blackmore.	Francis Thompson.
Rudyard Kipling.	W. B. Yeats.
Aubrey de Vere.	Henry James.
R. C. Jebb.	Austin Dobson.
Dr. Salmon.	J. M. Barrie.
W. W. Skeat.	A. W. Pinero.
Dr. J. A. H. Murray.	W. S. Gilbert.
W. P. Ker.	"Lewis Carroll."

CORRESPONDENCE.

Hawarden Castle: Nov. 6, 1897.

SIR,—I am sensible of the great interest attaching to your project, but at my advanced age I find it necessary to ask to be excused from discussion on any new undertaking.

—Yours very faithfully,
W. E. GLADSTONE.

Froggnal End, Hampstead, N.W.:
Nov. 8, 1897.

SIR,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of November 5. I note your proposal to crown a book with the gifts of 100 guineas and fifty guineas, which, with your permission, I will reproduce in the Author. Perhaps the knowledge that such a prize is in the market may stimulate young writers to more careful attention to style and artistic treatment. At any rate, the person who takes the prize will have his fortune made so far as that book is concerned, and his future as well if he is strong enough.—I am, dear Sir, faithfully yours,
WALTER BESANT.

King's College, Cambridge:
Nov. 6, 1897.

SIR,—I am afraid that I am unequal to the task of criticising the list of names in the ACADEMY of November 6. But I venture to suggest that any Academy elected on French lines would probably contain the names of Henry Sidgwick, F. W. Farrar, Sir Frederick Pollock, and Lord Acton.—I am, yours faithfully

OSCAR BROWNING.

Harrow School: Nov. 8, 1897.

SIR,—In reply to your question I ought to say that much depends upon the conception of an Academy of Letters. Such an Academy would not, in my eyes, possess great dignity unless the writings of its members were not merely successful, but elevated and elevating in their character. It would be invidious to suggest which of the forty names should be omitted from your list, but I feel that the names of the Bishop of Durham, the Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, Prof. Max Müller, Prof. Henry Sidgwick, Sir Lewis Morris, and the Poet Laureate should appear upon it.—Very faithfully yours,
J. E. C. WELLDON.

The Haven, Fowey, Cornwall:
Nov. 6, 1897.

SIR,—I shall watch your experiment with a great deal of interest. If I demurred to the inclusion of two or three authors in your list, the reason, I fear, would only be that I am imperfectly acquainted with their writings. But, had the list been mine, I should have included Mr. Robert Bridges and Mr. Robinson Ellis. Nobody, I imagine, can object to the formation of such an Academy as you propose, or the coronation of its members by private enterprise. And with regard to your further proposal to "crown" two books annually and award prizes of one hundred guineas and fifty guineas, I need only remind you of Dr. Johnson's blessing upon those who add to the emoluments of letters.—Believe me, dear Sir, yours very faithfully,

A. T. QUILLER-BOUCH.

The Airlour, Whauphill,
Wigtownshire, N.B.: Nov. 8, 1897.

SIR,—A combination of circumstances prevents me giving as much attention to your letter as it deserves, but I am unwilling to appear to neglect it, and the interesting matter on which you are good enough to ask my opinion.

Your list of forty seems to me a very good one, though four or five names in it convey nothing to me—my own fault, no doubt.

I may be thought audacious if I pause over the first two names—John Ruskin, alas! we shall never more have even Præterita. If your Academy is to be a living force it should contain no dead lions.

I have no confidence whatever in Mr. W. E. Gladstone's literary judgment; he is omnivorous, and writes as enthusiastically about The Christian as about The Odyssey. Greatly as I admire his faculties in his own sphere, he is no more than a peregrine in literature.

I am sorry that I cannot restrain a shudder at the prospect of Mr. Meredith having a hand in moulding style (I speak only of his prose), nor am I sure that Prof. Bryce or Mrs. Meynell are worthy of the rank. I should have written the names of Prof. Max Müller, Prof. Mahaffy, and Augustine Birrell before them.

Mahaffy would, at least, represent Ireland, which I do not see figuring in your list.—Yours truly, HERBERT MAXWELL.

Underbank, Torquay: Nov. 7, 1897.

SIR,—I am afraid I am not competent to offer comment or criticism upon the forty names to which you draw my attention, as I do not know with what functions—beyond, apparently, that of "crowning" somebody every year—it is proposed to invest the suggested Immortals, nor even (I must own, to my shame) who some of them are. But the list certainly conveys the impression of including everybody who ought to be included.—Believe me, very faithfully yours,

W. E. NORRIS.

27, Paternoster-row: Nov. 6.

SIR,—In reply to your letter, I am afraid I cannot say anything about the probable usefulness of an Academy. But I am amazed to find omitted in your list the names of Lord Acton and Mr. Theodore Watts-Dunton. Lord Acton is the most erudite man of our time, and also one of our very best critics. Mr. Theodore Watts-Dunton is undoubtedly the first of living critics, and perhaps the first of all English critics. No one in our country has handled books as he has done with a knowledge of the literature of the whole world. I should have thought also that Principal Fairbairn, of Oxford, was one of the likeliest men for an Academy; but the two I have named easily take precedence of all others, and an Academy which did not recognise this at its first meeting would be self-condemned.—Yours very truly,

W. ROBERTSON NICOLL.

75, Eaton Rise, Ealing, W.:
Nov. 10, 1897.

SIR,—As I share Dr. Johnson's distrust for tribunals of taste, I have naturally very grave doubts whether an English Academy—if practicable—would be an unmixed boon to letters. With regard to the list to which you are good enough to call my attention, I should prefer to see it either smaller or larger. If smaller, it might be restricted to some dozen writers concerning whom there should be absolute agreement: if larger, it might well include a number of names for the absence of which, looking to other names in the list, there seems to be no sufficient ground.—Faithfully yours,

AUSTIN DOBSON.

Office of the Chief Rabbi, London:
Nov. 9, 1897.

SIR,—The list of members suggested by you for the proposed Academy of Letters is excellent. The only alteration I venture to make is the substitution of the names of Bishop Westcott, Fred. Harrison, and Sidney Lee for those of W. E. Henley, Francis Thompson, and W. B. Yeats.—Yours very truly,

H. ADLER.

16, Duke-street Mansions,
Grosvenor-square, W.:
Nov. 9, 1897.

SIR,—I can only say that your list seems to me as representative as any that could be drawn up, and that I do not feel in a position to offer any criticism upon it.—Yours very truly,
F. ANSTEY.

Heatherlea, Worcester-park, Surrey.

SIR,—As a parlour game there's no greater fun than Academy picking for those who practise, or think they practise, letters. I have read your list with immense interest. It is an Academy of (respectable) letters. Who is Mr. W. P. Ker, and who is the Rev. Aidan Gasquet? And why does the Duke of Argyll always figure in this sort of thing? His name has been before me from my earliest years, and from my earliest years I have been trying in vain to discover his connexion with literature! And Mr. Aubrey de Vere—? A charming poet, I am told; but would he be on your list if the Reminiscences had not been recently published? It is curious to see the “scholar” and the minor poet filling up the gap left by Huxley and Tyndall. Your list contains quite a crowd of respectable scholars, but no “scientific” literary men. Surely Lloyd Morgan, say, might weigh against Jebb or Salmon. Is Skeat really a “literary” name. If philology is “literature,” then so are astronomy and biology, and you must consider Norman Lockyer, Ball, and Ray Lankester. Grant Allen, it is true, wrote the Woman Who Did; but that he is an indifferent novelist does not cancel his other very considerable work. And is Gladstone included by virtue of his translations or his Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture, or his brief, but effective, contributions to the criticism of contemporary works? Of omissions there are Gissing and Moore and Bernard Shaw and Oscar Wilde. There is a lot of overdone Heine about Shaw; but eliminate that and there is sufficient literary residuum to put beside, or even a little above, Bryce or Trevelyan. Moore’s Esther Waters is an unweeded garden; but weigh a work like that against—. But this sort of gossip is interminable.—Yours very truly,

H. G. WELLS.

London: Nov. 9, 1897.

SIR,—May a lonely reader speak? Your list of “Academicians” would have been the best yet submitted to the general public, had you shown just a little more courage, and had you not been anxious to show impartiality. One cannot be too partial to good literature and sound scholarship.

First: your courage. Every educated person (as opposed to merely crammed persons) must be grateful for the attention you have shown to scholarship. Even “the man in the street” has heard of Prof. Jebb, because, in spite of his learning, he is a Member of Parliament. No one, I dare prophesy, will ask a single question about this admirable Grecian. I am less sanguine about Dr. Salmon, who takes rank with the first among European authorities on the New Testament. I doubt whether “average readers” have had time to consider him. I feel sure that they have not read him, and I feel tolerably sure that they have not read a line of Jebb’s. Prof. Ker has written a work of real originality, and he knows the English language. His influence is shown—though not always acknowledged—by several young critics who were his pupils, and are now considered “very rising.” His professorial work has been in this parish of London, so he may fare better with the “voters” than scholars from places so remote as Oxford or Cambridge, or far Dublin.

But again, your courage. One Catholic to five Protestant historians shows a fairness of mind on the part of your staff which must commend itself to the British love of fair play. Dr. Gasquet has not the poetic charm of Froude, nor the sparkling common-place of Macaulay. The same, however, must be said of Mr. Lecky, Prof. Gardiner, Bishop Creighton, Bishop Stubbs, and Mr. Bryce. These gentlemen—with Dr. Gasquet—are eminent for other qualities than literary genius. They are learned, and they have read much. Now that Froude, Macaulay, Carlyle, and Cardinal Newman are dead, it would be absurd to quarrel with their intelligent—if not inspired successors.

Once more: your courage. I am all gallantry when gallantry is appropriate; but the ladies’ names on your list are, to my mind, a mistake. No more on that point.

And now I come to a delicate question. Surely, it is for the critics to watch the received, and discipline the aspiring, Academicians. But clearly a critic himself may not have a seat in the Academy. Is Ruskin an R.A.? Are the dramatic critics of France on the stage? Does the umpire join in the game, or the race? Why, then, is Mr. William Archer on your list? And Mr. Andrew Lang? I thought they were Olympians. I grow bold. Pardon me. Yet I must be bolder. I would, in your place, choose Canon Gore rather than Mr. Pinero. For Mr. Aubrey de Vere, I would substitute Mr. Shorthouse. For Lewis Carroll I would substitute Captain Mahan. And for Mr. Archer, I would substitute Prof. Dowden. As for the novelists on your list, I accept Thomas Hardy only, a man of great creative genius, and with a style as far above all these other scribblers as the sun is above an “electric” advertisement. The new generation of imaginative authors are shallow and flippant. They would produce better work if they studied more and wrote less. But I belong to the old school. I may be wrong, yet Milton is still better than Mr. Kipling, and I would not give one chapter of Tom Jones for a wilderness of Sentimental Tommies.—Yours, &c.,

A LONELY READER.

29, Fitzroy-square, London.

SIR,—My compliments to your staff, and say, please, that I hardly know whether to congratulate them on their initiative or to confound their impudence.

Their list is so like what an Academy would probably be in England that its practicality cannot be questioned; but it has no other merit, and no doubt needs no other. For my own part I think an Academy of Letters should consist exclusively of men of letters: that is to say, men who write for the sake of writing, and not men who use the pen solely in order to convey information or spread ideas. Your first selection, Mr. Ruskin, is a preacher and propagandist, not a man of letters. It is true that he, like Carlyle, has become a great master of language in his constant effort to make it communicate his thought; but in doing so he has violated every canon of the virtuoso in letters, whose desire is to construct an elegant word-tissue, and who would rather produce an original refinement on an old idea than put a vernacular rough edge on a new one. When it comes to Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Herbert Spencer, and the Duke of Argyll, the thing becomes ridiculous. You are trying to manufacture an irrelevant prestige for your project by including eminent men as such merely because they happen to have written books. Mr. Swinburne, on the other hand, is an ideal Academician: he is incapable of receiving ideas from life, and writes only what he has read, reproducing with equal energy of style what he finds in The Clouds of Aristophanes and in Sir Edwin Arnold’s articles in the Daily Telegraph. (By the way, why did you omit Sir Edwin Arnold?) Mr. Meredith is, of course, much more than a man of letters; but as he is certainly a virtuoso as well, there is no reason why he should not be selected. Mr. Henry James is also a stylist: his recent essay on Du Maurier was written with such extraordinary literary preciousness that its most critical sentences were quite unintelligible, though their emotional inspiration was touchingly sincere. But what are Messrs. Rudyard Kipling and J. M. Barrie doing in the same gallery with Meredith and James? No young man ever laid more violent hands on letters than Mr. Kipling to tell his stories—stories which have no inspiration in literature. You might as well put Dickens or Mr. Henry Arthur Jones among the men of letters. On the same ground I should say that Mrs. Mayne was properly included, as George Eliot would be were she alive; but, then, why nominate Mrs. Humphry Ward, who is as determined a propagandist and social schoolmistress as Madame Sarah Grand, who is excluded? I will not stop to argue the eligibility of historians and sociologists as such, episcopal or lay; but since you have admitted them, I do not see why you have passed over Mrs. Beatrice Webb and Mrs. J. R. Green, considering that you have only allowed two women to thirty-eight male Immortals. Mr. Traill, though he once wrote “dialogues” on a classical model ought to be excluded. . . . Mr. Pinero and Mr. Gilbert are no more men of letters than I am. The only dramatist, besides Mr. Henry James, whose nomination could be justified is Mr. Oscar Wilde. I do not quarrel with the inclusion of an eminent translator like Dr. Jebb; but since there is not a single link of connexion between your forty and the great modern art which alone offers any modern parallel to Dr. Jebb’s favourite Greek art, why not include Mr. Ashton Ellis, whose translation of the works of Richard Wagner is a masterpiece of style, and has been undertaken and carried out by him under just the circumstances which demand some recognition of his artistic devotion and public spirit. Considering the breadth of your classification, the omission of Mr. Frederic Harrison is, if I may for once express myself academically, singularly astounding. Mr. Frederick Wedmore is also obviously eligible for your second column.

I may add, generally, that since the Academy can do nothing but supply a means of recognition for the merit of those who, working at the academic side of literature only, have no chance of popular fame, its chairs should be reserved for such men, and not filled up to their exclusion by world-renowned public men, whether they are writers or not. Have a list of “vice-presidents,” if you must have big names; but spare the world the absurdity of placing Mr. Gladstone along with Mr. Gosse, as if such a classification could have any meaning.

Need I say, finally, as a keen journalist, that I congratulate you on the cleverest advertisement of the year?—Yours truly,

G. BERNARD SHAW.

Oxford Union Society.

SIR,—If your list is intended as an approximation to that which might actually be issued if an Academy were founded, then Mr. Gladstone and the Duke of Argyll are in place, but surely not otherwise. Away with snobbishness; exclude the “patrons” of literature, the dabbles, the amateurs. Further, in a Government list it is almost certain that Mr. W. P. Ker, Mr. J. M. Barrie, and Mrs. Humphry Ward would not appear: and I think the Government would be right. It is no concern of mine to justify my selections; but does not the substitution of Mr. Courthope for Mr. Ker appear to you reasonable, whether it be an actual or an ideal Academy you are suggesting?

But your most notable omission is that of the philosophers: Mr. F. H. Bradley, Mr. Bernard Bosanquet, Mr. Henry Sidgwick, and the Master of Balliol, surely all of these have strong claims. Above all, Mr. Bradley; for the man is a great writer as well as a great philosopher, and even if his philosophy were despicable (which it is not) his style would merit the honour.

Again, Mr. F. W. Maitland surely deserves a place, as also does Prof. Dicey. Both can write as well as think; neither is a mere lawyer.—Yours, &c.,

ORIELSENSIS.

4, Princes Mansions, Westminster :
Nov. 10, 1897.

SIR,—Your Academy, which seems a fair average choice, fills one with despondency to find it so poor. It brings out the weakness of contemporary literature, and is overburdened with the names of the "illustrious obscure."

If the name of George Macdonald be omitted, and replaced by that of William Watson, the twenty first names would be fairly satisfactory and representative, but after that this moderate feeling of gratification ceases.

If the names of Lecky, Henley, Lang, and Barrie be excepted for most of the others, substitutes of equal or greater merit might be found, and, of course, the official stamp would lug in the Laureate. Personally, I would not give a vote to Creighton, Stubbs, Gasquet, and Mrs. H. Ward, and I am exceedingly doubtful whether Archer, Mrs. Meynell, W. S. Gilbert, and "Lewis Carroll" ought to find a place, illustrious as Gilbert and Carroll are in their own departments. Measured by a French standard, they would hardly be included.—Yours truly,
PERCY WHITE.

Devonshire Club, St. James's.

SIR,—Seeing that you have invited the opinions of your readers upon the subject of your suggested Academy of Letters, I am tempted—while agreeing in the main with your selection of potential Immortals—to express to you my personal joy at the inclusion in your list of the names of Mr. W. S. Gilbert and "Lewis Carroll." This for the reason that it has ever seemed to me easier to be solemn than to be frivolous; consequently I hope Mr. Gilbert's name appears rather for his fantasies and paradoxes than for his serious plays, and that "Lewis Carroll" is included on account of his enchanting "Alice" and "Hunting of the Snark," despite the fact that he has been profligate of the gaiety of his soul by dabbling in such inessentials as mathematics, logic, and the like.—Yours faithfully,
GILBERT BURGESS.

Nov. 6, 1897.

SIR,—In reading through your proposed list of English Academicians, I was much struck, as I am sure many others of your readers must have been, by the scant justice done to the great modern school of female writers. In fact, if our new Academy is to be limited to forty members, I would suggest that there should be a second Academy, consisting entirely of eminent literary females.

I have written out a tentative list, which I beg to submit to the judgment of your readers.—Yours faithfully, HUDDLESTONE J. BARKER.

Ouida.	Miss Kingsley.
Mme. Sarah Grand.	Rosa N. Carey.
Mrs. Humphry Ward.	L. B. Walford.
Marie Corelli.	Miss Florence Marryat.
Miss Braddon.	Lady Magnus.
Mrs. F. A. Steele.	Miss Helen Mathers.
Mrs. Meynell.	Miss Beatrice Harraden.
Miss Edna Lyall.	Miss M. Cholmondeley.
Annie S. Swan.	M. Betham Edwards.
Ella F. Maitland.	Vernon Lee.
Mrs. Molesworth.	George Egerton.
Mrs. Bishop.	Mrs. Edward Kennard.
Miss Violet Hunt.	Miss Beatrice Kipling.
Miss Olive Schreiner.	Miss Dorothea Gerard.
Mrs. Craigie.	Mrs. J. R. Green.
Miss Rhoda Bronghton.	Miss Lucy Toulmin.
Miss Jane Harrison.	Mrs. Woods.
Lady Dufferin.	Mrs. Lovett Cameron.
John Strange Winter.	Ada Cambridge.
Mrs. Thackeray Ritchie	Mrs. Alexander.

H. J. B.

Scottish Arts Club, Edinburgh.

SIR,—Of course it is impossible to find absolute unity on such a problematical subject as an Academy of Letters, but surely there are some strange exclusions from your list. Has the reader of modern verse forgotten his London Poems, The Book of Orm, and The City of Dream? Let us ask Mr. Lecky and Mr. Herbert Spencer what they would think of the exclusion of Mr. Robert Buchanan—surely one of the greatest of nineteenth century poets. The omission is all the more startling when we find in your list the names of Austin Dobson, Henry James, W. B. Yeats, and Francis Thompson. I venture to send another list—the list of a humble layman, with an occasional eye on literature.—Yours,

A. STODART WALKER.

Dr. Walker's list includes the following names:

F. Max Müller.	Sir John Lubbock.
John Morley.	John Shield Nicholson.
David Masson.	Benjamin Kidd.
Edward Caird.	W. H. Mallock.
Robert Buchanan.	A. T. Quiller-Couch.
Earl of Rosebery.	L. F. Austin.
A. J. Balfour.	Bret Harte.
Alex. Bain.	Dean Farrar.
Sir Walter Besant.	Stopford Brooke.
Frederic Harrison.

London: Nov. 8, 1897.

SIR,—The compiling of "Academies of Letters" is rare sport, but it usually lands the compiler in a hornet's nest of inconsistencies. For example, your suggested "Academy of Letters" includes the name of Prof. Jebb. But surely Prof. Jebb's contributions to "Letters" are not sufficient to justify his admission? If, on the other hand, he takes his place as a scholar, where are Prof. Murray, Mr. Sidgwick, Mr. Robinson Ellis, &c.?

Again, your four historians are excellent, but where is Sir Alfred Lyall? Surely the author of Asiatic Studies deserves a place in any Academy of Letters.

Prof. Saintsbury is, I imagine, the greatest English authority on French literature, to say nothing of his other claims as a man of letters. Dr. Garnett is a considerable figure in the literary world. So is Sir Walter Besant. Prof. Courthope, of Oxford, surely has claims to consideration at your hands, and if strange lore is to be taken into consideration, where are Prof. Sayce and Prof. Flinders Petrie? It cannot be "because there was no room in the inn," for your list includes, I observe, the names of Mr. Ker, Dr. George Macdonald, Mr. W. B. Yeats, Mr. Francis Thompson, Mr. J. M. Barrie, not to mention those of two ladies. For obvious reasons I must suppress my name.—Your obedient servant,
A. B.

120, Earlham-grove, Forest Gate, E.:
Nov. 9, 1897.

SIR,—With regard to your "Academy of Letters" scheme, the suggested list of forty names given in last week's number of your journal is, in my judgment, a good one; but surely, surely, we must somehow find room for Dr. Martineau—certainly one of the profoundest religious philosophers of this century, and a theologian whose writings must rank, also, as literature.

I am, too, one of those benighted mortals who, in spite of the virulent abuse of a section of our clever critics, would by no means omit from such a list as yours the name of Mr. Alfred Austin.

And has not Mr. William Watson as good a claim to inclusion as Mr. Francis Thompson?—Faithfully yours,
G. E. BIDDLE.

Hertford College, Oxford.

SIR,—In your Academy list Mr. W. B. Yeats has not yet earned a place; nor, perhaps, has Mr. Francis Thompson. And I should certainly vote against Mrs. Humphry Ward. If you admit an American (in the person of Mr. Henry James), why not admit Captain Mahan; and so exhaust American literature? And why do you exclude all the philosophers except Mr. Herbert Spencer? The Master of Balliol is a bigger man than most on your list. Why does Prof. Jebb go in! As a scholar? Then why omit Mr. J. E. B. Mayor and Prof. Robinson Ellis? And Prof. Bury, of Dublin? who has a claim. But if it is as a person of general taste you put in Prof. Jebb—O gemini! Above all, if you were an Oxford man, I am sure you would never have left out Mr. F. H. Beasley.—Yours, &c.,
A READER.

6, Clairmont-gardens, Glasgow: Nov. 9.

SIR,—My ACADEMY is not beside me, but I think that in your list of names those of Mr. William Watson, Mr. Watts-Dunton, and the author of Mark Rutherford have not been included, as I venture to think they ought to be.—Yours faithfully, JOHN WATSON.

PROF. MONTAGU BURROWS, in the course of an interesting letter, says: "Your idea I think an excellent one, and you will find in the last page of the pamphlet I send you some remarks on this very subject. [The Publication of the Gascon Rolls]. In this pamphlet, read before the Royal Historical Society, Prof. Burrows advocates the formation of a British Academy analogous to the French Academy.]

"I do not feel very competent to advise in this matter as I see you include in your list a preponderating number of novelists, and I read but few of these. I am surprised, however, not to see Charlotte Yonge's name. You are the best judge whether many of this class of writers should be present in any representative list of literary people. Hardy I recognise. Indeed, I accept the first twenty-four of your list with only one exception.

"Another remark I venture to make. Are all our best literary men and women of one class of mind politically? I hardly see a Conservative among them; but they are surely not fairly classed as the "stupid party." A. J. Balfour might, one would think, find a place, and Sir Herbert Maxwell, and Augustus Jessopp, whose politics I do not know; but he seems to respect old England."

MR. JOHN E. YERBURY, who forwards a series of interesting lists, too long to print, takes exception to sixteen names in our provisional draft, and proposes the following instead: James Martineau, Samuel Smiles, Francis Galton, Russell Wallace, David Masson, Max Müller, Goldwin Smith, J. G. Geikie, Bishop Barry, St. George Mivart, Frederic Harrison, Stopford Brooke, H. Wace, Walter Besant, Charles Dilke, and Archibald Sayce.

MR. W. G. WATERS sends the following names "which suggested themselves on reading your provisional list":

Bishop Westcott.	John Davidson.
Prof. Saintsbury.	Prof. Mahaffy.
Vernon Lee.	James Martineau.
Lucas Malet.	Max Müller.
Prof. Dowden.	A. Birrell.

THE REV. R. F. HORTON writes: "There are two names which I can hardly imagine your omitting—James Martineau and William Watson. The latter especially seems to me to reach the grand manner more frequently than any living poet."

T. E. BROWN.

SECOND NOTICE.

So much interest has been aroused by the article upon the late Thomas Edward Brown, printed in last week's ACADEMY, that a few excerpts have been here brought together from his later work, which appeared since the volume entitled Old John was made up. A great part of Old John first saw the light in the Scots Observer and National Observer. Similarly Mr. Brown's later work was also made public by Mr. Henley, either in the National Observer or the New Review. The bond uniting Mr. Henley and Mr. Brown was closer than that of mere editor and contributor, close though that may grow to be: Mr. Brown was Mr. Henley's first schoolmaster, in the old Crypt School at Gloucester. It is not often permitted to a pupil thus to foster the inspiration of his early mentor.

In the National Observer of June 10, 1893, appeared a little poem, characteristically frank, characteristically praiseful of one phase of the joy of living. Among poetry of passion—not mere adoration, which is within the compass of most natures, but the spontaneous, honest, natural desire of the complementary sex—some of Mr. Brown's lyrics rank with the highest. The particular poem to which we refer was called "Nel Corso." This is it:

"Two waftures of great eyes—
A second's thousandth part—
One sucked me down the maelstrom of the heart,
The other ebbd me forth to lonely skies.

"Scorn? No! why should she scorn?
Coquettish play of fence?
Not so, but glorious might of innocence—
Of such large blood are Roman women born.

"She knows what joy I caught
That moment, how I rushed
Right to the centre of her life, yet blushed
She not at all, nor shewed a treacherous thought.

"Is not this good above
Most goods for which we sigh?
To pick this obvious love as we pass by,
And pass, and pick another obvious love."

We quote it partly for its clean strength, partly by way of introduction to selections from the "Roman Women" sequence which was printed in the New Review two years later. In these poems Mr. Brown rioted in his manhood. He had passed through the Eternal City with quick, loving eyes, noting a matron here, a merry maiden there; some lowly, some noble; some light and some austere; but all on the instant assured of the poet's fellowship by a quick thrust of sympathy direct to the heart, by that rapid understanding of his brothers and sisters which the Shakespearean poet possesses. And Mr. Brown was a Shakespearean. His experiences of Roman women were fused in the poems under that title: poems quivering with virility, and the gustiness of a blithe, masculine Northern nature quickened of Southern sun. The only poet to compare with the author of this sequence is Walt Whitman. There is, indeed, more than a hint of Whitman: of Whitman confined within limits, Whitman concentrated:

"Woman, a word with you!
Round-ribbed, large-flanked,
Broad-shouldered (God be thanked!),
Face fair and free,
And pleasant for a man to see—
I know not whom you love; but hark! be true;
Partake his honest joys;
Cling to him, grow to him, make noble boys
For Italy."

The next is finer. The second stanza is great. Roman women have never been so extolled, even by their noblest lovers.

"Good wife, good mother—yes, I know;
But what a glow
Of elemental fires!
What breadth, what stately glow
Of absolute desires—
How bound
To household task
And daily round
It boots not ask.

"Good mother, and good wife—
These women seem to lead suspended life.
As lakes, dark gleaming till the night is done,
Expect the sun,
So these,
That wont to hold Jove's offspring on their knees,
Take current odds,
Accept life's lees,
And wait returning God's."

And there is a musical note in the scrap of dialogue that follows—South speaking with North, Latin with Teuton—which lingers and lingers:

"You seem so strange to me,
You Merman from the Northern Sea."
'A barnacle from Noah's Ark.'
'Well, yes; a sort of shark.'
'Ah, blow then, darling, blow!
Blow in my ears, and let the warm breath glow,
And search the inmost vault
Of my sad brain. Blow, love—
Blow in the cooing of the dove,
Blow out the singing of the salt!'"

Concerning Mr. Brown as critic we said a word last week. He wrote little; but it was very good. His was the enthusiasm of the keen taster who writes but seldom. The pity of it is, that so many keen tasters have to write so much. He was moved to write by admiration of his subject; and when criticism in the hands of a wise man has this impulsion, it can be the best reading in the world. Here is a passage from an article by Mr. Brown on the Complete Angler:

"The book is as full of delights as a meadow of cowslips. Who can forget the tenderneess and gentle reverence with which Walton speaks of 'old Oliver Henley' ('now with God')? The otter hunt—what brilliance of atmosphere! what life! The dogs are Ringwood, Kilbuck, Sweet-lips. Ringwood does the business. And the Fishing proper begins, as reason would have it, with a chubb. Viator has a try for a chubb. The directions for dressing this chubb are like a passage from Leviticus.

"And then they aspire to trout. I suppose the meeting with the milkmaid, and the account of the supper that follows, can hardly be paralleled in our literature.

"The frog-bait, though, is the locus classicus. Good, kind old soul was Walton; but could you have trusted him with a baby, for instance, if some one had told him that a bit of baby was a capital bait for barbel?"

Elsewhere in the essay Mr. Brown said of Walton, "I think the Elizabethan tune was still in his ears." The remark certainly is true of the critic himself. The Elizabethan tune was still in his ears, otherwise how could he have written much that he did? He was both old and new. He united the sorrow and pity of our own age to the lyrical music of that great singing era. He knew man like a book: he felt for him, and glowed for him, and spoke up for him; and he knew nature as intimately.

MR. RALEIGH ON STYLE.*

AN APPRECIATION.

MR. RALEIGH discerns in the abstract quality known as style the ultimate, inevitable expression of life; hence his work becomes, not only a disquisition upon the last refinement of art, but a criticism of ethics. And "the fact that we use the word 'style' in speaking of architecture and sculpture, painting and music, dancing, play-acting, and cricket, that we can apply it to the careful achievements of the housebreaker and the poisoner, and to the spontaneous animal movements of the limbs of man or beast, is the noblest of unconscious tributes to the faculty of letters . . . Morals, philosophy, and æsthetic, mood and conviction, creed and whim, habit, passion, and demonstration—what art but the art of literature admits the entrance of all these, and guards them from the suddenness of mortality? . . . All style is gesture, the gesture of the mind and of the soul. . . . Other gestures change and flit, this is the ultimate and enduring revelation of personality."

After stating his point of view with irrefragable eloquence, Mr. Raleigh turns aside for a moment to set the actor in his right relation to the ordered hierarchy of civilisation; and leaving in rags the fabric of tawdry sentiment in which the populace loves to cloke the player, he goes on to hunt his quarry through all its changes, from its obscurest avatar to its most sublime manifestations. You have had a definition of the universal gesture by which alone man calls to man; would you behold its operation when "Poetry works her will"?

"The mind of man is peopled, like some silent city, with a sleeping company of reminiscences, associations, impressions, attitudes, emotions, to be awakened into fierce activity at the touch of words. By one way or other, with a fanfaronnade of the marching trumpets, or stealthily, by noiseless passages and dark posterns, the troop of suggesters enters the citadel, to do its work within. The procession of beautiful sounds that is a poem passes in through the main gate, and forthwith the by-ways resound to the hurry of ghostly feet, until the small company of adventurers is well-nigh lost and overwhelmed in that throng of insurgent spirits."

A passage which is itself a shining prose example of its own purport. To the potential qualities of imagery, of melody, of meaning, and meaning exemplified in negation, which go to the forging of the weapons with which the master of style must equip himself, Mr. Raleigh devotes some pages of acute analysis; so skilfully pursuing, with a net of finely-woven phrases, the fugitive abstractions which flutter on the marches of that dim borderland where thought touches language, that his prey cannot escape him. His method is so subtle, that once and again the student rubs his eyes, and reads again, to perceive, in a gleam of sudden, delightful illumination, the very needle-point of truth. Here are no such seductive half-truths, polished and chiselled, as that other known master of style, Robert Louis Stevenson, liked to use in building his bright houses of illusion. Rather are we called to a "flickering world of hints and half-lights, echoes and suggestions, to be come at in the dusk or not at all." But there alone we find that which we seek, and are content.

* Style. By Walter Raleigh. (Edward Arnold.)

Treating of the debased currency of language, we get from Mr. Raleigh no hackneyed lament over the inevitable; for, to deplore the licence of the vulgar were to take the partial view. Instead, we find him pointing the artist to his opportunity. It is the business of art, as of the Christian religion, to bring forth meat from the eater, and sweetness from the strong:

"The same epithet is used in the phrases 'a fine day' and 'fine irony,' in 'fair trade' and 'a fair goddess.' Were different symbols to be invented for these sundry meanings the art of literature would perish. For words carry with them all the meanings they have worn, and the writer shall be judged by those that he selects for prominence in the train of his thought."

And as for the common journalist, condemned to trifle with words, those "terrific engines," for his daily bread, he, "poor fellow, means nothing, and spends his life in the vain effort to get words to do the same."

Elaborating his thesis, Mr. Raleigh traces certain inventions of Society to their ethical origin:

"Society, mistily conscious of the sympathy that lightens in any habitual name, seems to have become aware, by one of those wonderful processes of chary instinct which serve the great, vulnerable, timid organism in lieu of a brain, that to accept of the pickpocket his names for the mysteries of his trade is to accept also a new moral standpoint and outlook on the question of property";

lays his finger on the tainted root of "the bad slang"; and leaving no corner of this shadowy antre unexplored, he shows that

"within the limits of a single school, or workshop, or social circle, slang may serve; just as, between friends, silence may do the work of talk. There are few families, or groups of familiars, that have not some small coinage of this token money, issued and accepted by affection, passing current only within those narrow and privileged boundaries."

The section upon Archaism may be fitly pondered by those who delight to accuse the curious in style of "affectation": . . . .

"An archaic turn given to language is the mark rather of authors who are ambitious of a hearing from more than one age. The accretions of time bring round a word many reputable meanings, of which the oldest is like to be the deepest in grain. It is a counsel of perfection—some will say, of vain-glorious pedantry—but that shaft flies farthest which is drawn to the head, and he who desires to be understood in the twenty-fourth century will not be careless of the meanings that his words inherit from the fourteenth."

And this brings the essayist to a subtle and scholarly disquisition upon word-uses, and thence, by a natural transition, to the consideration of Romantic and Classic. Turning upon The Palsy of Definition, he salutes the invading regiments of science, and forthwith drives them in a rout back into their own domain. "No wind blows through that garden, and no sun shines on it, to discompose the melancholy workers at their task of tying Latin labels on to withered sticks." For,

"the world of perception and will, of passion and belief, is an uncaptured virgin, airily deriding from afar the calculated advances and practical modesty of the old bawd Science; turning again to shower a benediction of unexpected caresses on the most cavalier of her wooers, Poetry."

So perishes the vain dream that art springs new-created from the valley of dry bones where science digs, the doctrine which some have taught so solemnly. And what of that other dream, no less vain, in which the art of the future appears as a figure, discrowned and enslaved, holding a mirror to low-browed democracy? That vision of sin can never be fulfilled. The growth of democracy does not alter the relation of the artist to his audience, but renders it more difficult, or determines it as impossible.

"The relation of great authors to the public," says Mr. Raleigh, "may be compared to the war of the sexes, a quiet watchful antagonism between two parties mutually indispensable to each other, at one time veiling itself in endearments, at another breaking out into open defiance. . . . The public, like the delicate Greek Narcissus, is sleepily enamoured of itself; and the name of its only other perfect lover is Echo."

Hence it is impossible that the poet should enter into transactions with the populace.

"His candour frightens them: they avert their eyes from it; or they treat it as a licensed whim; or, with a sudden gleam of insight, and apprehension of what this means for them and theirs, they scream aloud for fear. . . . But if great and original literary artists—here grouped together under the title of poets—will not enter into transactions with their audience, there is no lack of authors who will. These are not necessarily charlatans; they may have by nature a ready sympathy with the grossness of the public taste, and thus take pleasure in studying to gratify it. But a man loses not a little of himself in crowds, and some degradation there must be where the one adapts himself to the many."

Here, then, is the conclusion of the whole matter. There are ever with us those who are hailed as prophets by some, and by others are condemned for charlatans. But their style betrays them, sitting shameless at the receipt of custom in the light of the sun. The truth is, they are neither; they are but shadows and echoes, dying even as they move and speak. With the art of letters they have nothing to do; the critic does not know them. But as for him whose destiny it is to amuse his public or perish—who knows "that ugly corner where the artist is exposed to cross fires, his own idea of masterly work on the one hand and the necessity for pleasing the rabble on the other." Well, as for him, Mr. Raleigh has a last word—and what is there to add to this?—

"When any man is awake to the fact that the public is a vile patron, when he is conscious also that his bread and fame are in their gift—it is a stern passage for his soul, a touchstone for the strength and gentleness of his spirit."

Truly, Mr. Raleigh is the aristocrat of letters. In other words, it is his proper business to lead and to set example. And I, for one, cannot desire a captain more subtle and courageous.

L. C. C.

THE LONDON OF THE WRITERS.

III.—THE SOCIETY OF ARTS' MEMORIAL TABLETS.

EVERY now and then a paragraph glides into the papers stating that the Society of Arts has placed one of its circular tablets on some London house that has been occupied by a great man. The paragraph always excites interest, and often it inspires leaderettes. An odd thing is that we hear of these tablets singly always, hardly ever in the aggregate. One wonders how many there are, and how the work of selecting and fixing them is ordered. Thus, we have just been told, by paragraph, that a tablet has been placed on the house at Hampstead in which Sir Harry Vane lived, and in which it is believed Bishop Butler wrote portions of his Analogy of the Christian Religion. The circumstance is interesting, for from this house Sir Harry Vane—name beloved of every school-boy!—was carried to the Tower to be beheaded by order of Charles II.; and it is probable that under the roof of Vane House, as the place was called (it is now "Belmont"), Cromwell, Pym, Ireton, and Fairfax discussed ways and means; even Milton may have walked under the trees of its once noble grounds. But what of the series of tablets to which this Hampstead one has been added?

A Londoner, not meanly versed in the things of the town, when asked to guess the number of the Society of Arts' tablets, thought there might be five hundred, and another guessed one hundred and fifty. There are but thirty all told. Here is the list—which we believe has not been published for many years. The names of residents are in alphabetical order, and to each name is added the address of the house on which a tablet has been mounted.

James Barry	... 36, Castle-street, Oxford-street.
Robert Browning	... 19, Warwick - crescent, Paddington.
Edmund Burke	... 37, Gerrard-street, Soho.
Lord Byron	... 16, Holles-street.
George Canning	... 37, Conduit-street.
George Cruikshank	... 263, Hampstead-road.
Mme. D'Arblay	... 11, Bolton-street, Piccadilly.
Charles Dickens	... Furnival's Inn.

John Dryden ...	43, Gerrard-street, Soho.
Michael Faraday ...	2, Blandford-street, Portman-square.
John Flaxman ...	7, Buckingham-street, Fitzroy-square.
Benjamin Franklin ...	7, Craven-street, Strand.
Thomas Gainsborough	Schomberg-house (now part of the War Office).
David Garrick ...	5, Adelphi-terrace.
Edward Gibbon ...	7, Bentinck-street.
George Frederick Handel ...	25, Brook-street.
Sir Rowland Hill ...	Bertram-house, Hampstead.
William Hogarth ...	30, Leicester-square.
John Keats ...	"Lawn-bank," Hampstead.
Samuel Johnson ...	17, Gough-square, Fleet-street.
Napoleon III. ...	3A, King-street, St. James's.
Lord Nelson ...	147, New Bond-street.
Sir Isaac Newton ...	35, St. Martin's-street.
Peter the Great ...	15, Buckingham-street, Strand.
Sir Joshua Reynolds	47, Leicester-square.
Richard Brinsley Sheridan ...	14, Savile-row.
Mrs. Siddons ...	27, Upper Baker-street.
William Makepeace Thackeray ...	Kensington Palace-Grn.
John Thurloe ...	24, Old-square, Lincoln's-inn.
Sir Robert Walpole...	5, Arlington-street.

Thirty tablets may not seem much to show for thirty years' work. It is thirty years since the Society of Arts fixed its first Minton slab to Byron's house in Holles-street. One year, one tablet—this has been the average rate of progress. It seems slow; in reality, it is reasonable. The erection of these tablets is no more than an "odd job" in the work of the Society of Arts, yet the Society has not at any time flagged in its attention to this department. It has had to take rebuffs, and to abandon hopes, but it is always considering new proposals, and striving to bring them to successful issues. The difficulties of the work fully explain its slow movement, and are themselves interesting. In the first place, the number of London houses worthy to receive tablets is small. Scores of once eligible houses have clean disappeared, have not even left successors on their sites; these do not count. Then, owing to the pranks that have been played with street names and numbers, the difficulties of identification are immense. In his useful Literary Landmarks of London, Mr. Laurence Hutton says that the confusion caused by the re-naming and re-numbering of streets "can hardly be expressed in words." Lest Mr. Hutton should be suspected of hysteria, we will give a single example of what vestries "and sich" can accomplish in the re-christening of the streets of London. It is mentioned by the late Thomas Crofton Croker in a little book (notable for its beautiful thumb-nail woodcuts) called A Walk from London to Fulham. Writing in 1860, Mr. Croker identified the house (No. 14, Queen's Buildings, Knightsbridge) as the residence of Mr. J. C. Nattes, an artist who is now forgotten. He was one of the sixteen artists who associated themselves together in 1805 to form the first exhibition of water-colours held in this country. Mr. Crofton had a hard task to identify the house; and well he might, for he tells us:

"From 1792 to 1797 this house was described as No. 14, Queen's Buildings, Knightsbridge; but in the latter year the address was changed to No. 14, Knightsbridge Green. In 1800 it was known as No. 14, Knightsbridge, and in 1803 as No. 14, Queen's Row, Knightsbridge. In 1810 as Gloucester Buildings, Brompton. In 1811 as Queen's Buildings. In 1828 as Gloucester Row. In 1831 as Gloucester Buildings, and it has now reverted to its original name of Queen's Buildings, Knightsbridge. . . if, indeed the original name was not Queen's Row, Knightsbridge, as this, in 1772, was the address of William Wynne Ryland (the engraver who was hanged for forgery in 1783)."

Need more be said on the difficulty of identifying the residence of a genius in London?

A second set of difficulties which the Society of Arts has to meet are those connected with obtaining permission to place a tablet on a house at all. It must not be supposed that landlords or tenants are always eager to have a house honoured above its fellows. "Yes, I know Homer lived there," says the absentee landlord; "but I can't have you putting the name up, and making the house a circus; my tenants are quiet people." And the tenant snaps: "Certainly not. Who is Homer, any way? Do you suppose I want people staring in at my windows? No, sir, put it up next door, if you like!" From this level the refusals to the Society's requests for tablet-space rise in an ascending scale of politeness and culture. But in whatever terms they are couched the result is the same—no tablet. Only one of Dickens's residences is marked with a tablet, and this, unfortunately, is the doomed Furnival's Inn. Permission to mark the houses he inhabited in Doughty-street, Devonshire-terrace, and Tavistock-street was sought in vain; and so you walk down Doughty-street trying to remember the number of the house in which Oliver Twist was written; and American visitors beat about the corner of Devonshire-terrace with interrogation in their movements, wishing to make sure that they see the house whence David Copperfield and the Christmas Carol went forth. It may be allowed that it is enough if one of Dickens's residences be marked; and, therefore, we hope that when Furnival's Inn—where Pickwick was written—has disappeared, some heart will relent, and a tablet be placed on one or another of the remaining homes of "Boz."

When the Furnival's Inn tablet goes, eleven will remain to distinguish the London homes of literary men and women. These will be:

Robert Browning.	Edward Gibbon.
Edmund Burke.	John Keats.
Lord Byron.	Samuel Johnson.
Mme. D'Arblay.	Richard B. Sheridan.
John Dryden.	W. M. Thackeray.
Sir Robert Walpole.

The crop certainly strikes one as meagre. One feels a little bitterly the refusal of the Benchers of the Middle Temple to allow a tablet to be placed on Goldsmith's lodging at No. 2 Brick Court, where in his fitful gleams of prosperity he aped the hospitality of Reynolds and the grace of Beauclerc; where, too, he read She Stoops to Conquer to its first audience, the two beautiful Miss Hornecks. The Benchers' refusal is the more strange because the tablet would have perpetuated the memory of Sir William Blackstone who lodged in the same building. But, then, Goldsmith's receptions disturbed the great lawyer; and perhaps the Benchers have not forgiven Nolly. The Temple is not the only Inn of law which has excluded the tablets. Gray's Inn has been equally cold in the matter, though, if it chose, it might adorn its walks with tablets to the memories of Lord Francis Bacon, Samuel Butler, Lord Macaulay, and other men of note.

THE BOOK MARKET.

A CHAT ABOUT AUTOGRAPHS.

D. R. H. T. SCOTT, of Fulham, is a well-known dealer in autographs, and when I met him the other day I seized the opportunity to reduce my general stock of ignorance.

"Excuse my way of putting it," I said, when preliminary talk had made the question possible, "but do autographs mean bread and butter?"

"Certainly they do—to the man who understands them. I consider the business is profitable, and I am sure it is interesting. By the way, it is an older business than many people think. There have been sales of autographs in England these two hundred years. Evelyn mentions such sales, and he attended them."

"Well, now, who are buyers of autographs?"

"There are a great many enthusiastic collectors in this country—men not heard of by the public, but princes in the trade. Then the American demand is strong and continuous. The British nobility are good customers for autographs connected with their families. The Duke of Norfolk will buy anything in writing that elucidates his family history, and he is only one of many. Then there are collectors who confine themselves to one subject. Napoleonic autographs are a field in themselves, and autographs connected with Nelson have their exclusive collectors. So, again, the autographs of actors are collected separately. In America the great thing is to secure the handwriting of the men who signed the Act of Independence. Altogether, the demand for autographs is widespread and various; and it rests on much better foundations than mere fad."

"And the museums, you have omitted them?"

"Yes, there are the museums; but the trade with them is not large. I may tell you, however, that I took a specimen of General Wolfe's handwriting to the British Museum the other day and disposed of it there. They had not a scrap of Wolfe's writing in the place!"

"When you speak of an autograph, what kind of document do you usually mean?"

"A letter. A more or less interesting letter. Mere autograph signatures are almost worthless."

"And of course much depends on the contents of the letter?"

"Yes, a good deal; sometimes, indeed, the contents make all the difference. I'll give you an instance of that. I saw a letter of Lord Sidmouth's sold the other day. The usual value of one of his letters would be five or six shillings; but because this particular letter contained a reference to Lady Hamilton's child it fetched £6."

"But are there any general laws which decide the value of autographs?"

"Oh, certainly; only you must understand that the exceptions to these laws are innumerable, so that in the end you have just got to know things. The different values of different autographs seem astonishing at first. For example, a letter of the Duke of Wellington's can be had for ten shillings; whereas a letter of Lord Nelson's will cost you £5."

"How is that?"

"Well, Nelson is, of course, the more popular hero. But the main reason is that Nelson, who was generally at sea, wrote few letters compared with Wellington, who was generally on land. And yet neither of these reasons holds good always. Here are a few prices that may puzzle you: a letter of Lord Beaconsfield's is worth two guineas, but a letter of John Bright's is only worth five shillings, and letters of Palmerston, Sir Robert Peel, and George Canning are all frequently priced under five shillings."

"What is a letter of Charles Dickens worth?"

"About two guineas."

"And one of Charles Lamb's?"

"From £3 to £6."

"Byron?"

"A letter from Byron is worth fully £10; but a letter of Shelley is worth more than double that sum."

"And Burns?"

"Oh, £25 to £30, at least."

"I suppose that a valuable letter quickly finds a purchaser?"

"Oh, yes. There is plenty of money waiting for good autographs. Why, only a little while ago I saw the MSS. of Sir Walter Scott's Lady of the Lake knocked down for £1,290. The MSS. of two poems by Keats fetched at the same sale £1,000; and a thin, partly filled commonplace book of Burns brought £360."

"Well, now, Dr. Scott, supposing I said I thought that autograph collecting was one of the frivolous pursuits of the rich, how would you defend it?"

"I should reply that there is no pursuit which a comparatively poor man can take up with such certainty of gaining instruction and amusement. Recollect that every autograph is unique. There is charm in that. But consider the incentive which the collecting of autographs offers to the study of history and biography. A man who possesses autographs of, let us say, Macclise, the painter, Sir John Jervis, the admiral, and Michael Faraday, the scientist—none of them expensive—is quite certain to be seized with curiosity about these men. Does he not possess fragments of them? Will he not look up their portraits and biographies, and arm himself with facts and anecdotes? It is charming study, endlessly interesting."

"You almost make me a collector. Now supposing I were to take it into my head that I should like to collect—one letter, of Sir Walter Scott's! It would be a fine possession, I admit. What would it cost me?"

"Say three guineas."

"And how near to Sir Walter Scott could I get for three guineas?"

"I can tell you that, because I have such a letter in my possession now. I must describe it entirely from memory. Sir Walter is ill, and he is writing from his couch. He describes his illness and the pain he is in; and he chaffs himself, remarking that he is like a certain carrier who after eating a full meal complained that he was not hungry. He goes on to speak of Blackwood, who wants to see him, but Scott, for some reason, is reluctant to meet him just now. He adds, however, 'I could tell B. many things that would be useful to him if I were not afraid to be met with his "My stars! dear me!"' Well, I think you will agree that a letter of Scott's no more self-revealing than that is worth having."

"Yes, I think so. And now, Dr. Scott, what about forgeries, lithographs, and photographed hand-writing, and all the other iniquities one hears about in connexion with autographs?"

"Well, forgeries, of whatever kind, are numerous and very easy to detect."

"Easy to detect?"

"Certainly, if the collector has a cool head, and does not allow the wish that an autograph shall be genuine to father the thought that it is genuine. Most of the forgeries would deceive no cool, careful man with a modicum of experience. As for photographs, they certainly cannot be detected at a glance. I frequently buy them in bundles of genuine autographs. The test is a drop of acid. The carelessness of young collectors is the mother of forgeries."

DRAMA.

"YOU have read the book, of course?" is the question one hears on all sides on the first night of a play which has been adapted from a published novel, the implication being that such a preliminary is indispensable to the due understanding of your author. Too often the implication is just. Nothing is more difficult than to bring out in the two or three hours' traffic of the stage all the essential points of a story that has been told in narrative form; and the temptation is great to let something be taken for granted, especially if the adapter be himself the novelist. Yet to impose upon the theatre-goer the duty of reading a book before he goes to the play is obviously unfair. It might be making him pay too dear for his evening's amusement. In any case, it is not in the bargain. This condition no author could have recognised more fully or ungrudgingly (though few need have heeded it less) than Mr. J. M. Barrie, who has moulded "The Little Minister" into such excellent dramatic shape at the Haymarket that nobody making acquaintance with the author's work for the first time would suspect it of being an adaptation. It may be that his very dexterity as a dramatist will operate to his detriment with his readers. They will lament that so much that has taken their fancy in the book should be sacrificed in the play. But the real test of the adapter's work is whether he has produced a play capable of standing on all-fours, a story calculated to interest, to move, to thrill, to win the spectator who knows nothing of scene or subject except what is set before him; and Mr. Barrie's success in this respect is unquestionable. The art of the dramatist is not, perhaps, so wholly different from that of the novelist as is sometimes alleged. Different, however, they are. Yet not a few distinguished writers have possessed both, the elder Dumas being, perhaps, the most conspicuous example; and Mr. Barrie must be added to the number.

"THE LITTLE MINISTER," as a play, has not only story and character, but the invaluable quality of atmosphere. "Time: eighty years ago," says the programme, and by some subtle magic, easier to recognise than explain, the spectator finds himself transported forthwith into the quaint and primitive community of Thrums, where a dour and sturdy puritanism battles for pre-eminence with worldly motive and other forms of human weakness. Here, to begin with, is conflict, and conflict is drama. Mr. Barrie from the outset escapes the great besetting danger of the adapter, the temptation to tell some part of the story by retrospective narration. From the moment the curtain rises the story begins to live before us. It opens in Caddam Wood by night, with Thomas Whammond, Snecky Hobart, Silva Tosh, and Andrew Mealmaker, elders of the Kirk, discussing the political and theological situation. The weavers for some reason are rebellious to authority, and the military are coming to coerce them. It is to give their townsmen warning by the blowing of a horn that the elders are here on the watch. With the approach of the military their courage fails them. But there is someone else on the watch too—the roguish, mischievous "Babbie," daughter of the Earl of Rintoul, masquerading as a gipsy, and in this guise she meets with the minister, the Rev. Gavin Dishart, who has come to the wood to warn his parishioners against illegal acts. In this wood Mr. Barrie contrives to lay the foundations of his drama. For not only do the minister and Babbie meet here, but the elders who have temporarily disappeared from the scene return to see the meeting and to take alarm at their pastor's relations with the "Egyptian wumman." Then the military file past at the back of the stage, only their headgear and the glint of their firearms being seen; and it is at Babbie's roguish instigation that the unsuspecting minister blows the warning horn. Yet one more episode to complete the business of the first act. The baffled military, hunting the mysterious gipsy, track her to the minister's presence, where, with a coolness that takes him completely aback for the moment, she escapes arrest by declaring herself to be his wife—a circumstance which by and by serves to bring about a striking and dramatic dénouement.

ALL this, to be sure, is a wide departure from the book; but the spirit of the original somehow remains. How well the actors, too, fit in with their parts! As the elders, Messrs. Brandon Thomas, Mark Kinghorne, F. H. Tyler, and Holman Clark are living, breathing types of Presbyterian bigotry, sweetened and humanised by the author's lambent humour. With them is drunken Rob Dow, another living picture of the place and period, in the person of Mr. Sydney Valentine. Then there is the "Little Minister," embodied by Mr. Cyril Maude on austere and dapper lines in his prim white cravat and tightly buttoned-up coat, but impressionable to female wiles, almost in spite of himself. Finally there is the Babbie of Miss Winifred Emery—not the Babbie of the book, but another, with a charm and a winsomeness all her own—whose arch wooing invests the minister's conquest with the necessary plausibility. Rapid as it is, the action never for a moment loses its vraisemblance or its consistency; and by the end of the act, when the minister, in defiance of his elders' censure, picks up a rose that Babbie has given him, the donnée of the play is complete. It is a struggle between love and "doctrine," in which the spectator, with a confidence already born of the author's genial view of life and his broad humanity, backs love to win.

In short, "The Little Minister" is a love-story, thrown into relief by a backing of Scotch puritanism. Of this puritanism we see a good deal from the manse garden, with the kirk itself in the background. But, naturally, Babbie's courtship is not carried on there. A delightful scene in Nannie the weaver's cottage shows us the bashful minister and the roguish Babbie taking tea together, and it is in the hall of Rintoul Castle that the climax of the lovers' affairs is reached, Babbie, pursued from the wood by Rob Dow, who wants to save the minister from the Egyptian sorceress's wiles, taking refuge in her room, and changing from the short-skirted, bare-footed gipsy into the staid and proper Lady Barbara. Up to this point the minister has been ignorant of the social rank of his enchantress, and so to some extent have we. But Mr. Barrie is careful to make the transformation intelligible, and, by revealing a sliding panel and a secret exit from the castle, to show us how the mischievous Lady Babbie has been able to play her double personality without the Earl's knowledge. Now comes the episode of the Scotch marriage into play. Lady Babbie had been formerly engaged to Captain Halliwell, the military officer whose men were witnesses of the minister's so-called marriage with the gipsy in the wood—a marriage by declaration, and valid in Scotch law. As Lady Babbie boldly avows her love for the little minister, it occurs to Captain Halliwell as a good joke, the Earl agreeing with him, to prove that sylvan marriage, and thus fasten upon the rev. gentleman, as his wife, the mysterious gipsy, for whose arrest a warrant has been issued. This is not, I am bound to say, a misunderstanding entirely worthy of serious drama. It belongs to the domain of farce, and is the one blot upon Mr. Barrie's ingeniously woven web of incident, but it serves. The house is always glad to see the tables turned upon a detrimental lover, and it is gratified in this respect to the full. For in the last act the elders, in their solemn suits of rusty black, and the whole congregation of the kirk are summoned to witness the minister's discomfiture by the proving of his marriage with the supposed gipsy. Lady Babbie herself has been hugely enjoying the joke. What is proved, needless to say, is, that if the minister is married at all it is to Lady Babbie; whereupon the Earl, yielding to the inevitable, accepts the minister as his son-in-law, on condition that a regular marriage follows in due course; and the happy event is hailed with popular applause, the elders themselves gleefully rubbing their hands at the prospect of the envy that will be felt by other kirks at their minister's good fortune.

In this hurried analysis of the play it has hardly been possible to do justice to the quaint, old-world manner and the sweet, wholesome atmosphere pervading it. It is long since so fine a comedy of purely native workmanship has been seen in London. It places Mr. Barrie as high among dramatists as he already stands among novelists. To the Haymarket company, also, no small praise is due. The rendering of the play is all but perfect. With a little emendation of accent here and there (though not among the elders) perfect it would be. Miss Winifred Emery's Babbie is a delightful creation, and in the hands of Mr. Cyril Maude the little minister himself, albeit English in speech, wins his way to the hearts of the public. The performance is Scotch, but not so Scotch as to be kailyardy. And the setting is all that could be wished. "The Little Minister," in fine, bids fair to rank as the best play of the year.

J. F. N.

THE WEEK.

MR. CHARLES WHIBLEY'S writings are always strong meat, and the very title of his latest collection of essays, Studies in Frankness, prepares the reader. In these papers on Petronius, Sterne, Apuleius, and Sir Thomas Urquhart we find Mr. Whibley protesting against the application of certain of the laws of life to literature. Here is a passage which gives the clue to Mr. Whibley's argument:

"Life, then, whether we wish or no, preserves its privacies and restraints, which have grown stronger by tradition, and whose imperious sway no lover of curiosity will resent. Thus there are ordained for us a thousand intricate rules, in obedience to which we play the game or fight the battle of existence. Nor are they irksome, these infringements upon our liberty, since life is made interesting by prohibition, and since it is to them that we owe our morals, our manners, the very elegancies of human conduct. To dream of licence with equanimity is impossible. The most ardent worshipper of the red-cap would find no pleasure if once he realised his vain scheme of freedom; and, happily, the force of tradition is still strong enough to thwart his worst intention. But the Puritan has applied the laws of life, and others ten times sterner, to the art of literature, so that words are detected in flagrant criminality, and 'poetry has become a liveried convict.'"

A BOOK that interests on sight is the first volume of the series of Eighteenth Century Letters which Messrs. A. D. Innes & Co. have undertaken. The raison d'être of the series is thus stated by the editor, Mr. E. Brimley Johnson:

"The voluminous and interesting correspondence of the eighteenth century—when letter-writing was, indeed, an art—can only be read at present in more or less elaborate and expensive complete editions, or in small anthologies containing at most half-a-dozen letters by the same writer. The aim of the present series is to present a selection of this inexhaustible material in groups, each sufficiently large to create an atmosphere. No attempt has been made to seek out one-letter men, or to unearth a neglected genius; but the leaders of thought and action—in so far as they wrote good letters—are represented by their most characteristic work, collected from all authentic sources."

The first volume is filled with the letters of Swift, Addison, and Steele. Mr. Stanley Lane-Poole writes an Introduction.

MR. RICHARD LE GALLIENNE'S rendering of the Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám is now to hand. A version of this poem by a writer who confessedly has no knowledge of the tongue in which it was written by its author needed defence, and Mr. Le Gallienne is not backward in this respect. His version, he says, is founded mainly upon the prose version of Mr. Justin McCarthy. Those who know that version "will be able," says Mr. Le Gallienne, "to discover for themselves to what extent I have literally followed, to what extent departed from, and to what extent expanded, his prose." With regard to Edward FitzGerald's version, Mr. Le Gallienne admits that he has "employed the form of quatrain naturalised by FitzGerald—naturalised, it must be remembered, not invented—the unrhymed third line being a feature of the original rubá'y, and the melody of the whole quatrain being accounted, by those able to judge, a beautiful echo of the old Persian music."

Lastly—but we are arranging his remarks in our own sequence—Mr. Le Gallienne says:

"He [Mr. FitzGerald] had chosen many of the richer petals, but he had left many behind—and it is chiefly of these that I have made my little yellow rose."

A VERY bulky biography of John Arthur Roebuck, M.P., is edited by Mr. Robert Eadon Leader, who writes: "My work has been that rather of an editor than of an author, because my chief aim has been to let Mr. Roebuck tell his own story, as far as possible, in his own words." Some of the chapters are autobiographical. This is the case with the first chapter, which opens with Mr. Roebuck's words:

"I fancy that I have not long to live; therefore, if I can leave anything behind me in the shape of a life history, it must be written in haste, and certainly without any great regard to accuracy as to dates. . . . A happy life! I have, indeed, to thank Providence for the many benefits with which I have been gifted. I have been happy as a son, as a husband, as a father; I have been happy in my public career: have I not, then, much for which to be thankful?"

MR. W. T. STEAD may be said to make the most of both worlds. No one can be more actual than he, yet no one claims to be in closer correspondence with immaterial existences. Mr. Stead now issues in book form the collections of stories in which his interest in the occult found expression. These stories appeared as Christmas and New Year Annuals, under the title of "Real Ghost Stories" and "More Ghost Stories." "Since then," writes Mr. Stead, "I have made so many experiments in the psychic realm, and have had so many experiences, that these stories seem to me very ancient history indeed." Nevertheless, they are sufficiently fearsome to draw from Mr. Stead a "Caution to the Reader." This caution is as follows:

"Before reading the contents of this book,
"PLEASE NOTE.

"1. That the narratives printed in these pages had better not be read by any one of tender years, of morbid excitability, or of excessively nervous temperament.

"2. That the latest students of the subject concur in the solemn warning addressed in the Sacred Writings to those who have dealings with familiar spirits, or who expose themselves to the horrible consequences of possession.

"3. That as the latent possibilities of our complex personality are so imperfectly understood, all experimenting in hypnotism, spiritualism, &c., excepting in the most careful and reverent spirit, by the most level-headed persons, had much better be avoided.

"This caution is printed here at the suggestion of Catholics, Theosophists, and Spiritualists, who declare themselves to be profoundly convinced of its necessity."

We have received an illustrated reprint of the last story in Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush. In a preface the author states his belief that there are many men as self-forgetful and utterly Christian as his hero; and adds that he has often received the thanks of doctors for offering them so fine an object-lesson as this story. The illustrations, by Fred. C. Gordon, are fair.

New novels are catalogued and noticed elsewhere

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

- SANTA TERESA. By Alexander Whyte, D.D. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. 2s.
THE HOLY BIBLE. With an Introduction by J. W. Mackail. Vol. II. Macmillan & Co.
THE LIVES OF THE SAINTS. By the Rev. S. Baring-Gould, M.A. New edition, Vol. IX. John C. Nimmo. 5s.
THE MODERN READERS' BIBLE: SELECT MASTERPIECES OF BIBLICAL LITERATURE. Edited by Richard G. Moulton. Macmillan & Co. 2s. 6d.
THE CHAPEL OF THE ASCENSION: A DESCRIPTIVE HANDBOOK. By Frederic Shields. Elliot Stock.
FOUR ESSAYS. By the Rev. George Henslow, M.A. George Stoneman. 3s.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

- LIVES OF GREAT ITALIANS. By Frank Horridge. T. Fisher Unwin. 7s. 6d.
THE STORY OF THE BRITISH ARMY. By Lieut.-Colonel C. Cooper King. Methuen & Co. 7s. 6d.
A SHORT HISTORY OF THE ROYAL NAVY: 1217-1688. By David Hannay. Methuen & Co. 7s. 6d.
THE HISTORY OF THE FOREIGN POLICY OF GREAT BRITAIN. By Montagu Burrows. New edition, revised. Wm. Blackwood & Sons. 6s.
MARCHEMUS AND MUSIC. By Mathilde Marchesi. Harper & Brothers.
LIFE AND LETTERS OF JOHN ARTHUR ROEBUCK. Edited by Robert Eadon Leader. Edward Arnold. 16s.
MASTERS OF MEDICINE: WILLIAM HARVEY. By D'Arcy Power. T. Fisher Unwin. 3s. 6d.
SOME ACCOUNT OF THE LORD MAYORS AND SHERIFFS OF THE CITY OF LONDON, 1601-1625. Compiled by G. E. Cockayne. Phillimore & Co. 12s. 6d.
THE WAR OF GREEK INDEPENDENCE, 1821 to 1833. By W. Alison Phillips, M.A. Smith, Elder & Co.
MEN WHO HAVE MADE THE EMPIRE. By George Griffith. C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd. 7s. 6d.
THE MAKING OF ABBOTSFORD, AND INCIDENTS IN SCOTTISH HISTORY. By the Hon. Mrs. Maxwell Scott. A. & C. Black.
PHILIP MELANCTHON, 1497-1560. By the late Rev. George Wilson, F.L.S. The Religious Tract Society.
A MEMOIR OF ANNE JEMIMA CLOUGH. By Blanche Athena Clough. Edward Arnold.

POETRY, CRITICISM, BELLES LETTRES.

- ENGLISH MARQUES: WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY HERBERT ARTHUR EVANS. Blackie & Son. 3s. 6d.
THOMAS GAINSBOROUGH: A RECORD OF HIS LIFE AND WORKS. By Mrs. Arthur Bell. George Bell & Sons.
TWO ESSAYS UPON MATTHEW ARNOLD, WITH SOME OF HIS LETTERS TO THE AUTHOR. By Arthur Galton. Elkin Mathews. 3s. 6d.
THE SPECTATOR. Vol. II. Edited by George A. Aitken. John C. Nimmo.
THE ASSEMBLIES OF HANDEL. By Dr. F. Steingass. Sampson Low.
VOX HUMANA. By John Mills. T. Fisher Unwin. 6s.
NOTES ON THE WAY. By John R. Sims. Digby, Long & Co. 5s.
EIGHTEENTH CENTURY LETTERS: SWIFT, ADDISON, STEELE. Edited by R. Brimley Johnson. A. D. Innes & Co.
VERSES GRAVE AND GAY. By Postmaster. Thacker, Spink & Co.
FRIENDSHIP'S GARLAND. By Matthew Arnold. Second edition. Smith, Elder & Co. 4s.
THE FAIRY CHANGELING, AND OTHER POEMS. By Dora Sigerson. John Lane.
POEMS FROM THE DIVAN OF HAFIZ. Translated by Gertrude Lowthian Bell. William Heinemann.
THE LEGEND OF SIR GAWAIN: STUDIES UPON ITS ORIGINAL SCOPE AND SIGNIFICANCE. By Jessie L. Weston. David Nutt.
SELECTED POEMS FROM THE WORKS OF THE HON. RODEN NOEL. With a Critical Essay by Percy Adleshaw. Elkin Mathews. 4s. 6d.

SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- THE CANON: AN EXPOSITION OF THE PAGAN MYSTERY PERPETUATED IN THE CABALA AS THE RULE OF ALL THE ARTS. With a Preface by R. B. Cunninghame Graham. Elkin Mathews.
RAPANA; OR, THE RIGHTS OF THE INDIVIDUAL IN THE STATE. By Archibald Forsyth. T. Fisher Unwin. 6s.
HISTORIC ORNAMENT: TREATISE ON DECORATIVE ART AND ARCHITECTURAL ORNAMENT. By James Ward. Chapman & Hall.
ETHERIAL SYSTEMS. By Wilhelm Wundt. Translated by Margaret Floy Washburn. Swan Sonnenschein & Co.

- RESEARCHES INTO THE MATHEMATICAL PRINCIPLES OF THE THEORY OF WEALTH. By Augustin Cournot, 1838. Macmillan & Co. 3s.
THE TRAINING OF A CRAFTSMAN. By Fred Miller. J. S. Virtue & Co.
A TEXT-BOOK OF PHYSIOLOGY. By M. Foster, M.A. Seventh edition. Part III: THE CENTRAL NERVOUS SYSTEM. Macmillan & Co.
THE PROGRESS OF ART IN ENGLISH CHURCH ARCHITECTURE. By T. S. Robertson. Gay & Bird. 5s.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

- MEDITERRANEAN DAYS. By Samuel Wells. Bradbury, Agnew & Co.
THE PIONEERS OF THE KLOWDYEN. Narrated by M. H. E. Hayne. Recorded by H. West Taylor. Sampson Low.
CHARLES THE GREAT. By Thomas Hodgkin. Macmillan & Co. 2s. 6d.
PICTURES OF SOUTHERN CHINA. By Rev. J. Macgowan. The Religious Tract Society.
BENIN, THE CITY OF BLOOD. By Commander R. H. Bacon, R.N. Edward Arnold. 7s. 6d.

NATURAL HISTORY.

- THE STORY OF A RED DEER. By the Hon. J. W. Fortescue. Macmillan & Co. 4s. 6d.

NEW EDITIONS OF FICTION.

- RHODA FLEMING. By George Meredith. Archibald Constable & Co. 6s.

EDUCATIONAL.

- GERMAN LYRICAL AND OTHER POEMS. With Isometrical Translations. By H. Campbell Galletly. Williams & Norgate.
MACAULAY'S LAYS OF ANCIENT ROME. Edited by W. T. Webb, M.A.

JUVENILE BOOKS.

- MORE BEASTS (FOR WORSE CHILDREN). Verses by H. B. Pictures by B. T. B. Edward Arnold. FAIRY TALES FROM THE FAR NORTH. By P. O. Asbjørnsen. Translated by H. L. Brækstad. David Nutt. MASTER SKYLARK: A STORY OF SHAKESPEARE'S TIME. By John Bennett. Macmillan & Co. 6s. THE WHITE WITCH OF THE MATABELE. By Fred. Whishaw. Griffith Farran, Brown & Co. BABY LAYS. By A. Stow and E. Calvert. Elkin Mathews. TWO OLD LADIES, TWO FOOLISH FAIRIES, AND A TOM CAT. By Maggie Browne. Cassell & Co. IN INDIAN TENTS: STORIES TOLD BY INDIANS TO ARMY L. ALGER. Roberts Bros. (Boston, U.S.A.). WANSLEST: THE LITTLE JEN WHO LAUGHS. By A. G. Plympton. Roberts Bros. (Boston, U.S.A.). ROVENING IT IN SIBERIA. By Robert L. Jefferson. Sampson Low. LIFE'S LOOK-OUT: AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF SYDNEY WATSON. Hodder & Stoughton. 3s. 6d. RICK ENOUGH. By Leigh Webster. By Elizabeth S. Pitman. Roberts Bros. PARSON PRINCE. By Florence Moore. Bemrose & Sons. BATTLEDOWN BOYS. By E. Everett-Green. The Sunday School Union. SMA' FOLK AND BAIN DAYS. By Rev. John Beveridge, M.A. Alexander Gardner. BAD LITTLE HANNAH. By L. T. Meade. F. V. White & Co. 3s. 6d. HUNTING FOR GOLD. By Hume Nisbet. F. V. White & Co. 3s. 6d. THE GOLD SHIP. By F. M. Holmes. Sampson Low. THE SILVER LINK. Vol. VI. The Sunday School Union. CINDERELLA'S PICTURE BOOK. By Walter Crane. John Lane. EXILED FROM SCHOOL; OR, FOR THE SAKE OF A CHUM. By Andrew Home. A. & C. Black.
The following from Nelson & Sons: THE ISLAND OF GOLD. By Gordon Stables. SOLDIERS OF THE QUEEN. By Harold Avery. TOM TUFTON'S TRAVELS. By E. Everett-Green.

MISCELLANEOUS.

- THE WAR OF THE THEATRES. By Josiah H. Penniman-Ginn & Co. (Boston, U.S.A.). SIXTY YEARS OF EMPIRE, 1837-197: A REVIEW OF THE PERIOD. William Heinemann. A SYSTEM OF MEDICINE. By Many Writers. Edited by Thomas Clifford Allbutt. Macmillan & Co. 25s. CASSELL'S FAMILY DOCTOR. By a Medical Man. Cassell & Co. 10s. 6d. THE LAWYER'S REMEMBRANCE AND POCKET-BOOK FOR THE YEAR 1898. Compiled by Arthur Powell. W. L. Field. LESSONS FROM LIFE (ANIMAL AND HUMAN). Edited by Rev. Hugh Macmillan. Elliot Stock.

People's Edition, price 6d., with Portrait. (Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V. with Two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS ON DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES OF MAN."

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHERD, Farnival Street, E.C.

DOWNEY & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THE LIMITED ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF CHARLES LEVER'S NOVELS.

With all the Original Illustrations by Phiz, Cruikshank, Luke Fildes, &c., and with New Illustrations by Gordon Browne.

"Here is a new edition of Lever which it is a positive pleasure to read and handle.....The printing and get-up are superb."—Westminster Gazette.

Demy 8vo, gilt top, 10s. 6d. net.
With 26 Etchings by John Leech, from the Original Steel Plates.

The STRUGGLES and ADVENTURES of CHRISTOPHER TADPOLE.

By ALBERT SMITH.
With a Memoir of the Author by EDMUND YATES.
[Just ready.]

"SPLENDID SIXPENNY WORTHES."—Black and White. DOWNEY'S SIXPENNY LIBRARY OF FICTION.

THE BEST NOVELS BY THE BEST AUTHORS.
"Nothing could be better or handier."—Pall Mall Gazette
"Among cheap editions it is a long time since one has seen anything so wholly deserving of praise."—Graphic.

MR. FITZGERALD MOLLOY'S NEW BOOK. THE ROMANCE OF THE IRISH STAGE.

With Pictures of the Irish Capital in the Eighteenth Century.
2 vols., with 2 Portraits. 21s.

"In its pages Dublin of the Eighteenth Century lives, moves, palpitates before you as though it were a panorama passing before your eyes."—Weekly Sun.

"Pleasantly chatty, interesting, and amusing."—Punch.

THE MEMOIRS of LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD. By THOMAS MOORE. Edited, and with many Supplementary Particulars, by MARTIN MACDERMOTT. 6s. "One of the most fascinating biographies of the century."—Pall Mall Gazette.

A DOCTOR'S IDLE HOURS. By "SCALPEL." 6s. "A delightful collection of little essays."—Guardian.

NEW FICTION.

HIGH PLAY. By G. Manville Fenn. 6s. [Just ready.]

POOR LITTLE BELLA. By F. C. PHILIPS. 6s. [Just ready.]

ANOTHER'S BURDEN. By James PAYN. 3s. 6d. "Pathetic, charming, and absolutely unaffected in its sheer human sympathy."—Speaker.

NINETY-EIGHT: a Romance of the Irish Rebellion. With 12 Illustrations by A. D. Mo- Cormick. 6s.

TALES of the ROCK. (Stories of Gibraltar.) By Mrs. ANDERSON. 3s. 6d. "Whether humorous or pathetic, they are all interesting. The incidents are not unnatural or exaggerated; the style is pleasing, and altogether they are thoroughly readable."—Glasgow Herald.

A ROGUE'S CONSCIENCE. By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY. 3s. 6d. "The pace and swing do not flag from start to finish."—Daily News.

SECOND EDITION of the NEW MINING ROMANCE. THE GOLDEN CROCODILE. By F. MORTIMER TRIMMER. 6s. "It is among the best specimens of the romance of Mammon."—World.

London:
DOWNEY & Co., LTD., 12, York Street, Covent Garden

MESSRS. A. D. INNES & CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THROUGH the FAMINE DISTRICTS of INDIA. By F. H. S. MEREWETHER. Being an Account by Reuter's Special Correspondent of his Experience in Travelling through the Famine Districts of India. Profusely Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY LETTERS.

Edited by R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON. Illustrated with Photograveure Portraits of the Writers. Each volume crown 8vo, halfparchment, gilt top, 6s.

Vol. I.—SWIFT, ADDISON, STEELE. With an Introduction by STANLEY LANE POOLE.

Vol. II.—JOHNSON and CHESTERFIELD. With an Introduction
by Dr. Bunsen, HULL.

Other Volumes will follow in due course.

THE LIFE of SIR RANALD MARTIN, C.B.

By Sir JOSEPH FAYRE, Bart., K.C.S.I., M.D. With Portrait.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

TWELVE YEARS of a SOLDIER'S LIFE.

From the Letters of Major W. T. JOHNSON. Edited by his WIDOW. Being an Account of the Experiences of a Major in the Native Irregular Cavalry in India and elsewhere. With Portrait.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE GOLDSTREAM GUARDS in the CRIMEA. By Lieut.-Colonel ROSS OF BLAIDENSBURG, C.B.

Being a Sketch of the Crimean War, tracing in detail of the operations in which the Goldstream took part. With numerous Maps.
Crown 8vo, 6s.

POEMS By GEORGE COOKSON. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 4s. 6d. net.

ROWING By R. C. LEHMANN. With Chapters by GUY NICKALLS and C. M. PITMAN. Being Vol. IV., of the "Isthmian Library." Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.

BOXING By R. ALLANSON WINN. Being Vol. V. of the "Isthmian Library." Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.

NEW AND RECENT NOVELS.

By A. E. W. MASON, Author of "The Courtship of Morrice Buckler."

LAWRENCE CLAVERING. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The plot is both clever and original.... As a record of romantic adventure this story is quite the best upon the Stuart cause we have seen published for many a long day."—Weekly Sun.

THE LORDSHIP, the PASSEN, and WE.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"Is full of racy humour."—Glasgow Herald.

DELLIE JOCK. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Of all scraps in recent fiction Dellie Jock is one of the most winning and lovable.... Full of quaint, irresistible humour."—Westminster Gazette.

KATHERINE CROMER. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Lively characterisation and a never-failing verse make this story entertaining from beginning to end."—Morning Post.

London: A. D. INNES & Co., 31 & 32, Bedford Street, Strand.

THE WARWICK LIBRARY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

Edited by Prof. C. H. HERFORD,
Examiner in English to the University of London.

In crown 8vo Volumes, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ENGLISH MASQUES. With an Introduction by H. A. EVANS, M.A., Balliol College, Oxford.

PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED.

English Pastorals. With an Introduction by E. K. CHAMBERS, B.A.

English Literary Criticism. With an Introduction by C. E. VAUGHAN, M.A.

English Essays. With an Introduction by J. H. LOBBAN, M.A.

English lyrics, 1500—1700. With an Introduction by F. J. CARPENTER, M.A.

London: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, 50, Old Bailey.

Now Ready, crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

DCC EXERCISES. Including Hints for the Solution of all the Questions in Choice and Chance. By WILLIAM ALLEN WHITWORTH, M.A., late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

CHOICE and CHANCE. An Ele- mentary Treatise on Permutation, Combinations, and Probability, with 640 Exercises. Fourth Edition. Price 6s.

Cambridge: DEIGHTON BELL & CO.
London: GEORGE BELL & SONS.

THE MOST NUTRITIOUS.

E P P S ' S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A

BREAKFAST AND SUPPER.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS.

Cambridge: DEIGHTON BELL & CO.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS.

THE MOST NUTRITIOUS.

E P P S ' S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A

BREAKFAST AND SUPPER.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS.

Cambridge: DEIGHTON BELL & CO.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS.

THE MOST NUTRITIOUS.

E P P S ' S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A

BREAKFAST AND SUPPER.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS.

Cambridge: DEIGHTON BELL & CO.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS.

NEW ISSUE OF STANFORD'S COMPENDIUM OF GEOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL.

RE-WRITTEN, AND WITH NEW ILLUSTRATIONS.

In Twelve Volumes, sold separately.
Now ready, large crown 8vo, cloth, 16s.

NORTH AMERICA:

Vol. I. CANADA and NEWFOUNDLAND

By S. E. DAWSON, Litt.D. (Laval), F.R.S.C.
With 18 Maps and 90 Illustrations.

The Volumes already issued in the New Series, uniform
in size and price, are:

ASIA:

Vol. I. NORTHERN and EASTERN ASIA

By A. H. KEANE, F.R.G.S. With 8 Maps
and 91 Illustrations.

Vol. II. SOUTHERN and WESTERN ASIA

By A. H. KEANE, F.R.G.S. With 7 Maps
and 89 Illustrations.

AUSTRALASIA:

Vol. I. AUSTRALIA and NEW ZEALAND

By A. R. WALLACE, LL.D. With 14 Maps
and 69 Illustrations.

Vol. II. MALAYSIA and the PACIFIC ARCHIPELAGOES. By F. H. H. GUILLE- MARD, M.D. With 16 Maps and 47 Illus- trations.

AFRICA:

Vol. I. NORTH AFRICA. By A. H. KEANE, F.R.G.S. With 9 Maps and 77 Illustrations.

Vol. II. SOUTH AFRICA. By A. H. KEANE, F.R.G.S. With 11 Maps and 93 Illustrations.

"The new issue of 'Stanford's Compendium of Geography and Travel' is a publication of great value, and contains, in convenient form, the latest geographical results of travel and research adequately treated. Not only is the information accurate, but the form in which the work is produced is admirable, and English geography may be proud of such a series. It is useful for educational purposes and for reference, and pleasant to the general reader."—Athenaeum.

London: EDWARD STANFORD,
25 and 27, Cockspur Street, S.W.

Geographer to the Queen.

SEELEY & CO.'S BOOKS.

ALBRECHT DÜRER: a Study of his Life and Work. By LIONEL CUST. With 8 Copper- plates, and many other Illustrations, gilt top, 7s. 6d. net.

"The whole book is just what we should expect from so accomplished a critic; it is beautifully printed, and the illustrations deserve to be complimented on the way they have executed a difficult task."—Daily News.

MARRIAGE CUSTOMS IN MANY LANDS. By H. N. HUTCHINSON. With many Illustrations, 12s. 6d.

"A very instructive as well as a very interesting book."—Graphic.

MOUNTAIN, STREAM, AND COVERT. Sketches of Country Life and Sport in England and Scotland. By A. I. SHAND. With many Illustrations, 12s. 6d.

"The love of the country is in the book, a keen and many-sided appreciation of sport, a touch of humour, and much swift observation."—Leeds Mercury.

NIGHTS WITH AN OLD GUNNER, AND OTHER STUDIES OF WILD LIFE. By C. J. CORNISH, Author of "Life at the Zoo." With many Illustrations, 6s.

"Sportmen and naturalists will alike read the bright, well-written, and instructive pages with keen enjoyment, and, further, find much to admire in a series of excellent full-page illustrations."—Glasgow Herald.

IN THE CHOIR OF WESTMINSTER

ABBEY: a Story of Henry Purcell's Days. By EMMA MARSHALL. With Illustrations. 5s.

"A good story well told and faithful in historic colour."—Glasgow Herald.

IN LINCOLN GREEN: a Merrie Tale of Robin Hood. By E. GILLIAT. With Illus- trations. 5s.

"Beautifully printed and illustrated, it is the best representation of the times of Robin Hood that has yet been given specially for boys."—Spectator.

THE PORTFOLIO VOLUME.

Containing the Four Numbers for the Year. With 12 Copper-plates, 10 coloured Plates, and many other Illustrations. Cloth, 16s. net

London:
SEELEY & CO., LTD., 38, Great Russell Street.

Digitized by Google

MESSRS. NELSON'S NEW BOOKS.

Now Ready, in a variety of sizes and bindings.

NELSON'S NEW SERIES OF TEACHERS' BIBLES.

NEW ILLUSTRATIONS. NEW CONCORDANCE.
NEW HELPS. NEW MAPS.

These TEACHERS' BIBLES contain beautiful new editions of the Bible printed from new type, along with Dr. Wright's "ILLUSTRATED BIBLE TREASURY," printed on thin paper. The work embodies the results of the ripest scholarship and latest research in all departments of Biblical Literature.

*.* Of all Booksellers.

THE KINGSTON LIBRARY FOR BOYS.

NEW ISSUE. Each with numerous Engravings and Coloured Frontispiece and Vignette by W. S. STACEY. In new uniform binding, cloth extra. Price 3s. 6d. each.

Twice Lost.
In the Wilds of Florida.
The Wanderers.
On the Banks of the Amazon.
My First Voyage to Southern Seas.
Saved from the Sea.
The Young Llanero.

An entirely New Edition.

THE ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT.

With 200 Illustrations of Bible Scenes and Sites, chiefly from Photographs by BONVILL, THORNTON, MASON GOOD, and others. 576 pages. In Long Primer Type. Cloth extra, red edges. Price 2s. 6d. Or, French Morocco limp, gilt roll, round corners, red under gold edges. Price 4s. 6d.

"It has never, we think, been done so well and thoroughly before."—SPECTATOR.
"Extremely tasteful and serviceable."—INDEPENDENT.

NEW BOOKS FOR THE SEASON.

5s.	A CLERK OF OXFORD, AND HIS ADVENTURES IN THE BARONS' WAR. By E. EVERETT-GREEN, Author of "The Young Pioneers," "In Taunton Town," "Shut In," &c., &c. Crown 8vo, bevelled boards, cloth extra, gilt top.	A HELPING HAND. By M. B. SYNGE, Author of "A Child of the Mews," &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra.	1s. 6d.
5s.	"SISTER": A Chronicle of Fair Haven. By E. EVERETT-GREEN, Author of "Molly Melville," "Olive Roscoe," "Temple's Trial," &c., &c. With Eight Illustrations by J. FINSMORE. Crown 8vo, bevelled boards, cloth extra, gilt edges.	POOR MRS. DICK, AND HER ADVENTURES IN QUEST OF HAPPINESS. A Story founded on Fact. By A. C. CHAMBERS, Author of "Life in the Walls," "Robin the Bold," &c. Fcap. 8vo, cloth extra.	1s.
5s.	AN EMPEROR'S DOOM; or, The Patriots of Mexico. By HERBERT HAYES, Author of "Clevely Sahib," "Under the Lone Star," &c., &c. Crown 8vo, bevelled boards, cloth extra, gilt top. With Eight Illustrations by A. J. B. SALMON.	WEE DOGGIE. By ELIZABETH C. TRAICE, Author of "Mistress Elizabeth Spencer," &c. Fcap. 8vo, cloth extra.	1s.
5s.	RAMBLES AMONG THE WILD FLOWERS: A Book for the Young. By M. C. COOKE, M.A., LL.D. (UNCLE MATT). The Five Parts in One Volume. With Ten Coloured Plates, illustrating Forty-two Wild Flowers, and 296 Engravings. Post 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges.	THE CHILDREN'S TREASURY OF PICTURES AND STORIES FOR 1898. Beautifully Illustrated. With choice Illuminated Cover. Boards.	1s.
3s. 6d.	THE BRITISH LEGION: A Tale of the Carlist War. By HERBERT HAYES, Author of "An Emperor's Doom," &c., &c. Crown 8vo. With Six Illustrations by W. H. MARGETSON.	Just Ready.—One Shilling Edition of the popular Devotional Work, COME YE APART. Daily Readings in the Life of Christ. By the Rev. J. R. MILLER, D.D., Author of "Life's Byways and Waysides," &c. Post 8vo, cloth.	1s. net.
3s. 6d.	THE ISLAND OF GOLD: A Sailor's Yarn. By GORDON STABLES, M.D., R.N., Author of "Every Inch a Sailor," "How Jack Mackenzie Won His Epaulletes," &c., &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra. With Six Illustrations by ALLAN STEWART.	THE JUBILEE SERIES OF SHILLING BOOKS. Fcap. 8vo, cloth extra.
3s. 6d.	TOM TUFTON'S TRAVELS. By E. EVERETT-GREEN, Author of "Dominique's Vengeance," &c., &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra. With Six Illustrations by W. S. STACEY.	JOY'S JUBILEE. By E. EVERETT-GREEN, Author of "Squib and his Friends," "Little Lois," &c., &c.	1s. each.
3s. 6d.	POPPY. By Mrs. ISLA SITWELL, Author of "The Golden Woolf," "In Far Japan," &c., &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra. Illustrated.	LITTLE LOIS. By E. EVERETT-GREEN, Author of "Temple's Trial," "Fighting the Good Fight," &c.
2s. 6d.	THE VANISHED YACHT. By E. HARCOURT BURRAGE. Crown 8vo, cloth extra. With Six Illustrations. "Full of interest and adventure."— Pall Mall Gazette .	THE HOWE BOYS. By the Author of "The Fisherman's Boy," &c.
2s. 6d.	PARTNERS: A School Story. By H. F. GERHEN. Post 8vo, cloth extra.	THE BOY CRUADERS; or, Robert of Marseilles.
2s. 6d.	FOR THE QUEEN'S SAKE; or, the Story of Little Sir Caspar. By E. EVERETT-GREEN, Author of "Squib and his Friends," &c., &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra.	THE MYSTERY OF THE MOUNT; or, The Story of May's Sixpence. A Tale. By M. A. PAULL, Author of "Tim's Troubles," "Bought and Saved," &c.
2s.	SOLDIERS OF THE QUEEN; or, Jack Fenleigh's Luck. A Story of the Dash to Khartoum. By HAROLD AVERY, Author of "Making a Man of Him," &c., &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra.	LADY MAUDE'S HELP; or, The Story of Christian Moss. By ENMA MARSHALL, Author of "Malome; or, Let Patience have her Perfect Work," "Over the Down," "The Story of the Lost Emerald," &c.
2s. 6d.	BRAVE MEN AND BRAVE DEEDS; or, Famous Stories from European History. By M. B. SYNGE, Author of "A Helping Hand," &c., &c. With Six Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth extra.	THE JUBILEE SERIES OF NINEPENNY BOOKS.	9d. each.
2s.	VANDRAD THE VIKING; or, The Feud and the Spell. A Tale of the Norsemen. By J. SROGER CLOUSTON. With Six Illustrations by HUBERT PATON. Post 8vo, cloth extra.	THE LOST TELEGRAM; or, Trust Betrayed.
2s.	BREAKING THE RECORD. The Story of North Polar Expeditions by the Nova Zembla and Spitzbergen Route. By M. DOUGLAS, Author of "Across Greenland's Ice-Fields." With Seventeen Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth extra.	LITTLE VERBENA; or, Trust in God.
2s.	A BOOK ABOUT SHAKESPEARE. Written for Young People. By J. N. M'ILWAITE, "Jean Forsyth." Post 8vo, cloth extra.	LITTLE PETE; or, Tried and True.
1s. 6d.	THE YOUNG EMIGRANTS. A Story for Boys. By C. T. JOHNSTON, Author of "Winter and Summer Excursions in Canada," &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra.	ZETTY CRAIG; or, No Cross, no Crown.
1s. 6d.	LITTLE TORA, THE SWEDISH SCHOOLMISTRESS; and other Stories. By Mrs. WOODS BAKER, Author of "The Swedish Twins," "The Blind Girl," "The Babes in the Basket," &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra.	THE JUBILEE SERIES OF SIXPENNY BOOKS.	6d. each.
		JOCK'S HERO and JUST MY LUCK.
		THE GOLDEN WRENS.
		WILLIE'S GIFT; or, a Penny a Week.
		THE DOCTOR'S LITTLE DOT.
		MY NIGHTINGALE; or, The Story of Little Holger.
		THE LOST OPAL RING; or, The End Crown's All.	6d. each.
		CUB'S APPLE.
		PRINCESS OLIVE.
		THE STORY OF A ROBIN.
		ALICE'S TEA-PARTY. ADVENTURES OF A CAT. THE STORY OF A PERSIAN CAT.

*.* T. Nelson & Sons' Illustrated Descriptive List of Books Post Free on application.

THOMAS NELSON & SONS, 35 & 36, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C.; PARKSIDE, EDINBURGH; AND NEW YORK.

MESSRS. BLISS, SANDS & CO.

NOW READY.

A MAGNIFICENT CHRISTMAS GIFT-BOOK. CHRIST AND HIS MOTHER IN ITALIAN ART.

Edited by JULIA CARTWRIGHT (Mrs. ADY).

With an Introduction by Rev. ROBERT EYTON, Canon of Westminster.

Consisting of 50 Large-Sized Photogravures, all in duplicate, making in all 100 Plates.

The subjects represented are all the most celebrated Madonnas, Holy Families, Nativities, Crucifixions, and other subjects portraying the various incidents in the Life of our Lord Jesus Christ.

SPECIAL PERMISSION HAS BEEN OBTAINED FOR THE REPRODUCTION OF THE LEONARDO CARTOON FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY, AND OF THE COWPER MADONNA FROM LORD COWPER.

The Work contains Biographies of all the Artists whose Works are included, together with Descriptive and Historical Notes of the Works themselves.

PROSPECTUSES CAN BE OBTAINED AT ANY BOOKSELLERS'.

The Book can be seen at the Publishers' Offices, or at the L'etmercier Gallery, 35, New Bond Street, W.

The binding is of the best Roman Vellum, and Sky-blue Buckram.

PRICE TEN GUINEAS NET.

ART.

GREEK ART on GREEK SOIL. By JAMES M. HOPPIN, Professor of the History of Art in the Yale University. With 12 Illustrations, cloth extra, gilt top, demy 8vo, price 7s. 6d. [Now ready.]

AN IMPORTANT MILITARY WORK.

LETTERS on APPLIED TACTICS. By Major Griepenkerl, Battalion-

Commander in the Regiment "Von Voigts-Rhetz" (3rd Hanoverian), No. 78. Translated by A RETIRED OFFICER. Square demy 8vo, 8s. net.

The book contains twenty-four Tactical Exercises dealing with the operations of a small detached force of the three arms, with numerous examples of actual orders worked out by the Author. With 6 large Maps in pocket at end of book, and 4 Coloured Maps inserted in the volume. The work is based on the operations around Metz in 1870. It has already reached a fourth edition in Germany; has, by command of the Japanese War Office, been translated into Japanese; and has also recently been translated into French. [Ready immediately.]

ECONOMICS.

THE HISTORY of ECONOMICS. By Henry Dunning Macleod, M.A.,

Author of "The Theory of Credit," "The Elements of Banking," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

"We have no hesitation in describing 'The History of Economics,' by Mr. Henry Dunning Macleod, as the most masterly exposition of economic theory that has appeared within recent years."—Bullionist.

A SEASONABLE VOLUME.

HUNTING and PRACTICAL HINTS for HUNTING MEN. By G. F.

UNDERHILL, Author of "In and Out of the Pigskin," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 2s. 6d. [Now ready.]

"Mr. Underhill's book is one of the best and handiest little books for the novice in the hunting field that we chance to have come across. It is eminently practical, as it professes to be, containing little that is ornamental or superfluous."—The Times.

"A very useful book, which can be read with advantage by most of those whom one sees at the covert side, is this of Mr. Underhill's."—The Field.

"It will find plenty of favour among the Nimrods. Mr. Underhill is a careful writer, with a dash of humour about him, and a bright, clever style. The book is one which should be read."—The Sportsman.

NEW NOVELS TO ASK FOR AT THE LIBRARIES.

CHLOE: a Novel. By Darley Dale, Author of "The Village Blacksmith," &c.

Price 6s.

"'Chloe,' the latest literary effort of Darley Dale, is a charming creation. There is not a single unreal character in the book; they palpitate with life and feeling. The situations are frequently most amusing, whilst the dialogues are very smart and satirical."—Dundee Advertiser.

"It is exceedingly well worked out, and affords opportunities for the delineation of a very attractive heroine.....the lovable and sweetly womanly character of Chloe.....the novel could not be a failure."—Glasgow Herald.

"'Chloe' is pleasant reading, and the characters are varied and interesting."—Pall Mall Gazette.

GEORGE MALCOLM: a Novel. By Gabriel Setoun, Author of "Robert Urquhart," "Barnoraig," &c. Price 6s.

"Mr. Setoun has seized upon a device that has in it both boldness and novelty, and has set before us a tragic drama.....Mr. Setoun's book is a success, shows a great advance, and should strengthen the author's hold on his public."—The Scotsman.

A WEEK of PASSION: a Novel. By Edward Jenkins, Author of "Ginx's Baby." Price 6s.

"The book is a capital detective romance. The fine melodramatic plot will keep the reader's attention firmly fixed, and when he has reached the close he will find time to reflect upon the neat character-drawing, and the fact that the story is well written in addition to being well told."—Literature.

"Beyond all doubt a powerful novel."—Spectator.

IN YEARS of TRANSITION: a Novel. By Samuel Gordon, Author of "A Handful of Exotics." Price 6s.

"The descriptions of low life in Paris are strong without being coarse; and the writing is excellent."—The Academy. [Now ready.]

London: BLISS, SANDS & CO., 12, Burleigh Street, Strand, W.C.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published for the Proprietor by PETER GEORGE ANDREWS, 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1333.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General Literature (No. 118, for DECEMBER), at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford. CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN, FOREIGN BOOKSELLER, 45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum), Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices. CATALOGUES on application.

W. THACKER & CO., PUBLISHERS, 2, Creed Lane, London, E.C. And at Calcutta, Bombay, and Simla. MSS. considered for Publication. [Established 1819. A large Clientele in all parts of the East.]

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

MR. MOSHER'S New and Complete Descriptive LIST OF BOOKS is Now Ready. It is issued in narrow 8vo, with Facsimile Titles in Red and Black, done up in French hand-made paper wrappers, with original cover design. Those who have yet to see these Editions published by Mr. Mosher should favour him with their names that the new List may be mailed them, post paid.

THOMAS B. MOSHER,

45, EXCHANGE STREET, PORTLAND, MAINE, UNITED STATES.

CHOICE, USEFUL and CURIOUS BOOKS, including Books and Tracts relating to America—Works on Chirurgery, Alchemy, Astrology, &c.—a few High-Class Book-Plates (Ex-Libris)—an interesting Memorial of Lord Byron's School Days at Harrow—a Manuscript Poem by the amiable and pious John Keble—Manuscript Song Book of the Seventeenth Century, with Music—rare Early Poetry—Armorial Bindings—Family History—Topography—Mosaic Portraits—Works relating to the Drama and the Stage, including a quantity of Plays; also Goldsmith's Good Natural Man and She Stoops to Conquer, First Editions—Railways—Bibliography—and Works of general interest. CATALOGUE post free.—A. RUSSELL SMITH, 24, Great Windmill Street, London, W. (one minute from Piccadilly Circus).

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING and PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, BELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C. have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 32, or 32-page Journals at one operation. Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments connected. Telephone 56121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. 10d. per 1,000 Words. Samples and references. Address Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

SCHOLARLY TYPE-WRITING by a Graduate. Greek, Latin, Foreign MSS., Poems, Plays, Translations.—E. W. LUMMIS, Beeches Road, West Bromwich.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD. (The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.) Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

UNIVERSITY of GLASGOW.

ADDITIONAL EXAMINERSHIPS.

The University Court of the University of Glasgow will shortly proceed to APPOINT the following EXAMINERS: (a) EXAMINERS for DEGREES in ARTS, viz., FOUR EXAMINERS (1) in MORAL PHILOSOPHY and LOGIC (2) in ENGLISH (3) in EDUCATION and (4) in HISTORY.

The appointment in each case will be for three years from 1st January next, at the following annual salaries, viz., Moral Philosophy and Logic £50, English £30, Education £10 10s., and History £21.

(b) EXAMINER in FRENCH for DEGREES in ARTS, and for the PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS.

The appointment will be for three years from 1st February next, at an annual salary of £30.

Candidates should lodge twenty copies of their application and testimonials with the undersigned on or before 11th December next.

ALAN E. CLAPPERTON, Secretary of the Court.

21, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES AND MONMOUTHSHIRE (A CONSTITUENT COLLEGE of THE UNIVERSITY OF WALES).

The Council invites APPLICATIONS for the PROFESSORSHIP OF GREEK.

Applications and testimonials should be sent on or before TUESDAY, NOVEMBER the 23rd, 1897, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

J. AUSTIN JENKINS, B.A., Secretary and Registrar.

University College, Cardiff, October 19th, 1897.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch P. W. D., and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways.

For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

BEDFORD COLLEGE, LONDON, for WOMEN, YORK PLACE, BAKER STREET, W.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the PROFESSORSHIP of MENTAL and MORAL SCIENCE. Applications, with one copy of testimonials, should be sent, on or before Monday, 22nd November, to the Honorary Secretary at the College, from whom all particulars may be obtained.

LUCY J. RUSSELL, Honorary Secretary.

TO WEALTHY PATRONS of ART and BELLES LETTRES.—A Gentleman engaged in producing a GREAT WORK, indispensable to Students of English Literature throughout the civilised world, requires FINANCING to a very moderate extent. The Work has met, so far as it has at present gone, with the highest approval of eminent experts. Guaranteed sale of small edition.—Apply by letter (Principals or Solicitors only) to X., care of Messrs. Steadman & Van Praagh, Solicitors, 23, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

WANTED.—GIRL of 17 or 18 to join Four others who are studying French, Music, Singing, Painting, in FRANCE, in charge of an exceptional English Chaperon. Highest references given and required. Terms for Pension and French, 10 Guineas monthly.—CHAPERON, "ACADEMY" Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS PURCHASED. A large assortment of all kinds FOR SALE. Lists free.—Scott, 17, Crondale Road, Fulham, S.W.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C. Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich. The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronized by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS for the PURPOSE of ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS.

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c. &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

PRODUCERS and PUBLISHERS of PERMANENT CARBON PHOTOGRAPHS OF FAMOUS WORKS OF ART.

Catalogues and Price Lists upon application.

THE NORWICH SCHOOL of PAINTING. A Series of Plates, printed in various Colours, after Cotman, Crome, Leman, Lound, Bright, Stark, Vincent, etc.

[Will be ready shortly.]

THE TATE COLLECTION (NATIONAL GALLERY of BRITISH ART). A large number of the Pictures now Exhibited at Millbank have been published in Autotype, including the Chief Works of G. F. WATTS, R.A. Further additions are being made, and will be announced shortly.

BRITISH ARTISTS of the VICTORIAN ERA. From the recent Guildhall Loan Collection. Average size 18 x 15 inches. Price 12s.

PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, and SCULPTURE by the OLD MASTERS. A large Collection of Permanent Photographs of the Chief Treasures of Art contained in the Public and Private Collections of Europe. Paintings and Sculpture in one uniform size, price 12s.; Drawings on the Scale of the Originals at prices ranging from 1s. 6d. to 10s. each.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY will be pleased to advise upon, and to undertake, the REPRODUCTION of WORKS of ART of every character, both for Book Illustration, and on a larger scale for the Portfolio or for Mural Decoration. Price Lists and Estimates free upon application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY FINE ART GALLERY, 74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B. Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms. Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

Now Offered at

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited, 30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BRADFORD ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London. TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand. TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

CONSTABLE &amp; CO.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF THE LAFAYETTES. By EDITH SICHEL. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

"She has treated a mass of material with rare judgment."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Miss Sichel's introduction is one of the best and truest pieces of writing we have met for a long while."—Spectator.

THE LAUGHTER OF PETERKIN.

Tales of the Celtic Wonder World. By FIONA MACLEOD. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Of all the story-books to delight and instruct young readers, there is none to surpass 'The Laughter of Peterkin.'"—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Companion Volume to "London City Churches."

LONDON RIVERSIDE CHURCHES.

By A. E. DANIELL. Profusely Illustrated by Alex. Ansted. Imp. 16mo, 6s.

Second Edition now in the press of

THE KING'S STORY-BOOK. His

Historical Stories Collected in Illustration of the Reigns of the English Monarchs. Illustrated by HARRISON MILLER. Over 500 pp., crown 8vo, 6s.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON.

Edited by AUGUSTINE BIRRELL. Six vols., fcap. 8vo, cloth, paper label, or gilt extra, 2s. net per volume. Also half-morocco, 3s. net per volume. Sold in sets only.

"Constable's edition will long remain the best both for the general reader and the scholar."—Review of Reviews.

CONSTABLE'S IS THE BEST REPRINT OF

THE WAVERLEY NOVELS. The

Favourite Edition of Sir Walter Scott. With all the Original Plates and Vignettes (Re-engraved). In forty-eight vols., fcap. 8vo, cloth, paper label title, 1s. 6d. net per volume; cloth gilt, gilt top, 2s. net per volume; and half-leather gilt, 2s. 6d. net per volume. PRINTED ON LIGHT BUT OPAQUE PAPER.

ODD STORIES. By Frances Forbes-

ROBERTSON. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"There is a kind of fairy-tale grace about some of these stories that lend them a character of their own."

Morning Post.

THE SELECTED POEMS OF

GEORGE MEREDITH. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

"These selected poems are a literary treasure."

Scotsman

NEW POEMS. By Francis Thomp-

SON. 6s. net.

"The essential poetry of essential Christianity."

Academy.

FIDELIS, AND OTHER POEMS. By

C. M. GEMMER. 3s. 6d. net.

"Varied and graceful. . . notably 'Fidelis' (called by the late Robert Browning 'a beautiful poem.')"—World.

A TALE OF BOCCACCIO. Poems.

By ARTHUR COLES ARMSTRONG. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s. net.

RICHARD BAIRD SMITH. The

Leader of the Delhi Heroes in 1857. By Colonel H. M. VIBART, R.E. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

"A very valuable book."—Times.

THE POPULAR RELIGION AND

FOLK-LORE OF NORTHERN INDIA. By WILLIAM CROOKER. With numerous Full-Page Plates, 3 vols., demy 8vo, 31s.

"The book is in every respect an admirable one, full of insight and knowledge at first hand."—Times.

CONSTABLE'S LIBRARY OF HISTORICAL NOVELS AND ROMANCES.

Edited by G. LAURENCE GOMME. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth extra.

Illustrations of all the principal features, Reproductions of Royal and Historical Signatures, Coins, Seals and Heraldic Devices.

LORD LYTON'S HAROLD, THE

LAST OF THE SAXONS, 1040.

MACFARLANE'S CAMP OF RE-

FUGE, 1844.

Others to follow.

THE BEST XMAS BOOK FOR CHILDREN.

SONGS FOR LITTLE PEOPLE. By

NORMAN GALE. Profusely illustrated by Helen Stratton. Large crown 8vo, 6s.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO., WESTMINSTER.

T. &amp; T. CLARK'S LIST.

A CONCORDANCE to the GREEK TESTAMENT, according to the Texts of Westcott and Hort. Tischendorf and the English Revisers. Edited by W. F. Moulton, D.D., and Professor A. S. GEDEN, M.A. Crown 4to, 1,040 pp., 25s. net; half-morocco, 31s. 6d. net.

Professor W. SANDAY, D.D., LL.D., Oxford, writes:—"There can be question as to the value of the new 'Concordance.' It is the only scientific concordance to the Greek Testament, and the only one that can safely be used for scientific purposes."

Detailed Prospectus, with Specimen, on application.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRITICAL COM-

MENTARIES. Editors: Dr. DRIVER, Dr. PLUMMER, and Dr. BRIGGS.

"The publication of this series marks an epoch in English exegesis." British Weekly.

The following Volumes now ready:

EPHESIANS and COLOSSIANS. By Prof. T. K. Abbott, D.D., Dublin. 10s. 6d.

PHILIPPIANS and PHILEMON. By Prof. M. Vincent, D.D. 8s. 6d.

ST. LUKE. By ALFRED PLUMMER, D.D., Durham. 12s.

ST. MARK. By Prof. E. F. Goud, D.D. 10s. 6d.

DEUTERONOMY. By Prof. S. R. Driver, D.D. 12s.

ROMANS. By Prof. W. SANDAY, D.D., and A. C. HEADLAM, B.D. 12s.

JUDGES. By Prof. G. F. Moore, D.D. 12s.

THE INTERNATIONAL THEOLOGICAL

LIBRARY. Editors: Dr. SALMOND and Dr. BRIGGS.

The following Volumes now ready:

CHRISTIANITY in the APOSTOLIC AGE. By Prof. A. C. McGiffert, D.D. 12s.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE. By Prof. G. P. Fisher, Yale. 12s.

AN INTRODUCTION to the LITERATURE of the OLD

TESTAMENT. By S. R. Driver, D.D., Oxford. Revised throughout, and entirely reset. Sixth Edition. 12s.

CHRISTIAN ETHICS. By NEWMAN SMITH, D.D. Third Edition. 10s. 6d.

APOLOGIES; or, Christianity Defensively stated.

By A. B. Bruce, D.D., Glasgow. Third Edition. 10s. 6d.

"Prospectuses, giving details of the above two Series, will be sent post free on application to the Publisher."

DILLMANN ON GENESIS.

GENESIS: Critically and Exegetically Ex- ounded. By A. DILLMANN, D.D., Berlin. Authorised Translation. 3 vols., 8vo, 31s.

"The most perfect form of the commentaries hitherto to the Old Testament which the nineteenth century has produced."

Prof. Bruce, Strasbourg.

ST. PAUL'S CONCEPTION OF CHRIST: or,

The Doctrine of the Second Adam. By Rev. DAVID SOMER-

VILLE, M.A., Edinburgh. 8vo, 2s.

THE CHRIST OF HISTORY and of EX-

PERIENCE. By Rev. DAVID W. FORREST, M.A., Glasgow. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

NEW VOLUME of the "ERAS OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH"

SERIES.

THE AGE OF THE RENAISSANCE. By Paul

VAN DYKE. Post 8vo, 6s.

Prospectus of the Series free on application.

Guardian.—"These volumes certainly must be said to answer their descriptions admirably. The reader will find in them studies in the history of the Church in a series of short chapters which are always interesting and often very picturesque."

HOMILETIC: LECTURES ON PREACHING.

By Professor T. CHRISTLIEB, Bonn University. Author of "Modern Doubt and Christian Belief." Post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE INCARNATE SAVIOUR. By W.

ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A., LL.D. A New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

INTRODUCTION to THEOLOGY: its Prin- ciples, its Branches, its Results, and its Literature. By A. CAVE, D.D., Principal of Hackney College. New Edition, largely re-written, and the Biographical lists carefully revised to date. 8vo, 12s.

THE CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE of IMMOR-

TALITY. By Professor S. D. F. SALMOND, D.D. Third Edition. now ready. 8vo, 14s.

OLD TESTAMENT THEOLOGY: the Re- ligion of Revelation in its pre-Christian Stage of Development. By Prof. H. SCHULTZ, D.D., Authorised Translation. Second Edition. 2 vols., 8vo, 18s. net.

"Though externally popular and of singular literary finish, the author's work within is a laborious and able study of the whole subject."—Prof. B. Davidson, D.D.

NEW TESTAMENT THEOLOGY: or,

Historical Account of the Teaching of Jesus and of Primitive Christianity according to the New Testament Sources. By Prof. W. BEYSEGLIUS, D.D., Authorised Translation. 3 vols., 8vo, Second Edition, 18s. net.

HISTORY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

By PHILIP SCHAFF, D.D., LL.D. 12 vols., ex. 8vo, 26 6s.

THE EARLIEST LIFE of CHRIST ever

compiled from the Four Gospels, being the Dittamaron of Tatian. Literally Translated, &c., by J. HAMLYN HILL, D.D. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE TEACHING of JESUS. By Prof. H. H.

WENDT, D.D. 3 vols., 8vo, 21s.

GODET'S COMMENTARIES—Luke, 2 vols.,

21s. 6d., 3 vols., 31s. 6d. Romans, 2 vols., 21s. 1st Corinthians, 2 vols., 21s.

SOURCES of NEW TESTAMENT GREEK:

or, The Influence of the I.X.X. on the Vocabulary of the New Testament. By H. A. A. KENNEDY, M.A., D.Sc. Post 8vo, 6s.

MORALITY and RELIGION. By James

KIDD, D.D., Glasgow. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

FOREIGN THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY,

consisting of 180 vols. Translations of the best German and French Theological Works. Selection of 8 vols., for £2 2s.

(See Catalogue)

THE EXPOSITORY TIMES. Edited by

Rev. J. HASTINGS, D.D. Records the Results of the best studies of the Bible in the present day in an interesting and practically useful form. Monthly, 6d.

THE CRITICAL REVIEW of THEO-

LOGICAL and PHILOSOPHICAL LITERATURE. Edited by Prof. S. D. F. SALMOND, D.D. Quarterly, 1s. 6d. The Reviews are signed and are contributed by scholars of recognised ability.

New Catalogue free on application.

38, George Street, Edinburgh;

London: Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co. (Ltd.).

WALTER SCOTT'S NEW BOOKS.

THE CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.

FOUR IMPORTANT NEW VOLUMES.

Just issued, and First Large Edition nearly exhausted.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d., with Diagrams.

SLEEP: its Physiology, Pathology, Hygiene, and Psychology. By Dr. MARIE DE MANAUBINE (St. Petersburg).

The LANCET says: "Written in a truly scientific spirit."

The DAILY CHRONICLE says: "A most interesting volume it is, full of facts and well matured reflections upon normal sleep, somnambulism, hypnosis, hypnagogy, and dreams. . . People who suffer from sleeplessness may be recommended to peruse the chapter treating of the hygiene of sleep. It is full of most useful hints concerning the cure of insomnia, and sufferers therefrom would do well to try the simple expedients there suggested before resorting to the use of any of the so-called hypnotics."

The SPECTATOR says: "A most interesting study of the phenomena of sleep."

The DAILY MAIL says: "Apart from its strictly scientific research, the book deals with matters so intimate to the mass of mankind as the question of the amount of sleep necessary for individuals of various ages, physiological conditions, and temperaments; the vital subjects of insomnia, of sleep for children, and a hundred other matters which the average man or woman is confronted with every day."

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

HALLUCINATIONS and ILLU-

SIONS: a Study of the Fallacies of Perception. By EDMUND PARISH.

"This remarkable little volume."—Daily News.

Crown 8vo cloth, price 6s.

THE PSYCHOLOGY of the EMO-

TIONS. By Prof. T. H. RIBOT.

"Prof. Ribot's treatment is careful, modern, and adequate." Academy.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. 124 Illustrations.

THE NEW PSYCHOLOGY. By E.

W. SCRIPTURE, Ph.D. (Leipzig).

"We have at present no work in English which gives in so compact a form so comprehensive a view of the subject."—Liverpool Post.

THE SCOTT LIBRARY.

Crown 8vo, gilt top, cloth elegant, price 1s. 6d.

108th VOLUME NOW READY.

RENAN'S LIFE of JESUS. Translated, with an Introduction, by WILLIAM G. HUTCHISON.

This is an entirely new translation of Renan's work, by the translator of "The Poetry of the Celtic Races, and other Studies by Ernest Renan."

RECENTLY ISSUED.

101st VOLUME.

CRITICISMS, REFLECTIONS, and

MAXIMS of GOETHE. Translated, with an Introduction and Biographical Note, by W. B. RONNFELDT.

Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, gilt top, price 1s. 6d.

[Now ready]

"Any competent critic or editor, therefore, who aims at imparting to us a better understanding of one of the greatest of moderns is a genuine benefactor; and this is what Mr. Ronnfeldt has accomplished, not without success, in the present little volume."—Chronicle.

102nd VOLUME.

ESSAYS of SCHOPENHAUER.

Translated by Mrs. RUDOLF DIRCKS. With an Introduction.

This is a collection of Schopenhauer's most representative Essays, including Authorship and Style—Education—Reading and Books—Women—Thinking for Oneself—Immortality—Religion—Metaphysics of Love—On Physiognomy—On Suicide—On the Emptiness of Existence, &c.

LIFE in NORTHUMBERLAND

during the SIXTEENTH CENTURY. By W. W. TOMLINSON, Author of "Comprehensive Guide to Northumberland," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 4s. net.

"An account of the agriculture, the social condition, the arts and literature, the food, raiment, and domestic furnishings, the outdoor and other games, and generally the character, condition, and modes of life of the inhabitants of Northumberland in the Tudor days, which is both readable as well as valuable."—Scotsman.

THE WORLD'S GREAT NOVELS.

Large crown 8vo, illustrated, price 3s. 6d. per Volume.

IMPORTANT NEW ADDITION.

LES MISÉRABLES. By Victor

HUGO. 1,384 pages, 12 Full-Page Illustrations, including Frontispiece.

London:

WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED, Paternoster Square.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER'S LIST.

DR. WHYTE'S NEW BOOK.

Post 8vo, art canvas, price 2s.

SANTA TERESA: an Appreciation.

With some Passages of the Saint's Writings, Selected, Adapted, and Arranged by ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D.

WORKS BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

BIBLE CHARACTERS—ADAM TO ACHAB	3 6
BUNYAN CHARACTERS—First Series	2 6
BUNYAN CHARACTERS—Second Series	2 6
BUNYAN CHARACTERS—Third Series	2 6
SAMUEL RUTHERFORD AND HIS CORRESPONDENTS	2 6
JACOB BEHMEN	2 6
LANCELOT ANDREWES AND HIS PRIVATE DEVOTIONS	3 6

SHAKESPEARE, PURITAN and RECUSANT.

By Rev. T. CARTER. With a Prefatory Note by Rev. Principal J. OSWALD DYKES, D.D.

Crown 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

Sir HENRY IRVING—"A most interesting book, which ought to have many readers."

SAM TIMMINS, F.S.A.—"Singularly clear and readable. Your almost unknown facts and details will be very valuable to scores of people."

The SPECTATOR—"Mr. Carter has by a clear-headed historical investigation added definitely to our knowledge about Shakespeare himself."

MRS. L. T. MEADE'S NEW STORY.

A HANDFUL OF SILVER. By L. T. MEADE.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, Illustrated, 3s. 6d.

The DUNDEE ADVERTISER says: "One of the strongest stories Mrs. L. T. Meade has written."

NEW VOLS. of the FAMOUS SCOTS SERIES.

Price 1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. each.

KIRKCALDY of GRANGE. By LOUIS A. BARBÉ.

The SCOTSMAN says: "Mr. Barbé's sketch sticks close to the facts of his life, and these are sought out from the best sources and are arranged with much judgment, and, on the whole, with an impartial mind."

SIR WALTER SCOTT. By Professor GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

THE NEXT VOLUME WILL BE

ROBERT FERGUSSON. By A. B. GROSART.

Complete Lists on Application.

A NOVEL BY A NEW WRITER.

THE PLAGIARIST. By William MYRTLE.

Post 8vo, art canvas, price 2s. 6d.

The EDINBURGH ILLUSTRATED NEWS says: "Mr. Myrtle has written a story which, if we mistake not, will become popular with all classes of readers."

Second and Cheaper Edition, with 16 Illustrations.

MODERN PALESTINE; or, the Need of a New Crusade.

By the Rev. JOHN LAMOND, B.D. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE GIST of JAPAN: the Islands, their People, and Missions.

By Rev. R. B. PEERY, A.M., Ph.D., of the Lutheran Mission, Saga, Japan.

With 8 Full-Page Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s.

The ATHENÆUM says: "Mr. Peery's volume portrays with admirable truth and justice the Japanese people. Mr. Peery's account of Christianity in Japan is by far the most authoritative statement on the subject that we have met with."

CHINESE CHARACTERISTICS. By ARTHUR H. SMITH, D.D.

Popular Edition, Revised, with 16 Full-Page Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s.

The EXAMINER says: "The best book on the Chinese people."

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS and SOCIAL PROGRESS: a Sociological Study of Foreign Missions.

By JAMES S. DENNIS, D.D., Author of "Foreign Missions after a Century." In 2 vols., royal 8vo, with upwards of 100 Full-Page Reproductions of Original Photographs. Vol. I., now ready, price 10s. 6d.

The BRITISH WEEKLY says: "There is probably no volume in which there may be found so full and complete a survey of the work actually accomplished by Christian missions in the amelioration of the social conditions of mankind."

CHARMING GIFT BOOKS.

Annie S. Swan's 3s. 6d. Books.

In new uniform binding, cloth extra.

SHEILA. ST. VEDA S.

MATTLAND of LAURIES. THE GUINOA STAMP.

TON. WHO SHALL SERVE?

THE GATES of EDEN. A LOST IDEAL.

With New Portrait of the Authors. BRIAR and PALM.

Annie S. Swan's 2s. 6d. Books.

In new uniform binding, Illustrated, cloth extra.

A DIVIDED HOUSE. URSULA VIVIAN.

ALDERSYDE. THE AYRES of STUD-LEIGH.

CARLOWE. DORIS CHEYNE.

HAZELL & SONS.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER, London and Edinburgh.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS'.

SECOND EDITION.

RECOLLECTIONS OF AUBREY DE VERE.

1 vol., with Portrait, demy 8vo, 16s.

Graphic—"A book of remarkable and varied interest—worthy of the cultured mind and of the fine temper of its distinguished author." Spectator—"The 'Recollections' are likely to be widely read, for they will interest all readers." Morning Post—"These 'Recollections' will appeal to many sympathies, personal, political, social, literary, and religious. As a Catholic the author enjoyed the intimate friendship of Cardinal Newman, and Cardinal Manning, and these pages throw additional and interesting sidelights on the character and genius on each of these distinguished men."

A MEMOIR OF ANNE J. CLOUGH.

Principal of Newnham College, Cambridge.

By her Niece, BLANCHE CLOUGH.

With 2 Portraits, 8vo, 12s. 6d.

Daily Chronicle—"The writer of these memoirs has fairly earned our gratitude for her record of this good, sincere, and tender woman."

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY AND LETTERS OF THE RIGHT HON. JOHN ARTHUR ROEBUCK, Q.C., M.P.

Edited by ROBERT EADON LEADER.

With 3 Portraits, demy 8vo, 16s.

Leeds Mercury—"A lifelike picture of an impetuous, choleric spoken, but stubbornly honest man."

BENIN, THE CITY OF BLOOD:

An Account of the Benin Expedition.

By R. H. BACON, Commander R.N.

Illustrated by W. H. Overend. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Standard—"The magic, the glamour, the strange melancholy, the deadening influence of giant forest and tangled undergrowth are conveyed in these pages in a manner that is curiously fascinating. Commander Bacon succeeds in recalling the scenes through which he has passed. Higher praise than this we could not give. His book is valuable because it reveals West Africa to the untravelled Englishman, and makes him acquainted with the problems which it is our Imperial destiny to work out in that rich but unhealthy region." Daily Mail—"This personal record of the advance to Ologbo, of the fighting in the bush and at the cross-roads and Agael, of the capture of Benin, and of the horrors of human sacrifice and the practice of Ju-Ju, is as fascinating as it evidently is complete and accurate."

STYLE. By Walter Raleigh, Professor

of English Literature at University College, Liverpool,

Author of "The English Novel," "Robert Louis Stevenson," &c. Crown 8vo, 5s.

Speaker—"In our judgment Mr. Raleigh's volume on 'Style' is an amazingly good and pre-eminently interesting and suggestive book." Pall Mall Gazette—"Professor Raleigh has produced a finished masterpiece where the men before him, masters as they were, gave us brilliant sketches or clever studies. His lucidity of thought, restraint of expression, austerity of judgment, his prudent counsel and wise suggestion, are worthy of all praise. A model treatise on a most difficult and important theme."

THE CHIPPENDALE PERIOD in

ENGLISH FURNITURE. By K. WARREN CLOUSTON.

With 200 Illustrations by the Author. Demy 4to, handsomely bound, 21s. net. (In conjunction with Messrs. Debenham & Freebody.)

Standard—"In Mr. Clouston's handsome quarto, with its 200 illustrations charmingly drawn by the author and admirably reproduced, we have an attractively written history of a remarkable artistic movement and the man who directed it. Mr. Clouston has done his work thoroughly well, and has produced a book which will be of real value not only to the serious student of the history of furniture, but to every reader who wishes to be well informed upon a topic at once so pleasant and so popular."

DEDICATED BY SPECIAL PERMISSION TO HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

OLD ENGLISH GLASSES. An

Account of Glass Drinking Vessels in England from Early Times to the End of the Eighteenth Century.

By ALBERT HARTSHORNE, F.S.A. Illustrated by about 70 Tinted Plates and several Hundred Illustrations in the Text. Super-royal 4to, £3 3s. net.

Daily Chronicle—"Mr. Hartshorne has been fortunate in finding a subject about which literally nothing was known, even by would-be connoisseurs, and he has risen to the height of his opportunity in a wonderful way. A fortnight ago the collector of old English glasses was working in darkness. To-day such a collector has but to become the possessor of this sumptuous quarto and the whole sequence of glass-making not only in England, but on the Continent, from primitive times to the end of the last century, is before him. It is a monograph which must remain the one authority on English glasses."

BALLADS of the FLEET. By

RENNELL BODD, C.B., C.M.G. With Photogravure Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

EDWARD ARNOLD, London and New York.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS' LIST.

MR. R. D. BLACKMORE'S NEW NOVEL.

Next week will be published,

DARIEL: a Romance of Surrey.

By R. D. BLACKMORE, Author of "Lorna Doone," "The Maid of Sker." Crown 8vo, 6s.

BEATRICE HARRADEN'S CHRISTMAS VOLUME.

Shortly will be published,

UNTOLD TALES of the PAST. By

BEATRICE HARRADEN. With 40 Illustrations by H. R. Millar. Square 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED.

THE EXPANSION of the CHRISTIAN

LIFE. The Duff Lecture for 1897. By Rev. J. MARSHALL LANG, D.D. Crown 8vo, 5s.

ELEMENTS of the SCIENCE of RE-

LIGION. Part I.—MORPHOLOGICAL. Being the Gifford Lectures delivered before the University of Edinburgh in 1896. By C. P. TIELE, Theol. D., Litt. D. (Bonon), Hon. M.R.A.S., &c., Professor of the Science of Religion in the University of Leiden. In 2 vols. Vol. I., post 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

NOW READY.

WILD TRAITS in TAME ANIMALS:

Being some Familiar Studies in Evolution. By LOUIS ROBINSON, M.D. With Illustrations by Stephen T. Dadd. Small demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

NEXT WEEK WILL BE PUBLISHED.

STUDIES in PHILOSOPHICAL

CRITICISM and CONSTRUCTION. By SYDNEY HERBERT MELLONE, M.A. Lond., D.Sc. Edin. Post 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

PEACE WITH HONOUR. By Sydney

C. GRIER, Author of "His Excellency's English Governess," "An Uncrowned King," "In Furthest Ind," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

MR. STEEVENS'S NEW BOOK.

WITH the CONQUERING TURK.

Confessions of a Bashî-Bazouk. By G. W. STEEVENS, Author of "The Land of the Dollar," &c. With 4 Maps. Small demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION, REVISED.

THE HISTORY of the FOREIGN

POLICY of GREAT BRITAIN. By MONTAGU BURROWS, Chichele Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford; Captain R.N.; F.S.A., &c.; "Officier de l'Instruction Publique," France. Second Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, 6s.

GEORGE ELIOT'S NOVELS.

POPULAR EDITION. Reissue in Monthly Volumes.

NOW READY.

ADAM BEDE. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

CHEAP REISSUE IN SHILLING VOLUMES.

ANCIENT CLASSICS FOR ENGLISH READERS.

Edited by Rev. W. LUCAS COLLINS.

The following volumes are now ready:—

HOMER: THE ILLIAD—HOMER: THE ODYSSEY—HERODOTUS—CÆSAR—VIRGIL—HORACE—ÆSCHYLUS—XENOPHON—CICERO—SOPHOCLES—PLINY—EURIPIDES—JUVENAL—ARISTOPHANES—HESIOD—THEOGNIS—PLAUTUS and TERENOE—TACITUS—LUCIAN.

NOW READY, THE POPULAR EDITION OF BURTON'S SCOTLAND.

The HISTORY of SCOTLAND. From

Agricola's Invasion to the Extinction of the last Jacobite Insurrection. By JOHN HILL BURTON, D.C.L., Historiographer-Royal for Scotland. New Issue in 8 vols. Price 3s. 6d. each.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

OTHER PEOPLE'S LIVES.

By ROSA NOUCHETTE CARRY.
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth. [In a few days.]

EVERY-DAY LIFE IN TURKEY.

By Mrs. W. M. RAMSAY.
Crown 8vo, 5s., cloth. [In a few days.]

MARY, QUEEN OF SCOTS.

From her Birth to her Flight into England.
Including Documents hitherto unpublished.
By D. HAY FLEMING.
Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d., cloth.

THRO' LATTICE WINDOWS.

By W. J. DAWSON.
Crown 8vo, 6s., art linen.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON VERSES.

Collected from the "BRITISH WEEKLY"
by W. ROBERTSON NICOLL.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth.
The Verses in this Work are reprinted from the "BRITISH WEEKLY" at the request of many readers. They are partly original and partly selected.

TO THE ANGEL'S CHAIR.

A Story of Ideals in a Welsh Village.
By Rev. JOHN THOMAS, M.A., Liverpool.
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

THE LIFE OF F. R. WYNNE, D.D.,

Bishop of Killaloe
With a Collection of Sermons and Addresses. With Portrait.
Crown 8vo, 5s., cloth.

THE IAN MACLAREN YEAR-BOOK.

DAILY READINGS from the WORKS of IAN MACLAREN.
Royal 32mo, in a neat small volume, 3s. 6d., cloth.
[In a few days.]

THE DOCTOR'S DILEMMA.

By HESBA STRETTON.
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

IN STRANGE QUARTERS:

A Story of Constantinople.
By EDWIN HODDER,
Author of "The Junior Clerk," &c.
With 8 Full-Page Illustrations by J. FINEMORE.
Crown 8vo, 5s., cloth.

BY FAR EUPHRATES.

A NEW STORY by the AUTHOR of "THE SPANISH BROTHERS."
Crown 8vo, 5s., cloth. [In a few days.]

THE LOST GOLD OF THE MONTEZUMAS:

A Story of the Alamo.
By W. O. STODDARD,
Author of "The Old Frontier," &c.
Large crown 8vo, 5s., cloth.

London: HODDER & STOUGHTON,
27, Paternoster Row, E.C.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S LIST.

CHEAPER EDITION OF
MRS. BROWNING'S WORKS.
READY THIS DAY, complete in 1 volume, with Portrait and Facsimile of a "Sonnet from the Portuguese," large crown 8vo, bound in cloth, gilt top, 7s. 6d.

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING

* This Edition is uniform with the Two-Volume Edition of Robert Browning's Complete Works.

A RECORD OF BRAVE ACTIONS.
On NOVEMBER 20, with 16 Portraits and 11 Plans, crown 8vo, 6s.

DEEDS THAT WON THE EMPIRE.

By the Rev. W. H. FITCHETT ("Vedette").
These Tales are written not to glorify war, but to nourish patriotism. Each sketch is complete in itself; and though no formal quotation of authorities is given, yet all the available literature on each event described has been laid under contribution. The sketches will be found to be historically accurate.

In 2 vols., with Portraits, crown 8vo, 15s. net.

THE LETTERS OF ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING

Edited, with Biographical Additions, by FREDERIC G. KENYON.

From the ATHENÆUM.—"It is not too much to say that these volumes are the first adequate contribution which has been made to a real knowledge of Mrs. Browning. The inestimable value of the collection is that it contains not merely interesting critical writing, but the intimate expression of a personality."

MRS. BROWNING'S LETTERS.

2 vols., with Portraits, crown 8vo, 15s. net.

From the ACADEMY.—"These volumes remain for us at present the only substitute for a regular biography of Elizabeth Barrett Browning. To the historian of English poetry they will be invaluable; and to us, to whom the memory of the Brownings is still fresh."

MRS. BROWNING'S LETTERS.

2 vols., with Portraits, crown 8vo, 15s. net.

From the TIMES.—"The series of letters, it will easily be understood, gives a very complete picture of Mrs. Browning's life, so far as it can in any sense be said to have belonged to her friends and the world. The editor, whose name is a guarantee that he is the right man for the work, has supplemented her letters with a slender thread of narrative, sufficient to make of these two volumes a thoroughly adequate biography. The selection of the letters and the interposed narrative are both done with excellent taste."

With 12 Full-Page Illustrations by ARTHUR RACKHAM.
Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE GREY LADY. By Henry Seton MERRIMAN, Author of "The Sowers," "With Edged Tools," "In Kedar's Tents," &c.

Crown 8vo, bound in limp cloth, 2s. 6d.

MARCELLA. By Mrs. Humphry Ward Cheap Popular Edition.

JUST PUBLISHED, with Map, large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.
THE WAR OF GREEK INDEPENDENCE, 1821-1833. By W. ALISON PHILLIPS, M.A., late Scholar of Merton College, Senior Scholar of St. John's College, Oxford.

FRIENDSHIP'S GARLAND. By MATTHEW ARNOLD. Second Edition. Small crown 8vo, bound in white cloth, 4s. 6d.

READY THIS DAY, large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.
TWELVE YEARS in a MONASTERY. By JOSEPH MCCABE, late Father Anthony, O.S.F.

On NOVEMBER 26, crown 8vo, 6s.

DEBORAH of TOD'S. By Mrs. HENRY DE LA PASTURE, Author of "A Toy Tragedy," "The Little Squire," &c.

On NOVEMBER 29, crown 8vo, 6s.

THE MILLS of GOD. By Francis H. HARDY.

LONDON: SMITH, ELDER & CO.,
15, WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

BY THE RIGHT HON. JAMES BRYCE, M.P.
Demy 8vo, 14s. net.

IMPRESSIONS OF SOUTH AFRICA.

By JAMES BRYCE,
Author of "The Holy Roman Empire," &c.
With 3 Maps.

NEW BOOK BY RUDYARD KIPLING.

"CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS."

A STORY OF THE GRAND BANKS.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

Illustrated by I. W. TABER.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"It teems with thrilling anecdotes of adventurous prowess, and sparkles with humorous interchanges of homely repartee."
SPECTATOR.—"Never before has Mr. Kipling made more living characters, and never before has he described so well the vast waste spaces of the sea."
GRAPHIC.—"There should not be a more popular book for boys this season."
DAILY NEWS.—"As we follow the narrative we are in the very middle of the scenes he describes."

8vo, 21s. net.

CAMBRIDGE DESCRIBED and ILLUSTRATED.

Being a Short History of the Town and University.

By THOMAS DINHAM ATKINSON.

With an Introduction by JOHN WILLIS CLARK, M.A., F.S.A., Registrar of the University, late Fellow of Trinity College.

With 29 Steel Plates, numerous Illustrations and Maps.
DAILY CHRONICLE.—"He has conferred a favour upon all lovers of literature and its early seats by going at much length and with great care into the questions not only of the municipality, but of the university and the colleges. A good thing well done."

NEW NOVEL BY F. MARION CRAWFORD. CORLEONE: a Tale of Sicily.

In 2 vols., globe 8vo, 12s.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

ADAM JOHNSTONE'S SON.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD, Author of "Sant' Ilario," "Don Ursino."

SPEAKER.—"A book to be enjoyed by everybody."

Crown 8vo, 6s.

FOR PRINCE and PEOPLE: a Tale of Old Genoa.

By E. K. SANDERS.

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS BY JOSEPH PENNELL AND HUGH THOMPSON.

Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

HIGHWAYS and BYWAYS in DEVON and CORNWALL.

By ARTHUR H. NORWAY. With Illustrations by JOSEPH PENNELL and HUGH THOMPSON.

A PORTFOLIO of TWENTY LITHOGRAPHS of HIGHWAYS and BYWAYS in DEVON and CORNWALL.

By JOSEPH PENNELL. Price 31s. 6d. net.

* One Hundred Copies only printed.

With 2 Portraits, 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

MEMORIALS, JOURNAL, and BOTANICAL CORRESPONDENCE OF CHARLES CARDALE BABINGTON, M.A., F.R.S., F.L.S., F.S.A., F.G.S., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, and Professor of Botany in the University.

BY THE LATE DEAN VAUGHAN.

UNIVERSITY and OTHER SERMONS.

By C. J. VAUGHAN, D.D., late Dean of Llandaff. With a Preface, by an OLD FRIEND and PUPIL. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE HULSEAN LECTURES FOR 1896-7.

Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE MYSTERIES PAGAN and CHRISTIAN.

Being the Hulsean Lectures for 1896-7. By S. CHEETHAM, D.D., F.S.A., Archdeacon and Canon of Rochester, &c.

FOREIGN STATESMEN SERIES.—New Volume.

Edited by Prof. BURY, Trinity College, Dublin.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

CHARLES the GREAT.

By THOMAS HODGKIN, D.C.L.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, LONDON.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS	PAGE
The End of Pusey's Life ... ..	417
Renan ... ..	418
Mr. Henley's Anthology ... ..	419
Open-air Journalism ... ..	421
New Verse ... ..	421
Lost Empires ... ..	423
White Man's Africa ... ..	423
BRIEF MENTION ... ..	423
NOTES AND NEWS ... ..	425
EXCURSIONS IN CRITICISM: VI., CRASHAW ... ..	427
HUBERT CRACKANTHORPE ... ..	428
WHAT THE PEOPLE READ: V., AN OMNIBUS DRIVER ... ..	429
PRINTERS' ERRORS ... ..	429
THE BOOK MARKET ... ..	430
AN ACADEMY OF LETTERS ... ..	431
THE WEEK ... ..	433
NEW BOOKS RECEIVED ... ..	433
FICION SUPPLEMENT ... ..	108-112

REVIEWS.

THE END OF PUSEY'S LIFE.

Life of Edward Bouverie Pusey, D.D., &c.
By H. P. Liddon, D.D. Vol. IV. Edited by the Rev. J. O. Johnston and the Rev.
Canon Newbolt. (Longmans.)

THE long-delayed conclusion to the late Canon Liddon's Life of Pusey is open to one objection that could not fairly be made against the earlier parts. So long as Liddon—the Laynez to Pusey's Loyola—was the biographer, it was natural that we should be given a picture in which the principal figure should appear as always large-minded, always clear-sighted, and always prudent. Such a distorted likeness of the man as his contemporaries saw him was, we repeat, both natural and pious in one of the small band who, when they were bearded men, still spoke of each other as “dearest Newman,” “dearest Keble,” “dearest Pusey,” and, no doubt, “dearest Liddon.” But now that Liddon is dead, and his pen has passed into the hands of those young enough to be Pusey's grandsons, we certainly looked for a more judicial tone and a more searching criticism. Yet we were disappointed. A careful reading of the book has failed to disclose a single instance where Mr. Johnston and his fellow editors have found it necessary to admit that Pusey was in the wrong, or that his adversaries could have been animated by any but (to say the least) insufficient motives.

This is the more to be regretted as, with this volume, we come upon events where the most fervent partisan can hardly deny that Pusey's judgment was singularly at fault. In 1855 the late Dr. Jowett was appointed Regius Professor of Greek, an office to which the magnificent stipend of £38 a year was then attached, and three years later a motion came before the Hebdomadal Council to raise the endowment by £300 a year. But Jowett, in the very year of his appointment, had published an essay on the Doctrine of the Atonement of which Pusey disapproved, and he therefore thought, to use his own words, that “we should be declaring ourselves indifferent to Prof. Jowett's disbelief if we make the grant.”

He accordingly, by Keble's advice, opposed it, not directly, but on the ground that the Crown had already quite enough influence in the University, and that if a professor's stipend were to be increased the University should have some check on his appointment; and the proposal for the increase was twice rejected. Then came a change in the composition of the Council, and Pusey approached Mr. Gladstone to get Lord Palmerston's assent to a scheme whereby the endowments of both the Regius Professorships of Greek and Civil Law should be increased and appointments made to them on the recommendation of a Board comprising representatives of the University. The assent came in 1861, but in the meantime party passions had been aroused, and the unfortunate Essays and Reviews had been published. Some of Pusey's “nearest friends,” say his biographers, “were determined, even before the publication of Essays and Reviews, not in any way to endow the chair of Greek so long as it was held by Jowett.” A statute increasing the stipends of the Professor of Greek and six other professors was therefore opposed by Pusey and rejected by Congregation by a very narrow majority. Then Pusey and two other professors prosecuted Jowett for heresy in the Vice-Chancellor's Court with the intention of depriving him of his chair; but the prosecution failed on the defendant challenging the jurisdiction of the court over a professor who had been appointed by the Crown alone. At last Pusey saw that the question of stipend had become “hopelessly a bad battle-ground,” and wrote to Keble that he hardly thought it “tact” to resist. He afterwards himself proposed the increase of the endowment in Congregation in a speech in which he said: “We are at the beginning of a deepening and widening struggle . . . for the life and death of the Church of England as an instrument of God for the salvation of souls”—and was defeated by Archdeacon Denison after a heavy division. It was not until after six years of most tangled controversy that the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church cut the knot by granting Jowett £500 a year out of their own funds. This was not the only instance in which Pusey found that the devil of party spirit was easier to raise than to lay.

We pass over the Oxford Declaration as to the Inspiration of Scripture and Eternal Punishment, stigmatised, we believe unjustly, by Frederick Denison Maurice as a threat to the clergy that they would lose their cures as Jowett had very nearly lost his chair if they did not assert what Pusey and his friends asserted, and we come to the great effort of Pusey's life, the attempt to reunite the Roman and Anglican Churches. Pusey's attention seems first to have been drawn to this by a pamphlet of Manning's on the Roman view of the English Church, to which Pusey, after his manner, instantly set about preparing a reply. In the course of study for this purpose he thought that he saw his way to accepting most of the decrees of the Council of Trent, with an exception that he thus explains to Newman:

“Now if, as I believe, the system in regard to the Blessed Virgin is the chief hindrance to reunion, and if a declaration by authority that something which does not necessarily involve this (as the Council of Trent with Miller's explanation) is alone of faith, would remove that chief hindrance to reunion, then an intelligible ground is given for the request—” the request, of course, being that the Roman Church would issue some authoritative statement on the subject. With this view he published his first “Eirenicon,” had his first interview with Newman since the latter's conversion, wrote a letter to Mr. Gladstone—whose reply, not here published, must be curious reading—and took a journey to France to interest the French bishops in the matter. Here he was so kindly received that he succeeded in persuading himself that poor Archbishop Darboy (afterwards murdered by the Communists) “acknowledged our succession and the grace of our Sacraments,” and returned home full of the new scheme, although hoping, apparently, that “what is the practical system of the Roman Church everywhere” would not “become the practical system here.” Newman counselled delay, but Pusey was stirred up by the news of an Ecumenical Council to be held in Rome the following year (it was then 1865), and would not wait. Early in 1866 another visit to France followed, and then came correspondence with the French bishops, with Newman, the Old Catholics, and with Liddon, and the drawing up of documents defining Pusey's position on various points of faith. Newman hinted to him more than once that while Rome would welcome him on his making submission, she would hold no parley with an ambassador trying to make terms for a contracting party by which he was not properly accredited. A quite unauthorised invitation from a Jesuit named De Buck to Bishop Forbes of Brechin to attend the Ecumenical Council, “with Dr. Pusey as his theologian,” raised high his hopes, and he read into the Jesuit's offers the following terms:

“Actual married clergy will be allowed to officiate, retaining their wives; but there will be no relaxation as to celibacy: those who now have the Cup will be allowed it still, but it would be only to those individuals.”

At length came the disillusionment. De Buck was summoned to Rome and ordered by the Inquisition to put an end to his correspondence with “heterodox Anglicans,” and in 1870 the Ultramontane propositions, which for some time had been seen to be inevitable, were passed by the Council en bloc. In these Pusey himself recognised the deathblow to the fabric which he had so perseveringly reared.

We have dealt thus at length with this episode in Pusey's life, not merely from its intrinsic importance, but because it seems to give us best the measure of the man. Himself transparently sincere, he could never understand that men of the world may not always mean by their words what their unworldly hearers think them to mean, or that they are not always as whole-hearted in the pursuit of their objects as Pusey was himself. Hence he continued with blundering earnestness to pester French bishops and Belgian Jesuits with terms of reunion, and to pour forth Eirenicon after Eirenicon like olive-branches (as Newman told him) "from a catapult," without perceiving that his correspondents were anxious not to unite the two Churches, but to drag him into their own. This, too, explains the impatience with which he regarded any attempt at impartiality or hesitation as a facing both ways, and often led him into harsh judgments. "I do not want you to balance in public," he writes to Mr. Gladstone when the latter was halting between Oxford and South-west Lancashire; and "our Presbyterianising Archbishop" is the language which he bestows on Dr. Tait for dealing healingly with the subject of Auricular Confession. Yet he was easy to lead by those who knew how to take him the right way, and he declared that in both his great controversies he had met with more support from Bishop Wilberforce than from any other prelate on the bench. As for Mr. Gladstone, he quarrelled with him on his appointment of Dr. Temple to the See of Exeter, and, characteristically enough, made it up with him when he found him defending the Athanasian Creed. A man of narrow mind, perhaps, but of a strong and simple nature, we should say, and one whom, when once understood, it was impossible not to respect and like.

With the exception mentioned above, the editors seem to have done their work with tact and discretion. It is significant that throughout the four volumes there is none but the briefest reference to Pusey's duties as Professor of Hebrew. Archbishop Laurence, one of his predecessors in this chair, made himself famous by his translation of the Book of Enoch from the Ethiopic. Dr. Nicoll, whom Pusey followed, reduced to order the Augean mass of Oriental MSS. in the Bodleian, and was so distinguished a Semitic scholar that Pusey thought his loss would be more felt on the Continent than in England. But Pusey, though he wrote to the Duke of Wellington on his appointment that he would endeavour to show his gratitude by "a sincere and earnest devotion to the duties of the office," seems never to have taken his professorship seriously, and regretted to one of his correspondents that the few years spent by him in completing Dr. Nicoll's catalogue of MSS. had been lost to theology. Surely in this he forgot that he owed something to Cæsar as well as to God.

RENAN.

Renan. By Mme. Darmesteter. (Methuen & Co.)

MME. DARMESTER has already proved in her admirable Froissart that her art as a biographer is a rare and distinguished art. In her short volume on Renan she offers us, with delicacy and reticence, a full presentment of a genius so "undulatory and diverse" as his. As a rule the absent quality of the prose of most women writers is charm. They may write brilliantly, they may write profoundly, tenderly, gracefully, cleverly, eloquently. The vast structure of English literature shows us in feminine work triumphs in each of these styles. But the elusive, penetrative flavour that wins us with its enchantment, which we define as "charm," is rarely to be found here. Perhaps it is because women are usually more concerned with what they have to say than with the manner in which they shall say it; are too satisfied with the hasty and imperfect telling; too restive and precipitate; too remorselessly the idle victims of their own cleverness and fluency to heed the mellowing influence of slow production. For charm in prose is something infinitely more than a matter of temperament, however large a part this may play in its development. Hence such a book as Mme. Darmesteter's comes with a double claim upon our gratitude. It is interpenetrated with the dignity and charm, the mild, bright, classical grace of form and treatment that Renan himself so loved; and it fulfils to the uttermost the delicate and difficult achievement it sets out to accomplish. We have here the whole Renan, a glint of each facet of his variable genius, set in a frame admirably suited to so fascinating a subject; and if the setter's hand be that of a friend, the reader gains by a suggestive and subtle sympathy.

Take the pages with which this distinguished work opens, and you will meet the truth about the poetic and unsatisfactory Celt and his rain-deluged, misted corners of the earth. How vividly, if quietly, Mme. Darmesteter interprets both land and race!—

"Remember not only the gaunt and solitary aspect of the place—Trégurer, where Renan was born—but the kind of persons who dwell in these small grey cities, at once so damp and so scantily foliaged under the incessant droppings of the uncertain heaven. There is a great indifference to worldly things. And the dreamer—we may count him as 10 per cent. of the population—be he poet, saint, beggar, or merely drunkard—is capable of a pure detachment from material interests which no Buddhist sage could surpass. There is a vibrating 'other worldiness' in the air; the gift of prayer is constant, religious eloquence the brightest privilege, and religious fervour a commonplace. Yet, all round, in the high places and the country holy wells, Mab and Merlin, the fairies and the witches, keep their devotees. And over all the grey, veiled, melancholy distinction, which first strikes us as the note of such a place, there is the special poetic Celtic quality, the almost immaterial beauty which has so lingering a charm."

And again, of the people among whom Renan was born:

"This Breton race, apparently so severe, is one of the most pleasure-loving, and one of the most garrulous in France: a very storehouse of myth and legend, of song and story, of jest and gibe. These melancholy men and maids, visible emblems of renunciation, are capable of mirth and wit and passion. Fond of their glass, quick to repartee, they glory in the gift of the gab, but only when the door is shut on strangers. The extraordinary strength of idealism, the infinite delicacy of sentiment, which form the inmost quintessence of the Celt, impose on him an image of seamliness, a pure decorum, to which he incessantly conforms the old Adam rebellious in his heart. Reserve and passion, prudence and poetry, are equally inherent in him. The very sinner who transgressed most flagrantly at last week's wake or 'Pardon' will show to-day in every act and every word a serene tranquillity, a justness of thought and phrase which is no more hypocritical than was the passionate fantasy of his falling away."

Mme. Darmesteter concludes this delightful introduction by a paragraph which we must perforce quote:

"Seven hundred years ago the Celtic poets invented a new way of loving. They discovered a sentiment more vague, more tender, than any the Latins or the Germans knew, penetrating to the very source of tears, and at once an infinite aspiration, a mystery, an enigma, a caress. They discovered 'l'amour courtois.' Yesterday their descendant, Ernest Renan, would fain have invented a new way of believing. . . . The 'amour fine' of Launcelot has passed from our books into our hearts; we feel with a finer shade to-day because those Celtic harpers lived and sang. I dare not say that Renan has done as much for Faith—that he has transported it far from the perishable world of creeds and dogmas into the undying domains of a pure feeling. But, at least, the attempt was worthy of a Celt and an idealist."

In this biography one hardly knows what to praise most: the large and easy treatment, the delicate reserve, or the subtle distinction of its style. Renan in English, clothed in all his French grace and charms: this is no ordinary literary achievement. And add to this purely literary triumph the more valuable qualities of veracity, of faithful presentment, of adequate analysis on a broad and sympathetic basis, and you have a work whose solid worth is at least as great as the measured and musical beauty of its form. What could be more complete, outside the exquisite portrait of Ma Sœur Henriette, than Mme. Darmesteter's English picture of the austere and devoted Henriette?—

"A sort of innocent dignity was here—a dove-like dignity—made of mildness and quiet and reserve. Nothing of the poetic charm of her birthplace was lost upon the pensive child. The shadow of the convent walls, the stillness, broken at intervals by the clash of church bells, the distant moan of the sea, the half-understood Latin sentences, which the good sisters taught her in the psalter, all were things to be pondered in her heart—subtle influences to mould her tender nature. Her education, if limited, was exquisite."

As one reads on of this rare and beautiful nature, the brother's anguish, still poignant twenty years after her death, is expressed for us in no exaggerated terms in the quotation his biographer and friend gives:

"Ah, see her eyes open! Her long white hand moves out of the coffin. Her face is pale as of old, and her eyes swim in tears. Come, kiss me! Dear, I have so much to tell thee! How many years have passed since thy mortal fever. How weary thou must be with the long journey from thy grave. God knows that in all my joys I have never ceased to long for thy presence; not one happy moment but I would have shared it with thee! Ah, white shadow, open thine eyes, though it be for a quarter of an hour; only one quarter of an hour in which to weep with thee, and expiate my faults towards thee, or suffer thy pious reproaches. Oh, pierced heart, how hast thou made me suffer! In so many hours, bitter and sweet, give me at least a glance."

The skill with which the central figure is handled is remarkable. Never was subject more slippery, personality more elusive, in spite of the clear, essential virtues that marked this great modern heretic in the eyes of amazed Christendom. His life, as well as his own lips, designed his epitaph: Veritatem Dilexi; and somehow, greatly as we may admire the directness, the disinterestedness of that life, its laboriousness and purity, its high endeavour and stupendous achievement, there remains for us, inexplicably, a point of interrogation in the gentle and gracious irony of its optimism; a fatal, underlying sense of the fragility of its strength, a doubt of its tolerant sincerity. Is it in the nature of creature so limited as man to be so broad and so charming, so erudite and so indulgent, and still pursue truth as his only end? Truth seems to us, justly or not, composed of harsher and more uncompromising elements. Its biographer is, like himself, so delicately persuasive, that we would fain stifle this question, and not even ask ourselves if the influence and value of work even so luminous as his will last. The secret of his charm Mme. Darmesteter abundantly and conclusively reveals. He possessed almost every virtue man can consistently lay claim to, and death itself found him, honoured and flattered and admired, with words on his dying lips as sage and lofty as any his master, Marcus Aurelius, could have uttered. But still the doubt remains. As a charmer, as the most exquisite writer of French prose, as a man of delicate but commanding and varied genius, he will, of course, endure as long as the civilised world is susceptible to the beauty of a thing so smooth and musical and enchanting as perfect French prose. But as a thinker? a searcher of light? a moral influence and support? This seems less certain. There is too much grace, too much irony, too pervasive and persuasive a charm not to inspire distrust. Even his biographer cannot hide blemishes that partake too pre-eminently of literary qualities not to mar work of a more exalted kind. He remains undoubtedly, as she claims for him, "the greatest man of genius our generation has known." But the weight of his genius is diminished by the dainty spirit of mockery he so consistently reveals. He writes beautifully on all subjects; but no mood of his can ever stifle the reader's underlying question, even when thoroughly subjugated by him: Is he serious or not? Is he laughing in his sleeve? Am I the subject of an exquisite joke? One may be no less alive to the penetrating beauty of his pages, partake not the less in the captivating delight of such a supreme manifestation of the art of beguilement as his, and consciously decline to accept the durability of his influence. One asks oneself if beneath Mme. Darmesteter's very loyal admiration—an admiration as deserved by the man, the thinker, and the writer, as it is dignified and rare in expression—a sounder conviction lies. There is a tinge of the master's optimistic indulgence in her concluding pages:

"The construction of the universe allows for infinite waste. Other germs will bear; all will not be blasted. Evil is a sort of moral carbonic acid gas, mortal when isolated, and a real danger to our existence; and yet, when combined with other forces, not only innocuous, but even necessary to our vital powers in the present state of their development. The important thing in life is not our misery, our despair, however crushing, but the one good moment which outweighs it all. Man is born to suffer, but he is born to hope."

But one feels in her case a sincerity one is less convinced of in the master's. Indeed, she touches on this inherent moral defect—only permissible in the merely profane writer—in her criticism of his history of David and Solomon, where she condemningly notes his excessive irony and his misplaced "actualities," which give a grotesque air of flippancy to work written with a profound import. And yet, difficult as we may find it to believe that Renan is quite sincere, even when he addresses us in the noblest language, when his whole being reveals itself to us saturated with the moral intoxication of Christian virtue and the beauty of faith, an intoxication consistently fed by the mild austerity of a blameless and beautiful life, we remain willingly captive to his irresistible grace, to the bland and exquisite compulsion of his power. Such a biography as Mme. Darmesteter's we accept as a merited honour to his great name, and a gratifying appearance in days not noted for the frequency of such polished and careful work.

L. JOHNSON

MR. HENLEY'S ANTHOLOGY.

English Lyrics. By W. E. Henley. (Methuen & Co.)

IN this book Mr. Henley has done what every other lover of poetry would fain do: he has gathered his favourite lyrical poems together. Most of us are able only to copy them, or possibly merely their titles, in MS. Mr. Henley, being a critical power, has been asked to print his choice, and has complied. Naturally no other person in the world can be expected to approve every selection in these three hundred and sixty-nine pages. Every reader will be able to suggest omissions, but there are few, we fancy, who, taking it as it stands, will not have plentiful praise for Mr. Henley's volume. That, at any rate, is our own position: we are glad to have the book on a shelf contiguous to the armchair by the fire. We have several remarks to make concerning it; we take exception to some inclusions, to its general scheme of arrangement, and also to its form; yet we are glad, very glad, to have the book on a shelf contiguous to the armchair by the fire. That is our dominant feeling.

Primarily, let us thank Mr. Henley for his tremendous gift of lyrical passages from the Old Testament. He has arranged each extract anew in rhythmical lines, with here and there an excision for concentration's sake, and they appear in this book so unexpectedly as almost to constitute a fresh body of poetry. Their unexpectedness is, indeed, well nigh too startling; for the Biblical section comes between a batch of old anonymous Scotch love-poems and Gascoyne's "Lover's Lullaby," and the contrast between these northern singers warbling their little personal affairs and the mighty Hebrew symbolists is strangely striking. Mr. Henley has placed the section where it is, at the risk of incongruity, in order to keep his chronological sequence intact, and we are too glad to have his treatment of the passages to complain. None the less, the effect is certainly odd, almost disconcerting. The section, without doing any serious violence to the chronological scheme of the book, might have come first. As a specimen of Mr. Henley's arrangement let us quote the hundred and thirty-seventh Psalm, as he prints it:

"By the rivers of Babylon,
There we sat down, yea, we wept,
When we remembered Zion.
We hanged our harps
Upon the willows in the midst thereof.
For there they that carried us away captive required of us a song;
And they that wasted us required of us mirth,
saying:
Sing us one of the songs of Zion.
How shall we sing the Lord's song
In a strange land?
If I forget thee, O Jeru-salem,
Let my right hand forget her cunning.
If I do not remember thee,
Let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth;
If I prefer not Jeru-salem
Above my chief joy.
Remember, O Lord, the children of Edom
In the day of Jeru-salem; who said:—Rase it,
rase it,
Even to the foundation thereof.
O daughter of Babylon, who art to be destroyed,
Happy shall he be, that rewardeth thee
As thou hast served us!
Happy shall he be, that taketh and dasheth thy little ones
Against the stones."

Does it not gain—is not its beauty emphasised—by the new arrangement? When we say that Mr. Henley gives fifty-three full pages in all, selecting from Exodus, Samuel, the Psalms, Job, the Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, the Song of Songs, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Joel, Amos, and Habakkuk, an idea of the exceptional interest of his volume is communicated. For his other surprises, his new gems—new, that is to say, to the ordinary reader, although familiar enough to the student of English poetry—Mr. Henley has gone to the Bannantyne MS., Tottel's Miscellany, the Royal MS., and other old collections. The following beautiful poem, of a quality not common in English verse, is, for example, from The Paradise of Dainty Devices. To some it will be familiar, but others may be surprised to learn that so homely and tender a lyric was written in an age when homeliness was not the fashion. We quote the first two stanzas, as modernised by their new editor. The author is Richard Edwardes (1523-1566), "sometime of her Maesties Chappell":

"In going to my naked bed as one that would have slept,
I heard a wife sing to her child, that long before had wept.
She sighed sore and sang full sweet, to bring the babe to rest.
That would not cease but criéd still, in sucking at her breast."

She was full weary of her watch, and grieved with her child,
She rockéd it and rated it, till that on her it smiled;
Then did she say: 'Now have I found this proverb true to prove,
The falling out of faithful friends renewing
is of love!'

"Then took I paper, pen and ink, this proverb for to write,
In register for to remain of such a worthy wight.
As she proceeded thus in song unto her little brat,
Much matter uttered she of weight, in place
whereas she sat,
And provéd plain, there was no beast, nor creature bearing life,
Could well be known to live in love, without discord and strife:
Then kiséd she her little babe, and aware
by God above,
The falling out of faithful friends renewing
is of love."

Alexander Scott yields four lyrics, a little marred, perhaps, for the modern reader by their archaisms. An archaism alone is often disturbing enough; but an archaism that is also Scotch can be quite a deterrent.
Tottel's Miscellany offers this delicate tissue of philosophic resignation: "Upon consideration of the state of this life," the title runs, "he wisheth death"—

"The longer life, the more offence:
The more offence, the greater pain:
The greater pain, the less defence:
The less defence, the lesser gain.
The loss of gain long ill doth try:
Wherefore come death, and let me die!
The shorter life, less count I find:
The less account, the sooner made:
The count soon made, the merrier mind:
The merry mind doth thought evade.
Short life, in truth, this thing doth try:
Wherefore come death, and let me die!
Come gentle death, the ebb of care,
The ebb of care, the flood of life,
The flood of life, the joyful fare,
The joyful fare, the end of strife.
The end of strife, that thing wish I:
Wherefore come death, and let me die."

And here, from the Bannantyne MS., is a jocund song of the amorous spring, under the title "Lusty May";

"O lusty May, with Flora Queen!
The balmy drops from Phœbus sheen Preluciant beams before the day:
By that Diana grows green
Through gladness of this lusty May.

"Then Esperus, that is so bright,
Till woful heart's casts his light,
With banks that blooms on every brae,
And showers are shed forth of their sight,
Through gladness of this lusty May.

"Birds on bewis of every birth,
Rejoicing notes makand their mirth
Right pleasantly upon the spray,
With flourishings o'er field and firth,
Through gladness of this lusty May.

"All lumaris that are in care
To their ladies they do repair,
In fresh mornings before the day,
And are in mirth ay mair and mair,
Through gladness of this lusty May."

These all are welcome.

Criticising an anthology amounts to saying how one would have done it oneself, and that is what we propose now to do.

Had the invitation to compile a volume of English lyrics been tendered to us, we should have set to work differently. In the first place we should, for two reasons, have discarded chronological arrangement altogether. One reason is, that the chronological arrangement of a collection of English lyrics such as this has the disadvantage of making the first part of the book so much livelier and more interesting than the last. The lyrics that were written by Englishmen prior to Marvell and those that were written after are so different in kind that it is almost necessary to find a new name for the later poems. The old inspiration suddenly ceased. Suddenly a moment came when to the poets the world ceased to be new every morning.
The Elizabethans, we can believe, actually thought that it was so. They had the happiness of infancy, of young, fresh growth. When joyous, their songs bubbled out of them. Even when they were melancholy or pensive the words seem to have followed each other as naturally and spontaneously as the notes of a bird. Theirs was the genuine lyricism. And then, partly because of the blighting Puritan influence, partly because of the Restoration's influence in the opposite direction, and partly because a critical spirit was abroad tending to make poets self-conscious workmen in a degree they had not hitherto reached, spontaneity vanished, and for a while genuine lyricism was no more. Poems no longer sprang into being as they once had done (or had seemed to do): they were now deliberately built up.
A new type of mind was developed: cynicism for the first time turned to verse; architecture, in short, took the place of poetry.
If Mr. Henley had not been more or less bound by his chronological scheme to take some note of the hundred and odd years between Marvell and Blake, maybe he would have neglected them altogether. In a general collection of English lyrics such as this we who write should have done so.
It would be impossible, it is true, to part with "Sally in Our Alley"; but neither for the temperament nor the poetical achievement of the Earl of Rochester, who is one of Mr. Henley's principal intervening poets, can we share his enthusiasm. In a volume including the perfect stanzas of Lovelace we should not admit Rochester at all.

One other objection to chronological order is the applicability of the term lyric to poems springing from so many and diverse emotions—the result being a departure from homogeneity. An editor's duties do not consist merely in bringing poems together;
he should also arrange them in order to prevent both dissonant juxtapositions and the effect of patchiness in his book. As it is, although on almost every page of this volume there are lines of beauty, there are yet portions of the book of far less distinction and worth than others. One patch to which we refer is the group of eleven poems by Blake coming after a very arid stretch, containing such artificial numbers as Pope's "Dying Christian" and Goldsmith's "When lovely woman." This objection, however, brings us to the statement that whatever the inducement, we should never attempt to make a general collection of English lyrics at all. The result is bound to be too heterogeneous. But discarding the idea of a general collection, we would willingly undertake to make some special collection, such as lyrics of love, or lyrics in praise of life, or lyrics distinguished by extraordinary beauty. And we should stipulate that the form given to the book was compact and slim, so that it might be a companion both out of the house and in it. Mr. Henley's book is far too large. He has been too generous. English lyrics are our bosom friends or nothing: and bosom friends should be empowered to nestle close. In other words, a smaller volume should have been made, one that would slip into the pocket. There is too much here. Few persons that want Wordsworth's "Ode on the Intimations of Immortality" want also Moore's facile fluencies; few that want the matchless music of Shelley's "Song of Pan" want also Jordan's "Careless Gallant," while few, again, that want the "Careless Gallant" will greatly prize the splendid contributions from the Authorised Version. It is possible to be too catholic. Mr. Henley, it seems to us, would have been wiser to have made a congruous collection, with, say, the joy of living as its motive. Mr. Henley is all for full-blooded life himself, and no one could make a book in praise of it better than he. To a large extent this book does perform such an office.

The Elizabethan section, which, coming first, gives the note, is rich in enthusiasm for life; but it does not persist. Love poems, however, so predominate that we come to resent all else, especially such grave singers as Henry Vaughan and Pope and Ebenezer Elliott. The earlier part of the book, indeed, tends to transform several of the later poets into interlopers—Lamb and Wordsworth particularly. Poe's ecstasies seem quite unreasonably modern, and Byron's "Isles of Greece," Campbell's two naval ballads, Coleridge's "Kubla Khan," and much of Scott, strike one as clean out of place. Had Mr. Henley excluded some of these more modern pieces, he might have drawn from the golden age of English lyrical poetry more examples than he does offer of the kind which, so far as we gather, he likes best. There is, for example, an amatory song of Cartwright's, from his play, "The Ordinary," beginning "Come, O come! I brook no stay," which is quite good. Dr. Strophe also, we think, deserves representation.
But to complain of omissions is idle, and we have, perhaps, cavilled too much already.

The book might have been thought out more carefully by the publishers. The type of the introduction and notes—both of the highest interest—is painfully small, and that of the poems themselves might well be larger; while the title-page contains the odd contradiction, "Chaucer to Poe, 1340-1809."
On the cover the error is not repeated: there we read, "1340-1849." We note also a misprint in Sedley's song, "Phyllis is my only joy." In the third line "coming" is given "cunning."

OPEN-AIR JOURNALISM.

Nights with an Old Gunner, and Other Studies of Wild Life. By C. J. Cornish. (Seeley & Co.)

MR. C. J. CORNISH during the last few years has steadily been gaining ground as a writer of out-door essays and sketches, and the publication of this, his second important book, affords an opportunity of estimating his place as compared with other writers of the same school. We have been all the more interested in his work because a consideration of it discloses the sharp line which divides journalism from literature. Mr. Cornish has received high praise, and to a great extent deserves it. He is full of information, clear and accurate in setting it forth. The writing is a little formal, but it is a scholar's formality. In choice of subjects, in their arrangement, in putting in and leaving out, he shows taste and robust common sense. He presents no exuberance of "prose-poetry," no profusion of metaphor, no sentences overloaded with epithet. And yet we know as we read that one thing—the element of literature—is lacking.

To make good the assertion, let us take the book in review exclusively from the standpoint of letters. The author, then, is, first of all, a sportsman, with a subsidiary love of nature; and we know this of Father Izaak, that, whereas his June mornings and his meadows "chequered with daisies and ladies' smocks" are immortal, his angling craft is all dead and done with. His modern successors—Gilbert White, Henry Thoreau, Richard Jefferies—were primarily lovers of nature, with a subsidiary love of sport. It is somewhat curious that the journalistic gift has in one sense a wider range than genius itself. Transport your journalist to any possible distance from his green-banked Midland stream—to the Nile or the Yangtse-Kiang—and his gift acts there exactly as it did at home. As it is the nature of the beaver to build, and he begins gnawing the Surrey oak as he gnawed the trees in his native Canada, so the born journalist spins copy out of any environment. Very skilfully and agreeably does Mr. Cornish do so. Let him be in Yorkshire, Berkshire, Norfolk, or the Isle of Wight, it is all the same, his surroundings are sure to yield a more or less admirable article for the Spectator. Collected into a volume and bound, these contributions may be glanced at a second time with new admiration.

But if his aims had been toward literature, if he had wished to please not the many but the few, what a different, what a higher standard he would have had to apply! Take the first eight papers, those "nights with an old gunner" which give the book its title. Mr. Cornish was but a looker-on at the coast. If you think he is more, turn up the pages of a true native, A Son of the Marshes. There you will find digression, slovenliness, a hundred faults: yet his is the real marsh, the living long-shoreman, nay, the very ducks and wild geese flying and squatting. One is native and writes from the very heart of the matter, the other is a clever and intelligent stranger transcribing external features. We are afraid the book would shrink into a few pages if a high literary standard were rigorously applied. Many of the chapters may be described as animal celebrities at home—the author having apparently paid a special visit in each case to "do" the place or wild creature for the Spectator. Interesting as they were in their original place, it would, of course, be ridiculous to criticise them as literature. As examples of the papers referred to, we may mention "The Paradise at Leonardalee," "A Beaver Lake in Sussex," "The Japanese Deer at Powerscourt," "The Heronry at Virginia Water," "The Birds of Parks," and so on. To the same category we must add the entire section headed "Inland Sport"—the chapters composing it are neither better nor worse than similar articles in the Field, where, indeed, not one would have been out of place.

After this drastic process of elimination, one asks what is left, and the answer is almost nothing. We regret that it is so. No fault is to be found with a young writer for journalising, least of all for journalising intelligently and with the good judgment of Mr. Cornish. But it would have been more promising had the monotonous average of these papers been broken by some attempt to express the writer's individuality—to attain style. Much is to be forgiven to him who aims high—a stumble or two, a touch of romantic folly, an indiscretion, anything is better than this dead level of respectable mediocrity. If any one deems we exaggerate the case we shall ask him to compare Mr. Cornish's papers on the Berkshire Downs with Jefferies's Wild Life in a Southern County. He is a native of the Vale of White Horse, and his nearest attempt at a breakaway from journalism into literature is the chapter on "The White Horse Downs." In other words, his material is almost identical with that of Richard Jefferies. From "the more commanding down" of Wild Life to Wylam's Cave is a summer afternoon's walk along the pleasant uplands of Wilts and Berks. We extract one passage—the absolute best in the book in our opinion—to show that at least Mr. Cornish is worth scolding and rating into the search for a higher ideal than has yet dawned on him:

"The ever-blowing wind upon the downs comes fresh across millions of acres of English soil, redolent not of the sea, but of the scent and odours of the inland county. The kestrels and crows, meeting the blast, skim low, almost touching the tall grasses, the horses neigh and paw the ground, the lambs scamper from the shelter of the lambing pens, where the ewes, with their shepherd, lie basking, back to wind and face to sun, and even the hares on the rolling shoulders of the hill are bigger, redder, and bolder than on any other region in the down county."

Here you have both observation and pictorial quality—a standard worth aiming at. The author's faults as a writer—dryness, hardness, formality—are at their minimum. Yet listen to Jefferies after and it is like stepping from a stubble field to a velvet turf:

"A faint sound as of a sea heard in a dream—a sibilant 'sish' 'sish'—passes along outside, dying and coming again as a fresh wave of the wind rushes through the bennets and the dry grass. There is the happy hum of bees—who love the hills—as they speed by laden with their golden harvest, a drowsy warmth, and the delicious odour of wild thyme."

One man has an eye, but the other has eye, ear, and nostril, and, beyond these, the restful, meditative habit of mind; one gives the bare, clear fact, the other makes you feel that he saw the fact in a rich setting of dream and fancy. Jefferies' picture is full of sub-tones and suggestions. Besides, a sentence such as we have quoted from Mr. Cornish is of rare occurrence in his book, whereas Jefferies has as good on every page. Perhaps it may be said the comparison is unfair, but when Jefferies wrote Wild Life in a Southern County he was very much in the same position as Mr. Cornish is now—that is, he was contributing to journals and then publishing in book form. Moreover, the reviewing of books would be a barren and dreary task but for the pleasure it affords of helping the young writer to know and strain at the best, and showing the journalist the greater glory of the kingdom of letters.

BOOK OF VERSES.

THE verses that are gathered into a little volume named Fidelis, and Other Poems, by C. M. Gemmer (Archibald Constable & Co.), have a certain shining and glimmering quality. They have consequently a sense of shadow. The alert reader will perceive the note in the pretty little stanzas:

"Not by her sunbeams only
Summer's known,
But by her deep'ning shadows, fern-flecked
stone,
And boughs that kiss the pathway,
Grass o'ergrown.
"Not by promise only
Lovers plight,
But in low whispers fainter than the flight
Of air-fed midges over Pools of light."

The verses which give their name to the volume are "in memory of a little dog, who died November 29, 1866, during the three days' absence of the writer." After thirty years the fidelity of the dog's owner is published to the world, as if in mockery of the love between equal human creatures. So may Miss Rossetti have thought, oppressed as she was by the forgetfulness of men for women, beloved in life, who have preceded them to the grave. For Miss Rossetti read this "beautiful poem of poems," as she calls it, in MS., demurring, however, to "the pomp of love lavished on any non-human friend." At Browning's door 19, Warwick-crescent, a copy of the verses was dropped by the writer at the suggestion of Mr. Patmore, "who said the poem would be a sufficient introduction." It was; and Browning wrote: "The subject of it would excuse even indifferent poetical treatment; but you seem to have written a really beautiful poem. I am happy to associate myself with two such eminent poets as the friends you mention in a sincere appreciation of the beauty as well as the feeling of 'Fidelis.' A few days ago, on a grave in the dogs' cemetery on the north side of Hyde Park, was to be seen a large wreath of white flowers, while on a seat near at hand were four paupers, dead already while alive, for whom the cost of the wreath could have bought a day's plenty. It was the anomaly of the verses done into life.

In Burns from Heaven, by Hamish Hendry (David Bryce & Son), we have some very expert verses. We have, too, another glimpse into the Paradise of some modern minor singers. Burns, somewhat fatigued, we must suppose, with the assembly of the saints, re-seeks Scotland, but only to be disillusioned:

"A land o' saunts it would appear!
Stories o' death their daily cheer;
Whare ilk ane sits beside the Brier
Plantit by Ian;
Whare a' men drap the mild saut tear
Beloved in Zion."

In short, the Scots' land is now a land of the proprietaries, and that is not the land for Burns. He will hie him back to heaven:

"Faith! if the truth maun be confest,
Auld Scotland's guid, but heaven is best.
A body's frien's there stand the test
Withouten sham;
Guid fellows a' at crack and jest,
An' pass the dram."

"Shakespeare, the king o' a' the core;
Byron, a deil to start a splore;
Shelley, whose gowden liltis galore
Keeps a' harps waitin';
Coleridge, whiles seraph, whiles a bore,
Like Milton's Latin."

Of that heavenly host are Scott, with "pawkie Allan," and "gleg James Hogg," "an' Louis—blythe of late cam' he, a' shanks and wit":

"Wi' siclike frien's Scots saunts come sair;
See back to Scotland I'll nae mair,
For after heaven I cannot bear
Sic godly folk.
Then fareweel! daylight's in the air,
An' there's the cock!"

Mr. Hendry, at any rate, has a pretty humour to save the situation.

Dante Gabriel Rossetti, as a note to one of his "Family Letters" tells us, "thought very highly" of "a little lyric of Tupper's on the Garden of Eden." The allusion is not to the proverbial Tupper, but to his "eleventh cousin," John Lucas Tupper, who had the fortune to belong to the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood. There are four poems by him in the Germ, a magazine, by the way, which was produced by the printing firm of the Tupperes. Tupper first studied sculpture, and the statue of Linnæus in the Oxford University Museum is his. He was, at one time, too, an anatomical draughtsman in Guy's Hospital, and, later, a Rugby master of drawing. When the Germ went, no magazine seems to have welcomed Mr. Tupper's verses; and now that he is dead they are collected into a volume, Poems, selected and edited by William Michael Rossetti (Longmans, Green & Co.), who supplies a brief biography of his friend. Some of the poems, the sonnets particularly, are far better than most of the poetry appearing in periodicals. They are of the manner of Wordsworth and of Rossetti; the impulse is theirs, but Tupper is a very accomplished adaptor and interpreter, as everyone must admit who reads such sonnets as "If I Knew," "To my friend, Holman Hunt," or that entitled "Unachieved," the expression of a solace dear to unsuccessful lovers, but with no answering application, as we might wish, to poets who somehow just miss the laurel:

"Love's triumph this! I would not have her sigh,
Nor hear her fine voice fa ter, which is keen
And sweet as falling water heard between Steep rocks in summer. My extremity
Of passion should not weigh upon her eye,
And blanch her hue; and she should walk serene
And pass me by, an inaccessible queen;
And I should offer her idolatry."

"For, so, there comes at least no emptiness
Of heart and spirit. All the sorrow and teen,
And far-off hopeless hope, will last—will last:
My once clear moon will not wane lustreless;
Its glory never shall be overpast;
Unreached, it still must be what it has been."

Mr. Francis William Bourdillon, in his Minuscula (Lawrence & Bullen), supplies the reader with a series of "Lyrics of Nature, Art, and Love" very delicately done. Where many verses tempt to quotation, we take the lines headed "The Herald Flower":

"First love is like the early daffodil,
That lightens the whole world with hope of Spring,
And sees not its own prophecies fulfil.
For when the leaves break forth and thrushes sing,
The herald flower is drooping. So the chill Takes Love when he hath taught the heart to sing."

A master in this manner of poetry is John B. Tabb, whose book of Lyrics (John Lane) has thought, often profound, and perfectly expressed. Mr. Tabb rarely exceeds four lines in each poem; and each poem is given a page to itself. When Mr. Tabb allows himself six lines, we can have no quarrel with him when the quality is equal, for instance, to that of those headed "Mater Dolorosa":

"Again maternal autumn grieves,
As blood-like drip the maple-leaves
On Nature's Calvary,
And every sap-forsaken limb
Renews the mystery of Him
Who died upon a Tree."

In her Songs in Many Moods (Longmans, Green & Co.), Nina Frances Layard has an "Ode to Morning," with passages that are out of the common:

"Each flower that coaxing morning shall unfurl,
Wakes with a new expression, some fresh curl
Of leaf or petal; some sweet poise of the head,
Or lithesome curve of limber limbs sap-fed;
And every day each plays its separate part
In meek unconsciousness and artless art:
Good, because growing; beautiful, because
It humbly follows Nature's rhythmic laws:
The whole earth round
Its stately synagogue;
Its decalogue
The secret forces of its marvellous birth."

LOST EMPIRES.

The Lost Empires of the Modern World: Essays in Imperial History. By Walter Frewen Lord. (Bentley.)

It is a common cry against Great Britain that she is grasping and greedy of territory, brutal in her treatment of native races, and that she spoils what she steals, not even possessing intelligence enough to make it, like the Dutch colonies, remunerative. Foreign nations lose no opportunity of telling us this. The "Little England" press endorse it; so that gradually there is growing up a feeling among Britons themselves that it is true, and that the empire is a gigantic fraud clumsily managed. It is on this point that Mr. W. F. Lord comes to our rescue. In a series of pleasantly written essays, well thought out, and accurate in the main, he gives us the history of the other great European empires, mostly now extinct. Beginning with Portugal, in the days of Prince Henry the Navigator, we have the empire that was most like our own, founded by brave adventurers who cleft a path for themselves where no Europeans had sailed before. The Portuguese did good on the whole, and the collapse of their empire which followed the draining of their country and its invasion by Spain, was a loss to civilisation. That the Portuguese still hold Goa is, Mr. Lord points out, solely due to the forbearance of Great Britain, whose generosity in such matters even went the length of twice restoring to Holland the colonies she had conquered with the sword. The history of the Spanish empire has been told by Prescott, and Mr. Lord has been able to add nothing to his narrative. The story of the French Empire abroad is largely a tale of British wars, forced on in some cases by the vast schemes of aggrandisement fostered by Richelieu, which threatened to oust us from our foothold in Canada, and in others by the natural conflict of interests which occurs when two great nations are simultaneously expanding. The story of the downfall of France, both in Canada and India, is graphically told, and a fair account is given of her present colonising activity and desire to retrieve the past. The last place selected is that of Holland, whose colonies were shamelessly "sweated" and utilised as mere sources of plunder. With the exception of Portugal, there is not one of these empires, according to Mr. Lord, which compares favourably in stability, humanity, and general business principles with the British Empire of to-day. If only as an antidote, this book should be healthy reading for Englishmen whose self-respect is somewhat in jeopardy. Mr. Lord adds wise maxims on the method by which we can preserve what we have so miraculously acquired. The great danger is, of course, the scarcity of home-grown food. Of late there has been a tendency to foster and revive the embers of British agriculture. If this succeeds, the first great step will have been accomplished of making the home country self-supporting. The Navy will then be free to act at large as required, instead of being, as now, merely sufficient to act as a convoy for our foodships.

WHITE MAN'S AFRICA.

White Man's Africa. By Poultney Bigelow.
Illustrated. (Harper & Brothers.)

WHEN Mr. Bigelow's book appeared as a series of articles in Harper's Magazine, they struck most readers as an excellent example of special correspondence, by a capable journalist able to describe, with impartiality and picturesqueness, all he saw and heard in a country on the brink of civil war. Their superficiality, partly owing to their fragmentary condition, was then hardly noticeable. This, unfortunately, cannot be said of the work now published in book form. The author himself, however, appears to have foreseen that this impression might probably be one result of his zealous, but necessarily hasty, labours.

"The literature on South Africa," he writes, "is more than abundant, and I have tried to read all of it. Perhaps I am the only writer on the subject who cheerfully admits that he knows nothing of the subject. It was much against my will that I accepted an offer made by the publishing house of Messrs. Harper & Brothers to proceed at once to South Africa and write my impressions. I pleaded my ignorance on the subject, but this did not seem to discourage."

There is no more difficult political question than that of South Africa, and as "impressions of travel," those of Mr. Bigelow are, perhaps, as good as any that have appeared; but their greatest admirer will scarcely claim for them accurate knowledge, or for their writer the necessary philosophical equipment. The book, although readable, is scarcely enlightening, and, like most impressions, readily slides into cheap generalisation. "To generalise," observes a modern novelist, "is to journalise." The White Man's Africa, from the nature of its inception and growth, has this inherent weakness.

No book on South Africa would be complete without an interview with President Kruger, who, as usual, "shook hands with me and pointed with a grunt to a chair at his side." This grunt will follow the President through history. None of the legends which have already crystallised around the youth of this remarkable man can henceforth conceal it. The Achilles of the Boers, who in his youth outran horses and slew elephants, lions, and buffaloes as jauntily as the squire's son kills partridges, cannot be made the hero of an epic so long as the "grunt" is not forgotten. But for this record of his breeding, Mr. Bigelow's account would be dithyrambic. Young Kruger no doubt possessed a splendid physique, but abuse of tobacco and coffee has impaired the vigour of his old age. This, at least, is the impression he seems to have left on the present and other visitors who have depicted him in prose sketches.

Mr. Bigelow has much that is interesting, although not new, to tell of the black races, whose history and characteristics he swiftly surveys.

"The word 'negro,'" he observes, "is not heard in South Africa, excepting as a term of opprobrium. Over and over again have Afrikaner Englishmen stopped me, when speaking of Zulus, Basutos, Matabele, and so on, as negroes. 'You in America only know the blacks who come over as slaves. Our blacks are not to be confused with the material found on the Guinea coast.'"

The author, however, maintains that there is a large portion of Zulu and Basuto blood among the descendants of the American slaves, "who were often prisoners of war captured in the interior." Ethnologically, this problem is one of great interest, although Mr. Bigelow throws no light on it, and offers no evidence of his statement.

On the feeling towards England Mr. Bigelow writes with discretion, seeing both sides of the much- vexed problem through his American spectacles. He does not forget that the Transvaal was abandoned "after a disgrace to British arms unmatched in the annals of war since the battle of Jena"—a statement which causes the reader some surprise. Why Jena? It is thus that Mr. Gladstone's reckless magnanimity colours history; and the full price of it has still to be paid. From this unpleasant topic one gladly escapes to Natal—"a magnificent monument to English courage and English capacity for administration"—where there is but one white man to every ten black; that is to say, about 45,000 white to 450,000 natives. Let Natal be our consolation, and appear as evidence of what Englishmen might have achieved in South Africa if their efforts had been untrammelled by illiterate Dutch bigots, incapable Portuguese, and a blundering Colonial Office at home.

BRIEFER MENTION.

Jakob Jakobsen: Det norroense Sprog paa Shetland. (Copenhagen: W. Prior.)

Jakob Jakobsen: the Dialect and Place-Names of Shetland. (Lerwick: Manson.)

THE author of these new and important works on the Norse language in Shetland is well equipped for the task. He is a Faroese by birth, and has spent three years—1892 to 1895—in researches among the Shetlanders who are so like his own people in language and habits. He has rescued from oblivion, while it was still alive, though in a mutilated and disguised form, the Norse which in the early Middle Ages was the prevailing speech in Orkney, Shetland, Caithness, Sutherland, the Hebrides, and the Isle of Man. He has rescued thousands of words of a dialect that was supposed to be as dead as Welsh in Cornwall. It is no depreciation of his predecessors in this field to say that his work, which is merely an introduction to his promised dictionary of Norn—the Shetland name for Norse—completely supersedes all previous effort. Shetlandic can no longer be termed a Scottish dialect.

For more than 400 years Shetland has been under Scottish rule, yet as late as 1593 one of their clergymen travelled to Norway to learn Norse because his congregation understood no other language. Yet Brand and Martin state, about A.D. 1700, that English had driven out Norn, whereas it is only in recent years that the School Board has tried to oust the remnants of the old language.

One part of the vocabulary of Norn calls for the special attention of the folklorist and the philologist. The fishermen in Shetland have a superstition that certain objects must not be called by the same name at sea as ashore. A number of Norn words have thus survived which are only used at sea. They are called lucky words or haf (i.e., sea) words, for it is believed that to neglect to use them would bring disaster to the sailor. Among them are found antique words which are gone out of use in Scandinavia. Some are only found in the Poetic Edda, and are of hoary antiquity. The old song about Hedin and Hoegin, found by Low in Foula, has an Eddaic stamp on it. This question is of high importance from a literary point of view, but cannot be dwelt upon here.

The author has given an exhaustive treatise of the phonology and grammar of Norn. As his English work embraces but little of his Danish book, it is to be hoped that this important contribution to the history of the British Isles will be made accessible in an English dress.

Essays of Schopenhauer. Translated by Mrs. Rudolf Dircks. With an Introduction (Walter Scott.)

"It is good for mankind," writes Mrs. Dircks, "now and again to have a plain speaker, a 'mar-feast' on the scene, a wizard who devises for us a spectacle of disillusionment." This is her justification for presenting to the public in an English dress the thirteen lectures comprised in this volume of "The Scott Library." These essays are chosen, with one exception, from Parerga und Paralipomena, published in 1851. The exception is the essay on the "Metaphysics of Love," which is probably as personal and characteristic an utterance as ever he gave to the world. One finds in these essays much that, to our now accustomed eyes, appears gratuitously arrayed in the garb of paradox and innovation, much that is needlessly offensive of egoism and rancour. There is a glee that is almost diabolical in Schopenhauer's manner of reducing to their uninteresting elements the motives most highly prized in human conduct. There is repetition and insistent verbiage in abundance. But in every case—whether he is inveighing against the practice of whip-cracking, or is more seriously examining the springs of human action and the ground of the hopes which inspire it—there emerges an idea, luminous and provocative, which leaves its impress. Mrs. Dirck's translation is painstaking and accurate; but, perhaps through terror of the morose shade of her philosopher, she has erred on the side of literalism so as in places to be unintelligible. Who, for instance, shall interpret for us this, from the essay on "Education"?—

"Few of these novels are exempt from reproach—nay, whose effect is contrary to bad. Before all others Le Sage (or, rather, their Spanish originals); further, The Vicar of Wakefield, and, to some extent, the novels of Walter Scott."

Stories of Famous Songs. By S. J. Adair Fitz-Gerald. (Nimmo.)

ONE cannot but feel some resentment against Mr. Fitz-Gerald. He has a capital subject, he has expended considerable pains upon the acquisition of material, but he has not been at pains to synthesise it. The various chapters of his volume first saw the light as detached articles in a popular weekly journal. One conjectures them to have been written in hot haste, for his pages bristle with repetitions and impertinences; and the author's sole effort to give a semblance of order to the collection would seem to have spent itself in the placing of the chapter on "Home, Sweet Home" at the beginning of the volume, and one upon "that illiterate National Anthem," to quote Mr. Gilbert, at the end. In other ways, too, the author cannot be said to have done his work handsomely. He frankly admits that scores of favourite songs have been omitted, and a brief inspection of the index is enough to show that he has not exaggerated his own shortcomings. Nevertheless, we may say that students of the subject, to whom the matter is of sufficient importance to excuse a vicious style and disorderly treatment, will find in Mr. Fitz-Gerald's volume much that will be both of interest and of service.

Verdi, Man and Musician: His Biography, with Especial Reference to his English Experiences. By Frederick J. Crowest. (John Milne.)

THIS monograph appears at a well-chosen moment. The maestro's work, if not yet placed finally in relation to the great music of the world, is, we cannot doubt, a finished work, and they are his latest creations which furnish the crown of his achievement. The day is passed for the reproach of—

"His orchestra of salt-box, tongs, and bones."

It is not often that, in any sphere, a man is to be found who on the far side of seventy still retains the power of assimilation, is still open to the influences of the age. Mr. Crowest, indeed, is at pains jealously to defend the subject of his memoir against the suspicion of having learned anything from Wagner; but the fact is remarkable that in his later achievement—in Aida, in Otello, in Falstaff—the great Italian has known how to recapture the ear of a generation to whom Bayreuth is as familiar as Covent Garden. Mr. Crowest's criticism is well within the comprehension of the average amateur; indeed, we are reminded pretty frequently of the expository programmes distributed at the Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts; and his attitude is one of defiant reverence. As to his literary style, it is of this impressive quality: "The red-letter day, for such it deservedly is, on which this universal melodist first saw the light was . . ." The promise of special reference to English experiences is realised mainly by a number of quotations from newspapers. In the department of musical criticism, at any rate, journalism may take to itself the credit of having made some advance in the course of the present generation. A capital portrait of Signor Verdi faces the title-page, and the book is, by permission, dedicated to Mme. Patti.

Life in Northumberland during the Sixteenth Century. By William Weaver Tomlinson. (Walter Scott.)

THIS vivid little sketch is largely taken up with descriptions of domestic and social conditions which prevailed in England during the Reformation era. Thus, Harrison's lament, prefixed to an edition of Holinshed's Chronicles (1577), over the degeneracy of the country, as evidenced by the new fashion of building every house with chimneys, has no exclusive reference to the Border counties. Neither was the common use of fingers instead of forks distinctive of the North of England in the sixteenth century. The author, however, fully justifies the title he has given to his work when he comes to particulars of the Border feuds. The Scotch forays were bad, but the English were worse. In one foray made by Sir Ralph Eare, in 1544, into Teviotdale and the Merse, we read that 192 towns, villages, parish churches, and bastel-houses were burnt; 403 Scots killed; 816 taken prisoners; together with 12,429 sheep, 1,924 nags and geldings, besides other booty. An interesting chapter is devoted to the state of medical science in the time of Elizabeth. In this respect, as in others, Northumberland was probably about fifty years behind the South of England.

A Short History of the Catholic Church. By F. Goulburn Walpole. (Burns & Oates.)

THIS little book belongs to the class of "Apologies" of which the later half of this century has seen so plenteous a crop. Without being for the most part serious contributions to history or to controversy, they have an interest of their own as human documents, throwing a light upon a recurrent enigma—the voluntary surrender of intellectual freedom. Mr. Walpole's appeal to the past is for confirmation, not for guidance. As an introduction to the study of ecclesiastical history the book will be useful, for the general sequence of events is set forth clearly and accurately.

The Reminiscences of a Bashibazouk. By Edward Vizetelly. (J. W. Arrowsmith.)

IN this substantial volume the ups and downs of the war correspondent's life are vivaciously set forth; and young men, whose ambition that way lies, might read the book with advantage. Mr. Vizetelly's narrative includes the principal European turmoils of the past few decades, and scattered about his pages are portraits of the leading special correspondents of the same period.

SOME REPRINTS.

EIGHT books, all reprints, packed in one parcel, may, and usually do, present as great a variety as the passengers in a Putney 'bus. Young, old, critical, poetical, and fictive—they have nothing in common but the respectability of their careers; for, thank goodness! not much rubbish is reprinted. Rubbish may aspire to new editions; but when type has been distributed only merit brings it together again. Here, then, is a quaintly various batch. Number 1—to make a plunge—is Sandra Belloni, in Messrs. Constable's new six-shilling revised edition of Mr. Meredith's novels. This story was originally called Emilia in England; but it has enjoyed its more sonorous title now for some years. A better edition of a living novelist's works at the price could not be desired than this of Mr. Meredith's; the type and paper have been well chosen, and the red binding is simple and handsome.

Number 2 is Bunyan's Grace Abounding to the Chief of Sinners (Andrew Melrose). Bunyan apologises for the style in which his book is written. "God," he writes, "did not play in convincing of me; the Devil did not play in tempting of me; neither did I play when I sank as into a bottomless pit, when the pangs of hell caught hold upon me; wherefore I may not play in my relating of them, but be plain and simple, and lay down the thing as it was." How grace might abound in literature, if Bunyan's conception of fitness of style were more common! The book, we must add, is neatly turned out, and has a useful, if rather too lengthy, introduction.

Number 3 is Macaulay's Lays, edited for use in schools by Mr. W. T. Webb, and published by Messrs. Macmillan. Macaulay's preface is boiled down; Virginia is omitted as unsuitable for schoolroom study; and full notes are given.

Number 4 is The Poetical Works of Thomas Moore in Messrs. Bliss, Sands & Co.'s "Apollo Poets." The volumes in this series are sold in the shops at two shillings and eightpence; and it is wonderful how the publishers have contrived to make them look worth seven-and-sixpence.

Reprint Number 5 is the fourth volume of Mr. George Allen's cheap version of Modern Painters. It hardly calls for comment, Mr. Allen's Ruskin formats being so well known.

Numbers 6 and 7 are reprints of The Scarlet Letter and Sterne's Sentimental Journey. Each volume is illustrated by Mr. T. N. Robinson. Reprints of The Scarlet Letter we expect almost daily; but a half-crown Sterne on the shiniest and smoothest of edition of Sterne's masterpiece, with modern pen-and-ink pictures, is less usual. The book is prettily turned out, but for ourselves we cannot pretend to like white paper, and with illustrations so modern in their deftness as Mr. Robinson's. Others will think differently, and will disagree with us in thinking that eighty-eight pictures are too many. What with illustrations, and separate title-pages to the chapters, the text seems to play a minor part in this reprint.

Number 8 is The Eerie Book (J. Shiells & Co.). They are a dread selection, these sixteen tales, beginning with Edgar Allen Poe's The Masque of the Red Death, and ending with The Masque, an extract from De Quincey's Klosterheim. Mr. W. B. MacDougall illustrates the book in the style of Mr. Aubrey Beardsley. But these pictures are too eerie for eerie stories; they should leave the tales to play on the nerves. What with Mr. Lang's Book of Ghosts, and Mr. Stead's Real Ghost Stories, the coming Christmas can be kept with all the old-fashioned thrills.

THE ACADEMY FICTION SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1897.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

THE custom of gathering several short stories into a volume, and publishing them as if the covers contained a novel of the orthodox length—grows apace. Byeways and The Express Messenger are examples to the point. The fiction of the past week deals with all imaginable topics from the exploitation of the "soul" to an excursion to Venus.

BYEWAYS.

By ROBERT HICHENS.

Mr. Robert Hichens can write. He understands the value of words, and he has made a study of the kid-gloved, gardenia-in-the-button-hole youth of the day. With them, their affairs and friendships, he is in evident sympathy. He is also just now in love with the kind of spiritualism that is useful in fiction, and he has many uses for "souls." In a word, he is the author of Flames. His new book, Byeways, a collection of nine stories, might be described as a careful using up of the material collected for Flames. The stories mostly deal with things just a little beyond reality. His men do not play football. They do not eat cold roast beef and cheese for lunch. His women—well, here is one of them. Renfrew had the right to hold "this thin, pale wonder of night and fame in his arms, and to kiss the lips from which came at will the coo of a dove or the snarl of a tigress." (Methuen & Co. 319 pp. 6s.)

A TRIP TO VENUS.

By JOHN MUNRO.

Jules Verne took us to the moon, Mr. H. G. Wells brought the Martians to this poor old earth, and now here is Mr. John Munro (author of The Story of Electricity) obliging with an account of a trip he made to Venus. Thither he went in a car (in the darkness it might have been mistaken for a tubular boiler of a dumpy shape) accompanied by Profs. Carmichael and Gazen and Miss Carmichael. When the author of The Story of Electricity reached Venus he fell in love with Alumion (a lady, not a metal). "The ethereal flame of this new passion seemed to purify all that was earthly and exalt all that was celestial in him." They have now come home again. Prof. Gazen and Miss Carmichael are about to be married, and as soon as the ceremony is over "I [that is, the author of The Story of Electricity] shall return to Venus and Alumion." He has our very best wishes. (Jarrold & Sons. 254 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE DOCTOR'S DILEMMA.

By HESBA STRETTON.

It seems wonderful that a story filling more than five hundred pages should come at this date from the pen that gave us Jessie's First Prayer—a book over which many of us pored in childhood. However, so it is, and, what is more, this story of the marriage of a girl of seventeen, her flight from a hateful bond into which she had ignorantly walked, and her final happy union to a good man, is told with unflagging vigour. The story is laid mostly in the Channel Islands. Tardif, the Sark fisherman, is sympathetically drawn. (Hodder & Stoughton. 547 pp. 6s.)

THE EXPRESS MESSENGER.

By CY WARMAN.

The Express Messenger is the first of twenty-two short and, mostly, thrilling stories of early railroad life in America. These are dedicated to the "Great Army of Enginemen—the silent heroes who stand alone and bore holes in the night at the rate of a mile a minute." "The Locomotive that Lost Herself" and "A Railway Mail Clerk" are quite good. In the latter story we have the description of a railway smash in one of the Santa Fé cañons. The conduct of "Doc," the mail clerk, who was pinned under the burning wreck, makes excellent reading. In such stories as "A Locomotive as a War Chariot," "A Ghost Train Illusion," and "Catching a Runaway Engine," the sensationalism of railway romance is exhausted. (Chatto & Windus. 282 pp.)

RACING AND CHASING.

By ALFRED E. T. WATSON.

A budget of pleasant sporting sketches by the author of Sketches in the Hunting Field and Race Course and Covert Side. The human characterisation goes just far enough to be interesting without drawing attention away too much from horses, hounds, and Reynard. The first sketch shows how Chippenham could ride Lawson's bay mare better than Lawson. Chippenham was the truer gentleman, and perhaps that counted for something with the mare, but it was mainly, as the title of the story implies, "A Question of Bits." These sketches appeared in the Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News when the author was editing that journal. (Longmans, Green & Co. 344 pp. 6s.)

A PROFESSIONAL BEAUTY.

By E. P. TRAIN.

This story, supplemented by three short ones, forms "Beeton's Christmas Annual." A very worldly mother decides that the elder of her two daughters must yield place to her sister, and withdraw from the social arena in which she has won everything but a husband. Evelyn retires to Jersey. Here she writes the story of her social triumphs, which is sensational enough, and is, of course, provided with a jewel robbery. (Ward, Lock & Co. 208 pp. 1s.)

MARCUS WARWICK, ATHEIST.

By ALICE M. DALE.

A sincere study of a sincere man, by the author of With Feet of Clay. Marcus Warwick is a humanitarian, an implicit Christian, and the editor of The Advance Guard—no new figure in serious fiction. His struggles as an ameliorator are the kernel of the book, which is quiet, reasonable, and interesting. (Kegan Paul & Co. 396 pp. 6s.)

IN SUMMER ISLES.

By BURTON DIBBS.

Four stories of lawless life, making a man's book for men. Mr. Dibbs is no writer for little people, or for fools. His scenery is the South Sea Islands, where civilisation has but the feeblest grip, and his puppets fear neither God nor devil. His danger is to mistake brutality for strength. (Heinemann. 266 pp. 3s. 6d.)

A TSAR'S GRATITUDE.

By FRED WHISHAW.

In the first place let us thank the publishers for their gift of legible print. The story is interesting enough to deserve it. The Tsar is Alexander II., and his gratitude is shared by two men, Philipof and Dostoief. Dostoief did him the service of hamstringing his horse at Inkerman, to keep him out of range of the English bullets; Philipof twice saved his life. Dostoief's service was, however, recognised at once. Philipof had to wait for appreciation of his loyalty. The story deals with this waiting, and it is a good story. (Longmans & Co. 320 pp. 6s.)

MRS. JOHN FOSTER.

By CHARLES GRANVILLE.

An earlier book by this author was called A Sapphire Ring. We have not read it; nor is this the kind of book we read, except in the way of business. Look at the sub-title: "Being the papers and Letters of John Foster, Esq., of Fosterton, edited and arranged by his great-nephew, Martin Fordyce." That is forbidding enough, but when the book is opened and we find that the story is told entirely by letters and scraps of diary, we cry mercy. It is a study of feminine hysteria and masculine selfishness; but the form is against it. (Heinemann. 231 pp. 3s. 6d.)

ACE O' HEARTS.

BY CHARLOTTE BAIN.

Three hundred and fifty pages of pretty sentiment. We have rarely read a more feminine story, nor one less bound by the rules of art. But the telling is brisk, if wayward, and the chatter is bright, if trivial, and there are lovers and children and other pleasant personages in plenty, and the end is happy. Old-fashioned people will like it. (Hurst & Blackett. 350 pp. 6s.)

THE RISE OF THE RIVER.

BY AUSTIN CLARE.

The river is the Tyne. Mr. Austin Clare is a Tynesider, his pseudonym is "Tynedale Tyke," and to Upper South Tynedale his book is dedicated. This almost seems to shut out Southrons altogether; but if you persevere you will find plenty of rough and kindly human nature hiding among the dialect. Mr. Clare writes of a lowly folk, black but comely. (Chatto & Windus. 359 pp. 6s.)

CONCERNING TEDDY.

BY MRS. MURRAY HICKSON.

We do not want to suggest imitation when we say that Concerning Teddy belongs to the same family as Mr. Grahame's Golden Age. It does so, however. Teddy was a small boy, gifted with unusual sagacity and philosophy: also with a stammer, a brother Aubrey, a father who lured him on to the sickness that follows cigar smoking, and a Cousin Winnie. There was also Michael, who, when offered medicine to settle his liver, remarked, "I don't want my liver settled; I like it wobbly." (James Bowden. 304 pp. 3s. 6d.)

A NORWEGIAN NOVELIST.

Jonas Lauritz Edemil Lie was born in November, 1833, at Eker, a country town in the south of Norway. Soon after his birth his father was appointed Sheriff of Tromsø, and the novelist's boyhood was spent among the rough fishermen of the Arctic regions. His writings bear abundant evidence of the wonderful attraction the sea possessed for him: indeed, he determined to enter the navy, but was rejected on account of his short-sightedness. At the University of Christiania, which he entered soon after leaving the cadet school, Lie met Ibsen and Bjørnson, and a lifelong friendship arose between the three authors. In due course he passed his examinations and settled down to a good lawyer's practice in the small town of Kongsvinger. The financial crisis of 1866 forced him to give up his practice, and, encouraged by the success which was attending the efforts of his two fellow-students, he determined to devote himself to a literary career. At first he met with little success. A volume of poems attracted little attention, and he was obliged to gain a miserable living by doing political hackwork for the Christiania newspapers. At that time Bjørnson's country idylls were becoming immensely popular, and Jonas Lie first came into prominence as the author of Den Fremsynte (issued in this country as The Visionary, but really "The Man with the Second Sight"), a series of sketches of life in the Far North. Den Fremsynte is a sad little story, containing some beautiful descriptions of the wild, lonely country where the author spent his childhood. In 1871 he obtained a small travelling stipend from the State to enable him to go abroad in order "to educate himself as a poet," and it was in Rome that he wrote the greater part of his next book Tales and Sketches from Norway, and his first novels of the sea, Tremasteren Fremtiden ("The Barque Future") and Lodsen og hans Hustru ("The Pilot and his Wife"), the last of which established his reputation as an author. Tremasteren Fremtiden gives an interesting picture of life in the northern harbours of Norway, but as a story it is quite inferior to The Pilot and his Wife, which is generally considered Lie's masterpiece. It is difficult to realise that this novel, full of the breezes of the wild North Sea, was written in a little Italian village. Mr. Edmund Gosse, who has done so much to introduce Jonas Lie to English readers, and whose preface to a translation of one of his novels, which appears in Mr. Heinemann's invaluable "International Library" gives an excellent account of the man and his work, tells how the composition of Lodsen og hans Hustru "was accompanied by so painful a nostalgia for the sea that Lie became almost ill with longing, and, one summer day, throwing up his work, trudged many miles through the blazing heat that he might kneel for a few moments by the lapping Mediterranean, and wash his eyes and mouth in the waves."

Thomas Ross and Adam Schrader, Lie's next two novels, dealt with life in Christiania, but in Rutland and Gaa Paa! ("Go Ahead!") published in 1882, he again pictured the life on board ship with extraordinary success. In 1883 appeared Liosslaven (issued in this country as One of Life's Slaves, but really "A Slave for Life"), a novel written in quite a new manner. Lie had evidently been studying the new French realists, and Liosslaven bears distinct traces of the influence of Zola and Daudet. It is a sad, but very powerful, history of the struggles and final failure of a smith's apprentice, and, like his next book, The Family of Gilge, is distinctly pessimistic in tone. In 1886 Lie published A Whirlpool, and this was followed by En Samliv ("A Wedded Life"), Maisa Jons ("The Story of a Dress-maker"), Komm andörens Døttre ("The Commodore's Daughters"), Onda Magde ("Evil Forces"), Niobe, and Naar Sol gaar ned ("When the Sun Goes Down"). In his later productions Lie has almost entirely abandoned the sea and has pictured the everyday life of commercial Norway. His stories are always a trifle bitter and generally written with some strong moral purpose. Lie's style, especially in his later books, is colloquial to a fault, and, as Mr. Gosse truly remarks, he cannot be regarded as a creative artist of great strength. "His truthfulness, his simple pathos, his deep moral sincerity, have gradually conquered for him a place in the hearts of his countrymen which no one can dispute with him."

REVIEWS.

Corleone. By F. Marion Crawford. (Macmillan &amp; Co.)

Mr. Crawford, though never over fond of action, has occasionally been on fairly close terms with it. The play of emotion, of hesitancy, always claims his best effort, but his books contain, none the less, spirited descriptions of more material struggles. In Mr. Isaacs there is a good polo match; Zoroaster has its wrestle between Darius and the sage; Dr. Claudius once climbed the rigging; the Roman Singer is an epic of elopement; Graifenstein shows us German students hacking honour into each other's brows; and so on. Latterly, however, psychology has almost completely ousted muscle; and A Rose of Yesterday, Mr. Crawford's penultimate story, was positively dreary. Hence we are the more glad to note in Corleone, just published, a quite unusual proportion of stirring events. Hitherto the incident, however well done, has never more than leavened the whole: playing the same part in Mr. Crawford's romances that the solitary waltz refrain does in the thinnest kind of comic opera; but in Corleone it occurs and occurs. Brigands, armed to the teeth, steal through the pages; one man is shot dead, another is stabbed; a fortified house is attacked by night; in short, enough happens to satisfy the most envenomed opponent of the pulseless American school of fiction.

Corleone comes in the same happy blue covers in which Messrs. Macmillan have sent forth so many of Mr. Crawford's pleasant romances. Old friends figure in its pages—Sant Ilario and Corona, for example—but in the main it is the story of persons new to us—the three Corleone brothers, Ferdinando, Francesco, and Tebaldo, and their sister, or supposed sister, Vittoria: children of an old Sicilian house. The brigand-ridden Sicily of to-day is the background of the book, although we are taken now and again to Rome, the home of Corona's sons, Ippolito and Orsino Saracinisca, and their cousin San Giacinto, who share the front of the stage with Tebaldo and Francesco. San Giacinto is a giant not unworthy to stand by the side of Porthos himself. And here is a glimpse of a desperado, for which one would hardly have gone to Mr. Crawford. One of the banditti is speaking:

"Now there is our captain, Mauro himself, whenever he has killed anybody he gets a gold twenty-franc piece and puts it into a little leathern purse he carries for that purpose."

"Why?" asked Tebaldo, with some curiosity.

"For two reasons. In the first place, he knows at any time how many he has killed. And, secondly, he says they are intended to pay for masses for his soul when he is killed himself. One tells him that someone will get the gold, if he is killed. He answers that heaven will respect his intention of having the masses said, even if it is not carried out when he is dead. That man has a genius for theology."

The story is told in Mr. Crawford's best manner, and after the preliminary chapters are well out of the way, you can hardly lay it aside. We do not think that Mr. Crawford's best manner is the best manner there is, but no writer has more urbanity and self-possession. He never hurries. He writes stories as they might be told after dinner by an accomplished raconteur. If you do not care for so remote a method, you do not care for Mr. Crawford. If you do, Corleone will excite very considerable interest.

* * * *

The Tree of Life. By Netta Syrett. (John Lane.)

Miss Netta Syrett has more than fulfilled the promise of her first book, Nobody's Fault. The Tree of Life has all the virtues which books of its class—books, that is, which touch on the great woman problem—usually lack most conspicuously. The story, in the first place, is convincing. Its characters are alive, and not mere labels for different kinds of "views." More than this, Miss Syrett succeeds in winning our sympathy for her various characters, enabling us to see things from the standpoint of each and to comprehend their attitudes, even when we do not agree with them. The most successful character in the story is the heroine, Christine, but old Dr. Willowfield, her father, and Farborough, Christine's boorish husband, are also extremely ably handled—a much rarer feat among lady novelists, who, as a rule, fail utterly in drawing their men, though their women are often cleverly delineated. The minor characters, too—Mrs. Forrester, Meg, and a whole gallery of young women at college who are being trained as school-teachers—are very cleverly drawn, while the dénouement of the story is at once courageous and artistically satisfying. Indeed, taking for granted the nature of the bond between Christine and her husband, the rest of the story—the characters being as they are—is inevitable. Farborough is a Socialist and man of fads, and this is how he conceives of married life:

"I don't want you to feel in the least as though you were in any way working under my direction, you understand. I need not remind you that I have too much respect for your intellect and your individuality to have any such idea, even if I could wish such a position for any woman at any time. A woman has as much right to freedom of intellectual expression as a man; but their paths should at least be parallel if they contemplate matrimony, in my opinion."

This represents the husband's view of their marriage. Here is the wife's:

"Marriage, in this case, would lift her at once to the crest of the wave; this once reached, her own energy and ambition must carry her onwards. This was one of the cases in which marriage meant wisdom. It was as John had said (she hesitated in thought over the name), as John had said—a contract between them for successful work and mutual helpfulness."

The end of this ill-assorted contract may be foreseen. The Tree of Life is the best novel of its kind that has appeared for a long time.

* * * *

The Making of a Prig. By Evelyn Sharp. (John Lane.)

Miss Evelyn Sharp has a graceful touch and a pleasing humour—neither of them gifts to be despised in a prosaic world. Katharine Austen was a young woman with an honest wish to be good in a different way from her neighbours, and the result was naturally disappointing. She fell out with the man she really worshipped, and made a gallant effort to be content with the commonplace in the shape of a boisterous youth called Ted. But it is written that a prig may repent of his or her ways and yet not be able to turn from them, and so at last we find her confirmed in her priggishness and about to marry the first melancholy and epigrammatic lover.

The tale is a sort of mild satire upon the quest of foolish ideals, but the edge of Miss Sharp's weapon is not cruel. Indeed, the present writer has never quite found out wherein the priggishness lay, and the point in any case is not important. The book begins rather lamely, but falls soon into the right comedy vein, and—with now and again a glimpse of pathos—ends in graceful banter. The writer is conspicuously stronger in incident than in character. The description of the "working gentlewoman" is excellent; so, too, the scene at the rectory, when Paul offers her marriage with the unopened letter from the newer lover on the table, and the final episode on the Seine steamer. In spite of its slightness the story has humour and a certain attractiveness. But there is need of more care and strength in the portrayal of men and women before the work can fully justify itself. The rector and Miss Esther are mere figures of an old fictional convention, Katharine is better, but in her also there is need of a more adequate conception. And what shall we say of Paul and Ted? The one is only fallow cheeks, a black beard, and a few phrases, while the other is a riotous and hazy figure with about twenty words of a vocabulary in which "rotten" and "hump" are the most in use. With pain we recognise the unflinching realism of the portrait.

* * * *

Over the Hills. By Mary Findlater. (Methuen & Co.)

There are two Miss Findlaters, and both of them write novels. Moreover, they publish with Messrs. Methuen, and their works come out in that familiar red library of six-shilling books. Miss Jane Helen Findlater has just written A Daughter of Strife, Miss Mary Findlater Over the Hills. In style and treatment, in form and manner, their work is almost ridiculously alike. Both of them seem to affect "straggling" plots, both of them have a distinct taste for melodrama, and both end their books unsatisfactorily and in a manner which, while it misses being tragic, remains "uncomfortable," and therefore fails to be either impressive or agreeable. Over the Hills has a good enough story to tell, though it is one built up on familiar lines out of familiar characters and incidents. The opening chapters are really good, and if Miss Mary Findlater could have worked the rest of her book up to their level, our rather lukewarm praise would have been exchanged for fervid eulogy. The hero of Over the Hills, Lewis Campbell, is in love with an utterly worthless girl, who throws him over in the hope of catching a marquis. The marquis, like someone in "Lady Clara Vere de Vere," "saw the snare and he retired." In fact, he pretends to get drowned and enlists in the army, whereupon the girl weds his successor to the title. Not a pleasant situation, and one which requires a stronger hand than our author's to handle it successfully. Miss Mary Findlater has constructed her plot with considerable ingenuity—almost too much ingenuity. Her writing is at its best when she is describing the everyday affairs of life. Here is a specimen from one of her earlier chapters:

"You should not bring the children out of bed on such a cold night," said Dinah. But Annie had no scruples, and in another minute the bannisters were crowded with them, clustering like a swarm of white bees, hanging over as far as they dared, trampling with their little bare feet on one another's toes, their hair screwed in curl-papers, their eyes wide with excitement, listening with all their ears to the marvellous tumult below."

* * * *

The Rip's Redemption. By E. Livingston Prescott. (Nisbet & Co.)

This is a foolish story. A younger son finds his allowance cut off, and is driven to enter the Army as a gentleman ranker. He rapidly degenerates and becomes a sodden good-for-nothing, the butt of his squadron. Then he receives a belated request from the sweetheart of a dead friend to visit her, and is thus started upon an upward career to renewed dignity and self-respect. The sentiment of the whole thing is on the level of a Sunday-school prize, and the incidents bear a suspicious similarity to those familiar in that kind of literature. The conversion of the drunken reprobate begins with his receipt of the unknown lady's letter, and it is truly miraculous:

"Vann had to read it six times or so more before his mind, all unused to such good things as courtesy and refinement, took it in. The fine formality of writing and expression, with its little touch of simplicity as well, the faint perfume of violets, the tiny silver monogram, pierced him like a pain. He struggled up with an oath and began to pace the room unevenly, casting vacant glances across the black, wind-swept waste of the parade-ground, and stopping to stamp his foot as loud voices below seemed to announce interruption. His head was up, his shoulders back, a sudden change seemed to have swept over his whole being, and galvanised him into a fierce tension of resuscitated manhood."

It need hardly be said that after this Trooper Vann braves the jeers of his comrades by saying his prayers at night, and that he dies in saving the life of the regimental bully, from whom he has suffered much. Mr. Prescott appears to have some knowledge of the outside of a soldier's life, but of such insight as Mr. Kipling's he shows no glimmer.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS' LIST.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE DUNGEONS OF OLD PARIS.

By TIGHE HOPKINS, Author of "Lady Bonnie's Experiment," &c.

Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

This is the Story and Romance of the most celebrated Prisons of the Monarchy and the Revolution.

NIPPUR; or, Explorations and Adventures on the Euphrates. The Narrative of the University of Pennsylvania Expedition to Babylonia in the Years 1888-1890. By JOHN PUNNETT PETERS, Ph.D., D.Sc., D.D., Director of the Expedition. With about 100 Illustrations and Plans, and with New Maps of the Euphrates Valley and the Ruin Sites of Babylonia. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, gilt tops, 12s. 6d. each.

RELIGIONS OF PRIMITIVE PEOPLES. Being

the Second Series of American Lectures on the History of Religions, 1896-1897. By DANIEL G. BRINTON, M.A., M.D., LL.D., D.Sc., Professor of Archeology and Linguistics in the University of Pennsylvania. Uniform with Rhys-Idwida's "Buddhism." 8vo, cloth, 6s.

JOHN MARMADUKE. By Samuel Harden

CHURCH, Author of "Oliver Cromwell: A History." Illustrated by A. G. Reinhart. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

AUTHORS and PUBLISHERS. A Manual of

Suggestions for Beginners in Literature. Comprising a Description of Publishing Methods and Arrangements, Directions for the Preparation of MSS. for the Press, Explanations of the Details of Book-manufacturing, with Instructions for Proof-reading, and Specimens of Typography, the Text of the United States Copyright Law, and Information concerning International Copyrights, together with General Hints for Authors. Seventh Edition, Re-written with New Material. Fcap. 8vo, half-leather, 7s. 6d. net.

ASTORIA; or, Anecdotes of an Enterprise beyond

the Rocky Mountains. By WASHINGTON IRVING. Tacoma Edition. 2 vols., large 8vo, beautifully printed and bound, cloth extra, gilt tops, 25s. net.

BOOKS and their MAKERS during the MIDDLE

AGES. A Study of the Conditions of the Production and Distribution of Literature, from the Fall of the Roman Empire to the Close of the Seventeenth Century. By GEORGE HAVEN PUTNAM, M.A., Author of "Authors and their Public in Ancient Times." 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d. each.

LITERARY MOVEMENT in FRANCE during the NINETEENTH CENTURY. By GEORGES PELLISSIER. Translated by ANNE G. BRINTON. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

ROBERT BURNS. The Ayrshire Homes and

Haunts of Burns. By HENRY C. SHELLEY. With 25 Full-Page Illustrations from Photographs by the Author; and a Portrait of Burns. 16mo, cloth extra, 5s.

LITTLE JOURNEYS to the HOMES of FAMOUS

WOMEN. Being the Series for 1897. Uniform with "Little Journeys to the Homes of English Authors." By ELBERT HUBBARD. 16mo, cloth extra, 5s.

The HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT of MODERN

EUROPE. By C. M. ANDREWS, Professor of History of Bryn Mawr College. 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. each.

"HEROES OF THE NATIONS" SERIES.

Edited by EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A.

Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

HANNIBAL: Soldier, Statesman, Patriot, and

the Crisis of the Struggle between Carthage and Rome. By W. O'CONNOR MORRIS, Author of "Napoleon." Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

ULYSSES S. GRANT, and the Maintenance of American Nationality, 1822-1885. By WILLIAM CONANT CHURCH, late Lieut.-Col., U.S.A.

ROBERT E. LEE, and the Southern Confederacy, 1807-1870. By Prof. HENRY ALEXANDER WHITE, of Washington and Lee University.

Illustrated Prospectus of the Series on Application.

Catalogues on Application.

24, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, LONDON; AND NEW YORK.

MESSRS. C. ARTHUR PEARSON'S
NEW BOOKS.

MEN WHO HAVE MADE THE EMPIRE.

By GEORGE GRIFFITH.

With 16 Full-Page Illustrations by Stanley L. Wood. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, price 7s. 6d.

A Series of Twelve Life-Pictures of the men who have done most to build up the greatest Imperial Fabric that the sun has ever shone upon.

WILLIAM THE NORMAN.—EDWARD OF THE LONG LEGS.—FRANCIS DRAKE.—OLIVER CROMWELL.—WILLIAM OF ORANGE.—JAMES COOK.—LORD OLIVE.—WARREN HASTINGS.—NELSON.—WELLINGTON.—"CHINESE GORDON."—OECIL RHODES.

"Is it impossible not to be thoroughly interested by his treatment of the Empire builders and impressed with the lofty patriotic spirit which pervades the whole book. It is a volume for everyone to read."—Scotsman."The book is decidedly well done. Mr. Griffith has a fresh, forcible style, and a real belief in the destiny of our race. Yet, as his excellent account of Nelson shows, he is no Jing, but has a very gentlemanly respect for the feelings of other nations whom we have at one time wronged in war. He has consulted the best authorities on the various periods of which he treats, yet does not follow any of them slavishly..... he has produced a thoroughly readable popular book on a subject of which too many Englishmen know far too little."—Morning Advertiser.POPULAR NOVELS.
THE INVISIBLE MAN.

By H. G. WELLS.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

"Will greatly enhance the reputation of a very ingenious story teller..... All the incidents, now grotesque, now tragic, spring naturally from the situation, and are related with unflagging dexterity. Most astonishing is the atmosphere of reality, of cold, hard facts, which gives the book the singular actuality that lingers in the mind. In this quality Mr. Wells has a signal advantage over his contemporaries who tell wondrous tales, and it is likely to carry him very far."—Illustrated London News."Mr. Wells has remarkable literary abilities. 'The Invisible Man' is decidedly striking and original, and, what is rare in such books, it is also provocative of thought."—British Weekly."The story is told with that fertility of imaginative resource which has made Mr. Wells conspicuous in this domain of fiction."—Daily Chronicle."This is a wonderful story; grotesque, indeed, as the title-page has it, but deepening as it goes from the farcical to the fearful and tragical. The Invisible Man has been happy in his biographer, if in nothing else."—Scotsman.

"I have not been so fascinated by a new book for many a day."

Mr. CLEMENT K. SHORTER in the Bookman.

THE SKIPPER'S WOOLING.

By W. W. JACOBS.

Price 3s. 6d.

"In 'The Skipper's Wooling,' as in 'Many Cargoes,' Mr. W. W. Jacobs proves himself to belong to the tribe of benefactors. The story of how Captain Wilson, master and owner of the schooner 'Seamew,' won the hand of Miss Annie Gething is one which few people, to use an expressive vulgarism, will be able to read 'with a straight face.'..... Those who have read Mr. Jacobs's earlier stories can readily imagine how irresistibly ludicrous are the developments of the plot."—Spectator."It contains scenes which we shall not be able to recall without a smile for many weeks to come..... It is a good story well told and full of humour and drollery."—Daily Telegraph."Will induce many a hearty laugh..... The story is vigorous as befits its characters, but it is devoid of profanity or grossness."—Dundee Advertiser.

AN AMERICAN EMPEROR.

By LOUIS TRACY.

With 16 Full-Page Illustrations, price 6s.

"The plot is a daring one, but, in spite of its apparent impossibility, it is well worked out..... The descriptions of the versatile nature of the French people are very graphic."—Newcastle Leader."Is a bold and lively romance. Its hero is a charming American millionaire, who, for love of a woman, seeks to gain the throne of France. He has the wealth of a Croesus, and does not mind spending it. The reader soon gets interested in his campaign, the details of which are not without a certain air of truthfulness, despite the essential extravagance of the main idea. The story is cleverly told, and is well illustrated."—Yorkshire Post.

TWO NEW BOOKS FOR THE CHILDREN.

JUMBLES.

By LEWIS BAUMER.

With 48 pages illustrated by the Author, printed in Colours, and bound in paper boards with cloth back, price 2s. 6d.

Mr. Lewis Baumer, who has written and illustrated this book, is the talented young artist whose sketches attracted so much attention in conjunction with Mr. Zangwill's brilliant work which recently appeared under the title "Without Prejudice," in a monthly contemporary. Mr. Baumer must be very fond of children, for the book is one that appeals directly to childish hearts. There are twenty-four pages in the book printed in colours, and twenty-four pages of rollicking verse, set off with pen-and-ink sketches. Since the days of the "Frog who would a wooing go," there has been no book published for children containing so much that is delightful, so much animation, so much genuine humour.

THE BOOK OF SURPRISES.

In stiff wrapper, tastefully printed in Colours, price 1s.

The "Book of Surprises" is something of rather a novel sort in children's books. The illustrations are beautifully printed in colours, and on the opposite page appears the story in rhyme in a bold and clear type.

London: C. ARTHUR PEARSON LIMITED, Henrietta Street, W.C.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1897.

No. 1333, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . .	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE methods of the two collaborators who wrote Admiral Guinea, Deacon Brodie, Beau Austin, and Macaire are destined ever to remain in mystery. We shall never know how scene was added to scene, whose hand held the pen in the more memorable passages; because Mr. Stevenson cannot tell and Mr. Henley will not. It was agreed by the partners that these things should be kept secret, but to state one interesting little fact concerning Admiral Guinea is to violate no confidence. The Admiral himself, John Gaunt, once captain of the slave "Arethusa," grew out of the Rev. John Newton, Cowper's friend and spiritual adviser. The Admiral was the germ of the play, and the part author of the Olney Hymns was the germ of the Admiral.

The dedication of Admiral Guinea in its book form is interesting, but tantalising in its vagueness:

DEDICATED WITH AFFECTION AND ESTEEM TO ANDREW LANG BY THE SURVIVORS OF
THE "WALRUS."

SAVANNAH,
This 27th day of September, 1884.
What is the story of the "Walrus"?

MR. KIPLING has, we understand, given permission to Miss Olga Nethersole, the actress, to dramatise his story, The Light that Failed.

THE publication of Captains Courageous suggests to a writer in the Daily News a story of the author which is worth telling again here. When Mr. Rudyard Kipling was a boy of twelve he started (like Harvey Cheyne) on a sea-voyage with his father, Mr. Lockwood Kipling. Soon after the vessel was under way Mr. Lockwood Kipling went below, leaving the boy on deck. Presently there was a great commotion overhead, and one of the ship's officers rushed down and banged at Mr. Kipling's door. "Mr. Kipling," he cried, "your boy has crawled out on the yardarm, and if he lets go he'll drown." "Yes," said Mr. Kipling, glad to know that nothing serious was the matter; "but he won't let go."

THE writer of the condensed appreciation of Mr. Robert Bridges in Mr. Rothenstein's English Portraits is vexed that Mr. Bridges is so little read. "His generation," he says, "hesitates to place him where in heart it feels that he ought to be placed; but the reason for not doing a thing should scarcely be that it ought to be done. The living generation ought to give the signal to posterity." The living generation, as a matter of fact, usually does; but as likely as not its mouth-piece is the minority and not the majority. The minority admires Mr. Bridges intensely. Why the eulogist should wish his verses to be household words we cannot see: the households of the many have poets more to their liking. Mr. Bridges is too severe a stylist, too "classical," for popularity.

WE quote some passages from the little eulogy: "The mass of work already laid silently before the world by this writer is very considerable: in quality it raises the literary character of the age; withal it is wonderfully various. Only one man in the language has shown a greater mastery of methods of the dramatic art, and a stronger spring of sentiment. One of his dramas contains the most ludicrous situation ever invented, another the most pathetic. His sonnets are a collection that will stand among the first three or four, unless his generation befooled posterity by its reticence. His shorter poems are as new an application to nature as photography. To poetry as an art he has rendered special service. The influence of his 'new prosody' is apparent everywhere."

ACCORDING to the recent registrations of the thermometer, the winter is yet far distant, but here, none the less, is the winter number of the Studio, containing an essay by Mr. Gleeson White on "Children's Books and their Illustrators." The subject is a pleasant one, and Mr. White treats it pleasantly. He passes under review illustrated books from the eighteenth century chap-book to the sumptuous gift-book of our own day, and says something pertinent of most of their authors and artists. Naturally, as he gets nearer and nearer to the crowded age we now dwell in, when every publisher aims at the nursery, his task becomes more difficult, and his criticisms more general; but the memoir is pretty reading. We notice some serious omissions—Mr. Edward Lear's droll pencil, for example, might have been represented, and Miss Greenaway does not receive full justice; while among younger artistic reputations we should like to see mention of Mrs. Farmiloe, especially as Mr. White gives some space to the Child's Pictorial, in which her best work has figured. Mr. White, however, has done so well with a difficult undertaking that we will not complain. Doubtless, the reasons for the more notable of his omissions were only too good.

MEANWHILE, we cannot altogether share Mr. Gleeson White's glow of satisfaction at the achievement of English illustrators for children. There are shining lights, it is true—notably Sir John Tenniel and Randolph Caldecott—but the past decade has produced a kind of pictures which, to our mind, leaves much to be desired. The laboured decorative and archaic designs which now do duty for illustrations in so many books nominally intended for children have few of the necessary qualities. So seldom does the artist seem (as, of course he should be, before anything else) thoroughly stirred by the wish to please the child: to make him laugh, or shout, or grow big-eyed with wonder and delight. Prettiness and scholarly arrangement of blacks and whites are useful in attracting the attention of the purchasing parent; but they might be confined to the threshold of the book in favour of something quainter, more whimsical, more comic, or more surprising within.

MR. "PUNCH's" comments upon our suggested list of academicians take the form of a packet of letters from "outsiders." "Among the Roaring Forties; or, the New Menagerie of Letters," is his title. We congratulate him upon it; but we cannot think him inspired in using "The Schoolmaster at Home" as a pseudonym for the "ACADEMY." Nous avons changé tout cela.

WE have not alluded to other newspaper criticism: but jesters are always privileged. Besides, we wish to point out that it would be well if all literary persons wrote as epigrammatically as Mr. "Punch" makes them. Look, for example, at the following scraps:

"The Summit, Hindhead.

"DEAR MR. PUNCH,—

'The mountain sheep are sweeter,
But the valley sheep are fatter.'

You follow me? Yours, till Pisgah,
"GR-NT ALL-N."

"At the Sign of the Aerial Triplets.

"SIR,—Man is a bestial, if necessary, blot upon creation. Could I and similar matrons have our way, he should be soundly smacked. Sexual jealousy, I take it, has kept my name from this arbitrary list. Yet I have just written The Beth Book in the World! It is not for me to say who has written the neeth beth.—Yours, indignantly,
"S-R-H GR-ND."

"P.S.—I exempt you, Mr. Punch, from the spanking assertion with which my letter opens."

"Care of Olio, Parnassus.

"DEAR MR. PUNCH,—I am glad to observe my name among The Forty. I do not, however, altogether subscribe to the other thirty-nine articles.—Yours sceptically,
"W. E. H. L-CKY."

"The Morgue, Paris.

"SIR PUNCH, MISTER,—Hope differed—as one says—makes the oore bilious. Here they will not have me at no price, try all I will. But you, you have the nose fine for merit.

Albeit, in effect, not of Anglo-Saxon provenance, I am traveller. I have made the grand voyage of the Sleeve. See there, then, I speak the English. O yes! Alright. Agree, &c.,
"EM-L- Z-L-."

In the same number we notice a drawing by Mr. G. R. Halkett, which is, to the best of our knowledge, the first contribution of that clever caricaturist to Punch. It takes the form of a portrait of Mr. Barrie in the guise of a Little Minister.

MR. H. G. WELLS's remarkable imaginative novel, The War of the Worlds, will be completed in the December issue of Pearson's Magazine. The story was finished in August of last year. Since then Mr. Wells has rewritten the greater part. He has not made much change in the early portions, but when the story is published in volume form it will be found that the concluding chapters have been revised and pruned, and, when necessary, amplified.

It has been shown again and again that good writers do not always make good editors. That Mr. Barry Pain, who now controls To-Day, will prove a brilliant exception is the wish of the many who appreciate the individual note of his work in prose and verse.

THE Italian poet, Ada Negri, whose voice is now being heard in England, is the subject of an article in the Pall Mall Gazette, from which we take the following suggestive passage:

"She does not fear the dreadful scenes of life and death, of which one might wish that weaker poets had a natural fear, and her audacity is justified by those strong verses called 'Autopsia,' and her conception of the cold anger she attributes to the dead under the surgeon's hand. She must assuredly have taken a lesson here from the terrors of mourner's dreams. For among the dreams that are told by the bereaved there is one they do not tell—the dream of the anger of the dead, a dream hidden in the human mind by who knows what prehistoric fright and primitive misgiving in the men of the early world, who were children, a dream that is the most intolerable when it visits the mind of the civilised and the adult with an increased, a multiplied and spiritualised, yet still pure and primitive distress. If the mind of the poet was ever touched by such a dream of the anger of the dead, she had the genius to hale her captured tremor to the light and keep it there."

"Italian," adds this writer, "cannot well be quoted, as French can be, in an evening paper, and not even French in a morning one; therefore we have to be content with the translation of a phrase or two. This is the lover from the factory running upstairs to the factory girl, 'black with dust, magnificent with love.' 'Mother,' she sings with all her art, 'I wish I might forget I am a poet, and become again a bambina.' When she left the little hut she was 'rich with dreams'; she calls the skylark an 'audacious angel.' This is enough and too much—it does Ada Negri little service to turn these scraps out alone in an alien world."

COUNT LEO TOLSTOI has already appeared before the world as a teacher of religion, of politics, and of political economy, and he has put forth certain advanced views on music in his Kreutzer Sonata. We are now led to expect him in the character of art critic. It is rumoured that Count Tolstoi is working on a new book, of some bulk, into which he has been putting for the last seven or eight years his matured thoughts on the nature and function of Art. It may be surmised, without much rashness, that Count Tolstoi's views, when they are known, will be found to clash less with Mr. Ruskin's than with those of the Art-for-Art's-sake school of critics.

THE old Marshalsea Prison is supposed by most people to have disappeared utterly years ago; but it seems that some fragments of the building still remain for the crowbar to tear down. A scheme promoted by the London County Council to continue Tabard Street into the High Street, past the east end of St. George's Church, will sweep the Marshalsea, with its memories of Little Dorrit and of Mr. and Mrs. Micawber, into real oblivion. A tablet, however, is placed on a neighbouring warehouse to remind Americans of the sacredness of the ground.

MRS. CRAIGIE's novel, The School for Saints, will be published next Wednesday. Disraeli appears as one of the characters. The book also contains a sketch of General Prim, the Commander-in-Chief of the Spanish Army, who was assassinated at Madrid in 1870. The sub-title is "Part of the History of the Right Honourable Robert Orange, M.P." The story of Orange's married life, of his literary and political life in 1870-1880, of his friendship with Disraeli, and of his career in the Church will be told in a subsequent volume.

In reply to a correspondent who asks if the metre used by FitzGerald in his translation of "Omar Khayyâm" has been employed by any other poet, we draw attention particularly to Mr. J. W. Mackail's beautiful narrative poem "Odysseus in Phœacia," or, as it was called on its first appearance in Love in Idleness, that fragrant little book, "In Scheria."

ONE of the commonest statements with regard to Tom Brown's Schooldays is that the boy Arthur was drawn from Dean Stanley. A correspondent of the Spectator, Mr. F. W. Dobson, writes as follows concerning this matter: "It may not be uninteresting to place on record Tom Hughes's own words with reference to the character of Arthur in Tom Brown. In reply to my query he wrote: 'The character of Arthur was not drawn directly from Dean Stanley, but in several respects he might have sat for it.'"

THE negro poet, Mr. Paul Lawrence Dunbar—who came to England this year on a reciting tour, and has since published Lyrics of Lowly Life—has received a post in the Congressional Library at Washington. This appointment strikes us as being a very graceful act on the part of those in authority.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. will publish shortly a book entitled Picturesque Dublin, Old and New.

FROM Germany and elsewhere comes, not for the first time, a disturbing story to the effect that the printing papers in general use to-day are of such inferior substance that they cannot be trusted to last more than one hundred years. A representative of the ACADEMY accordingly called at the British Museum to gather, if possible, Dr. Garnett's opinion. He writes: "I followed an attendant round the corridor which encircles the Reading Room immediately behind the bookshelves. It is a curious place, this corridor, with its grid-iron floor and ceiling, through which, looking up, you see men's soles and, down, men's heads. There is something strange, too, in the cold, metallic sound of one's foot-falls in these streets of bookshelves."

We were walking down the stately King's Library when suddenly my guide turned sharply to the right between two of the exhibition cases which flank the room. I thought his attention had been caught by the titles of some of the stately books in the great glazed cases which line the walls; but, to my amazement, a section of these shelves, with its books, glass, oak, and all, fell back, and I walked through what had just appeared to be an impenetrable wall of literature. A few seconds later I was explaining my mission to the Keeper of the Printed Books.

Dr. Garnett told me that the British Museum collection had not yet furnished any example of deteriorating paper. 'I am, however,' he added, 'much interested in the subject, and I am a member of a committee of the Society of Arts which has lately been formed for the purpose of inquiring into the subject of untrustworthy paper. I feel, however, that in attending its meetings I shall go to learn facts rather than to contribute them; for, as I have said, we have found nothing in the British Museum to support the theory that many papers and periodicals will rot in their binding within a hundred years of publication. I think we shall know more about this in twenty years, when the supposed action of chemicals and deterioration of wood-pulp have had time to manifest themselves.'

"If it should be proved to be true that modern paper is so short-lived, you would consider it a very serious matter?"

"I should indeed. The interest and importance of great masses of current literature will hardly be felt for three or four hundred years, and posterity clearly will have little to thank us for if our periodicals crumble to the touch, and cheat the historical student of their contents."

"But at present any alarm on this score is premature?"

"Speaking strictly from our experience at the British Museum, I should say it is premature. In twenty years' time I think we shall know more."

"Dr. Garnett courteously showed me to the door by which I had entered. One moment I had his kindly smile; the next moment the site of that smile was occupied by Sidney's Arcadia, delicately tooled."

EXCURSIONS IN CRITICISM.

VI.—CRASHAW.

STRANGE are both the commissions and omissions of this day, in which an uncritical zeal for the poets of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries has stimulated reprint upon reprint. It seems to be enough for editorial zeal that a poet should have been born in one of those privileged centuries; and he shall find republication. Not alone Campion and other minor lyrists of merit, but even a wielder of frigid conceits like Henry Constable finds his editor—nay, is issued with all the pomp of sumptuous decorative ensemble. Yet, while editors search among the dross of these ages for poets to revive, they neglect the gold. Else how comes it that while Henry Vaughan finds reprint, his worthy yokefellow, Crashaw, is passed by? How comes it that Cowley is inaccessible yet to modern readers? Eminent modern poets have singled Crashaw as a man of genius and a source of inspiration. Coleridge declared that Crashaw's "Hymn to St. Teresa" was present to his mind while he was writing the second part of "Christabel"; "if, indeed, by some subtle process of the mind, they did not suggest the first thought of the whole poem." The influence of Crashaw is to be traced in the "Unknown Eros": notably and conspicuously in the "Sponsa Dei." Dr. Grosart's edition, in the Fuller's Worthies Library, was printed only for private circulation, and, indeed, its price from the beginning placed it beyond reach of the ordinary reader. Yet this admirable edition has made the paths straight for a reprint addressed to the general reader; so that there is no excuse in difficulty for further neglect.

As a step towards the complete edition I welcome gladly Mr. Tutin's partial reprint, just issued by William Andrews & Co. Called by the name of the first poem in the volume, "Carmen Deo Nostro," it is really a reprint of the selection from his sacred poems which Crashaw himself issued in 1652—an excessively rare edition. Mr. Tutin's reprint of it is excellent, and very carefully corrected; and I can only hope it will stimulate—say, Messrs. Lawrence & Bullen, in their Muses' Library—to give us a full edition of Crashaw equally correct and careful. This reprint really contains all Crashaw's sacred poems worth having; but we inevitably miss from it his secular poems; the lovely "Wishes to a Supposed Mistress," the "Love's Horoscope," the two or three exquisitely felicitous epitaphs, and the wonderful paraphrase of Strada's "Musician and Nightingale"—to name the chief.

Lyric poetry is a very inclusive term. It includes Milton and Herrick, Burns and Shelley, "Tintern Abbey" and "The Grecian Urn," the odes of Coventry Patmore and the songs of Tennyson. But its highest form—that which is to other lyric forms what the epic is to the narrative poem or the ballad—is the form typically represented by the ode. This order of lyric may again be divided into such lyrics as are distinguished by stately structure, and such as are distinguished by arduous abandonment. In the former kind ardour may be present, though under the continual curb of the structure; and this is the highest species of the lyric. In the latter kind the ardour is naked and predominant: it is to the former kind what the flight of the skylark is to the flight of the eagle. The conspicuous first appearance of the former kind in English poetry was the monumental "Epithalamion" of Spenser. Ardour cannot, as a rule, be predicated of Spenser; but there is ardour of the most ethereal impulse, equi-poised throughout with the most imperial and imperious structure. For the development of the latter kind English poetry had to await the poet of "Prometheus Unbound." But its first, almost unnoticed and unperfected appearance, was in the work of Richard Crashaw. His age gave the preference to Cowley, in whose odes there is unlimited ostentation of dominating ardour without the reality, the result being mere capricious and unmeaning dislocation of form. Too much of the like is there in Crashaw; but every now and again he ascends into real fervour, such as makes metre and diction plastic to its own shaping spirit of inevitable rightness. This is the eminent praise of Crashaw, that he marks an epoch, a turn of the tide in English lyric, though the crest of the tide was not to come till long after, though—like all first innovators—he not only suffered present neglect, but has been overshadowed by those who came a century after him.

He is fraught with suggestion—infinite suggestion. More than one poet has drawn much from him, yet much remains to be drawn. But it is not only for poets he exists. Those who read for enjoyment can find in him abundant delight, if they will be content (as they are content with Wordsworth) to grope through his plenteous infelicity. He is no poet of the human and household emotions; he has not pathos, or warm love, or any of the qualities which come home to the natural kindly race of men. But how fecund is his brilliant imagery, rapturous ethereality. He has, at his best, an extraordinary cunning of diction, cleaving like gold-leaf to its object. In such a poem as "The Musician and the Nightingale" (not in this volume included) the marvel of diction becomes even too conscious; in the moment of wondering at the miracle, we feel that the miracle is too researched: it is the feat of an amazing gymnast in words rather than of an unpremeditating angel. Yet this poem is an extraordinary verbal achievement, and there are numerous other examples in which the miracle seems as unconscious as admirable.

For an example of his sacred poems, take the "Nativity," which has less deforming conceit than most. Very different from Milton's great Ode, which followed it, yet it has its own characteristic beauty. The shepherds sing it turn by turn—as thus:

"Gloomy night embraced the place
Where the noble Infant lay.
The Babe looked up and showed His face;
In spite of darkness, it was day.
It was Thy day, Sweet! and did rise,
Not from the East, but from Thine eyes."

Here is seen one note of Crashaw—the human and lover-like tenderness which informs his sacred poems, differentiating them from the conventional style of English sacred poetry, with its solemn aloofness from celestial things.

"I saw the curled drops, soft and slow
Come hovering o'er the place's head;
Offering their whitest sheets of snow
To furnish the fair Infant's bed:
Forbear, said I; be not too bold,
Your fleece is white, but 'tis too cold.

"I saw the obsequious Seraphim
Their rosy fleece of fire bestow,
For well they now can spare their wing.
Since heaven itself lies here below.
Well done, said I; but are you sure
Your down so warm will pass for pure?"

In the second stanza is shown the fire of his fancy; in "The curled drops," &c., the happiness of his diction. In "The Weeper" (a poem on the Magdalen), amid stanzas of the most frigid conceit, are others of the loveliest art in conception and expression:

"The dew no more will weep
The primrose's pale cheek to deck:
The dew no more will sleep
Nuzzled in the Lily's neck;
Much rather would it be thy tear,
And leave them both to tremble here.

"Not in the Evening's eyes
When they red with weeping are
For the Sun that dies,
Sits Sorrow with a face so fair.
Nowhere but here did ever meet
Sweetness so sad, sadness so sweet."

Two more alien poets could not be conceived than Crashaw and Browning. Yet in the last couplet of these most exquisite stanzas we have a direct coincidence with Browning's line—

"Its sad in sweet, its sweet in sad."

In the "Hymn to St. Teresa" are to be found the most beautiful delicacies of language and metre. Listen to this (apropos of Teresa's childish attempt to run away and become a martyr among the Moors):

"She never undertook to know
What Death with Love should have to do;
Nor has she e'er yet understood
Why to show love she should shed blood;
Yet though she cannot tell you why,
She can love, and she can die."

Among the poems not contained in this volume, the wonderfully dainty "Wishes to a Supposed Mistress" shows what Crashaw might have been as an amative poet:

"Whoe'er she be,
That not impossible She,
That shall command my heart and me;

"Where'er she lie,
Shut up from mortal eye
In shady leaves of Destiny."

And so on through a series of unequal but often lovely stanzas. So, too, does "Love's Horoscope." His epitaphs are among the sweetest and most artistic even of that age, so cunning in such kind of verse. For instance, that on a young gentleman:

"Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues,
And there be words not made with lungs—
Sententious showers; O let them fall!
Their cadence is rhetorical!"

But, to come back to the poems contained in Mr. Tutin's book, with what finer example can I end than the close of "The Flaming Heart," Crashaw's second hymn to St. Teresa?—

"Oh, thou undaunted daughter of desires!
By all thy dower of lights and fires;
By all the eag's in thee, all the dove;
By all thy lives and deaths of love;
By thy large draughts of intellectual day,
And by thy thirsts of love more large than they;
By all thy brim-filled bowls of fierce desire,
By thy last morning's draught of liquid fire;
By the full kingdom of that final kiss,
That seized thy parting soul, and sealed thee His;
By all the Heaven thou hast in Him
(Fair Sister of the seraphim!)
By all of Him we have in thee;
Leave nothing of myself in me.
Let me so read thy life, that I
Unto all life of mine may die."

It has all the ardour and brave-soaring transport of the highest lyrical inspiration.

FRANCIS THOMPSON.

HUBERT CRACKANTHORPE.*

To the critic who reviewed Sentimental Studies in the ACADEMY, Mr. Crackanthorpe wrote thus:

"I needn't tell you of the pleasure that your generous praise gives me; but it is for your stimulating criticism that I am especially grateful. You have formulated certain faults, of which, for some time past, I had been feeling obscurely conscious. I feel that you have done me an immense service, and for this I want, if I may, to thank you with all my heart. Other critics may be kind: you make me eager for work."

Eager for work! Saddening words to read now, but then most true; and I quote them because they sound the note of his literary character. He took his literary life, as he took travel, movement, the open air, with an eager animation and delighted energy. It was a buoyant passion, virile and rejoicing. He loved his art, its difficulties and demands, as a swordsman loves the chivalrous dangers of war. His labours were loyal, and their result will abide.

He published Wreckage: Seven Studies, in 1893; Sentimental Studies and A Set of Village Tales in 1895; Vignettes: a Miniature Journal of Whim and Sentiment, in 1896, the year of his early death. This year gives us his Last Studies, introduced with a poignant poem by Mr. Stopford Brooke and an appreciation of subtle delicacy by Mr. Henry James. A brief record of accomplishment, but the finer, the firmer, the more successful for its very scantiness—the patient pains of an anxious and unhurrying artist. Of Wreckage and its title I may say, what Barbey d'Aurevilly said of Les Fleurs du Mal: "M. Baudelaire, qui les a cueillies et recueillies, n'a pas dit que ces Fleurs du Mal étaient belles, qu'elles sentaient bon, qu'il fallait en orner son front, en emplir ses mains, et que c'était là la sagesse. Au contraire, en les nommant, il les a flétries." So of the seven stories in Wreckage, with their helpless misery and grim irony—"en les nommant, il les a flétries." Wrecked lives, lost hopes, beaten efforts, broken purposes are not the staple of the world, but its waste. Why, then, ask some, choose themes of barren gloom, and portray them pitilessly with a triumphant, swift fidelity of phrase, as if delighted to deal with squalid vice, and sordid grief, and tragic folly? Even were this wholly true, I should yet see in these stories nothing more censurable than that pathetic, unconscious cruelty so common in young writers; and, again, the sick and sorry sides of life are easier to see, more insistent and noticeable, than are the quiet and serene: they are salient, and spring to the eyes. But to write with an unfaltering firmness about dark things, with no word of personal feeling to relieve the facts presented thus keenly—is that endurable? Distinguo. One writer shall tell a tale, with no hint of any such word, and draw from you all the tears, the thoughts of charity and pity, for which he has not directly called; another shall tell the same tale, with a like impersonality, and you will feel outraged, nauseated, befouled. For there are writers whose choice phrases are as blows in the face: they eschew the seemly and pursue the vile; they parade and flaunt their laborious brutalities; they are nasty, but of an absurd and petty nastiness. Impersonal though they be, yet they cry from every page how Mephistophelian is their instinct for corruption, what well-sounded cynics they are. But Mr. Crackanthorpe was just and refined, never forcing the note; there are delicacy, distinction, discretion in his quiet fearlessness of manner. He makes no researches into the black mire of life, resolved to be at all costs a master in the science and secrets of the sewer. The brief stories of Wreckage, written in so fresh and pure an English, so clear and crisp a style, are uniformly sad, but of no sickening sadness; no scene is drawn, no character imagined, no phrase chosen for its naked horror of ugliness or gloom. Take "The Struggle for Life." In less than six pages we have the story of a poor woman selling herself in the street for the pittance which will buy her starving babies food, while her brutal husband riots with prostitutes in a pothouse. We say, with Rossetti, that "it makes a goblin of the sun." Let us say also with him:

"So it is, my dear.
All such things touch secret strings
For heavy hearts to hear.
So it is, my dear."

The terrible rapid pages are full of an aching poignancy. The straightforward sentences hide an inner appeal. The telling of the misery becomes a thing of dreadful beauty, and in its intensity goes nearer to the heart of the whole dark matter than many a moving sermon. The artist's abstemiousness in Mr. Crackanthorpe, the refinement of his reticence, never chilled his reader. "The pity of it! The pity of it!" That was always the unspoken yet audible burden of his art. A reverence for high things, a pitifulness over their ruin or perversion, lie always latent beneath the severely faithful phrases. Never do we seem to overhear the morose or saturnine chuckle, "Such is life"; but always a suggestion of life's strange possibilities, anomalies, if you will, "little ironies." A vivacious, fascinated stirring wonder at life's strangeness may give an air of indifference and equanimity amid matter perilous for handling; but this is not the callousness and the coarseness of cynicism, its cheap insolence and contempt. Sentimental Studies showed a change, rather than a strict development. They are more spacious and elaborate, richer worded and of an ampler rhythm. Mr. Crackanthorpe had three chief gifts: skill in dramatic narration—a sense of situation, a lively feeling for the value and interpretation of gesture, posture, circumstance; secondly, analytic skill in the conception and presentment of character; thirdly, descriptive and pictorial power, readiness of vision, with a faculty of sifting and selecting its reports. In Wreckage, the first was paramount, the second sparsely used, the third used with singular restraint and vividness. The visible world of nature and man was presented by swift flashes, as though to match the nervous, tense play of dramatic episode and action. The stories went with an austere celerity, a kind of suppressed exhilaration of power. The longest of the Sentimental Studies, rich as it is in good things, has yet its longueurs—pages which do not bite and grip, after the fashion of Wreckage, while their sedulous psychology, their dextrous searchings into the motives of acts and the significances of emotions, are disproportionate to the interest of the situation. The writer's descriptions also waver between his earlier, electric, instantaneous vision and a new, patient, solicitous fulness of detail. The book contained admirable work; but its scenes and episodes in miniature were its chief excellence, rather than its more elaborate essays. His longest performance, the last story in the posthumous Last Studies, shows that he had it in him to use all his gifts harmoniously upon an ample scale; but it is probable that stories upon the scale of "A Conflict of Egoisms" in Wreckage, of "Battledore and Shuttlecock" in Sentimental Studies, and of the masterly "Trevor Perkins" in Last Studies, would have remained the happiest and most distinctive channels of his art. In some thirty pages he was master of his ironic phases of life, and could portray them with a compassionate humour playing over their disillusionments and pitiable futilities. Emphatically, his was not embittered pessimism, but a kind of haunting melancholy set at the heart of things, their dominant note; he wrote of it without protest, as without exaggeration. Vignettes, largely his most personal book, has no jaded Byronism nor weary Wertherism; its pages are full of joyousness and buoyancy. But there steals in the note of distrust in the stability of happiness; the sense, as he goes through the world, that this delight and that pleasure are fatally precarious. And this sense leavens his "cruellest" work with something of gentleness and consideration. "Trevor Perkins" is almost intolerably successful in its method: that shopman so futile, that shopgirl so commonplace; his fragmentary self-culture in "advanced thought" and "modern ideas," her entire absorption in frivolous, innocent vulgarities; the conjunction of the impossible couple, the pitiable absurdity of it all, its touching and exasperating hopelessness; all this is swiftly shown as in a masterpiece of compassion, which contains no compassionate word, and seems to invite our contempt. "Cruel" such work may be: but it is a curiously tender cruelty. And, indeed, with all his passion for his art, his strenuous wrestlings with its difficulties, this was a cordial writer and a very human: he smiles at his creatures, so weakly and foredoomed, as they play their parts in the divine and human comedy. He understands their obscure griefs and troubles, like those of a child; the strain of unsatisfied desire and dim want that runs through even the best of life. There was chivalry in the creator of Maurice Radford and Anthony Garstin, both willing to bear shame undeserved for a woman's sake: there is something not wholly ignoble in the Cumbrian parson's fever fit of passion. There is sorrow, but nothing of unworthiness, in this note from Vignettes, made by the Bay of Salerno.

* Last Studies. By Hubert Crackanthorpe. (Heinemann.)

"To gaze across the black sweep of sea, on into the mystery of the night; to hear the restless waves slowly sighing through the darkness, as they beat the rocks a thousand feet beneath; to love a little so, with quiet pressure of hands, and listlessly to ponder on strange meanings of life and love and death.

"And so, amid a still serenity of dreamy sadness, to forget the mad turmoil of passion, to grow indifferent to all desire, while the heart fills full of grave gratitude towards an unknown God.

"And then, once more, to understand how life is but a little thing, and love but a passionate illusion, and to envy the sea her sighing in the days when the end shall have come."

Side by side with passages of grim, quick irony in this writer's work come passages of a quiet lyrical melancholy and compassion: reveries full of a wistful gentleness, far too moving to be but youth's literary habit or mood of sadness. This never failed him, when he wrote of the "little ones" of the earth, toilers in the fields and in obscure village places; it breaks in upon his portraits of great cities astir with noise and business and sin. From first to last—so mournfully brief, so early closed, a period!—his writing had in it soul, an high distinction of temperament, which, with his technical power and pains, makes us feel certain of how much was lost to literature in the loss of him. Heu, miserande puer! si qua fata aspera rumpas! "Born for the future, to the future lost!" We can say but that, with the especial pain of desiderium. But that his accomplished work, whatever be its shortcomings and flaws, will not fall into the obscurity of neglect, is the conviction of many beside those friends to whom, by a generous and gracious gift, for a treasured possession and memorial, are dedicated "these last fragments of his interrupted work."

LIONEL JOHNSON.

WHAT THE PEOPLE READ.

V.—AN OMNIBUS DRIVER.

"FREE Libries! Free Libries!" he said, with a poke of the whip and a jerk of the head. "Free Libries, supported by the people and enjoyed by the people; go in when yer like and stay as long as yer like, and when you've got 'em, why where are yer? On the top of a 'bus all day; and the most you can see of a Free Libry is the outside, and that ain't much to look at."

He was a cheerful, garrulous driver, and had talked all the way from Piccadilly-circus, passing men and manners in review. But the sight of four or five demure young women coming out of the Free Library in the Old Brompton-road had switched his monologue from the treatment of motor-cars to the discussion of literature; and with the stimulus of an occasional note of exclamation from me his discourse flowed with scarcely an interruption till we reached the Earl's Court-road.

Reading? Oh, yes; as to reading, there wasn't any man that held with a bit of reading more than what he did. See him with the People when he had a Sunday off. Why, you couldn't get him away from it. Full of rich bits, it was, and it was a standing marvel where they got them all from. There wasn't any time for reading on a 'bus, especially with these bicycles about, and motor-cars, and the roads up every other week; but a chap could get a look at the paper down at that end—he nodded towards West Kensington—and nine times out of ten there was a gent on the 'bus, just where I might be, that had an evening paper he'd done with; and I took the hint with becoming promptitude. But books? The suggestion gave him a moment's pause. And then the discourse flowed again. Oh, yes, he'd read a lot in books when he was at school; all about Queen Elizabeth—1588, he added, with a reminiscent shake of the head—and he had a tidy lot of books at home that he'd picked up here and there, Barnes's Notes on the Four Gospels among them, and a book he had bought in penny parts, that was like a dictionary—told you all about everything. Ah! there was a lot of books—he dared say there was a book written pretty nigh every day—but they didn't come his way, and, any way, they weren't his line; a man had to earn his living; and he couldn't keep a wife and three children reading books. Yes, there were three youngsters, all boys, the eldest thirteen, and just gone into a gentleman's family, but sleeping at home. Oh! they didn't care about books; but stories—Lord! you should see them when he had an evening free. Well, they were books when you came to talk sense. There was the Swiss Family Robinson that he'd had ever since he wasn't higher than them railings, and the youngsters liked hearing him read that better than their prizes, and they'd got a lot of prizes, mind you! And there was another book that he'd been given by the parson's daughter at Luton, because he knew such a lot of poetry; "A wet sheet and a flowing sea" he had recited, and "For ever, never, never, for ever," and the parson's daughter she got married—somewhere in the Injies—and— Ever hear of that book? About Jack—and Peterkin—and they got wrecked on an island? You should see how the youngsters liked it! And there was Bloody Bill—

"Ah! I said, "I know that book. It's called The Coral Island, and it was written by Henry Kingsley."

That might be; anyhow, if you saw him reading that to the youngsters, well, you wouldn't know him, hardly. Meredith? Hardy? No, he hadn't heard of them. Were they books—or stories? Kipling? Yes, he had heard something about him but he hadn't come his way yet. Anthony Hope? Seemed to have heard the name somewhere. But, Lord! a man who had to earn his living couldn't do much else.

"Ah! Free Libries!" he said, as we stopped at the corner of the Earl's Court-road. "Them horses knows better than to stop at a Free Libry." With one hand he untwisted the half-penny evening paper with which I had supplied him. With the other he accepted the glass which an aproned potman brought from the adjacent tavern.

"Pulled it off this time?" asked the potman. He handed down the glass without a word, but with two coppers inside it, and the evening paper as well. The conductor sounded his bell, and the 'bus started again. "There's some chaps," he said, "does too much reading. It ain't 'ealthy to read too much."

PRINTERS' ERRORS.

A NEW ANTHOLOGY.

WE suppose that there is nothing joyous or amusing in a printer's error as such. It is a check and an annoyance when you discover it in time. When you do not, and it goes into print, it becomes a type of sin. For there it remains, inexpugnable, unforgettable! One printer's error, or three, in an article—which is the most annoying? It would be hard to say. A single mistake, and that mistake confined to a single letter, may pursue you through crowded mart and busy street, and go to bed with you for a whole week. Mr. Charles T. Jacobi, who has just issued an amusing collection of printers' errors and facetiae, under the title of Gesta Typographica (Elkin Mathews), tells us that a French writer committed suicide when he found three hundred printer's errors in a work he had carefully revised. The mistakes were all the work of a too zealous proof-reader. Very illogically, he refrained from murdering the reader, and took his own life instead. It must be allowed on his behalf that no kind of error is so maddening to a writer as the inserted error. It is hard to forgive a printer's reader who does not save you from ignominy when you have passed an obvious mis-spelling; but it is ten times harder to forgive the reader who turns critic at the eleventh hour, and revises your composition as it goes to machine. Mr. William Black has told us how the printers insisted, after he had made the correction three times, on making one of his heroines die of "opinion" instead of "opium." "What is this," exclaimed a compositor who was expecting to be promoted to a readership shortly: "'Sermons in stones, books in the running brooks!' Impossible! He means, of course, 'Sermons in books, and stones in the running brooks.'" And a new reading of Shakespeare appeared next morning. Asporting compositor thought "Cricket on the Hearth" must be a slip of the pen. He made it "Cricket on the Heath," and, says Mr. Jacobi, who must have his wheeze, "another gray hair was added to the editor's whitening head." A writer on angling had the joy of seeing his sentence, "the young salmon are beginning to run," printed "the young salmon are beginning to swim"; another thoughtful compositor having been at work. Happier was the transformation of the sentence, "Bring me my toga," into "Bring me my togs."

We strike a less subtle vein of humour in the story of the editor who wrote during an election: "The battle is now opened"; the compositor spelt "battle" with an "o," and the other side said, of course, that they had suspected it from the first. It was by a similar mistake that the late Baker Pasha, who might fairly be described as a "battle-scarred veteran," was called a "battle-scare veteran," the libel being by no means purged when the newspaper called the gallant officer a "bottle-scarred veteran." Some of Mr. Jacobi's stories are to be taken cum grano salis; or, what is the same thing, they are to be considered as coming, vaguely, from "the provinces"; but the stories that need most salt need least apology. Owing to an error in printing, the announcement, "A sailor, going to sea, his wife desires the prayers of the congregation," became "A sailor going to see his wife desires the prayers of the congregation." It is not necessary to believe this in order to enjoy it. The statement, "Messrs. —'s Preserves cannot be beaten," was rather vitiated as an advertisement by the omission of "b" in the last word. "Decidedly unpleasant" was the typographical error which made a portion of certain wedding invitations read, "Your presents are requested." They were desired, no doubt, but "Your presence is requested" was the intended message. More innocently gay was the newspaper report which said that the London express had knocked down a cow and cut it into "calves."

Mr. Jacobi tells his stories with trimmings galore, none perhaps very new. There are, for instance, certain dismissal stories. "You've ruined me," said the Editor; "I wrote that when Mrs. — lectured on dress she wore nothing that was remarkable. You have printed it: 'She wore nothing. That was remarkable!'" Get your money and go." Howbeit, compositors are not dismissed for mistakes of that kind. A manager can hardly dismiss a man who has merely added to the gaiety of "the provinces." To many people the abundance of printers' errors is still a mystery. It would cease to be so if they paid a daily visit to a composing room for one week. The dim light, the oppressive air, and the delirious handwritings with which a compositor has to contend are explanation enough. Mere man cannot reduce chaos to order at one stroke, and to reduce chaos to order is the compositor's perpetual task. No wonder he ranks badly in the tables of longevity. No wonder if he is missed at his case some foggy morning, like the poor "comp." of whom his own companions declared, in a trade organ, that they had "docked his beer," when, alas! it was his "bier" they had "decked."

THE BOOK MARKET.

BOOK HUNGER IN THE EAST END.

ON a November night, when the fog is rolling up from Essex, and the coloured lamps of the tramcars slide like ships' lights into the gloom, the Mile End-road is the place in which to feel the vastness of London. Suddenly, breaking the miles of brick, the People's Palace is beaming on your left. Its outstanding clock-tower, electrically lighted approaches, and mosaics of warmly coloured bills announcing classes, concerts, meetings, and what not, make it a village of light. Three nights ago I sought the secretary, Mr. C. E. Osborn, and he was good enough to tell me something about the Palace Library. I was surprised to find that it is not a lending library.

"No; we have not come to that," said Mr. Osborn, as we walked through a gorgeous show of chrysanthemums grown in the back gardens of Stepney, Poplar, and Canning Town; "but you are aware, perhaps, that we are in treaty with the Vestry of Mile End Old Town for the conversion of the library into a Public Free Library for Mile End."

"Yes, I have heard something of the kind. What is the position?" I asked, as we entered the large octagonal library. I was surprised by its handsome architectural features. The room is arranged somewhat on the plan of the British Museum Reading Room, but it is of course smaller; and not much provision is made for writing. Newspaper stands encircle the room; within there are tables for readers; and the innermost circle is occupied by the librarian's desk and counter. A high gallery runs round the building, giving access to the bookshelves by attendants; and every now and again you are astonished to see a substantial mahogany box travel from the circumferential gallery down to the centre of the room. It suggests levitation, precipitation, and Mahatmas, until you perceive a wire. By this device for conveying books from the shelves to the counter, where they are awaited by readers, much labour is saved. I have said the room is architecturally handsome; it is also fairly well supplied with pictures, among which Mr. F. Goodall, R.A.'s large painting, "By the Sea of Galilee," has a conspicuous place. Moreover, I shall have to visit the People's Palace again, if only to study a splendid old map of East London of a hundred years ago, or, at least, of a date when to speak of Mile End Old Town would not have seemed an anachronism. Each angle of the octagon is adorned with a bust. The eight men thus honoured in the People's Palace Library are Johnson, Milton, Shakespeare, Chaucer, Dryden, Scott, Wordsworth, and Byron. I gathered from Mr. Osborn that the trustees of the Palace are anxious to take advantage of the fact that the inhabitants of Mile End Old Town have demanded a Free Lending Library. The trustees would like to place this large and well-adapted room at the disposal of the Vestry, together with its 13,000 books, for £100 a year. In this sum would be included payment for lighting, heating, and cleaning. The Vestry, or certain members, raise objections, and the negotiations are somewhat dragging. Meanwhile, the East End people pour through the library turnstiles all day and all evening, and testify by their numbers to the hunger for good reading which prevails down East.

"Well, then," I said to Mr. Osborn, "this is not a lending library; and the reading that is done here is done at these tables, by the people whom I see occupying them now?"

"That is so. The reading is done here."

"Can you give me an idea of the kind of books which are called for in a single typical week?"

"Certainly," and Mr. Osborn placed in my hands a carefully kept book from which I took the following figures. These show the number of books called for in the various departments of literature, in one week, by the People's Palace readers.

Fiction...	444
Science...	30
History...	29
Miscellaneous...	29
General Reference...	23
Fine Arts...	22
Travels...	20
Technological...	18
Biography...	16
Poetry...	15
English Literature...	14
Philosophy...	12
Mathematics...	12
Theology...	10
Languages...	10

Total 704

Mr. Osborn gave me to understand that the demand for poetry in the above week was unusually heavy for some reason: "We have very little demand for Poetry, as a general rule."

"And how many people come here in a week?"

"Ten thousand and more. Of course, a great many come only to read the papers and periodicals. We are open, you know, on Sundays after three o'clock; and a great many lonely men and women come here then, to kill time. We have a big rush every morning when we open at half-past eight. Hundreds of men are then taking the breakfast hour, and are anxious to see the morning paper."

"I see that you have been compelled to place a notice up warning readers of the legal consequences of malicious injury to property."

"Yes; I am sorry to say it has been necessary, though the cases of such injury have not been many, considering that anybody may walk in here at his pleasure. Advertisements are cut out of newspapers; it is rarely anything worse than that. About twelve months ago a page of the Daily Chronicle used to disappear morning after morning—always the same page—and it vanished with clockwork regularity. I had a watch kept; and we had to make a police-court example of the offender. The curious thing was, that the man offered no sort of excuse for his depredations."

"Are you able to keep the library supplied with the newer literature?"

"No, I am sorry to say we are not. We are about four years behindhand. The fact is, that the library suffers by reason of the great cost of other departments. We have technical classes for two or three thousand men and boys, and the maintenance of these is a very costly matter. The library is undoubtedly pinched; and that is one reason why I am anxious to see it converted into a Public Lending Library under the Act."

W. W.

THE PUBLISHING SEASON.

SOME INTERESTING FIGURES.

THE Author has a very good statistician on its staff. This writer has just made an analysis of the books of this season. The results are interesting, and we make the following abstract of the very full table published by our contemporary. Here, for example, are the totals of various classes of books newly published or now in preparation.

Theological	...	...	221
Classical	...	...	181
Mathematics	...	...	54
Scientific	...	...	214
History and Biography	...	...	243
Essays	...	...	20
Poetry	...	...	86
Fiction	...	...	506
Drama	...	...	23
Architecture	...	...	17
Art	...	...	31
Music	...	...	3
Letters and Reminiscences	...	...	71
Children's Books	...	...	178
Literature	...	...	45
Sports	...	...	48

Total ... 1,941

Our contemporary's figures also show the number of books issued by respective firms. Here is the list of firms issuing more than fifty books this autumn:

Macmillan & Co.	...	93
Cambridge University Press	...	92
Cassell & Co.	...	74
Chatto & Windus	...	70
Swan Sonnenschein & Co.	...	66
Clarendon Press	...	64
Longmans, Green & Co.	...	61
Methuen & Co.	...	59
Sampson Low, Marston & Co.	...	57
W. Heinemann	...	56
Bliss, Sands & Co.	...	54
S. W. Partridge	...	53

Apropos of the ever-growing list of new publishers, the writer remarks: "There are now sixty-five on the list. It is beginning, in fact, to be found out that publishing is about the best business going."

AN ACADEMY OF LETTERS.

FURTHER CORRESPONDENCE.

[In his letter last week Mr. G. Bernard Shaw remarked: "I think an Academy of Letters should consist exclusively of men of letters—that is to say, men who write for the sake of writing, and not men who use the pen solely in order to convey information or spread ideas." In the letter that follows Mr. Shaw expands this idea by our request.]

SIR,—All that is necessary in order to get your Academy composed exclusively of men of letters is to strike out of your list about sixteen names of eminent men or popular novelists and dramatists who are clearly not eligible, and replace them with the best sixteen of the names which have been suggested by your correspondents; and even then you will be astonished at the obviousness of some of the men whom both you and your correspondents have overlooked. For instance, F. J. Furnivall, W. M. Rossetti, and Buxton Forman. No man has such a record to show for disinterested hard work, both as practical literary scholar and militant propagandist of literature as Furnivall: to omit him would be to take the side of the literary snobs and fainéants against the literary doers and fighters. Again, there is Prof. Robert Tyrrell, an almost glaringly eligible academician, whom nobody has mentioned. There is Mr. W. S. Lilly, who should be included for many reasons. There is Mr. Ellis, the author of the Shelley Concordance; and Mr. Thomas Tyler, who has done most of the real work that has been accomplished in reading the riddle of Shakespeare's Sonnets, and divined the rest. There is Mr. Rowbotham, whose History of Music marked him out as a literary virtuoso of the first order. The claims of Mr. Churton Collins are pretty evident; and Mr. Frank Harris is only disqualified by the need for keeping him outside to take the custodians into custody on occasion. Add those names suggested by your correspondents, which you clearly omitted only by oversight: Dr. Garnett, of the British Museum, Stopford Brooke, Frederic Harrison, Theodore Watts-Dunton, Vernon Lee, Mr. Sidney Lee, editor of the Dictionary of National Biography (who ought to be a member ex officio), and Prof. Dowden; and you have your sixteen replacers for the sixteen least eligible in your own list, with as many more suggestions still available to save you from having to fall back on the flagrant misuse of your chairs as superfluous booty for people who have written famous books. I see that Captain Mahan has been suggested: the wonder is that Lord Roberts escaped, so little do most professional authors seem to understand what is meant by an Academy of Letters.

A very obvious politician, whom nobody seems to have thought of, is Mr. Leonard Courtney. If Sir Charles Dilke, Mr. Balfour, and Lord Rosebery are included—and I see no reason why they should not be—Mr. H. M. Hyndman has parallel claims, in addition to that of being a very brilliant penman. And what about Mr. Greenwood? Would anyone question Prof. York Powell's eligibility? If the most characteristic of the modern democratic developments of poetry is to be represented, Mr. Edward Carpenter is available. In short, if you take your list, my list, and the suggestions of your other correspondents, you will be able to make two Academies out of them, both better than the one you suggest.

How would it do to elect twenty by voting on the Hare system, conferring the franchise, to the best of your judgment, on all whom you think worthy of it, and then let the twenty co-opt their colleagues?—Yours truly,

G. BERNARD SHAW.

London: Nov. 17, 1897.

SIR,—Those of your readers who are interested in the suggested Academy of Letters should certainly read the paper entitled "An Election at the English Academy," which appeared anonymously in the Fortnightly Review in 1891, and after being attributed to various well-known writers was included by Mr. Edmund Gosse in his Questions at Issue, published in 1893.

This "Lucianic Sketch" takes the form of a letter from one of the Forty to Robert Louis Stevenson, R.E.A., Samoa, describing a meeting which had been held to fill a vacancy in the original numbers caused by the death of Kinglake, at which meeting thirty-seven members had attended, the only absentee besides Stevenson himself having been Mr. Ruskin. The election was originally supposed to lie between Thomas Hardy and Samuel Rawson Gardiner, but it transpires that the Archbishop of Canterbury has been nominated at the last moment, a fact which is generally deplored, the Duke of Argyll fearing that "he will not have more than—than—perhaps one vote."

The result of the election is that the Archbishop is triumphantly elected on the first ballot!

The following is the list of the members forming the English Academy in 1891, in the order in which they are introduced into the sketch:

Stevenson.	Freeman.
Kinglake (deceased).	Froude.
Ruskin.	Lord Salisbury.
Max Müller.	Lord Cross (?).
Seeley.	Huxley.
Lecky.	Tyndall.
Besant.	Dr. Martineau.
Black.	Irving.
H. Spencer.	Lord Wolseley.
Lord Lytton.	Meredith.
A. J. Balfour.	Blackmore.
Lang.	Jowett.
Leighton.	Swinburne.
Jebb.	Wm. Morris.
Lealie Stephen.	Tennyson.
Gladstone.	F. Harrison.
Bishop of Oxford.	Cardinal Manning.
Sala.	Farrar.
Duke of Argyll.	John Morley.
	Lord Selborne.

And the writer of the letter.

Mr. Gosse says in the preface to his book that "already death has been busy with my ideal Academy, and no dreamer of 1893 could summon together quite so admirable a company as was still citable in 1891." On reading the list at the present time, the loss in six years strikes one as being quite remarkable.—I am, yours faithfully,

J. E. P. H.

St. Margaret's Lodge, Kilburn:
Nov. 12, 1897.

SIR,—I have been spending a few hours to-day in carefully going over the names suggested by you, and your correspondents, on the subject of an Academy of Letters.

I find there are six names which have not had one single objection raised against them—they are John Morley, A. C. Swinburne, Thomas Hardy, Lealie Stephen, W. E. H. Lecky, S. R. Gardiner—and to these I must add the name of J. A. H. Murray, because I was the only objector, and although as editor of the New Dictionary is the only connexion in which I know Dr. Murray's name, that alone was sufficient for me to include his name in the list I sent you suggesting eighty as the number of members for the foundation of the Academy.

Now, Sir, I find there are seven names, with only one objector each—these are George Meredith, W. W. Skeat, G. O. Trevelyan, R. D. Blackmore, Herbert Spencer, Bishop Creighton, and Bishop Stubbs. Therefore I think that we shall be agreed on at least fourteen out of the forty members of the Academy, as I take one objection need not count.

In addition to these, I think you must allow me the pleasure of seeing included the following four names supported by at least two other correspondents besides myself. I give the names below, with the number of supporters: Max Müller (five), James Martineau, Frederic Harrison (four), Walter Besant (three). If you will allow these names to pass we shall be agreed upon eighteen members, and I think I may safely add the following, on account of the objections to them being captious criticism: W. E. Gladstone, John Ruskin, James Bryce, Andrew Lang, William Archer, and Rudyard Kipling.

A "Lonely Reader" objects to critics being included, yet Sardou, Sully-Prudhomme, François Coppée, and others of the French Academy (Académie Française) are as keen critics as Andrew Lang or William Archer, and still are members of the Academy.

Five other names included in your list, have been blackballed (if I may use the term) in the following manner: Duke of Argyll, George Macdonald, and A. W. Pinero (three), Aubrey de Vere and W. E. Henley (two); but I feel convinced that a larger correspondence than that published by you to-day will induce you to retain the names mentioned, in which case twenty-nine names will be decided upon; but if the Duke of Argyll and Aubrey de Vere do not maintain their places (and I consider them the least likely), I think Henry Sidgwick and William Watson (four votes) should be "placed" in their stead, and, in any case, all four will, I think, in the end be included in the list of forty Immortals.

This now leaves fifteen names of your original list which have been criticised. I give a list of new names suggested by one or more correspondents:

Ed. Caird, Robinson Ellis, A. J. Balfour, Bishop Westcott (three votes); Prof. Courthorpe, Prof. Saintsbury, Dean Farrar, Lord Acton, Oscar Wilde, Alfred Austin, Capt. Mahan, Watts-Dunton, Prof. Mahaffy, Augustin Birrell, Prof. Dowden, Samuel Smiles, Francis Galton, Russell Wallace, David Masson, Goldwin Smith, J. G. Geikie, Bishop Barry, St. George Mivart, Stopford Brooke, Henry Wace, Charles Dilke, Archibald Sayce (two votes).

It is impossible for me to name any more, so many seem equally entitled to be placed; and I think, Sir, you will come to the conclusion that it will be necessary to make the number of members at foundation eighty, as I suggested in my last letter.—Very faithfully yours,

JOHN E. YERBURY.

Ryde, I. of W.: Nov. 14, 1897.

SIR,—Many are reading the expressions of opinion on your scheme with fear and hope—taking it seriously. As one of these, may I express an opinion myself?

Like most of your correspondents, I think your list, on the whole, a good one, but should like to see Lord Acton, the Bishop of Durham, Mr. Frederic Harrison, Mr. George Gissing, and the author of Court Royal and Mehalah included.

I think one of your correspondents touches most admirably, though perhaps unconsciously, the greatest of your difficulties. "I would not give one chapter of Tom Jones," he says, "for a wilderness of Sentimental Tommies." No one is likely to demand the sacrifice. It is not necessary to have read these books to see the further weakness of your correspondent's argument, for yours is not a question of exchange and comparison as between the dead and the living. And if there should ever be a thousand good books in the world, we have room for them all. But your correspondent voices a sentiment common, no doubt, to a majority of would-be Academy-builders—a sentiment you are not likely to regard as a deterrent, for, in any case, you will never satisfy everybody.—Yours, &c.,

HERBERT MORRAH.

Nov. 13, 1897.

SIR,—The following important names are omitted from your list: Edward Caird (Master of Balliol), Prof. Henry Sidgwick, Mr. F. H. Bradley (the great philosopher), Prof. Alfred Marshall (the greatest of our political economists), Principal Lloyd Morgan, Lord Kelvin, Lord Rayleigh, Mr. A. R. Wallace, Lord Acton, William Watson, John Davidson, Mr. A. J. Balfour, Dr. James Ward (the great psychologist), Dr. Henry Jackson (the distinguished Platonist), Dr. James Martineau, Mr. Francis Galton.

A. R. M.

University of Edinburgh: Nov. 13.

SIR,—The provisional list published in your issue of the 6th seems, the longer one considers it, in many ways admirable and ingenious. It certainly contrives what must be almost an essential premiss, that such a body should display the soundest probabilities of self-respect. But it excludes a few names that not only satisfy this requirement to the full, but are, one may be allowed to think, of an individual weight and distinction that demand recognition. One can hardly overlook Lord Acton, Mr. F. Harrison, Mr. Robert Bridges, and Prof. Masson; while Dr. Garnett, Prof. Dowden, and Mr. George Gissing have much to be said for them, and if the Academy's functions are to be purely judicial, Prof. Saintsbury is a real omission. As regards the names that might be deleted, one hardly would dogmatise, but Dr. Salmon Rev. A. Gasquet, Duke of Argyll, and W. S. Gilbert seem among the likeliest.—Yours faithfully,

JOHN PURVES.

[Among the letters that have appeared in the daily press apropos of our suggested list for an Academy of Letters, we may quote the following practical proposal by Mr. F. H. Trench. The communication, of which this is an extract, was published in the Daily News:]

"Let Mr. Arthur Balfour, as First Lord of the Treasury, nominate a small committee of, say, six or eight men of letters, who would indisputably be members of any academy.

"Let these themselves freely nominate the remainder of the body, proceeding on the two principles that the work to be honoured must be, in any case, good literature—that is,

"(1) It must be couched in a language which, however original, shall in itself be noble, admirable, and sincere.

"(2) In substance these works must be works faithful to the serious truths of the imagination and intelligence. (This definition would include such purely emotional work as that of Pierre Loti, with the intellectual books of Dr. Martineau.)

"(3) Let this body meet periodically for discussion in rooms in Burlington House, if no other house can be assigned to them.

"(4) Let them consider it their duty to protect the honour of British literature; to promote and encourage literary talent; to confer distinguishing marks of merit on literary works which have been previously published for at least a year; and to advise Ministers (who are at present without proper advice) in the award of pensions out of the funds already existing for that purpose. The issue of a brief annual gazette would be a useful part of their functions.

"As regards endowment for this body, I conceive that beyond the provision of a house for meeting there had better be little or none. But on that score certainly there need be no difficulty in this country."

MR. ROBERTSON LAWSON writes:—"May I add my humble testimony to the general approval of your list of Immortals—with one addition? Surely as a novelist Marion Crawford is worthy of a place."

THE WEEK.

AN average week. We select three books for special mention.

Such a book as New Letters of Napoleon I. carries its justification in its title. These letters are translated by Lady Mary Lloyd, who prefaces them with this interesting explanation.

"It is well known to all students of Napoleon's history that the collected Letters published in Paris, under the direction of the Commission appointed by Napoleon III. to edit and arrange his uncle's Correspondence, were by no means complete. Interesting and valuable as the twenty-eight volumes are, they are often reticent just where the reader most wishes for illumination. The causes of their lacunæ are not far to seek. The work was to be a sort of literary Vendôme Column, setting forth the glory and the greatness of the chef de famille. The appointment of Prince Napoleon as President of the Committee ensured the suppression not only of evidence that might reflect unpleasantly on Napoleon's personal character, but of anything that might dim the lustre of the Napoleon epic as a whole, by detracting from the dignity of his nearest relatives and most trusted agents. The Commission accordingly set aside many letters of extraordinary interest—letters dealing with Napoleon's relations with his own family, his violent conflict with the Pope, his high-handed methods for the Gallicising of conquered States, or containing trenchant criticisms on the capacity and conduct of famous generals and highly placed officials."

When it is said that the Letters contained in this volume are precisely those which were suppressed by the French Commission it will be seen that their piquancy is guaranteed. Cromwell insisted that his historic wart should appear in his portrait. This volume emphasises the warts and blemishes in Napoleon's features.

DR. AUGUSTUS JESSOPP has written a biography of John Donne. It is delightfully short—it contains 231 pages—but the publishers have been not the less careful to make the volume light in the hand. Dr. Jessopp is an old disciple of Donne, with this curious flaw in his allegiance, that he has never cared greatly for Donne's poetry. Of Donne the divine Dr. Jessopp has been a student for fifty years. In 1855 he issued a reprint of Donne's Essays in Divinity, and

"the critics said that the volume was aburdly overloaded with foolish notes and an unnecessary display of learning. I think the critics were right. When young men are in the happy twenties they are apt to 'show off,' especially if they are solitary students; and I confess that to this day, when I have occasion to look into the small pages of that little bantling of mine, I felt as Mr. Pendennis felt when recurring to one of his early reviews—nothing astonished him so much as the erudition which he found he had amassed in his first attempts in criticism."

It is startling to find Dr. Jessopp hereupon confessing that "since those days I have quite given up my old interest in the life and works of Dr. Donne." But this is only his way of indicating that he hopes to see an exhaustive Life (for preference, by Mr. Edmund Gosse) published at no distant date. Meanwhile—"I have been glad to draw up the following sketch." The volume has for its frontispiece the portrait of Donne prefixed to Izaak Walton's Life, of which composition Dr. Jessopp says: "It is a matchless work of art, which if you try to mend you can only spoil." But then Izaak was more picturesque than accurate; so that between the Life of Donne that Walton wrote and the Life of Donne that Mr. Gosse has not written, Dr. Jessopp takes leave to wedge this little book of nine chapters.

MR. FREDERICK WEDMORE and his daughter have compiled an anthology of Poems of the Love and Pride of England. The idea is happy, and this is what Mr. Wedmore writes about its inception:

"Some three or four years since, when—strange as it may appear in the light of those celebrations of loyalty and thanksgiving which have been witnessed in the summer that has just passed—there were still to be found in certain corners of England, either suburban or academic, superior persons who held that sentiments of pride and joy in the land were quite unworthy their intelligence, it occurred to me as curious that for a public on the whole duly instructed in Religion, and doubtless self-instructed in Love, there had not been provided any gentle body of teaching in Patriotic Virtue. . . . To my deep sense of that which was so singularly lacking is due this volume."

The volume comes in a dress of white and gold that is tasteful; but we should have expected something more robust. Miss Wedmore is solely responsible for the notes, which are placed, we think a little unfortunately, at the foot of the pages instead of at the end of the book.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

- THE CRITICAL REVIEW. Vol. VII. T. & T. Clark. 7s.
UNIVERSITY AND OTHER SERMONS. By C. J. Vaughan, D.D. Macmillan & Co. 6s.
LIGHT AND LEAVEN. By H. Hensley Henson. Methuen & Co. 6s.
THE MYSTERIES, PAGAN AND CHRISTIAN: THE HULSWAN LECTURES. By S. Cheetham, D.D. Macmillan & Co. 5s.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

- A SHORT HISTORY OF HAMPTON COURT. By Ernest Law, B.A. George Bell & Sons. 7s. 6d.
INSPECTOR-GENERAL SIR JAMES RANALD MARTIN. By Surgeon-General Sir Joseph Fayer, Bart. A. D. Innes & Co. 6s.
THE LIFE OF FREDERICK RICHARDS WYNN, D.D., BISHOP OF KILLALOE. By James Hannay, M.A. Hodder & Stoughton. 5s.
WELLINGTON: HIS COMRADES AND CONTEMPORARIES. By Major Arthur Griffiths. George Allen. 12s. 6d.
AMERICAN LANDS AND LETTERS: THE "MAYFLOWER" TO RIP-VAN-WINKLE. By Donald G. Mitchell. J. M. Dent & Co. 7s. 6d.

THE RISE OF DEMOCRACY. By J. Holland Rose, M.A. Blackie & Son.

PICTURES FROM THE LIFE OF NELSON. By W. Clark Russell. James Bowden.

THE CHURCH IN ENGLAND. By John Henry Overton, D.D. 3 vols. Gardner, Darton & Co. 12s.

NEW LETTERS OF NAPOLEON I. From the French by Lady Mary Lloyd. William Heinemann.

A SHORT HISTORY OF BRITISH COLONIAL POLICY. By Hugh Edward Egerton. Methuen & Co. 12s. 6d.

CAMBRIDGE DESCRIBED AND ILLUSTRATED. By T. D. Atkinson. Macmillan & Co. 21s.

CROWN JEWELS: A BRIEF RECORD OF THE WIVES OF ENGLISH SOVEREIGNS. With a Preface by Lady Herbert of Lea. Elliot Stock. 6s.

OLD HARROW DAYS. By J. G. Cotton Minchin. Methuen & Co. 5s.

TWELVE YEARS IN A MONASTERY. By Joseph McCabe. Smith, Elder & Co. 5s.

POETRY, CRITICISM, BELLES LETTRES.

BALLADS OF THE FLINT, AND OTHER POEMS. By Rennell Rodd. Edward Arnold.

MODERN PAINTERS. By John Ruskin. New issue George Allen. 9s.

VERSE FANTASIES. By Edward L. Levett. Chapman & Hall. 3s. 6d.

POEMS NOW FIRST COLLECTED. By Edmund Clarence Stedman. Gay & Bird. 6s.

A WINDOW IN LINCOLN'S INN. By Addison M'Leod. Kegan Paul. 5s.

POEMS. By a New Zealander. Kegan Paul. 5s.

SONG AND TRUJUNT. By Richard Yates Sturges. George Redway.

DRIFT WOOD: VERSES AND LYRICS. By Helen Marion Burnside. Hutchinson & Co. 3s. 6d.

THE PORTFOLIO VOLUMES OF ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING. Smith, Elder & Co. 7s. 6d.

SCIENCE.

THE HERBERTIAN PSYCHOLOGY APPLIED TO EDUCATION. By John Adams, M.A. Isbister & Co. 3s. 6d.

AGRICULTURAL CHEMISTRY. By R. H. Adie, M.A., and T. B. Wood, M.A. 2 vols. Kegan Paul.

THE CONCISE KNOWLEDGE ASTRONOMY. By Agnes M. Clarke, A. Fowler, and J. Ellard Gore. Hutchinson & Co. 5s.

ART BOOKS.

THE ART OF PAINTING IN THE QUEEN'S REIGN. By A. G. Temple, F.S.A. Chapman & Hall. 23 3s.

AQUATINTS: A TRAVELLER'S TALKS. By Wickham Flower, F.S.A. Illustrated by Joseph Pennell. Chapman & Hall. 23 3s.

AN ILLUSTRATED RECORD OF THE RETROSPECTIVE EXHIBITION HELD AT SOUTH KENSINGTON, 1896. Compiled by John Fisher. Chapman & Hall. 21s.

EDUCATIONAL.

ANCIENT CLASSICS FOR ENGLISH READERS. New cheap issue. TACITUS AND LUCIAN. Wm. Blackwood & Sons.

HOW TO DRAW FROM MODELS AND COMMON OBJECTS: A PRACTICAL MANUAL. By W. E. Sparkes. Cassell & Co.

PHYSIOGRAPHY FOR ADVANCED STUDENTS. By A. T. Simmons, B.Sc. Macmillan & Co., Ltd. 4s. 6d.

THE TRAINING OF A CRAFTSMAN. By Fred Miller. J. S. Virtue & Co.

JUVENILE BOOKS.

THE LOST GOLD OF THE MONTEZUMAS. By W. O. Stoddard. Hodder & Stoughton. 5s.

THE DUMPIES. By Frank Ver-Beck and A. B. Paine. Kegan Paul.

CINDERELLA: A PLAY IN FOUR SCENES; and, BEAUTY AND THE BEAST: IN FIVE SCENES. By "Santos." A. D. Innes & Co.

BREAKING THE RECORD. By M. Douglas. 2s.

FOR THE QUEEN'S SAKE. By K. Everett-Green. 2s. 6d.

THOMAS NELSON & SONS. FAMOUS FRIGATE ACTIONS. By Charles Rathbone Low. 3s. 6d.

J. S. VIRTUE & CO. MAUDE CHATTERTON. By C. H. Cochran-Patrick. 3s. 6d.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE SPORTSMAN'S LIBRARY: THE ART OF DEER-STALKING. By William Scrope. Edward Arnold. 15s.

HASTINGS BY CAMERA AND IN CANTO. By John Morgan. Burfield & Pennells (Hastings).

WILD TRAITS IN TAME ANIMALS. By Louis Robinson. W. Blackwood & Sons.

THE AUTHORESS OF THE ODYSSEY. By Samuel Butler. 10s. 6d.

THE SUPERNATURAL IN NATURE. By Joseph William Reynolds. Longmans. 3s. 6d.

ANGLER'S LIBRARY: COARSE FISH. By Charles H. Wheeley. Sea Fish. By F. G. Afalo. Lawrence & Bullen. MEN OF WAR NAMES: THEIR MEANING AND ORIGIN. By Captain Prince Louis of Battenberg. Edward Stanford. 6s.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF '97. Dawbarn & Ward, Ltd.

RACING AND CHASING: A COLLECTION OF SPORTING STORIES. By Alfred E. T. Watson. Longmans, Green & Co. 7s. 6d.

WITH NATURE AND A CAMERA. By Richard Kearton. Cassell & Co. 21s.

TO BE HAD IN REMEMBRANCE. Compiled by A. E. Chance. Elliot Stock.

A TEXT-BOOK OF GENERAL BOTANY. By Charlton C. Curtis. Longmans, Green & Co. 12s.

MODERN ARCHITECTURE: A BOOK FOR ARCHITECTS AND THE PUBLIC. By H. H. Hoots Statham. Chapman & Hall.

RAILWAY NATIONALIZATION. By Clement Edwards. Methuen & Co. 2s. 6d.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SOCIETY OF ARTS' MEMORIAL TABLETS.

Author's Club, S.W.: Nov. 13.

A slight error has crept into your interesting list of medallions attached to London houses as mementoes of illustrious persons. Notwithstanding frequent agitation in the Press, there is now no tablet in Holles-street to mark the site of the birthplace of Lord Byron. Upon the walls of No. 24—originally No. 16, according to Mr. Laurence Hutton—a record did exist for many years; but it disappeared when the house was razed for the second time in 1892, and has never been reinstated. The present owner and occupier of the premises has more than once promised to do this. It was stated in April last that he was "only waiting to decide upon a suitable memorial to put one up to the late poet." Of course the fact of No. 24 Holles-street being only the site of where a notable event occurred detracts, in some measure, from its value as a literary landmark. Still it seems a pity no indication whatever should appear thereon. To extend your general list—to the outer wall of "Belmont," Rosslyn Hill, Hampstead, has been affixed, by the Society of Arts, a tablet to Sir Harry Vane, statesman, and I believe it is in contemplation to add the name of Dr. Joseph Butler, the divine, who also resided there. A plaque is exhibited upon "Combe Edge," Frogna, in the same parish, where Mrs. Rundle Charles died last year. But this was the result of private appreciation and enterprise.

CECIL CLARKE.

[We are obliged to our correspondent for drawing our attention to the position of matters in Holles-street in regard to the Byron medallion. We agree with him in thinking that the medallion might be fixed to the house which has replaced Byron's residence. There is a precedent for this in Leicester-square, where a medallion to Hogarth is to be seen not upon the actual house he lived in, which has disappeared, but upon its successor, Archbishop Tennison's School. The tablet on Sir Harry Vane's house at Hampstead was mentioned by our contributor at the beginning of his article.]

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

"Style." THE critics join in a chorus of praise of this book. They agree that Mr. Raleigh's own style is too flowery; his metaphors too many and luxuriant. Yet the Times is not of this opinion; its critic thinks Mr. Raleigh's book of 129 pages contains "no superfluous line or word," and he describes it as "gay with quaintnesses and unexpected epigrams." Both the Times and the Speaker critics are struck by Mr. Raleigh's insight into the individuality and living variable-ness of words. Says the Speaker:

"His theme is words, and for words Mr. Raleigh has a grand passion. . . . It is one of this author's great merits that the marvel and the mystery of words have been fully revealed to him."

The St. James's Gazette dwells rather on Mr. Raleigh's theory of style as a whole:

"But generally, what constitutes Mr. Raleigh's signal merit in his treatment of his difficult subject is his catholicity in the recognition of the different elements of style, and its diverse virtues and graces. He is not given over to any special school of 'stylists.' He knows there is music in style, but he knows also that there must be a great deal besides. He knows there is an architecture of style, yet knows, too, how small a part of the total effect can be compassed by the architecture of phrase and paragraph. He does not ignore the pictorial art in literary style, but he discerns how absurdly its range has in some epochs and by some schools been over-estimated. On a dozen well-worn topics—on slang, on archaism, on the trite antithesis of classic and romantic, on the doctrine of the mot propre, on quotation—Mr. Raleigh is as sensible as he is vivacious, and indeed his essay is as brimful of discerning criticism and fruitful suggestion as it is throughout lively and inspiring."

The Chronicle is more severe than the foregoing. This critic thinks the essay is "rather a brilliant enumeration of topics than a really helpful discussion of the subject." But Mr. Raleigh "has the root of the matter in him." The following passage of Mr. Raleigh's is quoted: "Words may safely veer to every wind that blows, so they keep within hail of their cardinal meanings, and drift not beyond the scope of their central employ, but when once they lose hold of that, then, indeed, the anchor has begun to drag, and the beach-comber may expect his harvest." On this the Chronicle remarks:

"This is not an image, but a nightmare. Words are ships; their cardinal meaning (literally their hinge-meaning) is something outside them, 'within hail' of which they must keep; when once they (ships) 'lose hold of' the 'scope' (aim or outlook) of their 'central employ,' the anchor has begun to drag, and the 'beach-comber' (apparently used, quite wrongly, in the sense of 'wrecker') may expect his harvest. Of course, we can see more or less clearly what the writer means, but it is in spite of his imagery, not by its aid. And even the intention of the last phrase eludes us entirely. Admitting that a word can lose hold of the scope of its employ, and drift on a lee-shore, what is the harvest the beach-comber can expect from its wreck? This beach-comber baffles us—'que diable allait-il faire dans cette galère?'"

The Chronicle's review of this book, which it calls "A Master's Legacy," is a kind of farewell appreciation of Morris as a prose-writer. The reviewer thinks, moreover, that this tale is Mr. Morris's best romance:

"All the master's characteristics are here, and are at their best. We find in it the unconditioned imagination, calling up a succession of exact and detailed pictures of a life which never has been, nor ever could be, found, and yet in him appears as natural and inevitable as the course of dreams to the dreamer. We find the intense love of pleasure and of beauty in all her forms, from the woods and white-walled cities down to the decoration and embroideries of a beautiful life, the stitching of ladies' shoes and smocks, all as exquisitely wrought as the armour of their knights."

The reviewer continues, with more feeling:

"And in his devotion to things of beauty and delight we find him also avoiding all the ugliness and commonplace of our common daily life under the daily sun; yet not so much avoiding them as writing as though they were not. Even on distress and noble sorrow and mourning he hardly brings himself to dwell, though there is plenty of cause for it in his tale. His ladies are exceeding pitiful indeed, their eyes are often full of tears, and well they know the pain of longing. His knights and craftsmen, and even priests, suffer almost to madness of the same. Yet all are too healthy a breed to spend much length of time in lamentation, and it is as the wise wood-mother says to the sweet lady of the book: 'I have noted in thee that Love is not so tyrannous a master but that his servants may whiles think of other matters, and so solace their souls, that they may live despite of all.'"

As to Mr. Morris's quaint English—that bugbear of the critics—the Chronicle's pronouncement is certainly unanswerable:

"From the master who has so enriched us we take it with hardly a smile. But should anyone seek to imitate the master in this, we do him to wit and give him rede, that be he quean or carle, we will take no naysay, but will seek catch of him with sax and sallet as the weird will, and between us and him shall ever be woodness and unpeace, so that should we light on him in cheaping—stead or haysel we will smite him well-favouredly into unwit and send him noseling to the earth in great dule and wanhope."

The Pall Mall Gazette, on the other hand, cannot see the story for the medium:

"The strange tongue in which Mr. William Morris chose to clothe the later works of his fancy has been a mystery to some and a stumbling-block to others. It is not, as might be ignorantly supposed, Chaucerian English. It is not English at all; that is to say, it is not a tongue which was ever spoken or written by Englishmen, or, for the matter of that, by any one else. . . . His words are chosen not for their beauty, for many of them are uncouth and inexpressive. He seems to have collected words, as other men collect curios, for their age and for their dissociation from the life of our time—for their rarity, in fact. The value of Mr. Morris's pet words is like the value of the violet enamel of Japan, or of Bristol china, a scarcity value. And only those who share the collector's enthusiasm will find any real pleasure in Mr. Morris's collection. To these, perhaps, such words will add a charm to the story of The Water of the Wondrous Isles."

Literature, after sketching Mr. Morris's plot, says:

"Although despite all the combats and escapes one's blood does not run faster, and though it is never impossible for the story's sake to lay the book aside, it does exercise a strong spell by its unfailing witchery and its consistent and dignified beauty of phrase and thought. . . . The true keynotes of this romance are the vivid sense of beauty, and the calm melancholy. . . . It is this pity of the wide world and the desire to turn awhile from it, that has prompted the poet through-

THE Athenæum says of these poems, many of which have appeared in its own columns:

"Throughout the volume one is struck by the success with which the author, notoriously a master of the whole corpus poetarum, has contrived to maintain his own individuality alike in thought, feeling, imagination, and expression. The book is singularly free from echoes. Not only the matter, but the manner is the writer's own, and the manner is distinguished especially by directness and by vigour. Mr. Watts-Dunton has meditated, felt, and imagined for himself, and has expressed himself likewise in his own way."

The Pall Mall Gazette agrees that Mr. Watts-Dunton's poems have "the distinctive quality of not resembling the work of any other poet."

The Chronicle refines this thought to the following:

"To call him an echo of this poet or that would be manifestly unjust; it cannot even be said that his method is eclectic. Our meaning is rather that his thoughts and rhythms belong to the common stock, the inexhaustible heritage, of English poetry. He is far too good a critic to write ill—grotesquely, incongruously, or even flatly. His mind is full of excellent forms and phrases for the interpretation of what he sees in nature or feels in his soul; but his vision and his feeling are not usually intense enough to generate that electricity which gives to old rhythms a new resonance and makes words rush to group themselves in vital and inevitable relations. . . . There is no line, no cadence, no image in this volume that comes upon us with a sudden thrill,

"As when a great thought strikes along the brain
And flushes all the cheek."

The Daily News has a very appreciative review, concluding as follows:

"As pure examples of the writer's art in colouring, structure, and all else that belongs to these gems of poetic workmanship, of which he so perfectly knows the laws, we could have nothing better than the 'Three Fausts,' which we are glad to find included in this volume. We have long regarded this as quite matchless in its way. It gives us in fine imitative verse the very qualities of the genius of three great composers—Berlioz, Gounod, and Schumann. The Faust of Berlioz is described as the Music of Hell:

"I had a dream of wizard harps of Hell
Beating through starry worlds a pulse of pain
That held them shuddering in a fiery spell,
Yea, spite of all their songs—a fell refrain
Which, leaping from some red orchestral sun,
Through constellations and through eyeless space
Sought some pure core of bale, and finding one
(An orb whose shadows flickering on her face
Seemed tragic shadows from some comic mine,
Incarnate visions mouthing hopes and fears
That Fate was playing to the Fiend of Time),
Died in a laugh 'mid oceanic tears:
'Berlioz,' I said, 'thy strong hand makes me weep,
That God did ever wake a world from sleep.'

It is superb writing; and, though it may not be exactly the writing for our age, it has its chances for all time."

"The Water of the Wondrous Isles."
By William Morris.

The Chronicle's review of this book, which it calls "A Master's Legacy," is a kind of farewell appreciation of Morris as a prose-writer. The reviewer thinks, moreover, that this tale is Mr. Morris's best romance:

"All the master's characteristics are here, and are at their best. We find in it the unconditioned imagination, calling up a succession of exact and detailed pictures of a life which never has been, nor ever could be, found, and yet in him appears as natural and inevitable as

Messrs. FREDERICK WARNE &amp; CO.'S Announcements.

Mr. W. L. COURTNEY, writing in the Daily Telegraph of "The Lady of Quality," says: "It is something to have written 'Through One Administration' and 'That Lass o' Lowrie's'; it is a good deal to have composed a story like 'Little Lord Fauntleroy.' But it is a greater thing than all, in an age in which the dispassionate historical student begins to wonder whether woman has abandoned all her old privileges in order to compete on equal terms with men, to come a lady such as appears in 'A Lady of Quality'; a heroine wrought out of all those indefinable qualities of conquering womanhood with which we were more familiar in earlier ages than we are now."

HIS GRACE OF OSMONDE. 6s.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

HIS GRACE OF OSMONDE:

Being the Portion of the History of that Nobleman's Life omitted in the Relation of his Lady's Story presented to the World of Fashion under the Title of "A Lady of Quality."

BY

FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT.

HIS GRACE OF OSMONDE. 6s.

Mr. RICHARD LE GALLIENNE writes: "'A Lady of Quality' is one of the most vividly dramatic, old-time stories which the revival of the historical romance has produced, and a more fascinating heroine, a more masterful personality than Clorinda Wildairs is not to be found in recent fiction.... No mere piece of imitative quaintness, but a powerful study of character, and a very original romance told in vigorous and unaffected English."

"Few who once enter into the extraordinary story of Clorinda Wildairs are likely to leave it unfinished.... The 'lady of quality' stands out a living figure amid a crowd of puppets as a creation which will count amongst the most remarkable in the fiction of to-day."

Morning Post.

HIS GRACE OF OSMONDE. 6s.

Mrs. FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT'S Other Novels. { A LADY OF QUALITY. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.
THROUGH ONE ADMINISTRATION. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.
DOLLY: a Love Story. Illustrated. Medium 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.
THAT LASS O' LOWRIE'S. Illustrated. Medium 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

A COMPLETE CATALOGUE MAY BE HAD POST FREE ON APPLICATION FROM THE PUBLISHERS.

London: FREDERICK WARNE &amp; CO., Chandos House, Bedford Street, Strand.

NOTICE TO THE TRADE.

45, Albemarle Street, London, W.

The COMBINED CHRISTMAS and DECEMBER NUMBER of "HARPER'S MAGAZINE," price 1s., will be ready for delivery MONDAY MORNING, November 22, at 10 o'clock. The publishers beg to impress upon the Trade the necessity for sending in their orders before publication, otherwise it is not possible to guarantee a supply.

HARPER &amp; BROTHERS.

THE ARTISTS AND ENGRAVERS

OF

BRITISH AND AMERICAN BOOKPLATES.

By H. W. FINCHAM,
Vice-President Ex-Libris Society.

Edition limited to 1,500 copies for England and America.

With Examples by C. W. SHERBORN, E. D. FRENCH, AUBREY BEARDSLEY, and others, price £1 1s. net.

Large-Paper Edition, limited to 50 copies (all sold).

An Edition, limited to 15 copies, with duplicate plates on Japanese vellum, and containing as a Frontispiece the

BOOKPLATE OF H.R.H. THE DUCHESS OF YORK.

By C. W. SHERBORN.
Price £10 10s. net.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER &amp; Co., Paternoster House, Charing Cross Road.

Now Ready, crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.
DCC EXERCISES. Including Hints for the Solution of all the Questions in Choice and Chance. By WILLIAM ALLEN WHITWORTH, M.A., late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.
CHOICE and CHANCE. An Elementary Treatise on Permutation, Combinations, and Probability, with 640 Exercises. Fourth Edition. Price 6s.

Cambridge: DEIGHTON BELL & CO.
London: GEORGE BELL & SONS.

EPPS'S COCOA.

EXTRACTS FROM A LECTURE ON FOODS AND THEIR VALUES, BY DR. ANDREW WILSON, F.R.S.E., &c.—"If any motives—first, of due regard for health, and second, of getting full food-value for money expended—can be said to weigh with us in choosing our foods, then I say that Cocoa (Epps's being the most nutritious) should be made to replace tea and coffee without hesitation. Cocoa is a food; tea and coffee are not foods. This is the whole science of the matter in a nutshell, and he who runs may read the obvious moral of the story."

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

Mr. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish on Wednesday next a New Novel by JOHN OLIVER HOBBS, entitled "THE SCHOOL for SAINTS," in green cloth, gilt tops, price 6s.; also, will be ready next week, a New Raiding Romance, by Lord ERNEST HAMILTON, entitled "THE OUTLAWS of the MARCHES," in Unwin's Green Cloth Library. 6s.

New Novel by the Author of "Nancy Noon."

THE TORMENTOR. By BENJAMIN SWIFT, Author of "Nancy Noon." Unwin's Green Cloth Library. 6s.
"Will delight the few to whom the flavour of literature is as honey on the tongue."—Daily Chronicle.

A Story of Rustle Love.

THE PEOPLE of CLOPTON. By GEORGE BARTRAM. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"Mr. Bartram has written a very remarkable book, his poaching scenes especially are narrated with a zest and vigour which one's memory cannot easily parallel from our literature."—Literature.

Second Edition Now Ready—A Realistic Tale of London Slum Life.

LIZA of LAMBETH. By W. SOMERSET MAUGHAM. Cloth, 3s. 6d.
"There has not been so powerful a story of the lowest class since Mr. Rudyard Kipling wrote 'The History of Badalia Herodsfoot'; indeed, we are not sure that this new story does not beat that one in vividness and knowledge of the class it depicts."—Standard.

Dr. Weir Mitchell's New Book.

HUGH WYNNE: Free Quaker, sometime Brevet Lt.-Col. on the Staff of his Excellency General Washington. Unwin's Green Cloth Library. 6s.
"Is so told that the interest at no time flags. Dr. Weir Mitchell deserves our thanks for an admirable piece of work."—Literature.

New Volume of "The Master of Medicine" Series.

Edited by ERNEST HART, D.C.L., Editor of "The British Medical Journal."—Each with a Photogravure Frontispiece, large crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
WILLIAM HARVEY. By D'ARCY POWER. [Now ready.]
"Not only unimpeachable knowledge, but excellent judgment and literary skill."—Standard.

Recently issued in same Series.

JOHN HUNTER. By STEPHEN PAGET. With Introduction by Sir JAMES PAGET.
"A really valuable work. The book teems with good stories."—Literature.

The Great Men of Italy.

LIVES of GREAT ITALIANS. By FRANK HOBBRIDGE. With 8 Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.
 CONTENTS:—1. Dante—2. Petrarch—3. Cainagola—4. Macchiavelli—5. Michael Angelo—6. Galileo—7. Carlo Goldoni—8. Alfieri—9. Cavour—10. Victor Emmanuel.

New Book by the Author of "How to be Happy though Married."

THE LOVE AFFAIRS of SOME FAMOUS MEN. By Rev. E. J. HARDY, M.A. Cloth gilt, 6s.

THE CHILDREN'S STUDY. Cloth, gilt top, with Photogravure Frontispiece, 2s. 6d. each. Seven Volumes now ready.—ROME. By MARY FORD.—IRELAND. Edited by BARRY O'BRIEN.—ENGLAND. By FRANCIS E. COOKE.—GERMANY. By KATE FREILIGRATH KROEKER.—OLD TALES FROM GREECE. By ALICE ZIMMER.—FRANCE. By MARY ROWSELL.—SCOTLAND. By Mrs. OLIPHANT.

THE PRIVATE PAPERS of WILLIAM WILBERFORCE. Collected and Edited, with a Preface, by Mrs. WILBERFORCE, of Lavington. Photogravure and other Illustrations. Cloth, 12s.
"The volume as it stands is so full of intrinsic interest that it almost dispenses with the services of an editor."—Times, in a column and a-half review.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE LESBIA of CATULLUS. Arranged and Translated by J. H. A. TREMENHEERE, C.S.I.
 This selection includes every poem of Catullus which either certainly or not improbably concerns his relation to Lesbia or throws light upon it. The Text used is from Simpson, Mueller, and William Walker.

THE LIFE and LETTERS of MR. ENDYMION PORTER: sometime Gentleman of the Bedchamber to King Charles the First. By DOROTHEA TOWNSEND. Photogravure and other Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 12s.
"It is not only State secrets that lie buried beneath the dust of our national archives. That this dust also covers many a secret of the human heart is proved by the diggings and discoveries as in a Klondyke land of human passion, whereof Mrs. Townsend has embodied its results in the handsomely turned out volume before us."—Daily Chronicle.

An Allegory of Human Life.

BRER MORTAL. By BEN MARLAS. 6 Full-Page Illustrations by MARK ZANGWILL. Cloth, 5s.
"The book is a very clever achievement."—Bookman.

THE SCHOLAR and the STATE, and other Orations and Addresses. By HENRY CODMAN POTTER, D.D., LL.D. Bishop of New York. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

COMMUNISM in MIDDLE EUROPE in the TIME of the REFORMATION. By KARL KAUTSKY, Editor of "Die Neue Zeit," Author of "The Growth of Population and Social Progress," "From Plato the Anabaptist," &c. Translated from the German by J. L. and E. G. MULLIKEN. Demy 8vo, cloth, 18s.

A Complete List of Mr. T. Fisher Unwin's Autumn Publications will be sent post free on receipt of card.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published for the Proprietor by PETER GEORGE ANDREWS, 42, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1334.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General Literature (No. 118, for DECEMBER), at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

W. THACKER & CO., PUBLISHERS.
MSS. (Type-written) considered for Publication. (Established 1819.)
A large Clientèle in all parts of the East.
2, Creed Lane, London, E.C.; and at Calcutta and Simla.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN, FOREIGN BOOKSELLER.
45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices.
CATALOGUES on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 33rd Street, New York, and 34, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

MR. MOSHER'S New and Complete Descriptive LIST OF BOOKS is Now Ready. It is issued in narrow 8vo, with Facsimile Titles in Red and Black, done up in French hand-made paper wrappers, with original cover design. Those who have yet to see these Editions published by Mr. Mosher should favour him with their names that the new List may be mailed them, post paid.

THOMAS B. MOSHER,
45, EXCHANGE STREET, PORTLAND, MAINE, UNITED STATES.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, BELL & BAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 15, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 32, or 33-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

TYPE-WRITING work of every description done with accuracy and despatch. Author's MSS., Technical and Legal Copying, Indexing, Specifications, Tracing, Translating, Addressing, Type-written Mimeographed Copies, &c., &c.—The Misses E. & J. PUTZ, 435, Mansion House Chambers, London, E.C.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done.
10d. per 1,000 Words.
Samples and references.
Address Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

SCHOLARLY TYPE-WRITING by a Graduate.
Greek, Latin, Foreign MSS., Poems, Plays, Translations.—E. W. LUMMIS, Beeches Road, West Bromwich.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1896. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY Office, 48, Chancery Lane, London.

AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS PURCHASED. A large assortment of all kinds FOR SALE. Lists free.—Scott, 17, Crondale Road, Fulham, S.W.

UNIVERSITY of GLASGOW.

ADDITIONAL EXAMINERSHIPS.

The University Court of the University of Glasgow will shortly proceed to APPOINT the following EXAMINERS: (a) EXAMINERS for DEGREES in ARTS, viz., FOUR EXAMINERS (1) in MORAL PHILOSOPHY and LOGIC (2) in ENGLISH (3) in EDUCATION and (4) in HISTORY.

The appointment in each case will be for three years from 1st January next, at the following annual salaries, viz., Moral Philosophy and Logic £50, English £30, Education £10 10s., and History £21.

(b) EXAMINER in FRENCH for DEGREES in ARTS, and for the PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS.

The appointment will be for three years from 1st February next, at an annual salary of £30.

Candidates should lodge twenty copies of their application and testimonials with the undersigned on or before 1st December next.

ALAN E. CLAFFERTON, Secretary of the Court.

91, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of WALES, ABERYSTWYTH.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the post of ASSISTANT LECTURER in the DEPARTMENT of ENGLISH LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.

Applications, together with testimonials, should be sent not later than December 15th, 1897, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

Nov., 1897. T. MORTIMER GREEN, Registrar.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch P. W. D., and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways.

For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

CHRISTMAS LECTURES.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

Professor OLIVER LODGE, D.Sc., LL.D., F.R.S., will deliver a COURSE of SIX LECTURES (adapted to a Juvenile Auditory) on "THE PRINCIPLES of the ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH," commencing on TUESDAY, DECEMBER 28, 1897, at 3 o'clock; to be continued on DECEMBER 30 and JANUARY 1, 4, 6, 8, 1898.

Subscription (for Non-Members) to this Course, One Guinea (Children under 16, Half-a-Guinea); to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas. Tickets may now be obtained at the Institution.

THE ETCHED WORK of D. Y. CAMERON, and DRAWINGS and STUDIES by Miss KATHERINE CAMERON, R.S.W., NOW ON VIEW at Mr. R. GUTENSTADT, 16, King Street, St. James's. Admission, including catalogue, 1s.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 5, Fumival Street, London, E.C.

WANTED.—GIRL of 17 or 18 to join four others who are studying French, Music, Singing, Painting, in FRANCE, in charge of an unexceptional English Chaperon. Highest references given and required. Terms for Pension and French, 10 Guineas monthly.—CHAPERON, "ACADEMY" Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD.
(THE LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)

Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen. ruled or plain.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERB HANFSTAENGL, of Munich.

The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS.

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c. &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.

Offices, 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may unite in ONE SUBSCRIPTION and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited.

80-84, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.;

48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and

at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

LONDON LIBRARY, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

PRESIDENT—LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.

VICE-PRESIDENTS—Right Hon. W. B. GLADSTONE, the Very Rev the DEAN of LILANDAFF, HERBERT SPENCER, Esq., Sir

HENRY BARKLEY, K.C.B.

TRUSTEES—Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF,

Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., Right Hon. EARL of ROSEBURY.

The Library contains about 170,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in Various Languages. Subscription, £3 a year: Life-Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town Members. Reading-Room Open from 10 to half-past 6. CATALOGUE, Fifth Edition, 3 vols., royal 8vo, price 21s.; to Members, 16s.
C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, Secretary and Librarian.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

PRODUCERS and PUBLISHERS of

PERMANENT CARBON PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

FAMOUS WORKS OF ART.

Catalogues and Price Lists upon application.

THE NORWICH SCHOOL of PAINTING. A

Series of Plates, printed in various Colours, after Cotman, Crome, Leman, Lound, Bright, Stark, Vincent, etc.

[Will be ready shortly.]

THE TATE COLLECTION (NATIONAL

GALLERY of BRITISH ART). A large number of the Pictures now Exhibited at Millbank have been published in Autotype, including the Chief Works of G. F. WATTS, R.A. Further additions are being made, and will be announced shortly.

BRITISH ARTISTS of the VICTORIAN ERA.

From the recent Gullihall Loan Collection. Average size 18 x 15 inches. Price 12s.

PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, and SCULPTURE by

the OLD MASTERS. A large Collection of Permanent Photographs of the Chief Treasures of Art contained in the Public and Private Collections of Europe. Paintings and Sculpture in one uniform size, price 12s.; Drawings on the Scale of the Originals at prices ranging from 1s. 6d. to 10s. each.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY will be pleased to advise upon, and to undertake, the REPRODUCTION of WORKS of ART of every character, both for Book Illustration, and on a larger scale for the Portfolio or for Mural Decoration. Price Lists and Estimates free upon application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

BLACKIE & SON'S NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY, crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.
THE RISE OF DEMOCRACY. By J. HOLLAND ROSE, M.A., late Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge.
 Being the First Volume of the VICTORIAN ERA SERIES.

THE VICTORIAN ERA SERIES.

In course of publication in MONTHLY crown
 8vo VOLUMES, cloth, 2s. 6d. each.
 The aim of the Series is to form an authoritative, scholarly, and attractive record of the great movements and developments of the age, in Politics, Economics, Religion, Industry, Literature, Science, and Art, and of the life work of its typical and influential men.
 The Volumes will be issued successively on the 15th of each Month.

NOW READY, crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.
The IRISH DIFFICULTY, SHALL
and WILL. By the Right Rev. Monsignor MOLLOY, D.D., Rector of the Catholic University of Ireland, Dublin.

NOW READY, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
A TEXT-BOOK of GEOLOGY. Intended as an Introduction to the Study of the Rocks and their Contents. By W. JEROME HARRISON, F.G.S., Author of "The Geology of the Counties of England and Wales,"
 "Practical Geology," &c. New Edition, much Enlarged, with numerous Illustrations.

NOW READY, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
ENGLISH MASQUES. With an Introduction by H. A. EVANS, M.A., Balliol
 College, Oxford.

Being the New Volume of the WARWICK LIBRARY of ENGLISH LITERATURE, Edited by Professor O. H.
 HEYFORD, Litt.D.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, OLD BAILEY

NEW ISSUE OF
STANFORD'S COMPENDIUM OF GEOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL.

RE-WITTEN, AND WITH NEW ILLUSTRATIONS.
 In Twelve Volumes, sold separately.
 Now ready, large crown 8vo, cloth, 15s.

NORTH AMERICA:

Vol. I. CANADA and NEWFOUNDLAND
 By S. E. DAWSON, Litt.D. (Laval), F.R.S.C.
 With 18 Maps and 90 Illustrations.

The Volumes already issued in the New Series, uniform
 in size and price, are:

ASIA:

Vol. I. NORTHERN and EASTERN ASIA
 By A. H. KEANE, F.R.G.S. With 8 Maps
 and 91 Illustrations.

Vol. II. SOUTHERN and WESTERN ASIA
 By A. H. KEANE, F.R.G.S. With 7 Maps
 and 89 Illustrations.

AUSTRALASIA:

Vol. I. AUSTRALIA and NEW ZEALAND
 By A. R. WALLACE, LL.D. With 14 Maps
 and 69 Illustrations.

Vol. II. MALAYSIA and the PACIFIC
 ARCHIPELAGOES. By F. H. H. GUILLE-MARD, M.D. With 16 Maps and 47 Illustrations.

AFRICA:

Vol. I. NORTH AFRICA. By A. H. KEANE,
 F.R.G.S. With 9 Maps and 77 Illustrations.

Vol. II. SOUTH AFRICA. By A. H. KEANE,
 F.R.G.S. With 11 Maps and 93 Illustrations.

"The new issue of 'Stanford's Compendium of Geography and Travel' is a publication of great value, and contains, in convenient form, the latest geographical results of travel and research adequately treated. Not only is the information accurate, but the form in which the work is produced is admirable, and English geography may be proud of such a series. It is useful for educational purposes and for reference, and pleasant to the general reader."—Athenaeum.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD,
 25 and 27, Cockspur Street, S.W.
Geographer to the Queen.

J. W. ARROWSMITH'S
 NEW BOOKS.

THE SACK OF MONTE CARLO.	Arrowsmith's 3s. 6d. Series. "The story of its capture is told with a gallop." The Academy.	By F. WALTER FRITH.
DUST O' GLAMOUR.	Crown 8vo, cloth, 340 pp., 3s. 6d. "Mr. Warwick has stuff in him." The Academy.	By H. S. WARWICK
LORD DULLBOROUGH	Vol. XXX. of Arrowsmith's 3s. 6d. Series. Crown 8vo, cloth, 224 pp. (Ready December.)	By HON. STUART ERSKINE.
JOTS.	Vol. LXXVI. of Arrowsmith's Bristol Library. Fcap. 8vo, 1s.	By GEORGE THORNE.
THE MILLION- AIRE OF PARKERSVILLE	Vol. LXXIV. of Arrowsmith's Bristol Library. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. "Contrived with considerable skill." Bookseller.	By M. G. WOOD.
PEPITA OF THE PAGODA.	Arrowsmith's Christmas Annual. Fcap. 8vo, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d. "Mr. Hopkins's delicious story." The Sketch.	By TIGHE HOPKINS.

BRISTOL: J. W. ARROWSMITH.

LONDON: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co., Limited

DIGBY, LONG & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

- NEW DETECTIVE STORY BY FERGUS HUME.
 1. CLAUDE DUVAL OF NINETY-FIVE.
 By the Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," &c.
 Cloth gilt, 3s. 6d. (Fourth Edition.)
- SARAH TYTLER'S LATEST NOVEL.
 2. THE AMERICAN COUSINS. By the Author of "Lady Jean's Vagaries," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
3. A FLEETING SHOW. By G. B. FITZ-GERALD, Author of "An Odd Career." Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. Second Edition.
 "Ruth is a charming figure. The story is among the most attractive of recent efforts in its particular field of fiction."—Morning Post.
- NEW NOVEL BY MINA SANDEMAN.
 4. SIR GASPARD'S AFFINITY. By the Author of "The Worship of Lucifer," &c. Cr. 8vo cl., 3s. 6d.
5. THE BLACK DISC: a Story of the Conquest of Granada. By ALBERT LEE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
 With Frontispiece.
 "There is no lack of excitement.... The story is to be recommended to all."—Scotsman.
- NEW NOVEL BY J. GORDON PHILLIPS.
 6. FLOBA MACDONALD. A Romance of the '45. By the Author of "James Macpherson," Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. (Next week.)
- NEW NOVEL BY VIOLET TWEEDALE.
 7. WHAT SHALL IT PROFIT A MAN?
 By the Author of "And they Two," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
 (Next week.)
- NEW NOVEL BY RUPERT ALEXANDER.
 8. THE VICAR OF ST. NICHOLAS. By the Author of "Ballyrowan." Cr. 8vo. cl., 6s. (Next week.)
- NEW NOVEL BY BELTON OTTERBURN.
 9. NURSE ADELAIDE. By the Author of "Unrelated Twins," &c. Cr. 8vo, cl. gilt, 6s. (Next week.)
- NEW NOVEL BY PIERRE LE CLERCQ.
 10. CONCERNING CHARLES ROYDANT.
 By the Author of "The Love Story," &c. Cr. 8vo, cloth, 6s.
 "Mr. Clercq has written a book which is well worth reading."
Whitehall Review.
- NEW BOOK BY MRS. CHARLES E. TERROT.
 11. OUR PAYING GUESTS, and other Stories. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
 "The tales are written in a simple and straightforward fashion."
Lundon Advertiser.
12. A MERE PUG. The Romance of a Dog.
 By NEMO. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. Second Edition.
 "This pretty story of the adventures of a Pug Dog.... there are few books of the season that could have been more heartily recommended for children."—The Standard.
13. CONSUMPTION: HOW TO AVOID IT;
 and WEAK EYES. By B. SCHWARZBACH, M.D. Crown
 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.
 "The two lectures can be endorsed with all confidence and cordiality as well worth reading."—Dundee Courier.
- DIGBY, LONG & CO, 18, Bouverie Street, London, E.C.

GEORGE ALLEN'S
 NEW BOOKS.

BY JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D., D.C.L.

MODERN PAINTERS. A New Cheap
 Edition (complete) in small form, crown 8vo, cloth, gilt tops, £2 2s. net.

With the 225 Woodcuts, the one Lithograph and the 89 Full-Page Illustrations, reproduced in Photogravure and half-tone.

The TEXT is complete, and includes the EPILOGUE written by Mr. Ruskin in 1888.

VOLUMES I., II. The 2 vols., price 11s. net. [Now ready.]

VOLUME III. With 18 Full-Page Plates and 8 Woodcuts.
 Price 8s. net. [Now ready.]

VOLUME IV. With 35 Full-Page Plates and 116 Woodcuts.
 Price 9s. net. [Now ready.]

VOLUME V. With 38 Full-Page Plates and 101 Woodcuts.
 Price 9s. net. [Present month.]

INDEX VOLUME, containing a complete Index, Collation, and Bibliography. About 400 pages. Price 5s. net.
 [December.]

LECTURES on LANDSCAPE. Given at Oxford in January and February, 1871.

Illustrated with 20 Plates in Photogravure and 2 in Colour, being reproductions of the pictures chosen from the author's private collection, the University Galleries, &c., by which the lectures were originally illustrated.

Uniform in size with "Studies in Both Arts," 16 by 11 inches. Cloth, £2 2s.

Also 150 Copies on Arnold Unbleached Hand-made Paper with India Proofs of the Plates, price £4 4s.
 [Shortly.]

THE WELLINGTON MEMORIAL.

Uniform with "Nelson and his Companions in Arms"

WELLINGTON, his Comrades and

Contemporaries. By Major ARTHUR GRIFFITHS.

With 13 Photogravure Portraits, taken by special permission from the Originals in possession of His Grace the Duke of Wellington, 14 other Illustrations, facsimiles of Letters, and 2 Maps.

Large imperial 16mo, cloth, gilt top, 12s. 6d. net.

Also 110 Special Large-Paper Copies, on Arnold Paper, with India Proofs of the Plates, demy 4to, £2s 2s
 net

THE PRINCIPLES of CRITICISM:

an Introduction to the Study of Literature. By W. BASIL WORSFOLD, M.A., Barrister-at-Law.

AUTHORS AND SUBJECTS INDEX.

Demy 8vo, 300 pages, buckram, gilt top, 10s 6d net
 "A really valuable contribution to criticism."
Pall Mall Gazette.

"Without any pedantry or heaviness."—Scotsman.
 "We confidently recommend this book."—Speaker.

SPRING FAIRIES and SEA FAIRIES.

By GERALDINE MOCKLER. With 50 Illustrations by Nellie Benson. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

THE HESPERIDES: a Country

Garland of Ten Songs from Herrick. Set to Music by Joseph S. Moorat. With 13 Full-Page Designs, Cover, End Papers, &c., by Paul Woodroffe. Demy 4to, antique, 5s.

RENAUD of MONTAUBAN. By

ROBERT STEELE, Author of "Huon of Bordeaux."
 With 13 Full-Page Illustrations and Cover by Fred
 Mason. Fcap. 4to, antique, cloth, 7s. 6d.

HANS ANDERSEN'S FAIRY TALES.

Translated by H. OSKAR SOMMER, and with 100
 Illustrations and Initials by Arthur J. Gaskin. New Edition, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 860 pp., cloth gilt, 7s. 6d.

SPENSER'S "FAËRIE QUEENE."

With 231 Illustrations
 (98 Full-Page,
 80 Canto Headings,
 by 53 Tail-pieces)

WALTER CRANE.

Edited, with Preface, Bibliography, Fragments,
 Title-pages, &c., by T. J. WISE.

A LIMITED EDITION

on Arnold Unbleached Hand-made Paper, in 19 Parts large post 4to, £9 19s. 6d ;
 or 6 vols., in cloth box, Art Canvas gilt tops,
 £10 15s. net.

LONDON: RUSKIN HOUSE, 156, Charing Cross
 Road, W.C.

ISBISTER & CO.'S NEW AND RECENT BOOKS.

ST. FRANCIS OF ASSISI: His Times, Life, and Work.

By the Rev. W. J. KNOX LITTLE, M.A., Canon of Worcester Cathedral, Author of "Labour and Sorrow," &c. With Portrait from the Painting by Fra Bartolommeo. Demy 8vo, gilt top, 10s. 6d.

"A book which few will be able to read without genuine pleasure and considerable profit."—Pall Mall Gazette.

OUR ENGLISH MINSTERS. Second Series. Contents:

St. Paul's, York, Ely, Norwich, St. Albans, Salisbury, Worcester, Exeter. By Dean LEFROY, Dean BOYLE, Canon NEWBOLT, and others. With nearly 100 Illustrations by Herbert Railton and others. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.; crown 8vo, French morocco, red-gilt edges, 5s. net; demy 8vo, gilt top, cloth, designed by Herbert Railton, 7s. 6d.

The FIRST SERIES Volume, uniform with above, may be had in the various bindings. Contents: Westminster, Canterbury, Durham, Wells, Lincoln, Winchester, Gloucester. By Dean FARRAE and others. Illustrated by Herbert Railton and others.

PERPETUA: a Story of the Persecution of the Early Christians. By S. BARING-GOULD, M.A., Author of "Mehalah," &c. Crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

"Deserves to rank with the author's best work."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"A triumphant piece of work."—Daily Chronicle.

"One of the best stories Mr. Baring-Gould has ever written."—Presbyterian.

THE RETURN to the CROSS. By the Rev. W.

ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A., LL.D., Editor of "The Expositor's Bible." Crown 8vo, gilt top, 3s. 6d. Vol. XIX. of "The Gospel and the Age" Series. List of other Vols. in Series post free.

SELECTIONS from the WRITINGS of the late

BISHOP THOROLD. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, gilt top, 5s. Introduction by the Bishop of Winchester.

THE PROPHET'S MANTLE. By Christabel Coleridge.

Author of "The Tender Mercies of the Good," &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"A healthy and brightly-written story."—Quiver.

B. I. BARNATO: a Memoir. By Harry Raymond With

Portraits and Cartoons. Demy 8vo, 6s.

SUCCESS and FAILURE. By R. F. Horton, D.D.,

Author of "The Teaching of Jesus." Fcap. 8vo, 1s. net; post free, 1s. 2d. Vol. XI. of "Tavistock Booklets." List of other Vols. in Series post free.

"Books to buy, to read, to think over, and to enjoy."—Lady's Pictorial.

EXETER CATHEDRAL By the Rev. W. J. Edmonds,

B.D., Canon of Exeter. Illustrated by Herbert Railton. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. net; post free, 1s. 2d. Vol. XII. of "English Cathedrals." List of other Volumes sent post free.

"Daintily printed and ably written. There is no better series of handbooks to our English Cathedrals."—Pall Mall Gazette.

GOOD WORDS VOLUME for 1897. Containing Edna

LYALL'S New Story, "Wayfaring Men." With 400 Illustrations. Royal 8vo, 900 pages, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

SUNDAY MAGAZINE VOLUME for 1897. Containing

ANNIE E. HOLDSWORTH'S New Story, "The Gods Arrive." With 12 Coloured Plates and over 800 Illustrations. Royal 8vo, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

TENNYSON. His Art and Relation to Modern Life. By

STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A. Sixth thousand. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"It is not going too far to say that this book comes within measurable distance of being the perfect study of Tennyson's art."—Academy.

MARIE HILTON: Her Life and Work. By J. Deane

HILTON. With Portrait. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"She was the founder of the first crèche in England..... It is the story of a noble, modest life."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE BOOK OF PARLIAMENT. An Account of the Customs and Curiosities of the Two Houses. By MICHAEL MACDONAGH. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A masterpiece of compendious information."—Punch.

IN GARDEN, ORCHARD, and SPINNEY. By Phil

ROBINSON, Author of "In my Indian Garden." Crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

"It is a prose poem of the seasons, instinct with grace and feeling."—Saturday Review.

THE LITERARY STUDY of the BIBLE. An Account of the Leading Forms of Literature in the Sacred Writings. By Professor RICHARD G. MOULTON, M.A. Third Edition. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"A valuable help to the study of the sacred writings."—Daily Chronicle.

New Complete Catalogue sent Post Free on Application to ISBISTER & CO., LIMITED, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

BY THE RIGHT HON. JAMES BRYCE, M.P.

Demy 8vo, 14s. net.

IMPRESSIONS of SOUTH AFRICA. By

JAMES BRYCE, Author of "The Holy Roman Empire," &c. With 3 Maps. STANDARD.—"In no work that we know have the earlier causes which have produced the existing state of affairs in South Africa been laid bare so plainly, or the problems of the future stated with so much insight and force."

NEW BOOK BY RUDYARD KIPLING.

FOURTEENTH THOUSAND. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

"CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS." A Story of the

Grand Banks. By RUDYARD KIPLING. Illustrated by I. W. TABER. BLACK AND WHITE.—"In the men of this gallant little boat Mr. Kipling has added to his gallery of celebrities some of the finest portraits he has yet drawn..... A fine story."

WORLD.—"A fine wholesome story."

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"A rattling good book."

DAILY MAIL.—"One regards it with feelings of astonishment and hardly qualified admiration."

Fcap. 8vo, antique paper, cloth elegant, 7s. 6d.

AUCASSIN and NICOLETTE: an Old French

Love Story. Edited and Translated by FRANCIS WILLIAM BOURDILLON, M.A. Second Edition, the Text Collated afresh with the MS. at Paris, the Translation Revised, and the Introduction Re-written.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

FOR PRINCE and PEOPLE: a Tale of Old

Genoa. By E. K. SANDERS.

NEW NOVEL BY F. MARION CRAWFORD.

CORLEONE: a Tale of Sicily. In 2 vols., globe

8vo, 12s.

ACADEMY.—"The story is told in Mr. Crawford's best manner, and after the preliminary chapters are well out of the way, you can hardly lay it aside."

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

ADAM JOHNSTONE'S SON. By F. Marion

CRAWFORD, Author of "Sant' Ilario," "Don Orsino," &c. ATHENÆUM.—"It need hardly be said that the story is told with great skill."

SECOND EDITION. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

SKETCHES of "RURAL LIFE, and Other Poems.

By FRANÇOIS LUGAS.

GUARDIAN.—"His volume may be most heartily recommended to every lover of poetry who is ready to welcome a sympathetic treatment of English country life in its most picturesque aspects."

FOREIGN STATESMEN SERIES.—New Volume.

Edited by Prof. BURY, Trinity College, Dublin. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

CHARLES the GREAT. By Thomas Hodgkin,

D.C.L.

MRS. MOLESWORTH'S NEW VOLUME.

MISS MOUSE and her BOYS. By Mrs. Moles-

WORTH. With Illustrations by LESLIE BROOKE. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 4s. 6d. ATHENÆUM.—"Will doubtless be heartily welcomed by friends of her many predecessors."

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 458.

DECEMBER.

Price 1s.

CONTENTS:

- 1.—A PHILOSOPHER'S ROMANCE. By JOHN BRADWICK. Chapters IV.-VI.
- 2.—A ROMAN CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY for IRELAND. By F. ST. JOHN MORROW.
- 3.—THE PROMOTION of JOHN JOHN-SON.
- 4.—SOME HUMOURS of the COMPOSING-ROOM.
- 5.—A CRY from the FAR WEST. By Mrs. MOLESWORTH.
- 6.—RAMAZAN. By HUGH CLIFFORD.
- 7.—COUNTRY NOTES. By S. G. TALLENTIRE. I.—The Church.
- 8.—A CUBAN FILIBUSTER. By HAROLD BINDLOSS.
- 9.—THE ROYAL BUCKHOUNDS.

CHRISTMAS AND DECEMBER NUMBER OF

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

ILLUSTRATED. Price 1s. 4d.

CONTAINS:

TENNYSON and HIS FRIENDS at FRESHWATER.

By V. C. SCOTT O'CONNOR.

ILLUSTRATED.

TENNYSON and HIS FRIENDS at FRESHWATER.

By V. C. SCOTT O'CONNOR.

ILLUSTRATED.

MERRY CHRISTMAS in the TENEMENTS. By Jacob A. Riis.

Illustrated.

THE SECOND INSTALLMENT OF

"GOOD AMERICANS." By Mrs. Burton Harrison.

EDWIN BOOTH in LONDON. By E. H. House.

&c., &c., &c.

CHRISTMAS AND DECEMBER NUMBER OF

ST. NICHOLAS MAGAZINE.

ILLUSTRATED. Price 1s.

CONTAINS:

THE "JUST-SO" STORIES.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

THE CHRISTMAS SHIP. By H. E. Bennett.

AN OLD TIME CHRISTMAS GIFT. By Ruth McEnery Stuart.

AND NUMEROUS OTHER STORIES.

MACMILLAN & CO., Ltd., London.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH LYRICS. Selected and Edited by W. E. HENLEY. Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s.

THE ODYSSEY of HOMER. A Translation by J. G. CORDERY. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

OLD HARROW DAYS. By J. G. COTTON MINCHIN. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE HILL of the GRACES; or, The Great Stone Temples of Tripoli. By H. S. COWPER, F.R.S.A. With Maps, Plans, and 75 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE DECLINE and FALL of the ROMAN EMPIRE. By EDWARD GIBBON. Edited by J. B. BURY, M.A. In 7 vols., demy 8vo, gilt top, 8s. 6d. each. Crown 8vo, 6s. each. Vol. IV.

THE LIFE of ERNEST RENAN. By Madame DARMESTER. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 6s.
"A polished gem. It is difficult to speak without exaggeration of the merits of this admirable biography."—Athenæum.

JOHN DONNE. By Augustus JESSOPP, D.D. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
[Leaders of Religion.]

A HISTORY of BRITISH COLONIAL POLIOY. By H. E. EGERTON, M.A. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

A PRIMER of the BIBLE. By Prof. W. H. BENNETT, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

LIGHT and LEAVEN: Historical and Social Sermons. By the Rev. HENSLEY HENSON, M.A., Fellow of All Souls', Incumbent of St. Mary's Hospital, Ilford. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE BEGINNINGS of ENGLISH CHRISTIANITY. By W. E. COLLINS. With Map. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A SHORT HISTORY of the ROYAL NAVY, from Early Times to 1658. By DAVID HANNAY. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

The STORY of the BRITISH ARMY. By Lieut.-Colonel COOPER KING, of the Staff College, Camberley. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

VOCES ACADEMICÆ. By C. Grant ROBERTSON, M.A., Fellow of All Souls', Oxford. With Frontispiece. Pott 8vo, 3s. 6d.

RAILWAY NATIONALISATION. By CLEMENT EDWARDS. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THREE CHRISTMAS BOOKS.

THE WALLYPUG in LONDON. By G. E. FARROW, Author of "The Wallypug of Why." With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
A Jubilee Extravaganza for Children.

NURSERY RHYMES. With many Coloured Pictures. By F. D. BEDFORD. Super-royal 8vo, 5s.

A BOOK of CHRISTMAS VERSE. Edited by H. C. BEECHING, M.A., and Illustrated by WALTER CRANE. Crown 8vo, gilt top, 5s.
"An anthology which, from its unity of aim and high poetic excel- lence, has a better right to exist than most of its fellows."—Guardian.

Fourteen Popular Novels.

SIX SHILLINGS EACH.

LOOHINVAR. S. R. Crockett

BYEWAYS. Robert S. Hichens

A PASSIONATE PILGRIM. Percy White

A CREEL of IRISH STORIES. Jane Barlow

SECRETARY to BAYNE, M.P. W. Pett Ridge

A DAUGHTER of STRIFE. Jane H. Findlater

OVER the HILLS. Mary Findlater

BLADYS. S. Baring-Gould

THE LADY'S WALK. Mrs. Oliphant

THE BUILDERS. J. S. Fletcher

THE CLASH of ARMS. J. Bloundelle-Barton

THE SINGER of MARLY. I. Hooper

THE FALL of the SPARROW. M. C. Balfour

THREE-AND-SIXPENCE.

THE POMP of the LAVIETTES.

Gilbert Parker

METHUEN & CO., 36, Essex Street, W.C.

MR. MACQUEEN'S LIST.

JUST PUBLISHED.

C H E R R I W I N K :

A NEW FAIRY STORY.

By RACHEL PENN.

Original Illustrations by Maude F. Sambourne and M. Jardine Thomson. Crown 4to, 6s.

"A BOOK THAT BOYS WILL GLOAT OVER." Spectator.

AFLOAT with NELSON. By Charles H. EDEN, Author of "George Donington," &c., &c. With 10 Full-page Illustrations by John Williamson. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 6s.

The St. James's Gazette.—"One of the best of the sea stories recently published.... The sketch given of Nelson is a fine one."

WORKS BY J. H. CRAWFORD, F.L.S.

Illustrated by John Williamson.

Handsomely bound, large crown 8vo.

THE WILD FLOWERS of SCOTLAND. 6s. net.

Country Life.—"A book of infinite grace and charm, from every page of which breathes the pure love of beauty in nature.... We commend this book without reserve to all persons, old and young, who love the fresh air, the mountain-side, and the low-lying valley. It will please them, it will not bray their minds in a mortar of science with a pebble of terrific nomenclature, and it will teach them a great deal."

SUMMER DAYS for WINTER EVENINGS: Nature Idylls. 8s. 6d. net.

The Times.—"With Mr. Crawford's delightful sketches sometimes telling alone of nature's aspects, sometimes with a thread of story to lend a touch of human interest, the temper that beats against the easement and fancy himself between green earth and blue sky watching the kaleidoscope of the seasons and the changes of the year and the ways of furred and feathered creatures which are so sympathetically described."

THE WILD LIFE of SCOTLAND. 8s. 6d. net.

The Spectator.—"A very delightful as well as informing book, which, in respect of style, recalls Thoreau rather than either Jeffries or Burroughs.... Altogether this book, which belongs to the rare order that can be taken up at any moment and easily read in instalments, is by far the best and most convenient hand-book to Scottish Natural History—in the most comprehensive sense of the word—that has ever been published."

NEW NOVELS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MISS TUDOR."

FAITH, HOPE, and CHARITY. By JOHN LE BRETON. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Daily Chronicle, (Nov. 24).—"Mr. Le Breton's character-studies of the chief Christian virtues are clever and ably wrought, upon modern, not apostolic lines.... There is no occasion to point the moral of a tale so strong so incisive, so lifelike."
Scotsman.—"A powerful book, which can scarcely fail to interest and to impress every one who reads it."

THE FATE of WOMAN. By Francis SHORT. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Scotsman (First Review).—"Fine writing and cleverly conceived situations.... The character-sketching is a very strong point in the book.... without doubt a skilful writer."

A GIRL'S AWAKENING. By J. H. CRAWFORD, Author of "The Wild Life of Scotland." Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Athenæum.—"A pretty and idyllic study.... Mr. Crawford's feeling for nature stands him in good stead, and the background of his picture in the Scottish village is as harmoniously fitted with the central figures as one of George Eliot's own drawings."

A SINLESS SINNER. By Mary H. TENNYSON, Author of "The Fool of Fate," "A Cruel Dilemma," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Just published.]

A DRAWING-ROOM CYNIC. By LORIN KAYE, Author of "Her Ladyship's Income." Art canvas, gilt top, crown 8vo, 6s.

Newcastle Leader.—"There is not the least doubt that with 'A Drawing-Room Cynic' Lorin Kaye has repeated the notable success of the previous novel, 'Her Ladyship's Income.'"

POSSESSED of DEVILS. By Mrs. HAROLD E. GORST. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Englishwoman.—"This clever psychological study is well worth reading.... That the author has succeeded in X-raying the soul of an egotistic, passionate, self-absorbed modern woman, revealing the tumultuous thoughts and emotions of this tumultuous child, no one who reads this human document will deny."

A FLIRTATION with TRUTH. By CURTIS YORKE, Author of "Once," "A Record of Discords," &c., &c. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Athenæum.—"A very smartly written novel.... There are no lreary passages of retrospect, no explanations of things that do not need to be explained, and no more aimless conversations.... The workmanship with which it is presented is excellent."

JOHN MACQUEEN, HASTINGS HOUSE,
NORFOLK STREET, W.C.

Mr. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW BOOKS

A New Raiding Romance, by LORD ERNEST HAMILTON, entitled "THE OUTLAWS of the MARCHES," has just been added to the Unwin's Green Cloth Library, price 6s.

DR. WEIR MITCHELL'S NEW NOVEL. HUGH WYNNE: Free Quaker, some- time Brevet Lt.-Colonel on General Washington's Staff. Unwin's Green Cloth Library. 6s.
"A full-blooded narrative, rich in stirring incident, in shrewd delineation of character, and most pleasantly rich in charm and mellowness."—Academy.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "NANCY NOON." THE TORMENTOR. By Benjamin SWIFT, Author of "Nancy Noon." Unwin's Green Cloth Library. 6s.
"Is witty, vivid, and subtle. The chief character, 'Bristol,' is drawn with singular power."—To-Day.

A STORY of RUSTIC LOVE. THE PEOPLE of CLOPTON. By GEORGE BARTRAM. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Mr. Bartram has written a very remarkable book: his peaching scenes especially are narrated with a zest and vigour which one's memory cannot easily parallel from our literature."—Literature.

SECOND EDITION.—A REALISTIC TALE of LONDON SLUM LIFE.

LIZA of LAMBETH. By W. Somerset MAUGHAM. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

"There has not been so powerful a story of the lowest class since Mr. Rudyard Kipling wrote 'The History of Badalia Herodsfot'; indeed, we are not sure that this new story does not beat that one in vividness and knowledge of the class it depicts."—Standard.

AMELIA E. BARR'S NEW NOVEL. PRISONERS of CONSCIENCE: a Novel

By AMELIA E. BARR. 12 Illustrations. Unwin's Green Cloth Library. 6s.

"The individuality of Lord Borson and David Borson stand out with a rugged strength that is sometimes forbidding, sometimes impressive; the weaving of the warp and woof of fate is marked with subtlety and power."—Aberdeen Free Press.

GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA'S LAST NOVEL.

MARGARET FORSTER: a Dream within a Dream. By GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA. Cloth, 6s.

"A powerful novel, better than nine-tenths of the fiction produced every season."—Publishers' Circular.

MASTERS of MEDICINE. Edited by ERNEST HART, D.O.L. Each with Photogravure Frontispiece, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

1. JOHN HUNTER. By J. 2. WILLIAM HARVEY. STEPHEN PAGET. By D'ARCY POWER. Other Volumes in preparation.

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "HOW TO BE HAPPY THOUGH MARRIED."

THE LOVE AFFAIRS of SOME FAMOUS MEN. By Rev. E. J. HARDY, M.A. Cloth gilt, 6s.

THE CHILDREN'S STUDY.

Cloth, gilt top, with Photogravure Frontispiece, 2s. 6d. each. 7 vols., now ready.

ROME. By MARY FORD.—FRANCE. By MARY BOWSELL.—OLD TALES FROM GREECE. By ALICE ZIMMERMAN.—GERMANY. By KATE FREILIGRATH KROGER.—ENGLAND. By FRANCES E. COOKE.—IRELAND. Edited by BARRY O'BRIEN.—SCOTLAND. By Mrs. OLIPHANT.

AN ALLEGORY of HUMAN LIFE.

BRER MORTAL. By Ben Marlas. 6 Full-Page Illustrations by Mark Zangwill. Cloth, 6s.
"The book is a clever achievement."—Bookman.

AUSTRALASIAN DEMOCRACY. By HENRY DE R. WALKER. Demy 8vo, cloth, 6s.

CONTENTS: Liberalism and Labour in South Australia—Democracy and its Safeguards in New South Wales—The Land Policy of New Zealand—Characteristics of Victorian Legislation—Growth and Development of Western Australia—Discursive Notes on Tasmania—Female Suffrage—Salient Features of the Australasian Democracy—Coolgardie Gold-fields.

THE SCHOLAR and the STATE, and other Oration and Addresses. By HENRY CODMAN POTTER, D.D., LL.D., Bishop of New York. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

COMMUNISM in MIDDLE EUROPE

in the TIME of the REFORMATION. By KARL KAUTSKY, Editor of "Die Neue Zeit," Author of "The Growth of Population and Social Progress," "From Plato the Anabaptist," &c. Translated from the German by J. L. and E. G. MULLIKEN. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s.

A Complete List of Mr. T. Fisher Unwin's Autumn Publications will be sent post free on receipt of card.

LONDON:

T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS	PAGE
Mr. Gardiner's History ... ..	441
The New Frankness ... ..	443
Walter Savage Landor ... ..	443
Wordsworthians ... ..	444
Goats: Belief and Unbelief ... ..	445
The Irish Wonderland ... ..	446
BRIEF MENTION ... ..	447
NOTES AND NEWS ... ..	449
AMERICAN AND ENGLISH CRITICISM ... ..	461
THE CASE FOR LATIN VERSES ... ..	462
PARIS LETTER ... ..	463
DID SHAKESPEARE WRITE FOR POSTERITY? ... ..	463
THE BOOK MARKET ... ..	464
THE WEEK ... ..	465
NEW BOOKS RECEIVED ... ..	466
CORRESPONDENCE ... ..	466
BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..	468
FICTION SUPPLEMENT ... ..	113-116

NOTICE.

The issue of THE ACADEMY for next week, December 4th, will consist of a Double Number in a Coloured Cover. It will contain some further remarks on an Academy of Letters, a Review of Literature in 1897, a number of articles on Writers of younger reputation, Special Articles on literary subjects, and notices of Christmas and other New Books. Advertisements should reach this Office by next Thursday morning.

REVIEWS.

MR. GARDINER'S HISTORY.

History of the Commonwealth and Protectorate, 1649-1660. By Samuel Rawson Gardiner. Vol. II., 1651-1654. (Longmans & Co.)

MR. GARDINER has approached one step nearer to the completion of his great task. The new volume carries us from the battle of Worcester to the eve of the meeting of the first Parliament of the Protectorate. It covers the subjugation of Scotland, Ireland, and the Colonies, the Dutch War, the dissolution of the Long Parliament, the career of the Nominated Parliament, the transition from the Commonwealth to the Protectorate, the long and intricate negotiations of Cromwell for alliance with France and Spain. We are thus allowed to follow to their end the course of several important episodes and determining crises of the interesting story: we are left on the threshold of others equally familiar, which will form the main theme of the next instalment. Now, Mr. Gardiner's successive volumes are always looked for with great eagerness; but his Ford Lectures at Oxford last year made students more than usually anxious for his full version of the Dutch War and the negotiations with France and Spain. Indeed, this volume was advertised a year ago. Rumour attributed its non-appearance to the policy of the publishers. A long-suffering public, it was supposed, could not digest more than two new books from Mr. Gardiner in one year, and so students have been kept waiting while our author expounded to Father Gerard "What Gunpowder Plot was," and, for the benefit of the general reader, fitted Cromwell into his "Place in History." Rumour is notoriously "a false jade," and our consolation will be that the next instalment of the fascinating story should come all the more quickly.

There are probably only two or three men in England who are in the least degree qualified to sit in judgment on Mr. Gardiner's work, and of these the most competent rises in this volume almost to the dignity of a collaborateur. The generous appreciation accorded by the preface to the labours of Mr. C. H. Firth prepares us for the frequent mention of his name in the footnotes throughout the book. But the wealth of new material which his investigations have placed at Mr. Gardiner's disposal has in places combined with the author's own discoveries to upset a proportionate treatment of the many points which came under survey. Thus, one chapter suffices for the settlement of Ireland after Cromwell's departure—the material has been long accessible. But Mr. Firth's recent work for the Scottish Historical Society—which, to save Scotch pride, bears the vague titles of "Scotland and the Commonwealth" and "Scotland and the Protectorate"—has necessitated a long and, to speak truth, very wearisome account of the comparatively unimportant marchings and counter-marchings connected with the suppression of Glencairn's rising in 1654.

The fact is that, from an artistic point of view, Mr. Gardiner sticks too conscientiously to his theory of the chronological study of history. In such a treatment facts must needs lose much of their relative significance. Everything that is known has an equal right to a place in the narrative. The story will no doubt sometimes tell itself, but often it will not be worth the space devoted to it, and in any case it will lose much in the telling. At any rate, this will be the feeling of many readers as they work their way through Mr. Gardiner's new volume. They must have felt it in his previous books. Considering the interest of the narrative, this defect, if defect it is, will seem to many to reach its extremest form in the present volume. When Mr. Gardiner chooses, he can be simple and direct enough; it is not from confusion of thought in the writer that the narrative is allowed at times to meander through pages of continuous and seemingly endless detail. At times, no doubt, it is the wealth of available material which is the cause. Generally speaking, however, Mr. Gardiner is thinking of his subject rather than of his readers, and the fitting together of the Chinese puzzle into which history written from original materials too often resolves itself, becomes an exercise which is its own reward. Thus much as to the manner.

Despite all that has been written on the Great Rebellion, Mr. Gardiner is so far a pioneer in the thorny subject which he is slowly traversing, that, even if he had a far less lucid style, it would be necessary to read his book. For he is gradually dissipating the fog (sometimes, it may be, the halo) in which strong party prejudice on one side or the other has wrapped the heroes of the age. We learn of Ireton's "incompetency as a commander," which was "displayed alike in his readiness to undertake more than he was able to accomplish and in his failure to proportion his means to the objects which he had in view." We can no longer treat Blake as the "seventeenth century Nelson"; nor had he any "of that innovating tactical skill which had enabled Cromwell to convert a mere success into a crushing victory." Tromp was the hero of the Dutch War: Blake was merely "a bold and inspiring commander." The ultimate success of the English fleet was due entirely to its superior equipment. Twice at least, in the course of the war, the Dutch admirals and sailors, as skilful and brave as their English rivals, had to retire from a drawn battle because of the failure of their ammunition and supplies through the carelessness of the responsible administration. Indeed, the whole account of the naval warfare is admirable, and worthy to be placed alongside of Mr. Gardiner's studies in military history. Captain Mahan himself could scarcely surpass them. Like one of the Commonwealth commanders of whom he speaks, Mr. Gardiner passes from the land to the sea, and, at any rate, to the amateur in such matters, he seems equally at home on either. And as the inherent superiority of the English sailors at all times has been an article of our patriotic creed, so has a sceptical age sneered with Macaulay at the Puritans who prohibited amusements such as bear-baiting, not because it gave pain to the bear, but because it afforded pleasure to the spectators. We may no longer nurse this uncharitable belief. The benchers of the Middle Temple prefaced their masque with the singing of the Hundredth Psalm, but a masque included singing, and even dancing. The objections to "promiscuous dancing"—which we take to mean the dancing of the two sexes together—may have been objectionable to the more austere Puritans for the reason which led them to prohibit bear-baiting and bull-baiting, namely, "the immorality which these exhibitions fostered." But amusement of all kinds, even to the extent of practical joking, was not banished from England by the vehemence of a few morbid fanatics. "Oliver loved an innocent jest," and was a friend to outdoor sports and indoor amusements. After so great a disillusionment we shall not be surprised to learn that Barebones Parliament was not a contemporary nickname, nor—most cherished illusion of all—that Tromp's triumphant voyage down the Channel after the Dutch victory off Dungeness with the emblematical broom tied to his masthead, is based on no reliable evidence.

But, after all, for most of us the chief interest of the Commonwealth and Protectorate will centre round the revelation it affords of Cromwell's own character. To the ardent believer in the virtues of democracy it must ever be a source of bitter disappointment to discover how few great men are thrown up by a revolution. The French Revolution produced none of first-rate capacity except Mirabeau and Danton. Cromwell was the sole giant of the English Rebellion. And Cromwell is the hero of Mr. Gardiner's great epic. But he is not drawn as Carlyle drew his heroes—in an idealised form. As the story unfolds itself, his limitations become increasingly clearer. To our thinking he is none the less hero because he is thereby made more of a man. We sometimes wonder whether in Mr. Gardiner's own case there has not been, in the course of his study of the period, something of a disillusionment regarding his own hero. Would he always have so frankly described him as "eager to make the best of both worlds"? And does he not almost contradict himself in the next sentence when he declares that "the tragedy of his (Cromwell's) career lies in the inevitable result that his efforts to establish religion and morality melted away as the morning mist, whilst his abiding influence was built upon the vigour with which he promoted the material aims of his countrymen"? Indeed, the characteristic of the whole period spanned by this volume is the gradual predominance in the minds of Englishmen in general, of material, mundane aims, as Mr. Gardiner seems to prefer to call them, over the religious ideals of the Rebellion itself:

"For a time after the outbreak of the Civil War there had been a tendency to subordinate all other considerations to spiritual and ideal aims; to advance the godly and depress the profane had been the aim of statesmen and soldiers. Now, as ever happens, the neglected body of man, with its material needs and passions, was beginning to assert itself. Though there had been an ideal element in the conquest of Ireland and Scotland, a desire to render the populations of those countries better and happier by forcing upon them in the one case English religion, in the other case English justice and toleration, there had been a painfully material side as well; a greed for land or power, and, at the best, a determination to impose the English yoke upon peoples firmly purposed to lead their own life in their own fashion. The new commercial policy (inaugurated by the Navigation Act) did not profess to have other than material aims. The intention of its framers, by the very nature of the case, was not to make England better or nobler, but to make her richer."

Cromwell himself passed through the same transition. In Mr. Gardiner's opinion, it is this combination of religious and mundane interests in his policy "which has raised Cromwell to the position of the national hero of the nineteenth century." But whereas before the Dutch War religious considerations held the first place in his mind, his determination to attack Spain in the West Indies, and yet to remain at peace with her in Europe, is interpreted by Mr. Gardiner as marking the time when the first place is given to "mundane endeavour." The conclusion which he draws—they are the closing words of the volume—is that "if the Restoration is to be regarded as a return of a mode of thought anterior to Puritanism, it may fairly be said that the spirit of the Restoration had at last effected a lodgment within the bosom of Oliver himself."

The other prominent clue given by this volume to Mr. Gardiner's own interpretation of Cromwell's character calls for less comment, because it is the central feature of his recent lectures on "Cromwell's Place in History." Cromwell's claim to the character of a constructive statesman practically disappears in Mr. Gardiner's handling. Neither in home nor in foreign politics had he a programme of his own. He was a pure opportunist. It was for others to suggest; and to almost all suggestions, however wild, he would listen. It was enough for him to seize the moment for action, to cut the knot instead of making any attempt patiently to unloose it. This volume affords two admirable illustrations of the part which Cromwell played in the determination of events. In the controversy between Lambert desiring a freely elected successor to the effete Long Parliament, and Harrison who urged an assembly of the Godly, Cromwell's religious side came uppermost, and, after long controversy, he decided for Harrison. "It was," remarks Mr. Gardiner in passing, "the impossibility of reconciling these two views which ultimately wrecked the revolution and restored the monarchy." But the failure of the impracticable body taught him a lesson, and, as between France and Spain, the protracted negotiations ended at length in favour of France because Spain could not give the sum which Cromwell demanded as the price of English aid. The practical, mundane consideration outweighed all others in the ultimate decision.

Such are a few of the important topics treated in this volume. Its interest lies mainly in foreign policy. But the new constitution has been sketched. The "Instrument of Government" has established the Protectorate and has guaranteed a Parliament. We know already, from the Ford Lectures, that Mr. Gardiner has his own views on the causes of the dissolution of the first Parliament summoned under the Instrument. We must wait patiently for the volume which should take us almost within sight of Cromwell's death.

THE NEW FRANKNESS.

Studies in Frankness. By Charles Whibley. (W. Heinemann.)

MR. WHIBLEY won and deserved much credit for these essays when they first appeared. One has but to turn to pages 118 and 119, and read his analysis of the style of Apuleius to see what a keen eye he has for some of the minor beauties of prose. Had he confined himself to such work he would have earned nothing but praise. A different complexion is, however, given to his object by the essay in which he introduces and links together the different papers. With this composition, as the newer and most important thing in the volume, we shall principally deal. Unfortunately Mr. Whibley does not attend to his own maxims. "There is not and there can never be," he writes, "any legitimate purpose in print save pleasure and delight." This is directed against such novelists as are buoyed up with a vain hope of improving mankind. But he himself informs his essays with a purpose far other than pleasure and delight; it is to preach a gospel of license, and to show that it is proper to write "a thousand dishevelled words" that it is shameful to use in conversation.

Now, if this matter is to be discussed, it behoved Mr. Whibley to state his case with precision and clearness. Against whom is his railing directed? We are told that the Realist says this, the Puritan that, the Prude and the Pedant something else, but these are only different names for a stuffed figure who is put up merely to be knocked down. Apparently there is no critic of standing who has expressed the views that excite his anger, and his rage has to go back to Jeremy Collier—the "redoubtable enemy of stage-plays," as Matthew Arnold called him. What was the use of dragging Jeremy from his grave? He is clean forgotten by all but a few. The writer looks at life through the convention of his day and generation. You do not expect to find in Aristophanes the morality of the nineteenth century; you read him for his cleverness, his wit, and his fancy, and take the morality as part of the time and the man. It is the same with Boccaccio, with Cervantes, with Chaucer, and Shakespeare, and Fielding. Can Mr. Whibley name any critic of repute who says of any masterpiece it should be a closed book because the author does not write for Exeter Hall? So far there is scarcely room for argument. Unfortunately for himself, Mr. Whibley does not stop at this point. He is one of those who, once mounted on an idea, cannot draw rein till it is ridden to death, and who, by wild extravagance, do more harm than good to any cause they attempt to champion.

By dint of probably the worst logic that ever got into print, he seeks to convince the reader that this license ought to be exercised as freely to-day as it was a thousand years ago. The cardinal point of his argument, when shorn of its prolix setting, can be put into a nutshell. He admits that to the "privacies and restraints"—the absence of frankness—imposed by the need of purity "we owe our morals, our manners, the very elegancies of human conduct." To these he should have added vigour. Without purity, strength—physical and intellectual—is bound to decay; the ultimate and rational justification of purity is its necessity to a clean and wholesome mind in a clean and wholesome body. Whoever tampers with it is sinning against the birthright of men and women, for impurity is in itself decay. But this is not a proposition he seeks to controvert. Life and literature stand on a different footing, he argues. "Life is governed by the laws of habit and empire; literature bows only to its own dictates." But the inversion of this is equally true. Life has evolved its laws and habits out of its necessities, and may, with equal truth, be said to bow only to its own dictates; so that the sonorous platitude might, after all, have been uttered by a wisacre. If ever there was a truth at once simple and incontrovertible, it is that life includes literature, or, conversely, that literature is only a part (and not the largest part) of life. But Mr.

Whibley's whole case rests on the contention that the part is greater than the whole—in his own words, that "literature transcends the narrow world of life; knows not the limits which are set upon the hardest traveller." By what sense, we should like to ask, is Mr. Charles Whibley going to travel beyond what is included in life? Some years before his death we remember Mr. Louis Stevenson discussed the very point, and concluded that even the great world of Shakespeare was but made up of different embodiments of himself.

No doubt Mr. Whibley will have his answer pat. He could not have signed his name to so many contradictions but for a defect that bars the way to his becoming a great critic. It is the almost entire absence of imagination and sympathy which is manifest in every sentence. Words to him are but words and nothing more, and their value "does not depend upon the ideas they connote." Yes, but they will not obey him, and we judge a theory by its outcome. He asks light and colour and music from words, and they but rumble in a muddy stream. Let anyone who doubts it compare the worst page of Gaston de Latour with the best in the book before us; and Mr. Pater is the fount and origin of the philosophy, much as it has changed its complexion. When Mr. Whibley is most importunate in his demand for pictorial quality, the result is some such horror as this: "Their gulching bellies refuted the plea of hunger and beggary." In the second place, he has no eye for that hall-mark of imagination which marks the highest art; his chief delight is in the second-rate work of writers. For example, there is little room for argument about the merits of Poe's short stories; they are marvels of ingenious mechanism, but they have never got past the early stage of invention; you can tell by the very writing that Poe never reached the point of imagining them; hence their use has been only that of quarries to others. But invention is enough for Mr. Whibley; and Poe, we are gravely told, is still the "dominant influence of three literatures." In other words, it is raw material, not great and perfect art, that delights him. He grumbles at Adlington for glossing over the filthiest passages in the Golden Ass, and at Sterne for not being more plain-spoken. From the great pages of Rabelais he has learned nothing but this so-called frankness. We willingly admit the admirable perseverance with which he has worked out the personal history of the subjects of these essays; but there, again, the unimaginative man has halted where another would not have been content till he had realised for us period and environment. And, if one proof more be required, we may point to his contentment with minor beauties, his hunt after the small critic, his happiness with the small author.

Up to a certain point we have no fault to find with this. There is a place, and no dishonourable one, for Mr. Whibley in the field of letters; but let him stick to his last. When he comes forth to lay down the law about art and morals we can but answer "No; for a guide on these high matters we demand someone of wider outlook and broader sympathies, and a more liberal mind." As to this question of morality, we know that literature is under the same great laws as life itself, and that from Homer to Walter Scott it has been a reflection of life, and that the greatest writers, those whose standing is unquestioned, and who have given us most pleasure, have not been ashamed to feel that mankind was the better of their having lived and written. It was a dying satisfaction to Scott that he had been on the side of goodness as it had been to Fielding before him, to Lord Tennyson as it was to Robert Browning, as it must be to every strong and healthy man. A retrogression of morals, a growth of that licentious frankness advocated by Mr. Whibley, ever has been in our own history and in that of other countries an infallible symptom of decay. Cant is bad, and the cant of morality is the most sickening of all, but cant itself is better than the new frankness.

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR.

Letters and Unpublished Writings of Landor.
By Stephen Wheeler. (Bentley.)

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR, though always regarded by a distinguished circle as a man of genius, has not until recently taken his place among the immortals, in general opinion. Mr. Sidney Colvin, probably more than anyone, has once and for all given Landor his due place in the popular sense. What Mr. Forster had attempted with labour, Mr. Colvin accomplished with ease, chiefly because he brought to bear on his subject not merely a fine scholarship and industry, but a remarkable insight into the humanity of the man of whom he wrote. We may take it, then, as beyond cavil that Landor will retain henceforward his due position among the great English writers. That any public recognition of him has been, to some extent, tardy is easily explained. Landor, with all his splendid intellectual gift, was greatly lacking in the emotional force which, when added to great mental power, makes an irresistible appeal. Not only this, but he rather courted a certain loneliness; indeed, he might even say that to some extent he assumed the attitude of one apart. Not that this would have made any very real difference, for the man was, in his nature, solitary; but we cannot help thinking that he rather emphasised in his writing and conversation a characteristic which was, in truth, inborn. Moreover, he was rarely in touch with his own time, at any rate, in his writings. By nature he was Roman, by intellect Athenian. Hence we find in him a certain superb scorn for the ill-considered and too emotional writing of the present day. How far, indeed, modern literature has a bias towards emotion and sentiment we have no space at present to discuss; but undoubtedly this tendency has been felt and attacked by such a really great writer as Mr. Meredith. In any case, the three reasons we have given will be enough to account for a certain delay in popular enthusiasm towards Walter Savage Landor.

The present book by Mr. Stephen Wheeler will not, we think, add greatly to the fame of Landor. Interesting much of it undoubtedly is; but we cannot conscientiously say that either by the prose or the poetry, here published for the first time, any real addition will be made to an already secure reputation. The countenance of Landor has an aspect original and powerful, though probably no really excellent portrait of him is to be found. He himself appeared to prefer the likeness of him by Sir William Boxall, which, however, Mr. Colvin considers benignant and feeble. Partly, however, because of Landor's own preference, and also because, in stating his preference, he makes an interesting self-revelation, we may quote what he says of the portrait:

"Perhaps, when I am in the grave, curiosity may be excited to know what kind of countenance that creature had who imitated nobody, and whom nobody imitated; the man who walked through the crowd of poets and prose-men and never was touched by anyone's skirts; who walked up to the ancients and talked with them familiarly, but never took a sup of wine or crust of bread in their houses. If this should happen, and it probably will within your lifetime, then let the good people see the old man's head by Boxall."

So far as we can gather, not merely by actual portraits, but by the personal description of the Countess of Blessington, Landor had a face of rugged intellectuality, with eyes of quick intelligence, and a mouth always on the edge of human kindness. Though in the opinion of the present writer Landor's fame rests as much on his poetry as his prose, and especially on the splendid poem of "Gebir," which was an especial favourite with Shelley, most readers will know him best by the "Imaginary Conversations." Three additions are here made, though one of them appears finally in verse form. The first here printed will undoubtedly be read with the greatest interest. This is an imaginary conversation between Savonarola and the Prior of San Marco. Unfortunately, this conversation is "imaginary" in the worst sense. In the other conversations Landor has never, so far as we are aware, outraged, at any rate, probabilities; and it is half the charm of these compositions that the author almost persuades us that they actually took place. It was impossible, however, that Savonarola could have had any such conversation with the Prior as is here described. Nor, as a matter of fact, was Savonarola, though put to the extreme of torture, actually burnt, as he is here represented to have been. He was hanged with two monks—Domenicho, of Padua, and Silvestro Maruti. The actual facts of that celebrated death being so well known, the force of the following passage is almost altogether lost:

SAVONAROLA.

"My Holy Father, the Father who is in heaven, has too often found me guilty, even from infancy. Nevertheless has He deigned to show me the light of His countenance, and to confer on me the office of proclaiming His will. And now His right hand guides me on the road to expiate my many sins."

PRIOR.

"Thy many sins? What mortal ever lived more chastely, more charitably, more devoutly? And to die so! Oh, God of Mercy! Can human flesh endure the surrounding flames?"

SAVONAROLA.

"Yes; that flesh which God has prepared for it."

If this passage suffers something from a perversion of actual fact, the concluding part of the dialogue is fine in the extreme. And here let us point out what has sometimes been ignored—the great dramatic faculty which Landor shows, quite apart from the beauty and reticence of his dialogue.

PRIOR.

"What noise is that I hear? Whither are coming those four carts? With what are they laden?"

SAVONAROLA.

"I will tell thee."

PRIOR.

"But why dost thou also rise from thy chair?"

SAVONAROLA.

"Those carts are laden with faggots and stakes; one of the stoutest is several ells long. What a number of poor starving creatures might be comforted at Christmas by such a quantity of materials!"

That one line, "But why dost thou also rise from thy chair?" gives us the authentic thrill which the great dramatists give. The second dialogue is not only greatly inferior to the first, but quite inferior to any other of the "Imaginary Conversations." It is supposed to take place between the Countess of Albany, the widow of the Young Pretender, who died so miserably after his splendid and forlorn expedition, and Alfieri, the lover of the Countess. There is nothing here that seems to call for any special comment, except that Landor was evidently not in the vein when he wrote it. A note, however, which he appends describing the death-bed of the heart-broken poet is decidedly interesting. Alfieri turns on his bed to the priest who has been sent to him, and says, "Who are you? I don't know you, and I don't want you, and I won't have you." The third conversation, which finally took verse form, is a description of the appearance of Joan of Arc before her judge, the bishop of Beauvais. Here, again, we are not greatly impressed. The whole scene has a frigid cleverness about it, which is never for a moment convincing. It is an interesting intellectual exercise, done into verse—correct, flat, and uninspired. As a specimen we may take some lines from the concluding speech of Joan of Arc:

JOAN.

"I am no sorceress, no prophetic;
But this, O man in ermine, I foretell:
Thou and those round thee shall ere long re-ve
Your due reward. England shall rue the day
She entered France—her empire totters. Pile,
Ye sentinels, who guard those hundred heads
Against a shepherdess in bonds—pile high
The faggots round the stake that stands upright.
And roll the barrel gently down the street,
Let the pitch burst the hoops and mess the way."

This is a quite fair specimen of the whole scene, never for a moment charged with colour, or passion, or even vigour.

Coming to Landor's detached thoughts and writings by the way, it is interesting to know that he would sooner have written Gray's "The boast of heraldry," &c., and George Herbert's lovely verse, beginning "Sweet day, so cool, so calm, so bright," than any other verse ever penned; and that, perhaps, his favourite couplet was Tibullus'

"Te spectem, supremæ mihi cum venerit hora Te teneam moriens deficiente manu."

The beauty of "deficiente manu" is probably impossible to translate into English; and Landor has certainly not done it in

"And hold your hand to the last clasp in mine."

The word "deficiente" gives the sense of a gradual failing and faltering of touch, which is quite missed in the commonplace "last clasp." It is curious to find emphasised here what is already known—Landor's preference of Ovid to Virgil. Undoubtedly the Ovidian elegiac is well-nigh perfect of its kind, but it is apt to pall with its repeated sweetness, and cannot for a moment be compared to the ever-varied, ever-sonorous music of the Virgilian hexameter. We are glad to find him attacking the absurdly inadequate which Landor, by the way, ascribes to Ben Jonson. He has here such an excellent criticism on Shakespeare that it will bear quotation:

"Warble his native wood-notes wild,"

"Shakespeare was no warbler, nor were wood-notes his. . . . On the contrary, they were elaborate, and the thoughts were often far-sought and quaint. . . . Imagination, not fancy, possessed him when he made Caliban his slave, and when he possess the heart of Miranda."

As to Landor's feeling towards "Rose Aylmer," it is probable that it was not so much a deep emotion as an imaginative yearning. Poets love through their imagination, and the feeling is often very real; but it is not to be confounded with the affection of the average man. We have only to cite Dante's feeling towards Beatrice, or Shelley's as expressed in Epipsychidion, or that of Shakespeare in the Sonnets. Nor is it to the point to urge that Landor's tenderness lasted till death. It is precisely this kind of clarified devotion which is often the most durable. As to the identity of J. S., it seems to us something of an impertinence to inquire. This is precisely the kind of speculation which the late Lord Tennyson so rightly, if in somewhat morbid fashion, attacked. In one of his letters which are here quoted, Landor, in fact, makes an interesting reference to Tennyson: "I wish our present poets would pay more attention to immovable and solid models, and less to hollow and light plaster. . . . Do not think I undervalue this excellent man's poetry." With a little reflection, one must admit this to be a very sound criticism on much of Lord Tennyson's work. As to Landor's judgments, generally, on his contemporaries, they are far too biassed by personal matters. He thinks "The Curse of Kehama" one of our greatest poems. His opinions are chiefly interesting as being those of one who spanned such a large period in our literature. But the fact is, that contemporary opinions of authors by authors are utterly misleading, fascinating as they may be to read. Here, for instance, we find Coleridge saying of Landor himself, "He has never learned, with all his energy, to write simple and lucid English." The following line by Landor, on the chief poets of his time, is, in a way, excellent:

"Asthmatic Wordsworth, Byron piping hot."

Byron, however, wrote of Landor:

"That deep-mouthed Boetian Savage Landor
Has taken for a swan rogue Southey's gander."

It is curious to note that Landor foresaw the budding genius of Mrs. Browning, a writer in almost all respects the exact opposite of himself. Though we cannot think that the specimens of Landor here given will contribute greatly to his fame, this book is excellent reading throughout; and if it does not add a leaf to his laurel, it emphasises a great and lovable personality.

WORDSWORTHIANA.

A Primer of Wordsworth. By Laurie Magnus. (Methuen.)

Journals of Dorothy Wordsworth. Edited by William Knight. (Macmillan & Co.)

Poems in Two Volumes. By William Wordsworth. Reprinted from the Original Edition of 1807. Edited by Thomas Hutchinson. (Nutt.)

Four Poets: Selections from Wordsworth, Coleridge, Shelley, and Keats. Selected by Oswald Crawford. (Chapman & Hall.)

M. LEGG'S interesting study of Wordsworth seems to have given the signal for a whole number of works on the same inexhaustible subject. Here are four books within a week, wholly or in large part devoted to him. A fifth, Mr. Andrew Lang's anthology, is reserved for separate treatment.

We do not think that a primer of a poet's work is a very happy thing to write. Apart from the unpleasant associations of the name, it implies a formality and rigidity of treatment which does not lend itself to the most fruitful criticism. So long as facts are dealt with it is all right. Mr. Magnus's brief biography of Wordsworth and his bibliography of books by and about him are most useful; but when he comes to the discussion of the poems he is clearly hampered by having to arrange them under "Longer Poems," "Shorter Poems," "Memorials of Tours and Sonnets," and to write the orthodox little bit about each piece in turn. It is a pity, for both in these chapters and in the critical essay proper which Mr. Magnus appends to them there is some excellent appreciation—subtle, sympathetic, discriminating. And Mr. Magnus has the gift of putting his critical views effectively. Here are two telling sentences on Wordsworth's mistakes in revising some of his early poems:

"Form had misled his early genius into bizarrerries and conceits of style; in later life, therefore, the mere presence of style, super-added as such, conveyed occasionally to his morbid remorse a feeling of distrust and suspicion. Often enough he sacrificed linguistic beauty, spontaneously attained in the glow of creation, to the chilling quality of logical precision, and, puzzled, as it were by his own excellence, exerted himself for a pedantic reconstruction of his musical thought."

Mr. Magnus's judgment frequently carries us with him, but we part company when he begins a polemic against The Ode on the Intimations of Immortality. He takes the line that it is not up to the level of modern psychology, which "discovers the child 'trailing' quite other and more definite qualities than 'clouds of glory' from its quadrumanous ancestors." This sort of thing—it is really a divergence from Mr. Magnus's normal manner—rather makes us gasp. And surely "Herbert's theory of the individual's life following the stages of the race's culture" is heavy artillery to bring up against a poem.

The journals of Dorothy Wordsworth now published by Prof. Knight are of two kinds: there are domestic journals, written at Alfoxden in 1798, and at Grasmere at various periods from 1800 to 1803, and there are journals of travel, recording tours undertaken at home and abroad up to 1828. With large portions of these writings Prof. Knight and other biographers have already familiarised the world; the majority of them have never hitherto been printed in full. Nor are they now so printed. This is Prof. Knight's Apologia:

"All the journals contain numerous trivial details, which bear ample witness to the 'plain living and high thinking' of the Wordsworth household; and in this edition samples of these details are given—but there is no need to record all the cases in which the sister wrote 'To-day I mended William's shirts,' or 'William gathered sticks,' or 'I went in search of eggs,' &c., &c."

It is churlish, perhaps, to look a gift-horse in the mouth; but, grateful as we are to Prof. Knight for what he has afforded us, we are bound to say that the value of the boon seems immensely diminished by the absence of just those "trivial details" which he has elected to suppress. Nothing is in reality "trivial" which throws the slightest light on such unique and fascinating personalities as those of the Wordsworths, and surely, from the "human document" point of view, these faithful records of the daily life which they actually lived are of far greater importance than the more deliberate and artificial accounts of holiday tours in unfamiliar surroundings. Nor is our confidence, that Prof. Knight was justified in disregarding what Dorothy Wordsworth thought fit to preserve, in any way increased by a consideration of the state in which this process has left his text. What are we to make of this, for instance: "A poor girl called to beg, who had no work, and was going in search of it to Kendal. She slept in Mr. Benson's . . . and went off after breakfast in the morning with 7d. and a letter to the Mayor of Kendal." Why are we supposed not to care whether the girl slept in Mr. Benson's guest-chamber or his barn? Two pages later comes the following: "A succession of delicious views from . . . to Brathay. We met near . . . a pretty little boy with a wallet over his shoulder." Surely this again is an irritating and motiveless mutilation. After all deductions, however, the book is a most welcome one, and we regret the impossibility of according to it the space it deserves. It does not, of course, in any essential point, modify our notions of Dorothy Wordsworth, or of her great brother, or of their serene life in the little Grasmere cottage; but it fills in many outlines, and renews and deepens our knowledge of one of the most delightful relationships in all literature.

Mr. Hutchinson's elegant reprint of the Poems of 1807, together with that of the Lyrical Ballads issued by the same publisher some years ago, will be of considerable value to the critical student of Wordsworth, who above all things desires to trace the gradual changes in the poet's literary creed, as they declare themselves in the constant and careful revision of his work. The nature of this revision is indicated in the notes appended by the editor, who also furnishes a preface and an exceedingly interesting essay on the structure of the Wordsworthian sonnet. "Professor Schiffer," however, to whom Mr. Hutchinson refers as the author of a book on English metre, should surely be "Professor Schipper." All the editorial matter is good and to the point, and we owe Mr. Hutchinson a special debt of gratitude for the happy identification of Louisa, the "dear Child of Nature," with Wordsworth's sister-in-law, Joanna Hutchinson. In a sense, of course, and as a literary manifesto, the Lyrical Ballads is the most important of all the Wordsworthian issues; but in quality of work, whether in the realm of ethical inspiration or in that of natural magic, the volumes of 1807 stand far before all others. Mr. Hutchinson pertinently points out that they furnish more nearly a half than a third of the poems included in Matthew Arnold's admirable selection. On the whole, this is a useful, as well as an admirably printed, book.

Mr. Oswald Crawford's choice from Wordsworth for his "Four Poets" volume is, on the whole, a happy one. But it is one of the beauties of making anthologies that no two anthologists ever agree in their admissions and exclusions. Personally, we should have had no hesitation in omitting "The Brothers," and replacing it by some half-dozen of the very best of the shorter poems for which Mr. Crawford has found no room. Among them should have been the first poem to "The Daisy," the lines "To H. C.," the sonnet "Nuns fret not in their convent's narrow room," and that exquisite one "To Sleep," that begins, "A flock of sheep that leisurely pass by." With Shelley we think that Mr. Crawford is more completely successful, and, of course, with the easier problems afforded by Keats and Coleridge, although Coleridge's "Frost at Midnight" should not have been forgotten.

GHOSTS: BELIEF AND UNBELIEF.

Studies in Psychical Research. By Frank Podmore. (Kegan, Paul & Co.)

Real Ghost Stories. By W. T. Stead. (Grant Richards.)

It is about fifteen years since actual and alleged supernatural or supernormal phenomena were first studied in a serious scientific spirit. The pioneers of the movement are now beginning to think that it is time for an interim stock-taking of the results. Mr. Myers has delivered his soul in an elaborate speculation on The Subliminal Consciousness. The Egeria of the Psychical Research Society, Mrs. Henry Sidgwick, whose conclusions we should study with great interest, is as yet silent. In the meantime comes Mr. Podmore, who may be said to represent the sceptical right wing of the society, as Mr. Myers represents its credulous left wing, with a lucid and luminous survey of the whole field of inquiry. No one is more qualified to speak. Mr. Podmore has been an active researcher from the beginning; he took part with Mr. Myers and the late Mr. Gurney in the publication of Phantasms of the Living, and he has already written a tentative study of Apparitions and Thought-Transference. The present book is singularly judicious and singularly convincing. He has a firm grip of the primal canon of all investigation, the scientific law of economy: he will not posit hitherto unknown causes for phenomena until the limits of the action of known causes have been demonstrably passed.

Two known causes explain satisfactorily a large proportion of the phenomena with which the Psychical Research Society has to deal: human fraud and human folly. Or, if folly is too hard a word, the ineradicable tendency of the human mind to magnify and misreport any unusual and disturbing event. A careful and most impartial analysis of the evidence enables Mr. Podmore to find the operation of these causes in most of the spiritualistic and mediumistic marvels, as well as in the already exploded feats of Mme. Blavatsky and Eusapia Palladino. Nor can he consider the hypothesis of trickery disposed of in the cases of Mr. Stainton Moses or of the medium Daniel Home, on both of whom Mr. Myers relies much. In these two cases, however, trickery has never been absolutely proved. The poltergeists, troublesome spirits which throw coal about houses, are also, according to Mr. Podmore, frauds, generally the frauds of hysterical girls. Then Mr. Podmore stops to establish the existence of what is known as telepathy, or the direct transference, otherwise than through the ordinary channels of perception, of ideas from mind to mind. This he does from the observed facts of experimental thought-transference. Telepathy, he proceeds to suggest, explains such hallucinations, apparitions, premonitions, and clairvoyance as a rigid application of the rules of evidence leaves still in need of explanation. Finally, of course, comes the question, whether when the action of fraud and folly, and the action of ordinary telepathy from living consciousnesses has been exhausted, there is still any residuum of facts to be explained; whether, that is to say, there is any room for an hypothesis of telepathic communication from disembodied consciousnesses or spirits. As to this Mr. Podmore declines to commit himself: the material is far from complete, but he suggests that if any such facts at present survive investigation they must be looked for in the trance-utterances of that most remarkable of all mediums, Mrs. Piper. Mrs. Piper is, of course, still under observation, and this is how psychical research at present stands.

Mr. Stead's Real Ghost Stories is a book of little scientific value to the student of hallucinations. Many tales are of ancient occurrence, and, therefore, of dubious evidence. Others are not told at first hand, others have the stamp of the magazine yarn upon them. The best vouched for are selected from the store of the Society for Psychical Research. The whole collection, however, is good ghostly reading, and Mr. Stead disarms criticism by making no scientific pretensions. He is in favour of study and inquiry, or, at all events, is opposed to absolute denial without inquiry. He discourages the public from playing at spiritualism, and encourages people who have "spontaneous" experiences of hallucinations or odd dreams, and so forth, to record them at once; the public is not likely to take the trouble.

As matters stand, almost every one will admit that sane and healthy people are occasionally hallucinated. The question is, have we any grounds for the presumption that such experiences are, occasionally, due to the action of a distant mind on the mind of the seer or percipient? This supposed action, called "Telepathy," is an idea as old, at least, as the sixteenth century, and is formulated, conjecturally, by Kant. Mr. Stead writes much about "The Thought Body," which is another affair, not admitted as even a feasible guess by the author of The Critique of Pure Reason. Several of Mr. Stead's hallucinations here are "empty," coinciding with no crisis in the history of the person seemingly seen. We can never get statistics as to the proportion of "empty" and of veridical hallucinations, and we cannot go far without them.

About evidence Mr. Stead is light-hearted. He cites Miss Strickland for the wraith of Queen Elizabeth; but what was Miss Strickland's authority? Apparently it was a MS. at Stoneyhurst, but we have not succeeded in getting a copy of that MS. In any case, the hallucination was empty and of a common kind—the apparition of a person well known to the seer, when that person is really in another room in the house. Mr. Stead's historical bogies are either unsupported by evidence, or the evidence is cited thus—"d'Aubigné, Histoire Universelle." Agrippa d'Aubigné, by the way, has a very touching ghost story of his own in his Memoirs. The Villiers ghost is backed here by no reference at all; and Towse, not Towers, was the seer. "Pausanius" and bond fides are examples of Mr. Stead's indifference to classical learning. The Lyttelton story has earlier evidence than the Gentleman's Magazine—namely, that of absolutely contemporary diaries. "Laird Bucconi" is not a Scottish name; but why ask Mr. Stead to be critical?

Under the head of clairvoyance, Mr. Stead touches lightly on crystal-gazing, which he illustrates correctly by illusions hypnogogiques of his own. He gives very few cases of clairvoyance in this form, yet these are probably the best accessible proofs of vue à distance. The oldest crystal-gazer, or, rather, water-gazer, is Numa Pompilius, as reported by Varro, cited by St. Augustine in his Civitas Dei. Perhaps no popular belief is at once so ancient, so widely diffused, and so capable of being tested in modern experience.

Mr. Stead is wrong in thinking that Highland "Second Sight" is "always scenic"; there are auditory as well as visual hallucinations in the Highlands: they are often combined, see Journal of the Caledonian Medical Society for this year. If anything usually described as "ghostly" is worthy of the attention of psychologists, pathologists, and anthropologists, the whole set of topics must be examined in a way very unlike Mr. Stead's way. He represents an advance on Mrs. Crowe and Mr. Dale Owen, but not a very marked advance. His collection, however, is full of such reading as parents (and Mr. Stead himself) would not "put into the hands" of the young and nervous. Seers who want to be taken seriously must "make a note of" their visions at once, with any corroborative evidence which can be procured, and then send it to the officers of the S.P.R., who will conscientiously make their lives a burden to them. "The subject," says Mr. Stead, "is one which every common man and woman can understand." This is flattering, but incorrect. At present nobody can understand the subject at all. "The latent possibilities of our complex personality are imperfectly understood," says Mr. Stead, on the next page but one, in a flash of right reason. We ought not to omit the circumstance that Mr. Stead's version of Willington Mill is probably the best extant. The troubles of the Proctor family obviously inspired Lord Lytton's tale of The Hound of the Baskin's, the best "fancy" ghost story in English literature. Mr. Stead's Brook House is also a noble case of haunting.

"But when the glum Researchers come,
The brutes of bogies go!"

THE IRISH WONDERWORLD.

The Fairy Changeling, with Other Poems. By Dora Sigerson (Mrs. Clement Shorter.) (John Lane.)

In 1893, Miss Dora Sigerson published a volume of "Verses," marked by characteristic and individual notes, which received something less than their due recognition: partly, may be, because they were accompanied by pieces, interesting indeed, but of less value. The book contained "All Souls' Night," "A Cry in the World," and "Cean Duv Deelish"; which last, with one other, reappears in the writer's new volume. The later pieces are full of a wistful charm of imagination: witness this extract from "The Ballad of Maid Marjorie." She has lost her lover, and she meets a fisher, a "sad searcher of the sea," whom she questions upon his melancholy and his looks of fear. The sea had given up one of its dead into his net.

"And was he young, and was he fair?"
"Oh, cruel to behold!
In his white face the joy of life
Not yet had grown a-cold."
"Oh, pale you are, and full of prayer,
For one who sails the sea."
"Because the dead looked up and spoke,
Poor maiden Marjorie."
"What said he, that you seem so sad,
O fisher of the sea?"
(Alack, I knew it was my love,
Who fain would speak to me!)"
"He said, "Beware a woman's mouth—
A rose that bears a thorn."
"Ah, me! these lips shall smile no more
That gave my lover scorn."
"He said, "Beware a woman's eyes,
They pierce you with their death."
"Then falling tears shall make them blind
That robbed my dear of breath."
"He said, "Beware a woman's hair—
A serpent's coil of gold."
"Then will I shear the cruel locks
That crushed him in their fold."
"He said, "Beware a woman's heart,
As you would shun the reef."
"So let it break within my breast,
And perish of my grief."
"He raised his hands; a woman's name
Thrice bitterly he cried:
"My net had parted with the strain;
He vanished in the tide."
"A woman's name! What name but mine,
O fisher of the sea?"
"A woman's name, but not your name,
Poor maiden Marjorie."

Another forcible poem is "The Suicide's Grave," with its questioning stanzas, as thus:

"What did you hear when you opened the doors of death?
Was it the sob of a thrush, or a slow sweet breath
Of the perfumed air that blew through the doors with you,
That you fought so hard to regain the world
you knew? . . . . .
"Or was it in death's cold land there was no perfume
Of the scented flowers, or lilt of a bird's gay tune?
No sea there, or no cool of a wind's fresh breath,
No woods, no plains, no dreams, and alas! no
death?"

There are many poems in the volume, lyrical in many moods, and scarce one without its arresting image: but to many the most acceptable will be the legends, fairy tales, facts or fictions of the "Irish Wonderworld," from which the writer draws much of her inspiration. Such are "The Fairy Changeling," the fine "Ballad of the Little Black Hound," and that of the "Fairy Thorn-Tree," to name but these. Here is the sense of humanity "moving about in worlds not realised." It is a sense variously felt in the poems and other work of such writers as Mr. Yeats, Mrs. Hinkson, Miss Nora Hopper, Miss Fiona Macleod, and "A. E." It were well, if such writers were left to do their work without let or hindrance from extreme criticism upon one hand and uncritical enthusiasm on the other. "I have a great penchant," writes Arnold in his Letters, "for the Celtic races with their melancholy and unprogressiveness." There is melancholy in Mrs. Shorter's poems, but certainly progressiveness and growth in her art.

BRIEFER MENTION.

Solomon Caesar Malan, D.D.: Memorials of his Life and Writings. By the Rev. A. N. Malan. (Murray.)

DR. MALAN was a man of rare and remarkable learning. His library, now on the shelves of the Indian Institute at Oxford, is evidence of the width and variety of his acquaintance with Oriental tongues. On one occasion he performed the somewhat purposeless and irritating tour-de-force of translating the Lord's Prayer into seventy-one languages. Unfortunately this wealth of learning was largely rendered nugatory by an intellectual arrogance and a narrowness of view unexampled among Dryasdusts. Even his son and biographer writes:

"Complete reliance on self made him defiant of all opposition. He could not bear even the rebuff of a contrary opinion. He never would admit the possibility of two sides to a question. Those who ventured to disagree with him placed themselves beyond the pale of reason. Argument, as a rule, he disdained and eschewed. To him his conclusions were self-evident and unquestionable."

It is not in this temper that knowledge grows; nor will it be seriously advanced by the ripest scholar, who "for history generally professed contempt, declaring it to be based on 'lies.'" And so we find Dr. Malan fulminating to the last against the "higher criticism" of Drs. Driver and Cheyne, as in earlier years he had fulminated with Wilberforce against Evolution, and with Burgen against the Greek Text of Westcott and Hort, and the Revised translation of the New Testament. This, by the way, he had pledged himself never to use, before it was published. Into the private life of this extraordinary man, as revealed in his too voluminous biography, we have no space to go. He made close friendships, and was beloved in his parish. He liked birds, fishing, music, and painting. But he must have been difficult to live with. He required apologies if he was mistaken for Mr. Gladstone, whom he resembled. His sons looked upon his study with awe, and were reduced to hiding their undergraduate pipes in their mother's workbox. A friend became a Roman Catholic, and never afterwards would Dr. Malan speak to him. "Once, when they were brought face to face at the bend of a narrow lane, Mr. Malan turned abruptly, and retraced his steps at a rapid pace."

The Legend of Sir Gawain. By Jessie L. Weston. (Grimm Library: Nutt.)

GAWAIN, in later Arthurian romance, has sunk into a secondary position among the Knights of the Table Round. For Malory, Tennyson, and Morris he is an ungracious figure—irreverent, untrue, a light of love. But Malory's portrait is inconsistent, and in the earlier romances Gawain plays a much more prominent and sympathetic part. Miss Weston has made a gallant and learned attempt to disentangle the original Gawain myth from the general body of romance with which it has become complicated. She finds in him a solar culture-hero, at one time closely associated with Guinevere, but ousted from this position by Lancelot. These detailed studies, carried out with the fine scholarship shown by Miss Weston, are invaluable in clearing the path for the final survey of the tangled woods of Arthurian legend.

English Masques. With an Introduction by H. A. Evans. Warwick Library. (Blackie & Son.)

THE masque is a very definite literary form, with a beginning, middle, and end, and lends itself very neatly to such a volume as the present. It need hardly be added that, for essential purposes, the masque is also Ben Jonson. Of the sixteen pieces printed by Mr. Evans, ten are Ben Jonson's, and with these Daniel's Twelve Goddesses, Campion's Lord's Masque, Beaumont's Masque of the Inner Temple and Gray's Inn, Shirley's Triumph of Peace, Davenant's Salmacida Spolia, and the pretty anonymous Masque of Flowers make up a very representative collection. Mr. Evans prefixes an excellent introduction, in which he expresses himself largely indebted to Dr. Sörge's valuable monograph on Die Englischen Maskenspiele. He traces the evolution of the masque from the "disguising" which formed part of the ludi domini regis far back in the Middle Ages; its popularity under the Tudors; its even greater popularity when James, who loved display, succeeded Elizabeth, who loved acting; its hey-day under Jonson and Inigo Jones; and its final extinction under the weight of Prynne's Histriomastix and of the mass of Puritan sentiment which Prynne represented. Mr. Evans has performed his task well, although we do not think he has quite exhausted all the available material. He does not seem, for instance, to have used the Revels Accounts printed by Brewer among the Henry VIII. papers, which throw a good deal of light on the Court entertainments of that period.

The Ruins and Excavations of Ancient Rome. A Companion Book for Students and Travellers. By Rodolfo Lanciani. (Macmillan & Co.)

In the study of the ruins of Ancient Rome it is possible, as Dr. Lanciani points out in his preface, to approach them chronologically, topographically, or architecturally. Each of these methods presents certain advantages; but the author's objection to the architectural method applies equally to the chronological and topographical arrangement. He says: "A method which may be useful for university work, and for a limited number of specialists, cannot also suit the student or the traveller who does not visit our ruins by regions, but according to the main centres of interest and of actual excavations." Dr. Lanciani, therefore, pursues a course of his own. In Book I. the fundamental lines of Roman topography are described. In Book II. the Palatine hill is dealt with. In Book III. a description of the Sacra Via is given, "from its origin near the Coliseum to its end near the Capitolium." The rest of the city is described in Book IV. by the regions of Augustus. For the benefit of students who wish to study the monuments in a different order, three indexes are given, "in the first of which they are named in topographical order, in the second according to their chronology, while in the third they are arranged (alphabetically) in architectural groups." As this book is not intended to be "a complete manual of Roman topography, but only a companion book for students and travellers, copious references are given to standard publications in each subject or part of a subject." In this way Dr. Lanciani has striven to meet the wants of all who are interested in the remains of Ancient Rome, with the result that he has compiled a book of interest for the traveller, and also for students who are eager for a more searching knowledge of the subjects touched upon. The book is copiously supplied with maps and illustrations, the latter "mostly original from drawings and photographs prepared expressly for this work."

Renan's Life of Jesus. Translated by William G. Hutchinson. (Walter Scott.)

THIS translation is opportune, and it has the advantage over existing ones of being made from a later French edition. Mr. Hutchinson supplies a useful Introduction, but we feel we cannot better occupy our space than by quoting his translation of Renan's well-known dedication, which tells so much about Renan, so much about the inception of his Life of Jesus:

"TO THE PURE SOUL OF MY SISTER HENRIETTE, WHO DIED AT BYBLOS, 24TH OF SEPTEMBER, 1861.—Do you remember, in the bosom of God, where you are now at rest, those long days at Ghazir, where, alone with you, I wrote these pages which drew their inspiration from the places we had visited together? Sitting silently by my side, you read over every page, and copied it as soon as written; at our feet stretched the sea, the villages, the ravines, and the mountains. When the overpowering light of day had given place to the unnumbered army of the stars, your thoughtful doubts led me back to the sublime object of our common thoughts. One day you told me that you would love this book, because it had been written with you, and also because it was after your own heart. If, at times, you feared for it the narrow judgments of the man of frivolous mind, you were always full of assurance that truly religious souls would end by finding pleasure in it. In the midst of these sweet meditations the Angel of Death smote both of us with his pinion; the slumber of fever seized us at the self-same hour; I awakened alone. Now you sleep in the land of Adonis, near holy Byblos and the sacred waters whither the women of the ancient mysteries were wont to come and mingle their tears. O, my good genius, reveal to me whom you loved these verities that have kingship over death, that shield us from the dread of it, that almost makes us love it!"

Truly, if literature is tested by translation, this is literature.

Poems Now First Collected. By Edmund Clarence Stedman. (Gay & Bird.)

MR. STEDMAN is an American singer, whose verses have appeared in American magazines for a good many years. His poems make a pleasant sheaf, but they are so various in character that we can well believe the author found their arrangement, as he says, a difficult task. One group of these verses is evidently the offspring of a voyage in the Carib Seas. The magic of those waters have been truly felt, and are finely expressed, by Mr. Stedman. Sometimes we have a theme that Mr. Dobson might have made his own, as in "The Old Picture Dealer":

"Be the day's traffic more or less,
Old Brian seeks his Leyden chair,
Placed in the ante-room's recess,
Our connoisseur's securest lair:
Here, turning full the burner's rays,
Holds long his treasure-trove in sight—
Upon a painting sets his gaze
Like some devoted hermit."

"The book-worms rummage as they will,
Loud roars the wonted Broadway din,
Life runs its hackneyed round—but still
One tireless boon can Brian win—
Can picture in this modern time
A life no more the world shall know,
And dream of Beauty at her prime
In Parma, with Correggio."

Several of the poems owe their origin to "commemorations"; and there are poems of last farewell to Walt Whitman and Bryant.

Men-of-War Names: their Meaning and Origin. By Captain Prince Louis of Battenberg, R.N. (Edward Stanford.)

MANY people must have wished to know more about the origin of the names of our battle-ships. This book will satisfy their curiosity to a limited extent. We say to a limited extent; because the author has nothing to tell us about the manner in which names for war-ships are selected, and by whom, at the Admiralty. He runs through the list of ship-names alphabetically. Where a mythological origin exists he gives it, as in the case of the Ajax, the Egeria, and the Pyramus. He gives us plenty of Lemprière, but there is a dearth of anecdote. Names of birds and beasts given to ships, such as the Hyena, the Buzzard, and the Raccoon are dismissed thus: "RACCOON (5th since about 1780)—Procyonotor. A mammal of North America, allied to the bear family. This third-class cruiser was launched in 1887." This does not strike us as very enlightening, yet it is typical. It is surprising how few of our war vessels are the first of their name. Even the Brisk is the sixth of its name; and the Swift is the fifteenth since 1552. The oldest ship-name, however, is the Royal Sovereign, dating, as it does, from 1485. The book deals similarly with all the navies of Europe and the United States, and, so far as it goes, it is interesting and authoritative.

A Book of Thoughts. Compiled by Mary B. Curry. (Headley Brothers.)

MRS. CURRY has compiled a number of passages in prose and verse which were a source of refreshment to her father, John Bright. Mr. Bright's literary tastes were simple and sincere, if they did not always reveal great critical insight. But he encouraged the reading of Milton. Indeed, he made it a point to read Paradise Lost through once a year. The extracts given in prose and verse are very numerous, and include favourite Psalms. Judging by the number assigned to Milton, Longfellow, Lowell, Richard C. Trench, Whittier, and Adelaide Procter, we imagine these were John Bright's favourite poets. The volume is neatly produced, and provides a budget of choice and elevating reading.

Illustrated New Testament. (Nelsons.)

THIS Testament is well printed on excellent paper, and contains two hundred illustrations of Bible scenes and sites. The views are chiefly from photographs, and are incorporated in the text. To those who are not familiar with the scenery and architecture of the Holy Land, these illustrations supply an accurate background to the Gospel story.

When all Men Starve. By Charles Gleig. (John Lane.)

ANOTHER forecast of war and defeat for England, put forth, of course, as a warning. Such narratives always strike us as profoundly unconvincing, and this is no exception. Trouble in the Transvaal, and the vacillation of the Cabinet in dealing with Germany, which sends 20,000 troops to Delagoa Bay, lead to a demand for the evacuation of Egypt by France and Russia; a naval war is precipitated; and the British Mediterranean Fleet is defeated. In the Strand a well-fed merchant is followed into an Aerated Bread shop by the unemployed, and is forced to stand on a table and read out the telegrams, whereupon the table is knocked from under him and the shop looted of its buns. Defeat and starvation go hand in hand, and the curtain falls on the burning of Buckingham Palace by the mob. Throughout, the author seems to have considered British patriotism and endurance to be negligible quantities.

Ideals for Girls. By the Rev. H. R. Haweis. (James Bowden.)

THIS book ought to go straight from Mr. Haweis to his girl readers, his "Untidy Girls," "Musical Girls," "Parochial Girls," "Engaged Girls," and "Brides." Reviewers and people who intercept it on the way will be provoked to smiles—one can hardly say why—but Mr. Haweis is so fatherly and so eager, and apparently so competent, to advise young girls how to shake and hang up their clothes, so that muslin will not be rumpled, or silk creased, or "the steels or bones in bodices bent or snapped." We live in wonderful times.

The Homes and Haunts of Sir Walter Scott, Bart. By George G. Napier, M.A., (Glasgow: James Maclehose & Sons.)

As a footnote to Lockhart's Life this luxurious volume, with its multitude of plates and engravings, will be heartily welcomed. The districts especially associated with Scott's life and work lie in the north-eastern part of Scotland. His movements are picturesquely traced from Edinburgh, "mine own romantic town," to the great house of Abbotsford, which Mr. Ruskin described as "perhaps the most incongruous pile that gentlemanly modernism ever designed," and of which Stanley declared dolefully that it was "a place to see once but never again." Mr. Napier has done his work thoroughly and adequately.

FORGET ME, DEATH!—O DEATH,
FORGET ME NOT!

"FORGET me, Death, as from the meadow-land
I rise with wayside song and bounding feet,
While far below me fades the valley sweet
And far above, the beckoning summits stand.
Halt me not midway up, where the dim band
Of those who watch below shall see us meet
And mark Thee cut me down in the full heat
Of my soul's mounting purpose. Stay Thy hand
As I climb on, climb on—always more nigh
The sacred heights where lovest Thou to be,
My heart an eagle-brood of hopes that cry
To those lone crags of storm and majesty.
The eaglets gone, my heart their empty nest,
Strike me, quick Death, into my warm deep rest!

"O Death, forget me not, till I descend!
Take not Thy place behind me, as with slow
And slower steps, a waning shape, I go
Toward the silent valley and the end.
Lest midway down I turn with rage and send
A curse at Thee, nay, seize thy blade and mow
Myself down at Thy feet, and with the snow
Of those deep years let my heart's summer blend.
O Mighty One! How were it meet for Thee
To set Thy foot upon the vanquished head,
To wrest from Age a stingless victory
Whence Joy and Song and Love long, long have fled!
Await me on the peaks of heavenward strife!
Slay me, great Death, on the young peaks of Life!"

JAMES LANE ALLEN.
Mountains of West Virginia.

THE ACADEMY FICTION SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1897.

THE NEWEST FICTION. A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

DARTEL.

By R. D. BLACKMORE.

Mr. Blackmore gives this book—which has his old gifts of geniality and spaciousness—the sub-title “A Romance of Surrey.” Surrey, however, plays a part of less importance than the Caucasus. The nominal narrator of the story is a Winchester and Oxford man, but Mr. Blackmore’s own style is very evident. Possibly the Winchester and Oxford man had read Lorna Doone and absorbed the manner. The book is essentially and nobly English, and, once the digressions are overcome, as interesting, nay enthralling, as you can want. Readers of Blackwood—where it appeared—already know this. The illustrations are an excrescence. (Blackwood & Sons. 400 pp. 6s.)

THE OUTLAWS OF THE MARCHES. By LORD ERNEST HAMILTON.

This is a book rather for those that dearly love a lord than for those that dearly love good fiction. It is Scotch, and it is illustrated by photographs of actual scenery; but we are tired of Scotch romances, and photographs bore us. Moreover, the date of the story is the sixteenth century, and the first person singular is employed, and they say “Hech!” and “whigmaleeries” and “willidrag” and “cockle-cutit,” and we do not know what such words mean. It is true that there is a glossary; but who can consult a glossary at the end of a romance? Rather will we wait for a translation. (Fisher Unwin. 348 pp. 6s.)

HIS GRACE OF OSMONDE. By FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT.

A companion story to A Lady of Quality, or, in the author’s words, “the portion of the History of that Nobleman’s Life (the Duke of Osmonde) omitted in the relation of his Lady’s Story presented to the World of Fashion under the title of A Lady of Quality.” (F. Warne & Co. 484 pp. 6s.)

A MAN OF THE MOORS. By HALLIWELL SUTCLIFFE.

A serious book by a writer who takes himself seriously, to wit, the author of The Eleventh Commandment. One of his characters is described as “of the fine moor breed, and she had grown up under the eye of the great God who dwells between the hill-summits and the clouds.” Griff Lomax was one of a family who “had grown to manhood with the taste of the peat in their mouths, and the quickening heath-winds in their veins.” The troubles, sorrows, joys, successes, and failures of his life are here set down. (Kegan Paul & Co. 299 pp. 6s.)

BUSHIGRAMS.

By GUY BOOTHBY.

The author of Dr. Nikola belongs to that class of authors who are called “readable.” Here is the opening sentence of one of the stories in this volume: “‘My dear,’ said pretty Mrs. Belverton, the third cleverest woman in Australia, as she lowered the window-blind of her brougham on the way home from the Bishop’s Court garden party, ‘I’ve been thinking.’” There are nineteen short stories in this volume. We presume Bushigrams means that. (Ward, Lock & Co. 293 pp. 5s.)

POOR LITTLE BELLA.

By F. C. PHILLIPS.

If you enjoy the attractive cynicism employed by the author of As in a Looking-Glass you will not be disappointed in this autobiography of a girl, who, like Jean Jacques Rousseau, is determined to tell the truth about herself. Mr. Phillips can suggest a character in two lines. Here is Bella’s mother: “She took in the Morning Post and enjoyed the Family Herald.” In the end Bella “got married like other girls”: just what mamma wanted. (Downey & Co. 318 pp. 6s.)

THIS LITTLE WORLD.

By DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY.

A novel of artistic life. The hero is Jack Cutler, a landscape painter. There is much “shop”; indeed, the story is almost all shop, with a souçon of love. Luckily the artistic life has its humours, and Mr. Christie Murray has an eye for them. The end is as it should be: Jack Cutler puts his arms around Hope’s waist, which is a very suitable place for them, and the Baroness smiles satisfaction. (Chatto & Windus. 378 pp. 6s.)

“AND SHALL TRELAWNEY DIE?”

By JOSEPH HOCKING.

The Trelawney of this story is not the bishop whose persecution in the seventeenth century roused intense feeling in Cornwall, but is one Hugh Trelawney, the last of his race, born in a workhouse, and fighting for his identity and his lands. The story is full of local colour, and of improbabilities which are not even local. But Mr. Hocking knows his public, and he certainly has the gift of “yarning.” A second story, The Mist on the Moors, occupies half the book, and is laid, like the first, among the Altarnun moors. (James Bowden. 345 pp. 6s.)

TO THE ANGEL’S CHAIR.

By JOHN THOMAS.

This story of Welsh life and Welsh village ideals tells how Gomer Williams rose from the mines to the ministry. En route we have a great strike of the miners, and scenes of deep spiritual emotion in the Ebenezer chapels. The love interest is strong and is concerned with the attachment between Gomer and Lucy Pennant, the daughter of a wealthy colliery owner. This brings into the story the further interest of a collision between Church and Dissent, and between social position and humble worth. Unfortunately Mr. Thomas makes his characters orate. Lucy rejects the proposal of Ned Wynne in a speech which would have been effective on a platform, though a little too well rounded even there. Finally, we see Gomer bearing off the honours in a surging Welsh crowd at the Risteddfod. The book is another sign of the growing specialisation of fiction. (Hodder & Stoughton. 403 pp. 6s.)

MIRIAM ROZELLA.

By B. L. FARJEON.

Appeared in the Daily Mail. It is extremely wordy, and in his attempt to depict the struggles of a young girl beset with temptation Mr. Farjeon has used up the stock phrases and situations and backgrounds of Surrey melodrama. Indeed, his statement that the dramatic rights of the story are fully protected seems to indicate a melodramatic intention. But we imagine no audience at the Surrey, or elsewhere, would stand Lord Laverock’s soliloquy uttered over his wife’s dead body. The book is too lurid for our taste, to say the least. (F. V. White & Co. 388 pp. 6s.)

THE BLUES AND THE BRIGANDS.

By M. M. BLAKE.

A novel founded on the events of the French Revolution. It is told in the first person and purports to relate the experiences of Etienne-Marie Carraud. The attack on the Bastille is described, as part of the story, in an early chapter; and the events of the Revolution go crashing through Miss Blake’s pages in the good old style, while a delicate love-story runs through all. (Jarrold & Sons. 306 pp. 5s.)

THE AMAZING JUDGMENT.

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM.

A strong story by the author of The World’s Great Snare, and other novels. It tells of a husband and wife’s separation during a long period of years, and their reconciliation. The characters are aristocratic, and they are all rather better people than they seem on first acquaintance. A yachting cruise and an island are used very effectively as backgrounds in alternation with London. A fascinating story for a couple of hours’ reading. (Downey & Co. 223 pp. 1s.)

LOVE'S USURIES.

By LOUIS CRESWICKE.

Fourteen short stories, various in character, but generally passionate. "I wonder if the secret of orange blossom, warmed by the breath of the sea, is an intoxicant, if it soaks in at the pores and quickens the veins to madness?" says one figure. Of course, if you smell with your pores there is no saying what may happen. But some of these stories are good reading enough, though the abundance of "dictionary" words is rather bewildering—particularly as they are not always used in a dictionary sense. You are apt to find yourself, like one of Mr. Creswicke's characters, "plumbing exhaustion in a bottomless pit." (Henry J. Drane. 243 pp. 3s 6d.)

AN AFTERNOON RIDE.

By ANNE PAGE.

A rather lurid story of a husband's straying love. The loss of the Drummond Castle is effectively introduced. (Roxburghe Press. 97 pp. 6d.)

FOR PRINCE AND PEOPLE.

By E. K. SANDERS.

This fine story is laid in Old Genoa, and opens in a village of Ceriana in 1546. Oberto, a lad of sixteen, proud, and all the prouder from the fact that his parentage is unknown, enters the service of the Count Barnaba Adorno, and is sent to Genoa on a secret errand to Prince Fiesco, of the noble house of the Fieschi. The reader may then follow him through the tortuous events of a small Italian conspiracy, and the clashing interests of noble Genoese families. (Macmillan & Co. 327 pp. 6s.)

THE MEDHURSTS OF MINDALA.

By MRS. WATERHOUSE.

Mindala is in Australia, and to take an interest in places in Australia, or the people who squat in them, is difficult. Once, however, this initial objection is overcome, the story is interesting, though not epoch-making. In its sub-title it claims to describe the development of a soul. That soul is a girl's. Indeed, it is to girls and women that the book appeals. (Elliot Stock. 250 pp. 6s.)

HIGH PLAY.

By G. MANVILLE FENN.

Mr. Manville Fenn has lately written only for boys, but here he approaches adults again with stronger meat. His new novel, which has the sub-title "A Comedy off the Stage," but is truly a tragedy, is written almost in dialogue form. It tells of Lord Braetoun, who gambled from Eton to the grave. The time is to-day, and we move among Corinthians. A brisk story. (Downey & Co. 381 pp. 6s.)

IN DOUBLE HARNESS.

By ERNEST A. NEWTON.

We gather that the author is a clergyman, and that one purpose in writing these stories is to prove the superiority of the English to the Romish Church; while the intent of the whole book is sectarian. We do not like tracts in the guise of fiction; but if they are to be done, they may as well be done as neatly as this. (Wells, Gardner & Co. 71 pp. 1s.)

A FOREST ORCHID.

By ELLA HIGGINSON.

American "Kailyard" stories. There is humour and true pathos in them; there is first-hand observation both of men (or, to be more precise, of women) and things; the style is direct and simple. (Macmillan & Co. 242 pp. 6s.)

THE VICAR OF ST. NICHOLAS.

By RUBERT ALEXANDER.

This is not a good novel. It is jaunty and disjointed, and there are twins who say, "Oo doin' for a dwive?" and "Us only itty niggies, an' us berry hung'y." Books should have a little dignity—this has none. (Digby, Long. 303 pp. 6s.)

A NOTE ON FICTION.

Until a few weeks ago I supposed it to be a platitude, or, at any rate, a truism, that in Fiction the essential interest is in the characters of the men and women of the story. I was undeceived by the ecstasies into which a certain accomplished critic was betrayed over Mr. Kipling's Captains Courageous. The astonishing detail, the extraordinary quantity of information, and the vigour and vividness of its presentment in that work were dwelt upon with such enthusiasm that the human element was allowed to pass almost unnoticed.

One cannot accuse Mr. Kipling of being guided by any mechanically-made theory; yet the criticism alluded to reminded me forcibly of a suggestion which Mr. Edmund Gosse once made in his Questions at Issue, to the effect that novelists should forsake the old themes and give us romances of trade and labour. So far as I know, the proposal was little heeded. For a time, indeed, the "kail-yard stories" of weavers or farmers seemed to be a step in that direction, and were welcomed by weary reviewers, sickening of the problem-novel; but almost simultaneously there set in a reaction in favour of the undiluted romance, which scorned all trade save that of The Three Musketeers. Looked at to-day, it would seem that the revival of the romance was a protest against the inevitable narrowness of specialised fiction, and that the novel dealing with trade or labour was doomed at the outset; nor is one quite convinced of the contrary even by the brilliancy of Mr. Kipling's latest achievement. I never heard that the most entertaining part of Homer was the catalogue of ships.

In fact, one must take a wider view than Mr. Gosse's; for business or labour, problem or romance, can never for long occupy the first place in our regard as subjects for art. They are of a quite secondary importance: the sole need for them in any book is accessory. As in a painting of men and women there must be shown ground for them to stand on, seats for them to sit on, and light to exhibit the colour and attitude of them on ground or seat, so in books the characters of the persons cannot be shown without the light of circumstance; and the incidents of the plot are merely the pedestals on which the men and women take up their mental and emotional attitudes. The interest is always in the human element.

From this point of view, the occasional clamour of the critics for some new setting is just a trifle absurd. To the novelist it can be only a nuisance to be asked to go out of his way and write of business, romance, politics, or what not, as if these mattered. They can be useful to him only in so far as by their aid he may present attitudes of man different from those of which the reviewers are weary. They are merely a change of raiment for the same creature. And although a change is welcome, the new is likely to be neither better nor worse than the old. This displays the limbs better; but in that the torso was seen to more advantage.

Of course the reviewer grows surfeited, because he reads too many books and digests none. Inasmuch as to do so is his living, the poor man deserves pity too; but when, instead of his gluttony, he blames the subject of it, his advice becomes of little worth, and may even be injurious to the novelist's art. Bilious criticism and the Nonconformist Conscience managed to kill the "problem-novel" of our own day; although the very subject that they found so sickening was almost as old as English literature, and inspired half of it. And already it seems that the new romance is to encounter the fate of the problem-novel.

But, are there then no quite new situations which Fiction might deal with? no attitudes of the souls of men and women but have already been treated? For really, when one thinks of it, the old are singularly few in species, if their varieties are legion. Generally we have, for the man in a book, devotion, faithfulness, masterful courage (and the opposites of these, of course, for a change); and for the woman (with a similar reservation) the heroism of self-sacrifice. Even Ibsen's Nora, and the Second Mrs. Tanqueray, like the hundreds of other heroines who of late have more or less failed in their conventional duty, did so in a spirit of immolation to some unrecognised duty that lay nearer to their souls. The heroine in fiction is almost always kneeling at some altar—Venus's or The Virgin's. And it is not easy to see what more ravishing attitude she could adopt. Only, is attitude everything? Certainly it is all that can be derived from situations, new or old; but are there no other characteristics of men and women that the artist in fiction might make use of?

In life, at least, there are minuter differences between the sexes: the contour of a cheek, the fold of a sleeve, blab of masculine sinews or soft bosoms. And, on the whole, these are dearer to us, they are also far more beautiful than any attitude. These are what we want in art: not so much men and women as man and woman—the essential male and female, with or without heroics.

We have hardly seen this done in literature yet. Hundreds of times the typical posture of the sexes has been rendered with surpassing beauty. No man, for instance, kneels through life so devoutly as does Lady Castlewood in Esmond. She is true woman:

you know it by her bowed head and clasped hands, just as you know Sir Willoughby Paterne for a man by his strut. But excepting by their general position, the men in books are hardly to be distinguished from the women. How many, even, of Rosalind's words might have come from Orlando's lips, and vice versa! Or take Elizabeth Bennett, in Pride and Prejudice. Is it not chiefly by hearsay that we are aware of her sex; because the author told us; and by inference from her name and from the fact of her being in love with a man? Certainly it is not present to us in the words she speaks. One almost forgets at times that she is a woman; she might be a boy playing a woman's part written for him.

In short, the men and women in fiction have been too, too similar to the saints in very early paintings. They have been mere attitudes—the women kneeling, the men strutting. Their faces, their movements, their talk, have failed to give us any indication as to their sex.

It must be humbly confessed that one would not have observed this characteristic of the old fiction had it not been for the contrast afforded, some years since, by a new order of work that set one's mouth watering for more, and especially for serious developments of it. When pictorial art was being revolutionised by the new methods of "black and white" draughtsmen, why was the art of fiction so little stirred by the new and startling work of Mr. Anthony Hope? Was it that the Dolly Dialogues were so unutterably frivolous that serious workmen overlooked them? Or was it not, rather, that their remarkable technique failed to be understood? It is, indeed, true, that the would-be imitations of them were not successful: and it may be also true that their method is not applicable to graver subject matter.

None the less, whatever may have been their defects, this cannot be denied, that just as, by a glance, you can distinguish a man's face from a woman's, so in half a page of these dialogues the man's mind and the woman's were quite separable. Turn up your old copies and judge for yourselves: my own impression is, that the secret lay in good drawing. The contour (apart from the attitude) of the mind seemed to have been observed at last, and there it was set down unmistakably. There was the male, plodding, often almost brutally logical form. It had little sentiment, was cheerfully hypocritical, callously insincere, yet had a grip. The woman, subtle, intriguing, by desire sincere, by habit shifty, is there too. She has her moments of frankness, of reservation; is impulsive, sentimental, mischievous, enthusiastic; limited in humour, illogical, but making up for the lack by intuition swift as lightning—a true woman in every word and gesture. There may be—of course there are—other varieties by the million; but Dolly Mickleham is none the less feminine; and we know that she is so, not by inference or at second hand, but because we see the feminine shape in her mind.

To Mr. Kipling, of course, no suggestions need be made; besides, it would be bootless to do so. But when one sees clever reviewers so glad to turn from humanity to cod-fish it does seem worth while to ask why they neglected to put a foot in the door that the Dolly Dialogues opened for a time? Had they but kept it open, there might have been such developments! The old attitudes might have been used again, but with infinite freshness of treatment: and, in fact, they will have to serve us yet, and we shall find them only the more beautiful when they are set-off by minuter and more exact drawing, instead of by new accessories of detail no better than the old were.

G. S.

REVIEWS.

Marietta's Marriage. By W. E. Norris.
(Heinemann.)

Why are Mr. Norris's novels all so dull? They are good enough stories, well written, well constructed; not without humour, not without observation: the characters are firmly conceived, and the evolution of them by no means slurred. Nevertheless, the books bore one. Why? Because they are almost entirely concerned with those narrowest and most provincial of all human types, men and women of the world. Mr. Norris' personages are all received in good houses; or, if there are exceptions, the salient thing about them generally is that they are not so received. Politics, entertainments, and country-house parties are their occupations. The bottom interest of the men and women is sport. Of art or letters, or any of the things which make life liveable, they appear to be almost entirely unaware. Now such colourless existences are only material for comedy, and of comedy Mr. Norris has not the note. We cannot be persuaded to accept them as worth tragedy, or even melodrama. Take Lionel Mallet in Marietta's Marriage:

"This very handsome, broad-shouldered fellow, whose hair curled crisply over a well-shaped head, and whose profile had been pronounced almost perfect by more than one competent judge, was about to start in life with advantages far more substantial than those which are proverbially but skin-deep. Heir-apparent to an ancient title, and actual proprietor of an estate which had been carefully managed for him during a long minority, he was believed to possess, into the bargain, more than an average share of brains, while he was known to excel in every form of sport and pastime. When to all this is added the fact that his conduct at Eton and Oxford had been irreproachable, or nearly so, it will be perceived that he had some reason for sharing the apprehensions of Polycrates."

Well, Lionel Mallet foolishly marries a foolish woman, and mis-manages his marital relations foolishly, and she foolishly seeks consolation, or nearly seeks consolation, in a cad. But what does it all matter when, wise or foolish, the husband is uninteresting and the wife is uninteresting, and the tertium quid, if possible, the most uninteresting of all?

* * * * *
The Fall of the Sparrow. By M. C. Balfour.
(Methuen.)

If this is a first book—and no other is named on the title-page—then it is distinctly a first book of promise. Three out of the four leading characters are, in one way or another, studies in weakness. Nathaniel Forster's is the weakness of the imaginative man, the man of subtle intellectual processes, the dreamer of dreams, cursed with the fatal indecision of a Hamlet:

"In the middle path of quiescence he found a certain peace; he looked on—and did nothing. There was nothing fine or strong about Nathaniel; he was very weak, very unsure of himself, very irresolute, unready when he was called upon, for good or evil; only, when it came to hurting others, he found it easier, always, to hurt himself. . . . And he thanked God that he could work."

Walter Borthwick has the weakness of the zealot. He is a popular and successful priest, buoyant in his pulpit eloquence, in the multitude of his parish workers, sniffing the heady incense of praise. These removed, he relapses into the ordinary animal man. The women of the book have been studied in greater detail; they endure analysis. One of these, too, is weak, weak in the excess of fruitless emotion; she burns with hectic religious fervour for the clergyman rather than the Church; she is oppressed with the sense of a duty to the poor, which nevertheless remains unfulfilled. Over against her stands Philippa, the one strong figure in the book, shrewd, original, firm-willed, sympathetic; quick to see the issue of events, bold to grasp an opportunity, she hides her real self in a shell of wilful charm, tenderness, and boyish good-fellowship. Miss Balfour, if Miss Balfour it be, has put together a well-knit, carefully wrought story. Though it close somewhat raggedly, that is all of a piece with life.

* * * * *
The Duke and the Damsel. By Richard Marsh.
(C. Arthur Pearson.)

This story revolves round two girls fresh from a convent school, a duke who passes himself off as the owner of a wonderful patent ointment which he calls "Collestena," and a Mrs. Delancy-Fyfart, the mother of the two girls and the widow of General Delancy-Fyfart. As a sample of dialogue between Mrs. Delancy-Fyfart and the duke masquerading as Mr. Strophirah-Buggins, take the following:

"I tell you what, Mr. Buggins, you're either the most impertinent vagabond I ever encountered, or you're a blithering idiot—or else you're a mixture of both!"

"Ah, madam! we benefactors to humanity are apt to be regarded as a mixture of both, until the recording angel establishes our claim to honour by inscribing our names on the rolls of patent medicine in the skies, till a whole citiful is cured by one small tin of Collestena!—then!—ah, then we are regarded as something altogether different."

The characters are vulgar, and the whole situation is impossible.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

KINDLY NOTE THESE FACTS.

1. More than 60,000 additional copies of CASSELL'S MAGAZINE for last December were required to meet the increased demand.
2. The Sale is still Advancing month by month.
3. The NOVEMBER PART this year, notwithstanding the increased supply produced, was out of print within a few days of publication.
4. The special attractions of the DECEMBER PART, now ready, are quite exceptional.
5. Tens of thousands of additional copies have already been ordered by the trade, but they may prove insufficient to meet the demand; it is therefore requested that orders for the December Part may be given by the public forthwith.
6. Many Magazines double their prices at Christmas, but the Charge for CASSELL'S MAGAZINE remains unchanged.

LEADING FEATURES IN CASSELL'S MAGAZINE

FOR

DECEMBER,

Now Ready, price 6d.,

COMMENCING THE NEW VOLUME:

1. A Thrilling Serial Story of Adventure in KLONDYKE, by HEADON HILL, entitled "Spectre Gold."
2. A Complete Story, by MAX PEMBERTON, entitled "Judith of Sari," forming the First of a New Series.
3. A Special "Rembrandt" Plate, consisting of an exquisite reproduction of the stirring Picture by ERNEST CROFTS, R.A., entitled "The Attack on the Gatehouse of the Chateau of Hougemont-Waterloo."
4. In the World of Society.—The Young Married Women. By Mrs. F. HARCOURT WILLIAMSON. With numerous Portraits.
5. Capitals at Play: St. Petersburg. By B. FLETCHER ROBINSON. Illustrated from Photographs.
6. The Art of Disguise. By W. B. ROBERTSON. Illustrated by Original Photographs.
7. Camphor: A Tale of the City. By BARRY PAIN. Illustrated by W. D. Almond.
8. Swords and their Makers: The Story of some Famous Weapons. By JAMES STRANG. Illustrated.
9. An Amazing Christmas Eve. By HORACE ANNESLEY VACHELL. Illustrated by H. M. Brock.
10. Fires at Sea. By ALFRED T. STORY. Illustrated by Gordon Browne, R.I.
11. From a Club Window. By L. F. AUSTIN.
12. What It Feels Like to be Shipwrecked. By ARNOLD WHITE. Illustrated.
13. The Greatest Love: A Complete Story. By EDWARD H. COOPER. Illustrated.
14. In the Arena. With numerous Portraits.
15. Women's Clubs in London. With Photographic Views and Portraits. By LILLY BINGEN.
16. The Sensible Man: A Complete Story. By Mrs. HENRY MANSENGH. Illustrated.

On page 1 of the cover of Cassell's Magazine for December appears the first of Two Coupons entitling the subscriber, for the sum of One Shilling, to a copy of A Fac-simile of the MS. of Dickens's Christmas Carol.

Up to the present time a few Copies only of this literary curiosity have been issued to the public, at a charge of Half-a-Guinea a copy.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

BY a HAIR'S-BREADTH. By Headon HILL. 6s.

CUPID'S GARDEN. Stories by Ellen THORNEYCROFT FOWLER. 6s.

A LIMITED SUCCESS. By Sarah PITT. 6s.

THE WROTHAMS of WROTHAM COURT. By FRANCES HEATH FRESHFIELD. 6s.

WORKS BY J. M. BARRIE.

FIFTIETH THOUSAND.

Now ready, price 6s.,

THE LITTLE MINISTER.

With Nine Illustrations by W. HOLE, R.S.A.

AN ILLUSTRATED EDITION.

Just published, price 6s., of

SENTIMENTAL TOMMY

With Full-Page Illustrations by W. HATHERELL, R.I.

LIBRARY EDITION OF WORKS BY

R. L. STEVENSON.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TREASURE ISLAND. 6s.

THE BLACK ARROW. 6s.

THE MASTER OF BALLANTRAE. 6s.

CHEAP EDITIONS OF REMARKABLE NOVELS.

* Several editions having already been exhausted of these successful Novels, CHEAP EDITIONS have now been produced.

THE HISPANIOLA PLATE (1683-

1693. By JOHN BLOUNDELLE-BURTON. 3s. 6d.

TUXTER'S LITTLE MAID. By G.

B. BURGIN. 3s. 6d.

THE WHITE SHIELD. By Bertram

MITFORD. 3s. 6d.

THE HIGHWAY OF SORROW. By

HESBA STRETTON. 3s. 6d.

BY E. W. HORNING.

MY LORD DUKE. 6s.

THE ROGUE'S MARCH. Cloth gilt, 6s.

MAX PEMBERTON.

A PURITAN'S WIFE. 6s.

THE IMPREGNABLE CITY. 6s.

THE IRON PIRATE. 5s.

THE SEA WOLVES. 6s.

THE LITTLE HUGUENOT. 1s. 4d.

STANLEY WEYMAN.

FROM the MEMOIRS of a MINISTER of FRANCE. 6s.

THE STORY of FRANÇOIS CLUDEL. 6s.

THE MAN in BLACK. 3s. 6d.

FRANK STOCKTON.

A STORY-TELLER'S PACK. 6s.

MRS. CLIFF'S YACHT. 6s.

THE ADVENTURES of CAPTAIN HORN. 6s.

POMONA'S TRAVELS. 3s. 6d.

ANTHONY HOPE.

FATHER STAFFORD. 3s. 6d.

H. RIDER HAGGARD.

KING SOLOMON'S MINES. 3s. 6d.

Q.

IA: A LOVE STORY. 3s. 6d.

WANDERING HEATH. 6s.

DEAD MAN'S ROCK. 6s.

I SAW THREE SHIPS. 6s.

NOUGHTS and CROSSES. 5s.

THE SPLENDID SPUR. 5s.

HISTORY of TROY TOWN. 5s.

THE DELECTABLE DUCHY. 5s.

THE BLUE PAVILIONS. 5s.

ADVENTURES in ORITIOISM. 6s.

SOME NEW VOLUMES.

ENTIRELY NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK BY A LEADING MEDICAL PRACTITIONER.

CASSELL'S FAMILY DOCTOR. By A MEDICAL MAN. Illustrated. 10s. 6d.

The Pall Mall Gazette says:—"There can be no more useful book for a country house than 'Cassell's Family Doctor.' It is a new book, written, so we are told, by a medical man of wide experience and brilliant attainments as a practitioner, and it certainly bears evidence of an extended and intimate knowledge of the causes and treatment of disease. The book lacks nothing in clearness or conciseness, and its directions can easily be followed in any emergency that may arise."

RIVERS of the SOUTH and WEST COASTS. With numerous Illustrations by leading artists. 42s.

"A more beautiful book for the drawing-room table could hardly be imagined."—Daily News.

WITH NATURE and a CAMERA

being the Adventures and Observations of a Field Naturalist and an Animal Photographer. By RICHARD KEARTON, F.Z.S., Author of "British Birds' Nests," &c. Illustrated by a Special Frontispiece, and 100 Pictures from Photographs of Birds, Animals, and Insects, at Work and Play, taken direct from Nature by Cherry Kearton. 21s.

PICTORIAL ENGLAND and WALES

With upwards of 320 beautiful Illustrations prepared from Copyright Photographs. Cloth, 9s.; on superior paper, half-Persian, in box, 15s. net.

THE MAGAZINE of ART YEARLY

VOLUME. With about 1,000 choice Illustrations, and a Series of Special Plates, 21s.

CHEAP EDITION OF

BISHOP ELLICOTT'S COMMENT-

ARY FOR ENGLISH READERS. Embracing the Old and New Testaments. 8 vols.

THE OLD TESTAMENT. 5 vols.

THE NEW TESTAMENT. 3 vols.

4s. each volume. Also the set of 8 vols., 30s.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND. A

History for the People. By the Very Rev. H. D. M. SPENCE, D.D., Dean of Gloucester. Illustrated. Vol. II., 6s.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER'S NEW HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

A HISTORY OF ENGLAND, from

the Landing of Julius Caesar to the Present Day. By H. O. ARNOLD-FORSTER, M.P. Illustrated, 5s.

CASSELL'S MAGAZINE YEARLY

VOLUME FOR 1897. The First Volume of the Enlarged Series. With upwards of 1,250 original Illustrations, cloth, 8s.

THE QUIVER YEARLY VOLUME

for 1897. With about 800 Illustrations and Coloured Picture for Frontispiece. 7s. 6d.

LITTLE FOLKS CHRISTMAS

VOLUME for 1897. With Pictures on nearly every page, together with Six Full-Page Coloured Plates and numerous Illustrations printed in Colour. Boards, 3s. 6d.; cloth, 5s.

* * Cassell & Company's LIST of GIFT BOOKS will be sent post free on application.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, LONDON, PARIS, AND MELBOURNE.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1897.

No. 1334, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . .	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE following letter appeared in the Times this week:

SIR,—In this decadent month, after the great sea-serpent has usually risen once more to the surface of the Press—only, perhaps, to be choked in a far from unseasonable effort to emulate the digestion of other contributors by swallowing the gigantic gooseberry—no sensible man will feel and no honest man will affect surprise at the resurrection of a more ‘ridiculous monster’ than these. The notion of an English Academy is too seriously stupid for farce and too essentially vulgar for comedy. But that a man whose outspoken derision of the academic ideal or idea has stood on record for more than a few years, and given deep offence to nameless if high-minded censors by the frank expression of its contempt and the unqualified vehemence of its ridicule, should enjoy the unsolicited honour of nomination to a prominent place in so unimaginable a gathering—colluvies literarum it probably would turn out to be, if ever it slunk into shape and writhed into existence—well, it seems to me that the full and proper definition of so posterous an impertinence must be left to others than the bearer of the name selected for the adulation of such insult.

ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE.

Mr. Swinburne, it is hardly necessary to state, was included in our suggested list of Academicians for his poetry, never for his prose.

MR. SWINBURNE is unfortunate. To be placed against one's will on a list of the first forty men of letters in the country is sufficiently annoying; but to be spoken of lightly in courts of law as a possible jurymen is worse. In a case heard this week an author claimed to be tried by a jury consisting of four fellow authors, four professors of Arabic, four publishers, and, “if possible, a Laureate.” This makes thirteen; but that apparently did not signify. When asked what Laureate he would choose, the litigant replied—“Mr. Swinburne, perhaps.” The “perhaps” was wisely added.

THE week has been fruitful in invective. The lady who calls herself “Sarah Grand” ranges herself with Mr. Swinburne in the following letter to a critic in the Daily Telegraph:

“That you should insult Scott and Thackeray and Dickens with your approval pains me but little, since they will never hear of it; that you are so much cleverer than I am I must modestly accept your word for; that you strain yourself to be facetious and but prove yourself a dunce, I must attribute to your academic degree, and a course of the blighting wit of the common-room; that you should attack me with base misrepresentation I set down to some rag of chivalry that still clings to you; that you are of ancient lineage I am willing to admit, since your putting into my mouth words and sentiments which are not mine shows you infected with the blood of Ananias; that you should take yourself as a serious judge of art is a crime for which it is painful to think you must one day settle between you and your God; but that you should write yourself down an admirer of mine is the ugliest blow that my art has dealt me, and I take this opportunity to publicly apologise for it.”

Women when they incline to sarcasm are badly in need of a monitor borrowed from the inferior sex.

CONCERNING the completeness and honesty of FitzGerald's translation of Omar Khayyám, which lately have been called in question, we have received a letter from one of the first Persian scholars now living, from which we make an extract very much to the point. “Edward Fitz-Gerald,” he writes, “never intended his version of Omar Khayyám to be literal, and his readers will be inevitably disappointed if they expect to find in it an exact representation of the original. He frequently mixes up two or three quatrains into one; sometimes he puts in a line or two of his own; while the rest may be taken from the Persian. Thus the lines about

‘the seas that mourn
In flowing purple for their Lord forlorn,’ are not from Omar Khayyám at all, but from an apologue in Attar's “Bird-Parliament.” Fitz-Gerald followed Dryden, and even went beyond him in venturing to alter his original. I remember Dryden in his tenth Satire of Juvenal renders ‘Exitus ergo quis est, O gloria?’

by
‘But what's his end, O charming Glory—say
What rare fifth act to crown this huffing play?’
This interpolated line is just in Fitz-Gerald's manner. Some quatrains are perfect as translations, others are really no translations at all.”

THE eternal low simmer in which the Junius question remains will be encouraged by the sale, to-day (Saturday), of a large number of letters addressed by Sir Philip Francis to various correspondents. But we are told that these letters afford no clue to the mystery of Junius. It is, perhaps, as well: a final fixing of the letters on any one of the persons to whom they are now attributed would be heart-breaking to those Junius students who found themselves in the wrong. Hazlitt was almost killed by the news of Napoleon's fall, and there are gentlemen who would have to be sent home from their clubs in cabs if Francis were proved to be Junius—or if he proved not to be Junius.

THE chorus of praise which has greeted Mr. Walter Raleigh's book on Style is brusquely interrupted by the Saturday Review. Its critic thinks that Mr. Raleigh's work is

“the most intolerable piece of literary coxcombry which it has ever been our irritating ill-fortune to meet with. It may be described as the reductio ad absurdum of the preciosity of Pater and Stevenson. Every sentence seems to dance on a tight-rope.”

“Nonsense” and “twaddle” are epithets applied to the book.

MARK TWAIN's new book, More Tramps Abroad, is published. The dedication runs:

THIS BOOK is affectionately inscribed to my young friend
HARRY ROGERS

with recognition of what he is, and apprehension of what he may become unless he form himself a little more closely upon the model of

THE AUTHOR

And there is a prefatory word concerning the Pudd'nhead maxims: “These wisdoms are for the luring of youth toward high moral altitudes. The author did not gather them from practice, but from observation. To be good is noble; but to show others how to be good is nobler and no trouble.” A curious departure is the printing on the back of the title-page of the name and address of the lady who typed the original MS.

THE latest modern author to achieve the distinction of a popular sixpenny edition of a novel is Mr. Clark Russell, whose Wreck of the “Grosvenor” has just been issued in that form by Messrs. Sampson Low & Co. It is by many considered his best story, and it should widen his popularity considerably. Will not the same publishers try the effect of one of Mr. William Black's romances in this form? He is a charming writer, who, all undeservedly, seems to have fallen into neglect.

In a paragraph last week concerning illustrations for children we deplored the scarcity of artists whose leading ambition is to please the child; to make him, we said, “laugh or shout, or grow big-eyed with wonder or delight.” Since writing these words the work of an artist who to some extent fulfils these conditions has been published. It now lies before us—Jumbles, written and illustrated by Mr. Lewis Baumer (C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd.). Mr. Baumer is a clever and vigorous draughtsman, with a true gift of irresponsible fun—of nonsense, in fact—which he is able to express both with pencil and with pen. His verses are crisp and simple, and in no way self-conscious. They hardly bear quoting apart from the picture, but here is one of the shortest :

"A silly sort of person went
And sat up in a tree ;
'What's good enough for birds,' he said,
'Is good enough for me.'"

The verses, in short, serve to introduce the picture, and then their work is done. The pictures themselves, some in colours and some in monotint, are merry and sufficient. They teem with drollery of the requisite obvious variety. There is a scene of two lady pigs on bicycles, which may become a nursery classic. But all Mr. Baumer's pigs are a delight. He loves little pigs with a love not exceeded by Charles Lamb.

We wonder that none of our minor poets, who, alas ! seem to shirk concrete themes, have not found a subject in the recent City fire. Perhaps they will yet be inspired by the spectacle of the flames licking the church in which Milton sleeps. Meanwhile, we must be content with the following lines which an old woman was heard chanting in a street in Hackney last Tuesday :

"Good people, I'se a widder lone,
To you my woes I'll tell,
Though I 'umble ham an' werry pore,
I'se most re-spect-i-bel.
"But suddent I'se thrown hout on work,
An' hincome lost hentire.
I'se a pore, burned hout charwoman,
Along hof the City fire.
"I worked hin a City horfice long,
None toiled as 'ard as me,
But the burnin' flames took away the bread
Hof me an' my childring three.
"Then 'elp a burned hout charwoman
To feed 'er familiee,
Wot's ruined by the cruel City fire
An' struck with poverttee."

The Evening News, which reports the incident, is scornful of the poor woman because a few weeks ago she was singing her woes as a "washed-out hop-picker." But surely such lyrical resource is to be encouraged.

THE Rev. George Paton, of Ramsey, Isle of Man, writes thus to a Manx paper: "I do not doubt that there will be more than one memorial to the memory of our greatest Manxman, the Rev. T. E. Brown, but we are very anxious that one should be placed here, in the town to which he was greatly attached, and in the church in which he was accustomed to worship. It is proposed that the memorial take the form of a stained glass window, in the only remaining unfilled light on the ground floor of St. Paul's." Mr. Paton expresses himself ready to receive subscriptions.

As specimens of unsuitable illustrations we have rarely seen anything to surpass Mr. Byam Shaw's drawings to accompany a selection from Browning's poems which Messrs. Bell & Sons have just published. The artist is Mr. Byam Shaw, and Dr. Garnett in his introduction says: "The accompanying illustrations, it is believed, will commend themselves to all as the production of an artist who has imbibed the spirit of Browning, and proved himself competent to reproduce imaginative thought as visible form, with no loss of vigour or abatement of the sense of reality."

If Dr. Garnett had not saved himself by writing "it is believed," our opinion of him as an art critic would decrease. Mr. Shaw has certainly permitted no abatement of reality. He spares us nothing. The plate to "The Last Ride Together" shows us a young squire and the vicar's daughter in a squashed down sailor hat, each on a sorry nag. To turn from the picture to the poetry is ludicrous :

"My mistress bent that brow of hers,
Those deep, dark eyes where pride demurs
When pity would be softening through"— and so on. In "The Grammarian's Funeral" we are offered the coffin itself; Pippa turns out to be an English maiden with a vacuous face; the Lost Mistress, the same girl, or just such another, standing by the fire, while her lover, who more than a little resembles Mr. Anthony Hope in faultless evening dress, sulks in the foreground. Altogether, a less desirable work we have rarely handled.

WHILE on the subject of illustrations we should like to give a word of praise to the graceful and winsome drawings of infants which figure in the modest little calendar for 1898 just published by Mr. George Allen. The artist, Miss Nellie Benson, has a clean line, a pleasing sense of form, and much charm.

THE current issue of the Tablet contains the following communication from a correspondent :

"These parallel passages, taken from the columns of the Illustrated London News at a twelvemonth's interval, are, I venture to think, worth reproducing as an object-lesson of the value (or otherwise) of a certain class of contemporary literary criticism :

"(October, 1896.)      "(November 13, 1897.)

"It is more or less authoritatively announced that the Very Rev. F. A. Gasquet is shortly to be raised to the purple. . . . Dr. Gasquet is one of the most able and distinguished of Roman Catholic writers. His researches and his learning have done more to clear up the difficult historical problems that circle around the suppression of the monasteries than those, probably, of any living writer. His ability has been widely recognised in quarters by no means friendly to the position of the Roman Catholic Church in England."

"The ACADEMY List [of proposed 'Academicians'] is an entirely hopeless one. It is only necessary to mention, for example, the name of Father Gasquet to indicate the absolute fatuousness of the selection. Gasquet is a Roman Catholic priest who has laboured diligently in the field of sixteenth century historical research. He has written without illumination, and with a prejudice as rampant as that which would have characterised a d'Aubigné on the other side. . . . He is a d'Aubigné without his learning. There are probably five or six hundred clergymen of the Church of England who have as great claims for consideration as Father Gasquet, &c."

A GLADSTONE Birthday Book was inevitable. It is now announced by Messrs. Marcus Ward & Co. Each day of the year will be accompanied by a quotation from Mr. Gladstone's writings or speeches. Mr. G. Barnett Smith will supply an introduction, although an introduction to Mr. Gladstone seems a little unnecessary. We trust that the selections are being made with care. The last thing, for example, that one wants to read on the First of May is a pronouncement on Home Rule.

At the same time comes the "Ian Maclaren Calendar" for 1898 (Hodder & Stoughton). Ian Maclaren is a Scotch writer from whose books three hundred and sixty-five lines, cruelly incomplete and often almost meaningless, or, at any rate, unco' ordinar' (as he would say), have been wrenched to accompany the dates. As a specimen of the result attained, we will give the texts for the week of 1898, corresponding to the week now before us :

Nov. 26 Sat.	The dog rose and laid his head on Drumshough's hand . . .
" 27 Sun.	For the first time a halo rests on gentleness, patience, kindness and sanctity . . .
" 28 Mon.	Weel dune, Jess. Weel dune, auld mare . . .
" 29 Tues.	It seemed, after our loss, as if life could never regain its buoyancy . . .
" 30 Wed.	The wind came in gusts, roaring in the chimney . . .
Dec. 1 Thurs.	A rough December night . . .
" 2 Fri.	Many were the myths that gathered round that coat.

They hardly seem needful, these extracts. To choose definitions from a dictionary would be more illuminating.

CONNOISSEURS of book-binding cannot do better than inspect the exhibition of Artistic Book-binding by Women which has been organised by Mr. Karlake in the Charing Cross-road. Mr. Karlake's attention was attracted to the exhibits of book-binding by women at the Victoria Era Exhibition; and with considerable enterprise he has again collected those exhibits at his book-shop in the above thoroughfare. The bindings shown are mostly in embossed leather, and they are the unfettered and artistic work of the hand, executed by gentlewomen in Edinburgh, Chiswick, Kirby Lonsdale, and other places.

MR. KARSLAKE is also showing a novelty in the form of illustrated books coloured by hand. In Miss Gloria Cardew, a young and clever lady, he has found a colourist capable of doing charming work in this direction. We have seen a copy of Messrs. Bell & Son's recently published edition of Keats, in which Mr. Anning Bell's line illustrations have been embellished by Miss Cardew with delicate tints. The effect is delightful. In these days, when the coloured print is so popular, we should not be surprised to find hand-coloured book illustrations rise into similar favour.

AMERICAN AND ENGLISH
CRITICISM.

THERE are few literary questions that have been debated with so much persistence as the definition and the province of true criticism. Even if the meaning of criticism be limited to a decision on the value or worthlessness of current literary productions, it becomes almost impossible to decide between the relative merits of the criticism enjoyed by writers of different nationalities. For further questions will inevitably arise as to the superiority of Form over Matter, as to the suitability of various languages as vehicles of thought.

But, after thus posing my little variation of the problem, "What is Truth?" I shall be following ancient precedent if I wait not for an answer. For, as between the United States and England, the question is considerably simplified by a presumed identity of language, and by the fact that criticism at the present day in America is to all intents and purposes non-existent. In England we can undoubtedly find more than twelve good men and true who may be depended upon for an impartial verdict in accordance with the facts; and even if the "summing up" take several pages of valuable space in the ACADEMY, it produces specimens of broad-minded toleration not unworthy the best examples of the Bench; but, whatever judges bless or ban us on this side, I am not able to discover one upon the other—no, not in Boston—who can either sentence an American literary criminal to death or even discharge him without a stain upon his character.

I have no desire in this place either to compare the text of English and American opinions on the same book, or even to compare the various organs which on either side of the Atlantic pose as the arbiters of literary taste. If I name one, it will be to name no more; but it is impossible to avoid in this connexion the remembrances of the good work in the pages of the Nation towards erecting some standard of intelligent and independent judgment which may influence American literature. But the example stands almost alone. For the American public prefers facts to any opinion save its own. It would be a fair statement to say that they like to read first newspapers, then magazines, and lastly books. Yet there is no doubt that though what stands there for criticism is very widely scattered, often very desultory, our Transatlantic readers give a good book a very fair chance of success. English authors have long ago realised that the public who will buy English books and read them has been more than tripled in the last quarter of a century. Piracies that were formerly of merely sentimental interest have now developed into serious questions of copyright and of pecuniary loss. It was America that sold Trilby, which is a typical example. For it showed very clearly that people to whom such phrases as the dernier cri or fin de siècle are treasured watchwords have, in reality, many generations to live through before they reach the modernity of our outworn creeds. To them the Vie de Bohème was unknown; the Quartier Latin was an undiscovered country. I speak, of course, of the nation as a whole, for it is upon a far larger public than the merely literary that such a success as was Trilby's must depend. In that public one of the characteristics of the reader is to prefer his own judgment to that of any extraneous authority. It is, therefore, possible for a writer, in many cases, to appeal independently to his audience without any fear that they will be prejudiced by a cacophony of "general articles," or by the too easily accepted verdict of a few. After a recent visit to New York I asked Mr. W. D. Howells what he thought upon this very subject. "We have no one, I believe," he replied, "whose good opinion (like that of Mr. Gladstone with you) would make the future of a book. Lowell's opinion, in his closing years, would have done more in that way than any other." And, indeed, if any individual does influence the American public he neither obtains acknowledgment nor dares confession. For Lowell is dead. Curtis is dead. Others who followed less conspicuously in their footsteps have died, died from sheer inanition. No one read them. The critic is unable, like the Pelican of the story, to nourish a family with the blood of his own breast. He cannot sustain life by crying in the wilderness.

The problem is still unsolved of how to bring any art, or criticism of art, into touch with the intellectual needs and aspirations of that great democracy to which an American critic must vainly speak. Other countries have passed through such phases as the aristocratic energy of Greece, the monarchic centralisation of France, the national enthusiasm of Elizabethan England. Even the Republic of the United States, in the earlier years of the new Constitution, before ancestral influences had died away, showed full of possibilities. The worn-out methods of European classicism, invigorated by the birth of a new nation, seemed likely to produce a literature that should reflect the strength and youth of independent growths expanding on a virgin soil. But the "innate malignity of material things" has triumphed. The free democracy, which older nations have attained only through martyrdoms of oppression, was not thus to be created, full-fledged and perfect, from the theory of the Fathers of the Republic. Nay, these very efforts to ensure the political freedom of their people have but resulted (as we have seen so recently) in a greater thralldom to corruption, in far worse forms of despotism, than are known in countries which by nominal monarchy have achieved a real democracy. In literature and criticism Americans are suffering in the same way; because the problem of development has been offered to them in an unnatural form. Huge populations have sprung up, trained chiefly to money-making, spread over a vast area of country or aggregated in the mushroom growth of unformed cities. The idea of nationality, though blatantly proclaimed, has little real existence in the colluvies omnium gentium produced by constant immigration. This complex mass of hurrying, keenly trafficking personalities, bound together only by a superficial education in the elements of knowledge, is confronted by an equally heterogeneous array of cosmopolitan men of letters, whose production is itself too hasty, whose audience have no time or care to take a trained opinion on the work presented. The voice of the leisurely and cultured critic has been drowned in the clamour of the stockbroker. He has not cared to speak again.

The "literary output" of Chicago for one week has just been chronicled by a correspondent. I need not reproduce the list. Travels in Spain (by a lady), Theories of Life and Education (by a bishop), Studies in French Criticism (by another lady), a volume on Monticulture (sic), and a monograph on Marengo, these are a few of the productions which this central city of the West is turning out so rapidly. And I have mentioned neither poetry nor fiction. But the mere record serves as a reminder of another differentiating phase of American intellectual life. That life has no centre, no metropolis of culture or of critical authority, which can claim to speak to the whole body of its citizens. For considerations of space affect the whole question. The greatest critic (whoever he may be) of the North Atlantic seaboard has but a slight chance of influencing Chicago, or even of arresting the attention of the West. This is one reason why a national school of literature cannot as yet be said to exist in the United States. Walt Whitman pointed out long ago the direction which such national endeavours might take. And we may well believe that the great Democracy ought to produce both a literature and a criticism differing in essential points from those of classical antiquity and romantic feudalism. Freed from the fetters of scholastic tradition, delivered both from pedantry and the inevitable reaction, the American author has a share in all that modern science can suggest or new political conceptions promise. He can get very near to nature and to truth. The very industries that surround him can reveal a store of beauty that it is the special mission of a democratic art to reproduce. But as a general rule he will have none of these things. The fine material that lies ready to his hand he will persist in dressing up in uncouth and incongruous trappings. Eager to produce, restive under authority, he proclaims aloud a spurious freedom that he has lost alike in literature and in citizenship. He must work out his own salvation; and in the process some school of criticism must inevitably arise that shall point him in the right path.

In the meantime, a defenceless American public is bombarded with trash of every kind. If, indeed, as the best of our own prophets has said, we are all living under the "tyranny of the novel," then English readers may at least be thankful for the cloud of literary sentinels who keep outside the lines all those who have not some semblance of credentials to admission. In a half-educated and still undeveloped country that portion of the philosophy of life which has come under the observation of the average reader is but the smallest fraction of the seductive whole laid light-heartedly before him by "the omniscient, omnipresent novelist." While a credulous public accepts as gospel all that is given; it under the guise of "literature," there is very little chance that writers will improve their methods. The American critic is just now as necessary for the protection of the public as for the education of the author. The standard of excellence, in each case, needs far more rigorous application.

Mr. Howells's reference to Mr. Gladstone's influence in this country was no doubt suggested by the well-known instance of Robert Elsmere. But the change has come. We scarcely needed Sir Herbert Maxwell's letter to remind us that the magni nominis umbra has vanished, in this case at least. It only remains to ask whether any other individual expression of opinion can be regarded as a valuable element in English criticism. If no such personal authority exists at the present day in America, may it not be that a public which is troubled by no criticism at all is in better case than one which absorbs without reflection the judgment of its temporary favourites? The actual quantity of thoroughly sound criticism in England is now of such proportions, whether from the mere increase of "subject-matter" or from other reasons, that I hardly venture to suggest the danger of its becoming too authoritative. Not every critic is so receptive, so open-minded in considering fresh endeavour, as is necessary for continuous growth. If the follower of the old classical school would take no denial of his right to judge, still less could his successor of the romantic type divest himself of those subjective qualities which affected even the phrasing of his verdict. Among the best equipped of critics the element of personal taste in literature must remain inexplicable and irreducible. But the reaction may carry us too far. The modern scientific school which studies things in their historical connexions, and traces an organic development in literature analogous to that in the animal kingdom, seems more likely to provide us with handy guides to knowledge than with inspiration to the best creative work. It may be true, as De Quincey pointed out, that "authors have always been a dangerous class for any language." And we are well aware that the guardians of our national taste should be critical rather than creative. But is there not some slight risk that the guardianship is being rather overdone?

THEODORE COOK.

THE CASE FOR LATIN VERSES.

EVERY schoolmaster knows that the last quarter of a century has witnessed a strong reaction against the teaching of Latin verse. The demands of the science master, the mathematical master, the French master, and the German master, not to mention the requirements of the games' master, have made such inroads upon the time-table that a bare margin is left for the use of the classical master. A utilitarian age has regarded verse-making as merely an elegant way of wasting time; and whereas within the memory of living Etonians versification was practically the only test of scholarship, to-day an Oxford man may win his First in classical "Mods" and his First in "Greats" without writing a single hexameter. It is, of course, unquestionable that the highest kind of scholarship, such as that of Prof. Jebb, is impossible without skill in the metres of Greece and Rome. This you may see in the case of the German commentators, who, not having learned to write verses at school, come not infrequently to dire grief when they try to emend the ancient poets. But it is not likely, it is not even desirable, that the majority of public school boys will grow up into commentators. The question which the modern headmaster has to decide is whether the boy who is destined for the Army, the Navy, the Church, or the Bar will be better fitted for his profession by a knowledge—and, as a rule, a very limited knowledge—of Latin verse writing. And this is a question which the Headmaster of Haileybury sets himself to answer frankly and fully in the carefully reasoned little book which he calls Are We to go on with Latin Verses? (Longmans, Green & Co.)

Mr. Lyttelton is quite ready to admit that the average schoolboy gets but a very little way towards the writing of original Latin verses. Indeed, he seldom gets much beyond the stage at which he is able to select from a certain number of possible words which he has in front of him sufficient words to dovetail into a passable rendering in hexameter or pentameter of an English line. Now the ordinary objection to the teaching of Latin verses is that not one boy in a hundred is ever taught to write Latin verses which would not set a scholar's teeth on edge. Mr. Lyttelton maintains that even in its elementary stages the study has special advantages over all other studies. Assuming, as he has every right to assume—that the study of Latin is of educational value, he maintains that the making of verses helps a boy to increase his vocabulary easily and almost unconsciously. The search for synonyms and the use of words with the ulterior object of clamping a verse must be a pleasanter way of getting a vocabulary than the learning of a page of the dictionary. Secondly, it is impossible to appreciate the "harmonies of the Latin Muse" without a knowledge of the metres in which that Muse sang. This point may, we think, be dismissed with the reflection that not one schoolboy in a hundred ever attains any appreciation of Virgil or Horace. "Automatic punishment of inaccuracy" is a third advantage of this scholastic pursuit. The boy who, writing Latin prose, translated "that dying soldier" by "ut infectus milites" involved his master in a very lengthy explanation. If he had had to put the same into a Latin verse, his efforts at dovetailing that preposterous combination of words would have failed, and the failure would have pointed to his mistake. On the other hand, most grown-up schoolboys will recall occasions when they strained the laws of grammar to meet those of rhythm, and that not infrequently the most ungrammatical lines scanned the best.

But these arguments have been heard again and again. Mr. Lyttelton bases his verdict in favour of Latin verses rather upon the fact that they are more stimulating to the schoolboy than any other study. When a boy has written an English essay, or a French exercise, or a piece of Latin prose he cannot see with his own eyes, and at once, that he has done something as it ought to be done. But when he has pieced his pentameter together, and sees that it is true and taut, he feels the satisfaction of the desire for visible achievement. "To compare small things with great," writes Mr. Lyttelton, with the humour of a scholar who is also a cricketer, "the perfecting of a pentameter is, in this respect only, not wholly unlike the hitting of a half-volley to leg." Mr. Lyttelton knows as much as most men of the schoolboy in the class-room and in the cricket field. And if the schoolboy likes perfecting pentameters as well as placing a loose ball over the ropes, by all means let him perfect them. The more especially as they undoubtedly teach him Latin.

PARIS LETTER.

(From our French Correspondent.)

M. ANDRÉ CHEVRILLON's book on dead lands—Thebes and Judæa—contains some very brilliant pages among quantities of very dull ones. There is not a lively passage in the whole volume, hardly a sketch or a figure, if we except the solitary instance of the hotel-keeper of Jaffa who, in laying the table and beating off the flies with his napkin, offered his guests one of his own books, a volume entitled Pilules Bibliques. There were 365 pills to be taken daily for an entire year, and if the patients refrain "from light reading, such as novels, &c., during the course of treatment," they are promised perfect moral health; cordial relations with one's neighbours are re-established, the intelligence is illumined, and the appetite for the Word of God restored. The pills consisted of 365 verses from the Bible, and the innkeeper was a German Protestant.

This is an unusual break in somewhat heavy and laboured descriptive writing. M. Chevrillon has systematically modelled himself, as an observer of lands and races, on his illustrious uncle, M. Taine; only he accentuates the defects of his model without brightening these by Taine's vivacity and vigour of style, which more than make amends. M. Chevrillon can be extremely picturesque, and he often reaches really beautiful effects of colour and form. But his psychology is in excessive evidence. He describes at a ruthless length, and crowded details, instead of painting a clear picture on the mind, confront the reader with a hopeless confusion of images and suggestions. The style lacks delicacy of touch, vividness of stroke, clearness of form, and the matter is treated from too dull and intellectual a point of view. To the general reader it presents too much of the features of a book of research, while this in turn is belied by its air of gathered impressions. Here, for instance, is a distinct echo of Taine in his Carnets de Voyage:

"That first evening was very fine: we had left the region of big grey clouds, the great patches of autumn that the Mediterranean had blown as far as south of the Delta, and we had discovered the happy regions—a stirless world, where all in the pure light was enchanted. The arid chain eastward girdled the distant plain; it was a vague rose band scarce brushed with bluish shadows, and of such lightness that it did not even seem of vapour, but a simple play of light round the green terrestrial world, like certain mysterious rays of aurora borealis in the shadow of the evening."

These sort of descriptions abound, and are sometimes so prolonged that their effect is diminished. But in the chapters on Judæa, M. Chevrillon has said some things remarkably true and deep. Speaking of the disillusion of Jerusalem, he writes:

"The true Christmas, the true Holy Family, was dreamed of in Europe, in the Middle Ages, by monks and tender-hearted peasants: across the fields and through flowery woods, over a green country, a blue and radiant night, like those of our June, a marvellous star followed by mysterious kings, mailed like knights, laden with jewels, and coming one knows not whither, walking through the wheat by river meads towards the straw cradle where, not far from the sheep, in its dawn the little Child slept under the care of the good carpenter, beneath the profound and suave glance of a white and saintly Mary."

The Christian faith, he tells us, is nowhere so poor, so venal, so insincere as at Jerusalem, its cradle. The missionaries aver that they have to pay and feed their pupils to keep them in the church. "We keep them Christian through the mouth." Christianity, M. Chevrillon says, lies elsewhere. The Jews and the Arabs he describes as essentially alike, self-concentrated, poor from without. They possess the same inferiority of visual faculty, the same incapacity to get outside of self, to take the measure of things, the same predominance in lyrical and personal poetry. Neither race perceives the plastic or coloured details of reality. Their images in prose and poetry paint a moral condition. Form disappears, and the style of their writers is fierce and spasmodic, instead of flexible, wavering, delicate and subtle. Shades and complexities of meaning are unknown to both, while the brusque and jerky interpretation of strong and simple emotions of primitive feelings has all the shudder of life.

M. Pierre Loti forms a fine contrast with M. Chevrillon as a descriptive writer. Everything that the one is not the other is—and the reverse. Both address us simultaneously with their impressions of "far, fair, foreign lands." Only, alas! Loti is far from at his best. Nothing more thin and fugitive than these collected papers: "Figures et choses qui passaient." He has done the Basque country so beautifully in his enchanting novel Ramuntcho that one asks oneself in dismay why he should think fit to come forward now with a half-dozen worthless articles on the subject. And really the wizard is becoming too intolerably sentimental for a patient hearing. It has been said that sentimentality kills sentiment. This last dose of Loti-ism almost kills pity in us, so emasculate and long-drawn-out is the enervating pity of Pierre Loti. He weeps over the death of children in a way to make one relish the contrary disposition of Herod. His attitude throughout this volume is that of the walrus who spoke "holding his pocket handkerchief before his streaming eyes."

We are very sorry for the untimely death of two-year-old little Roger, his servant's child, and are prepared to believe he was the blonde little angel Loti complacently describes him with the tears rolling down his cheeks; but when Loti has wept separately over the baby's curls, and eyes, and smile, and lisp, and his little pink gown, and then begins to weep anew over the thought of his embroidered cravat that was generally crooked, good heavens! we have had enough both of Loti and the baby. Could a sane man write more absurd stuff than this concluding pathetic cry: "Mon Dieu, behold my heart torn anew, so that I must weep again in thinking of that little cravat with the bow behind falling on the back of that pink gown!" Ah! Monsieur Loti, what a safe and pleasant thing is the vice of humour. It would save you from the dangerous pitfalls of your too tremulous sensibilities.

The Mur d'en face, however, reaches real pathos, and here we have the old touch of the charmer—the delicate, soft, enchanting touch that nobody alive possesses but Loti. In such moments he seems to get to the very heart of sadness—to reveal its full, unfathomable glance, the pathos of its tearlessness, its eternal, unbroken silence. This slight little sketch is the best of the collection, but most readers will prefer the pages on the war in Annam. But he lacks all grasp of his subject here. He delicately paints the surprise and gratitude of the Chinese wounded when their conquerors give them to drink instead of torturing them, and he feels finely for them.

H. L.

NEW BOOKS.

L'Alliance Autrichienne. Duc de Broglie.
Poèmes. Stuart Mersil.

DID SHAKESPEARE WRITE FOR POSTERITY?

A NEW HYPOTHESIS.

It is a commonly received opinion that after his retirement to Stratford-on-Avon Shakespeare gave no thought to the MSS. that he had left in the hands of the players, but treated them as so much waste paper, unworthy of preservation. As this implies an extraordinary lack of judgment on the part of the greatest poet, dramatist, and philosopher that the world has known, it is surprising that the meagre facts of the case should have been so little scrutinised by Halliwell-Phillipps, Karl Elze, and other latter-day commentators, because, it seems to me they point to a conclusion diametrically opposite to the one generally entertained. In support of the hypothesis of Shakespeare's indifference to the fate of his plays—for the quarto publications, besides being very incomplete, were probably piratical, or at least unauthorised—there is but one single circumstance to allege—an important circumstance, no doubt—namely, that after his retirement, although nearly four years elapsed before his death, he did not, in fact, collect his papers and give them to the world in an authentic form. This omission may, of course, have been intentional; but in the absence of direct proof one way or the other, we can only infer why the greatest name in literature was in danger of being lost to us, and I propose to show that, inference for inference, it is more likely that Shakespeare was prevented from editing his plays, than that he wished them consigned to oblivion. Even in those remote days, when reading was the luxury of the few, men had "posterity" before their eyes. It was to posterity, it will be remembered, that Bacon (Shakespeare's greatest literary contemporary) entrusted the vindication of his character. Was posterity ever present to Shakespeare's mind? Once this question is asked, not one circumstance (as in the case of the negative proposition) but a multitude of circumstances point to an affirmative answer.

First, as regards the literary quality of his work. It is inconceivable that a man of Shakespeare's judgment should have been blind to his own merits in comparison with those of his contemporaries, and of the classic writers. His excellence was freely acknowledged in his own day—it is a mistake to suppose that it was not. Greene's spiteful reference, no less than Ben Jonson's flattering ode, attests it. Several contemporary poets praise Shakespeare, and, as early as 1600, the compilers of anthologies began to make free with his works. England's Parnassus, The Garden of the Muses, England's Helicon, and The Wits' Treasury, of that period, all accord a prominent place to Shakespeare. The compiler of the last-named, one Meres, "Master of Arts in both Universities," goes so far as to say that the "sweet-wittie soul of Ovid lives in the mellifluous and honey-tongued Shakespeare." If Shakespeare was not alive to his own genius, therefore, it was not for want of hearing it proclaimed. Besides, the success of his plays alone must have sufficed to convince him of the fact.

Secondly, there is very strong evidence in the plays themselves that they were written not solely with an eye to the two or three hours' traffic of the stage, which then, as now, was réglementaire. The probability is that Shakespeare had a reading public in his mind. In none of the plays is there anything which "dates"—any mention of a contemporary statesman, soldier, sailor, poet, priest, man of science, nobleman, king, or queen. Yet those were the days of great deeds by land and sea; the old faith and the new were striving for mastery, and science was changing men's conception of the universe. Shakespeare treated only of the stable facts of history and the enduring passions of men. The absence from his plays of any reference to his intellectual, moral, or political surroundings is very striking. Things could not have been better ordered in works designed to be "for all time." On the other hand, for the mere catch-penny purposes with which Shakespeare has been credited even by the most reverent of his critics, contemporary allusions would have been valuable, and there are plenty of them in the literature of the period.

A more important consideration still, from our present point of view, is the length of the plays. It is notorious that the great tragedies and many of the comedies have to be cut down by one-half or two-thirds in order to be brought within the compass of a three hours' performance. Of course, modern mise-en-scène and the division of the play into acts, prolong the action a good deal beyond what the author may have intended. Whether any break was made in the course of the play in Shakespeare's time we do not know; but, certainly, his stage managers were not hampered with movable scenery. Still, all due allowance being made on this score, and also for a more rapid delivery than modern actors cultivate, the plays, almost without exception, are far too long for the stage. It is impossible to read "Hamlet" through in such a manner as to be intelligible to an audience in less than five hours; most of the other plays require four hours or four and a quarter, and that at a faster rate of delivery than, I think, any body of actors taking their cues from each other could adopt. With pauses such as probably were made even in the days of no scenery, the time occupied in the representation of a Shakespearean play in its entirety could not in the majority of cases have been less than five hours. The presumption, consequently, is that Shakespeare treated his subject with all the fulness of detail that suggested itself to his mind at the time of writing without regard to the technical requirements of acting. This is the more probable that many long passages consist of philosophical disquisitions or poetry that could not be regarded as dramatic or indispensable to the subject. Is it conceivable that Shakespeare, the practical dramatist, wrote these with no other object than that they should be cut and chopped about at the discretion of an ignorant stage-manager?

The third set of considerations bearing upon this question appear to me the weightiest of all. The preface of Hemyng and Condell, who printed the plays in the first folio edition, seven years after Shakespeare's death, contains the following:

"It has been a thing, we confess, worthy to have been wished that the author himself had lived to have set forth and overseen his own writings; but since it hath been ordained otherwise, and he by death departed from that right," &c.

These words are not at variance with the hypothesis that Shakespeare had intended to publish his collected works. Rather they point to such a purpose; and Hemyng and Condell, be it remembered, were the poet's friends, and likely to be acquainted with his intentions. Why, then, did Shakespeare neglect the duty of collecting and publishing his works? Here we arrive at the crucial point. The common belief (started by Rowe, his first biographer, who wrote 100 years after Shakespeare's death) is that the poet retired to Stratford on a competence to spend the latter portion of his life "in ease and the conversation of his friends the gentlemen of the neighbourhood." I venture to think the actual circumstances were very different. Shakespeare suddenly ceased work at the age of forty-eight. A few months previously he bought a dwelling-house in Blackfriars, presumably with the intention of living there. But towards the close of the year 1613 his plans were changed, and he buried himself alive in the remote, dull, unattractive town of Stratford. To suppose that he sought the society of the "gentlemen of the neighbourhood," with whom he could have had nothing in common, in preference to the merry gatherings in London in which Ben Jonson and other wits of the time took part, is absurd. Nor does the literary mind willingly cease producing at forty-eight. The most likely cause of Shakespeare's early and sudden withdrawal from the scene of his labours and literary interests was ill-health. He must have wished to be at home and to be nursed by his wife.

This is my assumption, and it will be found to be in sinister accord with the known facts. Shakespeare did not belong to a healthy stock. He was one of a family of eight, of whom seven, including himself, attained an average age of only twenty-one years, the one long-lived member being his sister Joan. With all the insanitary conditions of life in those days, this is an exceptionally low average, only explicable on the assumption that Shakespeare, like so many men of genius, sprang from a stock physically unsound. As to the cause of his death the only information extant is the famous entry in the diary of the Rev. John Ward, of Stratford, who wrote in 1663: "Shakespeare, Drayton, and Ben Jonson had a merrie meeting, and it seems drank too hard, for Shakespeare died of a feavour there contracted." Strange to say, this obviously spiteful piece of gossip has been accepted by all the biographers down to the present time. Medical science, however, rejects it. There is no fever properly so called which can be contracted by drinking, and Shakespeare's death, moreover, occurred two and a half months after the "merrie meeting." Halliwell-Phillips supposes the fever to have been typhus or typhoid; but in order to sustain this hypothesis he is obliged to tamper with the date of the signing of the poet's will on his deathbed. The dangerous seizure which caused the draft will to be signed, as it had stood for months in the lawyer's hand, took place on March 25, the original word January being struck out and March written in. But the patient did not die for four weeks and a day, which is not the usual course of typhus or typhoid fever; and for Halliwell-Phillips's suggestion that the melancholy gathering at New Place happened later than the 25th of March, the day of the month in the draft will being "left unchanged by an oversight," there is no warrant whatever.

The fever hypothesis being inadmissible, of what, then, did Shakespeare die? There are facts from which a plausible inference on this point may be drawn. According to Hemyng and Condell the poet must in his prime have written with great ease, since there was "scarce a blot" in his papers. But all his unquestionable signatures that remain are shaky enough to denote some sort of paralysis. The early Florio signature, authentic or not, is free from this defect, but in the signature appended to the lease in 1613 the shakiness of the hand is evident; in the signatures to the will a month before his death it is such that the name is hardly legible. Another fact demonstrating the probability of some affection of the nervous system is that in dictating the draft will drawn up by his lawyer in January, 1616, Shakespeare failed to remember the Christian name of his nephew Thomas Hart, which accordingly remains blank to this day—a veritable oversight this! And failure of memory, together with unsteadiness of the hand, is, I need not add, the frequent precursor of a fatal paralytic or apoplectic attack. So far from passing the three and a half years of his retirement in pleasant intercourse with "the gentlemen of the neighbourhood" of Stratford therefore, Shakespeare, I feel justified in inferring, was a martyr to ill-health, the victim of some sort of nervous complaint which betrayed itself in his handwriting before his departure from London. If so, the amazing hypothesis that he was so indifferent to the "heirs of his invention" that he did not care to pass them on to posterity no longer holds water. That it should ever have found a moment's credence, indeed, is remarkable. How much more natural to suppose, in accordance with the above interpretation of the facts, that the same cause which impelled Shakespeare to throw down his pen at the early age of forty-eight prevented him from taking it up in his retirement! And how much more creditable to his judgment!

J. F. NISBET.

THE BOOK MARKET.

DICKENS AND THACKERAY.

SALES AND EDITIONS.

FOLLOWING our recent inquiry into the present sales of the Waverley Novels, and into the merits of the various editions now before the public, we have issued similar inquiries respecting the novels of Dickens and Thackeray. The following is the result of our investigation. A large London bookseller writes:

"We have no hesitation in saying that, in our experience, Dickens keeps his place at the head of the list of authors living or dead, although Thackeray and Scott come close enough to be associated with him. The trio stand quite alone. Among the editions of Dickens now available the preference must be given to the 'Gadshill' edition, now in course of publication. It is everything that could be desired in point of paper, print, illustrations, binding, and price, and it is making its way. Next to this we have the 'Crown,' which is the best popular edition published. The sales, however, are not confined to these two, as the 'Half-crown' edition has a large and increasing popularity; while even the 'One Shilling' edition is selling by hundreds.

"Of the older editions, the 'Household,' the 'Charles Dickens,' the 'Popular Library,' and the 'Illustrated Library' have all had to give way to more modern and better 'got-up' books. The very latest wonder is the set complete, well bound in cloth, for one guinea.

Thackeray is not so fortunate. The handiest set of his works is the 'Cheaper Illustrated Edition,' in twenty-six volumes, with nearly 2,000 illustrations. The 'Standard Edition,' in twenty-six volumes, is a large, heavy book, and sells little. The 'Popular Edition,' in thirteen volumes, is indifferently produced, and does not compare favourably with five-shilling books at the present time. The 'Pocket Edition' is good of its sort, and makes a very dainty set.

We are, however, promised a new edition of Thackeray, introduced by Mrs. Ritchie, and it is to be hoped that more attention will be given to print, paper, and binding than has hitherto been the case with the cheaper popular editions. The sure result of such attention will be much augmented sales."

BRISTOL.

A Bristol correspondent sends us the following memorandum:

"The two authors have sold about equally with us for some years. The new 'Gadshill' Dickens is the first recognised one, and it sells; the 'Crown' is the next saleable (our buyers want good print). We believe a really attractive Thackeray would find a market, but it is useless to tempt the discriminating buyer with old stereotypes in new covers. The trail of the 'tail of copyright' is over both these authors; the effect of its absolute removal on Scott we know; probably the reprinters will not get the chance with Dickens. As to Thackeray?—we venture to think he will be still selling freely."

BRIGHTON.

A Brighton bookseller reports as follows:

"The sale of Dickens's works seems to know no fluctuation; the 'Half-crown' and the 'Crown' editions both appeared opportunely, and supplied a felt want, being clearly printed and well illustrated at popular prices. The 'Crown' edition especially meets with general favour, and until the whole of the series are out of copyright, when competition will inevitably be stronger, we think no new edition is required, and we doubt its success if attempted, however taking in its style.

Nothing but praise can, of course, be said of the 'Gadshill' edition now appearing, and all admirers of Dickens would no doubt gladly be possessed of such a choice issue; but the price necessarily limits the sale.

As regards Thackeray, the sale is still steady, but the demand is not so large as for Dickens. The 'Cheaper Illustrated' edition (as it is called) is the one generally purchased, but there is room for a good illustrated issue, with the principal novels in single volumes, to correspond with the 'Crown' Dickens, more tastily got up than the present 5s. one, known as the 'Popular' edition."

BIRMINGHAM.

It will be seen that the correspondents we have quoted above recognise no decline in the sale of Charles Dickens's novels, nor any serious faults in the editions of his works before the public. These views are not upheld by the two valued correspondents whose letters follow. A leading authority on bookselling in Birmingham writes:

"Our experience is that the sale of the works of Dickens has been on the wane for a considerable time, but the works of Thackeray sell as freely as ever. For years we have hoped for a decent edition of Dickens—an edition on good paper with good print, without introductions, notes, or illustrations. We had hoped that the 'Gadshill' edition would satisfy us on all these points. We are grievously disappointed. The present generation dislike the reproductions of the original drawings—Cruikshank and 'Phiz' charm them not—in fact, there is a great aversion to these old illustrations.

The 'Crown' edition and the 'Gadshill' are the most saleable. We may state here that never have we sold a set of Dickens which has given real delight to the buyer. An edition worthy of Dickens has yet to appear. How different with Scott! From the first he has received such loving care. Has not this care rewarded all those who have striven to produce Scott in so many beautiful forms?

The sale of Thackeray is excellent; the cheaper illustrated edition in twenty-six volumes, and the popular edition in thirteen volumes, have a very large sale. Here too, there is room for improvement. Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. have a new edition in the press, to be in thirteen volumes. We trust no editor will be allowed to meddle with it, and that no introductions or notes will appear. The placing on the title-page of the editor's name in large print is becoming most offensive—it is almost a task to find a book free from the legend, 'With introduction and notes by —.'

With us the modern writers have made no difference to the sale of Thackeray and Dickens, and the sale of Scott increases a year on a year.

CAMBRIDGE.

From Cambridge we have the following succinct report:

"Dickens and Thackeray are not holding their own with modern writers. There is a fair demand for Dickens, but not such a demand as might be expected in a University town. Thackeray is hardly sold at all, and seems to be dropping out altogether.

The 'Crown' edition of Dickens seems to sell best in this town, and the 'Popular' edition of Thackeray is generally sold to the few purchasers.

We do not consider that any new editions of these writers are called for."

OXFORD.

In Oxford the sales of Thackeray's novels appear to exceed those of Dickens, a state of things not reported to us from any other centre. Our correspondent writes:

"Although the sale of Thackeray has for some years exceeded that of Dickens at Oxford, there has been a considerable falling off in both during the past two or three years. This is probably due to the immense number of new works which clamour for the attention of those who can turn aside for a while from the claims of the 'schools' and the lecture-room to read fiction.

As to editions, the ideal ones have not, to my thinking, been yet produced by either of the publishers whose names are intimately connected with Dickens and Thackeray; but whether or not there is room for further new editions is a point on which those could better speak whose experience of the demand for these authors far exceeds that of an Oxford University bookseller."

It is interesting and significant that in the two University cities of Oxford and Cambridge the popularity of Dickens and Thackeray are on the wane. In the large centres, where the popular demand can be gauged, they hold their own against all comers. We commend our Birmingham correspondent's notes on "edited" editions to the attention of publishers.

THE WEEK.

The publishing week has been a singularly quiet one.

Mr. James Bryce's Impressions of South Africa invites special mention. Mr. Bryce travelled across South Africa from Cape Town to Fort Salisbury, in Mashonaland, passing through Bechuanaland and Matabeleland. From Fort Salisbury he returned through Manicaland and the Portuguese territories to Beira. Thence, sailing to Delagoa Bay, Mr. Bryce proceeded through the Transvaal, the Orange Free State, Basutoland, and the eastern province of Cape Colony. In these travels Mr. Bryce had no arrière pensée; but the political troubles which occurred immediately after his return prompted him to embody his notes and recollections in a book. Mr. Bryce says:

"I have called the book 'Impressions' lest it should be supposed that I have attempted to present a complete and minute account of the country. For this a long residence and a large volume would be required. It is the salient features that I wish to describe. These, after all, are what most readers desire to know; these are what the traveller of a few weeks or months can give, and can give all the better because the details have not become so familiar to him as to obscure the broad outlines.

Instead of narrating my journey, and weaving into the narrative observations on the country and people, I have tried to arrange the materials collected in a way better fitted to present to the reader, in their natural connexion, the facts he will desire to know. Those facts he will desire to have. Those facts would seem to be the following: (1) The physical character of the country, and the aspects of its scenery; (2) the characteristics of the native races that inhabit it; (3) the history of the natives and of the European settlers—that is to say, the chief events which have made the people what they now are; (4) the present condition of the several divisions of the country, and the aspects of life in it; (5) the economic resources of the country, and the characteristic features of its society and its politics."

The book is well produced in large octavo, with a map of South Africa. It contains 600 pages.

After South Africa—Lullaby Land. This is a book of selections from the children's songs of Eugene Field, illustrated by Charles Robinson, and introduced by Mr. Kenneth Grahame. A dainty dish to set before a child. Mr. Grahame writes of the No-Man's Land, or Nonsense Land, where "it is with no surprise at all that you greet the Lead Soldier strutting somewhat stiffly to meet you, the Dog with eyes as big as mill wheels following affably at his heel."

"Most people, at one time or another, have travelled in this delectable country, if only in young and irresponsible days. Certain unfortunate, unequipped by nature for a voyage in such latitudes, have never visited it at all, and assuredly never will. A happy few never quit it entirely at any time. Domiciled in that pleasant atmosphere they peep into the world of facts but fitfully, at moments; and decline to sacrifice their high privilege of citizenship at any summons to a low conformity.

Of this fortunate band was Eugene Field. He knew the country thoroughly, its highways and its byways alike. Its language was the one he was fondest of talking; and he always refused to emigrate and to settle down anywhere else. As soon as he set himself to narrate the gossip on these, those of us who had been tourists in bygone days, but had lost our return-tickets, pricked up our ears, and listened, and remembered, and knew. The Dinkey-Bird, we recollected at once, had been singing, the day we left, in the amfalu tree; and there, of course, he must have been singing ever since, only we had forgotten the way to listen. Eugene Field gently reminded us, and the Dinkey-Bird was vocal once more, to be silent never again. Shut-Eye Train had been starting every night with the utmost punctuality; it was we who had long ago lost our way to the booking-office (I really do not know the American for booking-office). Now we can hurry up the platform whenever we please, and hear the doors slam and the whistle toot as we sink back on those first-class cushions. And the Chocolate Cat—why, of course the cat's were all chocolate then! And how pleasantly brittle their tails were, and how swiftly, though curled and sucked each day, they sprouted afresh!

It is thus that Mr. Graham invites old folks to share with young folks Eugene Field's verses, to which Mr. Charles Robinson adds a liberal sprinkling of dainty drawings.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

- MUSIC FOR THE SOUL: DAILY READINGS FROM THE WRITINGS OF ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D. Hodder & Stoughton. 6s.
 REKAM'S LIFE OF JESUS. Translated, with an Introduction, by William G. Hutchinson. Walter Scott, Ltd. 1s. 6d.
 TRUE AND FALSE AIMS, AND OTHER SERMONS. By the late Rev. E. Herbert Evans, D.D. Hodder & Stoughton. 6s.
 THE EXPANSION OF THE CHRISTIAN LIFE. By John M. Lang, D.D. W. Blackwood & Sons. 6s.
 THE MINISTRY OF THE HOLY GHOST. By the Rev. John Morgan. Hodder & Stoughton.
 THE PSALMS. Translated into Welsh by W. Morgan, D.D. Charles J. Clark.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

- THE DUNGEONS OF OLD PARIS. By Tighe Hopkins. G. P. Putnam's Sons.
 HEROES OF THE NATIONS: ROBERT E. LEE. By H. A. White. G. P. Putnam's Sons.
 LITTLE JOURNEYS TO THE HOMES OF FAMOUS WOMEN. G. P. Putnam's Sons.
 NIFFUR; OR, EXPLORATIONS AND ADVENTURES OF THE EUPHRATES. By John Punnett Peters, Ph.D. G. P. Putnam's Sons.
 B. J. BARBATO: A MEMOIR. By Harry Raymond. Iabister & Co. 6s.
 LIFE AND LETTERS OF JOHN BACCHUS DYERS. Edited by Rev. J. T. Fowler. John Murray. 7s. 6d.
 THE NOTE-BOOK OF TRISTRAM RISKON: 1808-1828. Transcribed and edited by James Dallas and Henry G. Porter. Elliot Stock. 15s.

POETRY, CRITICISM, BELLES LETTRES.

- IRELAND: WITH OTHER POEMS. By Lionel Johnson. Elkin Mathews. 6s.
 THE ENCHANTED RIVER, AND OTHER POEMS. By Augustus Ralli. Digby, Long & Co. 3s. 6d.
 SUNDAY AFTERNOON VERSES. By W. Robertson Nicoll. Hodder & Stoughton.
 SONGS OF FLYING HOURS. By Dr Edward Willard Watson. Henry T. Coates & Co. (Philadelphia).

- THE CHILD OF THE BONDWOMAN, AND OTHER VERSES. By Jean Carlyle Graham. David Nutt.
 SONNETS OF JOSÉ-MARIA DE HEREDIA. Done into English by Edward R. Taylor. Wm. Doxey (San Francisco).
 VOICES ACADEMICÆ. By C. Grant Robertson, M.A. Methuen & Co.
 AUCASSIN AND NICOLETTE. Second edition. By Francis W. Bourdillon. Macmillan & Co.
 TRANSATLANTIC TRAITS. By the Hon. Martin Morris. Elliot Stock.
 SELECTIONS FROM THE BRITISH SATIRISTS. Edited by Cecil Headlam. F. E. Robinson.

ART BOOKS.

- COUNTRY GARLAND OF TEN SONGS FROM THE HESPERIDES OF ROBERT HERRICK. Set to Music by Joseph S. Moorat. Drawings by Paul Woodroffe. George Allen.
 THE ART JOURNAL, 1897. J. S. Virtue & Co., Ltd.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

- THE NORTH COAST OF CORNWALL. By John Lloyd Warden Page. Simpkin Marshall.
 IMPRESSIONS OF SOUTH AFRICA. By James Bryce. Macmillan & Co. 14s.
 HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS IN DEVON AND CORNWALL. By Arthur H. Norway. Illustrated by Joseph Pennell and Hugh Thomson. Macmillan & Co. 6s.

EDUCATIONAL.

- HARBUIT'S PLASTIC METHOD. By Wm. Harbutt. Chapman & Hall. FIRST BOOK OF PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY. By Ralph S. Tarr, B.S. The Macmillan Co. 6s. THE GALLIC WAR. Book III. Edited by John Brown, B.A. Blackie & Son. 1s. 6d. SELECTIONS FROM SIR THOMAS MALORY'S MORTE D'ARTHUR. Edited by William E. Mead. David Nutt. 4s. 6d.

JUVENILE BOOKS.

- THE WALLPUP IN LONDON. By G. E. Farrow. Methuen & Co. 3s. 6d. THE GARDEN OF DELIGHT. Fairy Tales by Netta Syrett. Hurst & Blackett. 6s. JUMBLES. Written and Illustrated by Lewis Baumer. C. A. Pearson, Ltd. 2s. 6d. THE SURPRISING ADVENTURES OF SIR TOADY LION. By S. R. Crockett. 6s. AND STORIES FROM THE FAIRIE QUEENE. By Mary Macleod. 6s. Gardner, Darton & Co. CHERRIWINK: A FAIRY STORY. By Rachel Penn. John Macqueen. 6s. SINGING VERSES FOR CHILDREN. By Lydia A. Coonley. Macmillan & Co. PARTNERS. By H. F. Gethen. BRAVE MEN AND THEIR DEEDS. By M. B. Syngé. T. Nelson & Sons. OUR ISLAND HOME. By G. H. F. Nye. Bennet & Sons. 3s. 6d. IN STRANGE QUARTERS. By Edwin Hodder. Hodder & Stoughton. 6s.

MISCELLANEOUS.

- WHEN ALL MEN STARVE. By Charles Gleig. John Lane. 3s. 6d. REVERIES OF A PARAGRAPHER. By M. W. L. T. Fisher Unwin. 6s. AUSTRALASIAN DEMOCRACY. By Henry de R. Walker. T. F. Unwin. 6s. SHALL AND WILL: THE IRISH DIFFICULTY. By Gerald Molloy. Blackie & Son. 2s. 6d. IDEALS FOR GIRLS. By the Rev. H. R. Hawley. James Bowden. THE ZOOLOGICAL RECORD. Vol. XXXIII. Gurney & Jackson. THE ISTHMIAN LIBRARY: ROWING. By R. C. Lehmann. A. D. Innes & Co. 6s. THE LONDON UNIVERSITY GUIDE: 1897-8.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN ACADEMY OF LETTERS.

Paris: Nov. 21.

I was very surprised to learn that Sardou, Sully, Prudhomme, and François Coppée are critics. It would astonish them just as much, and they would surely thank Mr. John E. Yerrbury for this new title.

The only two great critics who have a seat in the "Académie Française" are Jules Lemaitre and Anatole France.

These two members of the French Academy are also well-known novelists. No French novel can come up to Les Rois of Jules Lemaitre, and Thais of Anatole France is the purest and greatest picture of antique life.

THE SOCIETY OF ARTS' MEMORIALS.

London: Nov. 19.

I was glad to find my communication on the subject of the S. A. memorials was welcome to your columns, though sorry for the slip on the Sir Harry Vane tablet. This was odd, as I read your article very attentively. A claim was put in for No. 6 (opposite No. 24) Holles-street as the real birthplace of Lord Byron. But upon investigation this proved to be only based upon hearsay. I ventured, some months back, to advocate the removal of the poet's statue from its obscure position in Hamilton-gardens, Hyde Park, to Cavendish-square. But I fear this was too bold a scheme to be allowed to catch on.

Cecil Clarke.

MR. HENLEY'S ANTHOLOGY.

Bath: Nov. 20.

Your notice of this book, admirably done in other respects, is a little odd, to say the least, in its naïve comments upon the Old Testament lyrics which Mr. Henley has seen fit to include in his volume. "Let us thank Mr. Henley," writes your critic, "for his tremendous gift of lyrical passages from the Old Testament. He has arrayed each extract anew in rhythmical lines..." He then quotes Psalm cxxxvii., and adds: "Does it not gain—is not its beauty emphasised—by the new arrangement?"

From his ingenuous delight and from his reference, in a later part of his article, to Mr. Henley's "splendid contributions from the Authorised Version" one is almost driven to conclude that a Revised Version is unknown to your reviewer. For it is from the Revised Version that Mr. Henley's excerpts are directly taken; the "tremendous gift," the "new arrangement in rhythmical lines," are all due to the Revisers, and not in the least to Mr. Henley. It is rather humorous to find how many other reviewers like your own, apparently have realised for the first time on opening this anthology that there really is poetry to be found in the Book of Psalms. Let us hope that this startling discovery will induce them to read the poetical books in the Revised Version, where they will find that Mr. Henley has simply transcribed certain passages, and that the "new arrangement" is not so new after all.

Of course, the "rhythmical lines" are but an attempt to reproduce in English the beautiful parallelism of the Hebrew originals. Inasmuch as they may induce some persons to study the Bible with more care, the appearance of these extracts in Mr. Henley's volume may be welcomed. Otherwise, it is a little difficult to account for the presence of these Hebrew lyrics, exquisite as they are, in an anthology of English verse.

ANTHONY C. DEANE.

[Mr. Deane is mistaken. Mr. Henley has used not the Revised Version, but the old Authorised Version. The psalm which our reviewer quoted from Mr. Henley's collection is an example in point. In the Revised Version the poem begins:

"By the rivers of Babylon,
 There we sat down, yea, we wept,
 When we remembered Zion.
 Upon the willows in the midst thereof
 We hanged up our harps."

In Mr. Henley's volume the psalm begins thus:

"By the rivers of Babylon,
 There we sat down, yea, we wept,
 When we remembered Zion.
 We hanged our harps
 Upon the willows in the midst thereof."

Inasmuch as the old version prints the Psalms and other lyrical passages in verses, it was correct of our reviewer to state that Mr. Henley had arranged them anew in rhythmical lines.]

A POETIC COINCIDENCE.

London: Nov. 22.

The Quarterly article on "Some Minor Poets" has supplied matter for copious reference, though no allusion, as far as I am aware, has been made to the similarity, not in rhythmic structure merely, but also in verbal expression, of the stanzas cited by the writer in his remarks on Rudyard Kipling's verse, from that poet's "Story of Uriah" to the poem "Shon Campbell," which appeared in a small booklet of verse published three years ago. The latter poem was characterised, shortly after its issue, as one of the finest ever written by a graduate of Aberdeen University. To those who discern its inwardness, "Shon Campbell" has a haunting quality, and this, with the fact that Kipling's "Story of Uriah" was new to me, may account for the discovery of what, from the corresponding lines of the two poems here placed in juxtaposition, will be regarded, I think, as a curious poetic parallel. Mr. W. A. Mackenzie, editor of Black and White, is, it should be stated, the author of "Shon Campbell":

KIPLING.	MACKENZIE.
Jack Barrett went to Quetta, Because they told him to, He left his wife in Simla On three-fourths his monthly screw.	Shon Campbell went to Col lege Because he wanted to; He left the croft in Gairloch To dive in Bain and Drew.
Jack Barrett died at Quetta Ere the next month's pay he drew.	Shon Campbell died at College When the sky of spring was blue.
And when the Last Great Bugle Call Adown the Hurri at throbs, When the last grim joke is entered In the big black book of jobs, At Quetta graveyards give Their victims to the air, I should not like to be the man Who sent Jack Barrett there.	But when the Last Great Roll is called, And Adams thunder loud, And when the Quad is cumbered With an eager jostling crowd, The Principal, who rules us all, Will say, "Shon Campbell! come! Your Alma Mater bails you Magister Artium!"

It should in fairness be stated that the last stanza of "Shon Campbell" is somewhat weakened by the necessary hiatus.

J. G.

[We print the above letter as a neat example of the mare's nest in literature. Mr. Mackenzie parodied "Jack Barrett went to Quetta" some years ago, and printed his avowed parody in Alma Mater, when he was editing that sprightly paper at Aberdeen University. It was copied into the newspapers, became popular, was set to music, and is about to be included in The Students' Song Book, a collection of songs common to the four Scots Universities. It is true, however, that "Shon Campbell" has been received as an original effort in many quarters.]

"STORIES OF FAMOUS SONGS."

Wimbledon: Nov. 22.

When a reviewer makes false statements his notice of a book ceases to be of any value. In the observations upon my Stories of Famous Songs in the ACADEMY of November 20, your reviewer says: "He" (meaning the author) "frankly admits that scores of favourite songs have been omitted, and a brief inspection of the index is enough to show that he has not exaggerated his own shortcomings." Now this is absolutely untrue. I make no such admission; and "a brief inspection of the index" will at once show that it is your reviewer who has wilfully exaggerated and not I. In the index there are no less than six hundred and sixty-five songs and ballads to which I refer in the body of my work; the histories and origins of which I tell, or about which I relate something new, or give particulars not generally known.

Now, as to his first misrepresentation of my words. This is what I say in my Introduction: "Of course there are dozens of songs—familiar friends to hundreds of people—that will not be found in this volume. If there is no history of any moment connected with the composition of any particular song, it is impossible to tell one." I think the truth is very different from your reviewer's presentation of the facts before him, which in his hurry he has failed to grasp. Every famous song with a history is included in Stories of Famous Songs.

As to my arrangement of the various chapters and their contents, which seems to disturb your reviewer, I beg to say that if he had read my book carefully, and not in "hot haste," he would have seen that I followed out the only serviceable plan in a work that was avowedly written for the general reader. I disclaim all intention to provide a reference guide. In his remarks, your reviewer more than once forgets what is due to himself and the honest labours he presumes to criticise, and grows impertinent. I deny that there is anything disorderly in my treatment of my self-imposed task. I chose my own methods and carried them through as consistently as the vastness of the subject and the material would admit of. I am accused, by this wonderful purist, of having a "vicious style." It seems to me that a reviewer who misrepresents the aim and object of the work he is supposed to digest and criticise, and who deliberately misquotes his author, should exercise more discretion in the choice of his words.

S. J. ADAIR FITZ-GERALD.

[Our reviewer writes: "I am sorry that Mr. Fitz-Gerald supposes me to undervalue his contribution to the literature of the subject. But by 'confining himself to the pleasure of relating the stories of such lays and lyrics as were written under some romantic, pathetic, or entertaining circumstances,' and by omitting all mention of 'dozens' (not 'scores'): I apologise for the inaccuracy) of other 'celebrated effusions,' he has fallen short of what he should have striven after—finality: it was this that I regretted. I still believe, too, that the work might have been arranged upon some more evident principle of order without its being reduced to 'a pedantic reference guide or dictionary for the library.' As to Mr. Fitz-Gerald's literary style, I have the misfortune to dislike it. By the way, Mr. Fitz-Gerald uses my words, "hot-haste," in such a way that the reader might well suppose that it was I who had admitted reading his book in that manner, whereas it was my charge against the compiler. I, unhappily, had to read the book through with deliberation."]

PERSIAN ROSE-LEAVES.

London: Nov. 21.

That dear old sceptic, Omar the Tentmaker, is once more the object of poetical manipulation, as I gather from a paragraph in your issue of the 13th inst. That he will look quite respectable in his Anglo-Saxon garb goes without saying. The English reader of to-day, like Boileau's French reader of yore, "means to be respected." It is, therefore, with a chastened voice that the gross Oriental sensualist draws out:

"When I am dead, wash my body in wine. Say no prayers over my grave, but sing a song in praise of the grape, and if, on Judgment-day, you wish to find me again, search for me in the dust under the tavern-door."

This quatrain, which has been much admired for its subtle mysticism, reminds me of a Βαυχιδὸν in modern Greek, of which the following is a translation:

"When I am dead, remember
To bury my immortal
Remains in Yakoum's vineyard."

The poor fellow who wrote the song was anything but a follower of Bacchus. He was a classic scholar, well-known at Constantinople, who, when his eyesight failed him, took to rhyming anacreontics for his amusement. May not Omar Khayyām have been a reveler of the same Platonic kind? What little is known of his life points to the conclusion that he was not an idle debauchee, since, besides dabbling in astronomy, he is credited with having composed a treatise on algebra. He would have made a rare hash of his problems had he been addicted to the bottle. His bacchic effusions ought not to have been taken seriously. Who, then, and what was this Omar? It will be asked. The plain answer is, that he was one out of a host of versifiers, more or less known to fame, who flourished between the tenth and fourteenth centuries, and of whom Persia has some reason to be proud, inasmuch as no other literature in the world can boast of such giants in point of fecundity. To cite a few instances. Ferdusi's epic, the famous "Shahnameh," consists of no less than 120,000 metrical lines, nearly eight times the number of verses contained in Tasso's "Gerusalemme." The founder of the order of the Dancing Dervishes, Djelal-Eddin Roumy, runs Ferdusi hard with 40,000 rhymed distichs constituting his "Metsaveni," a moral poem, if you please, and exclusive of his "Divan." No less prolific were Saadi the Blessed, Enweri the Luminous, Hafiz the Preserver. Our friend Omar with his 467 quatrains is a perfect dwarf when compared to his brethren in Helicon, but though less voluminous than they, he is as outrageously improper as any of them. To the intense sorrow of his French translator, M. Nicolas was obliged to admit that Omar is but too often "d'un matérialisme repoussant." The fact is, that, apart from the indescribable obscenities with which it abounds, the poetry of all these turban'd and fur-cap'd worthies is no poetry at all in the true sense of the word, and one might look in vain in their rhymed farrago for a single trait, a single thought or image out of the common. The two principal characteristics of Persian poetry are uniform dullness and intolerable prolixity. It is quite refreshing to turn from those effete productions to Goethe's "Westöstlicher Divan." Hafiz has been styled the Anacreon of Persia. There is nothing, however, in his poetical baggage that comes up to the exquisite lyric,

"Dir mit Wohlgeruch zu kosen"

&c., addressed to Suleika, a perfect gem for delicacy of thought and structure, or to the charming duet between Suleika and her lover, Hatem, when she asks him to explain to her the dream that she has had about her ring.

"Sag Poet, sag Profete!

Was bedeutet dieser Traum?"

Indeed, it is marvellous what the plastic genius of the German bard managed to do with the disjointed, shapeless materials at his disposal. To revert to Omar. A literal prose translation of the "Rabayat" would, if conscientiously carried out, be a boon to the English reader. It would enable him to form an opinion and judge for himself as to the merits of its author, whether as a poet or a thinker. Not much reliance is to be placed on the French version mentioned in this letter. I have it on the authority of one of the best known Orientalists that M. Nicolas is only partially faithful—assez fidèle—to the Persian text, a doubtful recommendation at best. But it has hitherto been the fate of Omar to be presented with a mask upon his face.

THOMAS DELTA.

INEDITED LEOPARDI MSS.

Rome: Oct. 25.

On June 29, 1898, occurs the centenary of the birth of Giacomo Leopardi, the poet of sadness, who has so many admirers in Italy and abroad. The date will be celebrated in Italy with some enthusiasm, the organisation of the festivities being entrusted to Senator Mariotti, a noted man of letters, and a conscientious student of Leopardi. Signor Mariotti conceived the design of making the date of the centenary rejoicings coincide with that of the publication of some inedited MSS of the poet. These are rather numerous, and are an heirloom of the State; but so strange have been the difficulties and complications that have arisen in their regard, that it may be well to here say a word or two about them.

On the death of Leopardi, Senator Ranieri, the friend who for seven years had harboured the poet in his own house, gathered the unpublished MSS., made some of them public property, and put away in a trunk those which, for one reason or another, he judged it just then injudicious to publish. The trunk was covered with green baize, placed inside a large wicker basket, and collocaded in a corner of the senator's sleeping apartment. It remained there from the year 1837 till Signor Ranieri's death in 1888. His servants tell how it was his custom every morning to strew flowers on the basket, the only relic of his friend. On Ranieri's death the Odyssey of the MSS. began.

The senator willed his own and all other MSS. in his house to the State, but he inserted in his testament the condition that nothing should be touched during the lifetime of his two female servants. As these servants absolutely refused permission for the baize-covered trunk to be taken away, the State resolved to wait patiently for the last end of two aged and obstinate females. But it had reckoned without the intervention of the poet's nephew, Count Giacomo Leopardi, who now stepped in and claimed the MSS. as his. Senator Ranieri, he contested, had merely been the depositary. Litigation commenced, and as it seemed likely to be of indefinite duration, it was agreed to entrust the MSS. to some uninterested person. Senator Santamaria Nicolini was chosen, but he being soon after named to a judgeship in Venice, handed them over to a charitable institution in Naples.

The public began to grow interested in the matter, and the scholars of the country thought it time something should be done to put an end to the interminable dispute. Senator Mariotti, on the 9th of last April, raised an interpellation in the Senate, and Giosuè Carducci rose to speak on behalf of the relics of his brother poet. In the name of European culture he demanded that the MSS. should be given to the State. Independently of testamentary equity, there was something that gave the State full rights: there was the sentiment of the nation, the prospect of doctrine, the certainty of art. The Minister for Public Instruction replied that everything possible would be done; but nothing was done, for the old women continued to live on, and to be stubborn as ever. Then, as the date of the centenary drew near, and no hope of amicable arrangements dawned, it fortunately occurred to someone that a law existed according to which expropriation of an author's rights was accorded to the State every time that it was a question of public utility. This providential law was as recent as 1882. It was at once availed of: public utility was declared, 500 francs was given as compensation to the two old servants, and a few days ago the wicker basket with its precious contents was escorted by carabinieri from Naples to Rome, and placed in the Casanatense Library of this city.

On Sunday last a Commission named by the Minister of Public Instruction, and of which Giosuè Carducci was president and Senator Mariotti vice-president, proceeded to open the trunk and examine the MSS.

They include letters between Leopardi and many illustrious Italians and foreigners; poems, both playful and satirical; a tragedy in verse, entitled Marie Antoinette, and dated July, 1816; philosophical disquisitions in prose; and, most curious of all, an address to the god of Evil—Arimane. The King of Things, the Master of the World—he of whom the poet declares he has himself been, by his very existence, the greatest preacher—is invoked to grant that the seventh lustrum of that existence will not be allowed to finish, for of life the poet can bear no more (non posso più della vita!).

These documents are regarded as precious. They will serve to complete the history of that life, which Leopardi himself describes as "a romance that relates few outward adventures, and these of the most ordinary description; but which is the record of the interior vicissitudes and struggles of a soul naturally noble and tender from the day of its first awaking to consciousness even till its end."

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

"The Beth Book." By Sarah Grand.

THIS novel has had a mixed reception, all the more mixed because its gold and its alloy seem to be clearly defined and easily separable. Therefore, even admiring critics have found much to condemn in it, angry ones much to praise. The Saturday Review is so far divided that it prints two reviews of the book, embodying opinions widely, though not diametrically, opposed. F. H. sees no merit in the story of Beth's childhood. The three hundred pages in which it is developed are "irrelevant and foolish drivel." F. H.'s confrère, "Frank Danby," takes a widely different view of this part of the book. She finds in Beth a study of childhood, "sympathetic, convincing, and complete." The two critics are more in agreement about the later portions of the book. "Frank Danby," who is again the more merciful critic, writes:

"Unlike the majority of women who write on unsavoury subjects, Sarah Grand has immense talent, almost amounting to genius, and she is impelled to her theme by honest, if unreasonable, conviction. She is straightforward, has no private ends to serve, does not drag in vice to give herself or her book an advertisement, and shakes a wild head at the laurel leaves that might so easily be hers if she would abandon her vagaries. But apparently she must preach her wonderful doctrine of the equality of the sexes, she must jumble up medical and moral questions in one inharmonious whole, she must ruin her own works of art and deface them, with iconoclastic fervour, by all the refuse of the controversies that raged twenty years ago around the dead C. D. Acts. It is a strange and hideous obsession."

The Daily News thinks that Beth's childhood is "by far the most attractive and convincing part of the narrative," and the Weekly Sun is so much of this opinion that it confines its notice to these pages.

The Spectator, on the other hand, is scornful throughout. The story is, to this critic, only "a prodigiously elaborate study of a temperament merging into an impassioned and polemical pamphlet on the marriage question. Lastly, the author's arguments have all been set forth in one of her previous novels. All that she has done is to give them a cruder and more livid setting."

The Chronicle brings us back to the divided judgment:

"To sum up—wherever Sarah Grand has worked according to the theories of novel-writing expressed by Beth, the literary aspirant, and by Sir George Galbraith, the pasteboard automation, the book fails; it even tires and irritates. . . . Whenever, on the other hand, she works within the accepted conventions and by the recognised canons of the novelist's art, she charms and interests us."

MAY criticism be defined

"The Tormmentor," as one man one vote? We By Benjamin Swift. are often tempted to ask this question; but the opinions expressed by the Chronicle and the British Weekly on Mr. Swift's new story compel us to articulate it. Just read this. It is the Chronicle that speaks:

"When we read Mr. Benjamin Swift's Nancy Noon we saw, and said, that the author had a good deal to learn in the art of story-telling. We greatly feared (though this we did not say) that by the time he had learned this good deal he would have forgotten much of his originality, and that power would be sacrificed to artistry. We are extremely glad to own that we were mistaken. The Tormmentor is original from first word to last, original in conception, method, and in its very phrasing. Most of the blemishes and deficiencies which gravely marred the former work have here entirely, or almost entirely, disappeared. The construction is no longer chaotic, the movement of the story no longer spasmodic. In Nancy Noon Mr. Swift was very obviously of the school of George Meredith. In The Tormmentor he is of no school; he is himself. And we like the original much better than the derived Mr. Swift."

Now hear the British Weekly:

"No. This will not do. It is a feverish recital of a feverish, hag-ridden dream. I am referring to Mr. Benjamin Swift's new story, The Tormmentor, just published by Mr. Fisher Unwin. Few welcomed more warmly than I did the originality and power of his previous work, Nancy Noon. It had great faults, but it had merits so striking as to make it one of the most remarkable and promising books of the year. . . . On the whole, one might hope very much from it, but would not be inclined to prophesy. The whole question was whether the writer would take the path of his strength or the path of his weakness. Unfortunately, he has chosen the downward way."

Between these opposing views comes that of Literature, which gives the story a notice filling a column. This critic advises Mr. Swift to study Balzac:

"Nothing is in its way finer in literature than Balzac's treatment of the abnormal, and from it the author of The Tormmentor might draw valuable lessons of restraint and lucidity. It seems worth while to give this advice, for we feel that Mr. Swift possesses some power of penetrating below the commonplace surface of things, though he has yet to acquire the art of seizing only what is essential and of presenting it with clearness to the mind of the average cultivated reader."

"Jerome." This story has probably done as much to plant Miss Wilkins's fame in this country as any of her other works. The reviewers are very kind. Yet the Spectator is not alone in pointing out that Jerome "will hardly bear comparison in point of construction with some of Miss Wilkins's earlier and shorter stories." But, says the Spectator, "Miss Wilkins . . . shows us that in the qualities of artistic reticence, nobility of sentiment, and grace of treatment the Old World has nothing to teach, but rather something to learn from, the New Englander."

The Daily News says of the story: "It is a corner of life seen through the small end of a telescope, none the less vivid in its colouring, definite in lines, or complex in its manifestations because of the minuteness of its presentation." After noting the stern, Puritan milieu of the tale, and sketching a few of the characters, this reviewer says:

"The more attractive qualities nurtured by Puritanism show themselves in Lucina, the dainty, pliant heroine, staunch to the core, and over whose personality, purity of soul lingers like a perfume. In Lucina's elderly maiden aunt, Camilla Meritt, we have the same crowning grace of exquisite purity, expressing itself in 'the grace and dignity of ineffable ladyhood.' Some of the most charming pages in the book describe this lady, 'who was old as a poem or an angel might be, with the lovely meaning of her still uppermost and most evident.' The story, if over long, is distinguished by Miss Wilkins's most delightful qualities, her extreme accuracy of touch, and delicate spiritual insight."

The Daily Telegraph and the Manchester Guardian agree with the Spectator in noting Miss Wilkins's inability to attain her usual measure of artistic success on a large canvas. Jerome, says the Telegraph,

"is an excellent novel of its kind, very graceful, artistic, pretty; but it would have been all the better for a little ruthless editing. If some faithful friend had told Miss Wilkins that her subject and her plot were too small for her five hundred pages, it would not have done her any harm."

The St. James's critic has been thoroughly captivated by this story. He writes:

"It is difficult to avoid rhapsodising over the beauty of her style. She writes without passion, but with an extraordinary tenderness; never challenging our admiration with large effects and bold sweeps of the brush, but captivating us with her exquisite miniature-work, perfect in every detail yet with none of the severity of such perfection. Le mot juste is so happily hers in her every description that, in mentioning any of her characters, one is tempted to quote her own words about them. She has brought quite a crowd of people into the story and worked with equal conscientiousness at all of them. We were reluctant to find the central figures of Jerome and his Lucina the least interesting of any; but so it was. Many virtuous young men and harmless maidens might be given for such characters as Jerome's wonderful mother, the grim Paulina Maria, the simpering Belinda, Squire Eben, and Aunt Camilla. One remembers them as one remembers personal acquaintances."

A FIRST LARGE EDITION

OF

THE SCHOOL FOR SAINTS,

A NEW NOVEL,

BY

JOHN OLIVER HOBBS,

PUBLISHED THIS WEEK,

In Unwin's Green Cloth Library, price 6s.

LONDON: PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

BOOK PRICES CURRENT for 1897

gives the Book Sales up to the end of November, and includes the Ashburnham Collection, as well as the unusually important auctions which are taking place during the present month. Several fresh features will be included in the new volume which have not appeared in former ones.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

FOUNTAIN PENS AND STYLOS.

Everyone would rather use a pen that carries its own ink, ready at any moment, in preference to one which has to be dipped in the ink every minute or so.

The CAW PEN can be carried sideways, upside down, or in any position whatever. The ink cannot possibly spill, because it is in a hermetically closed chamber, screwed tight. There is no air-hole.

The pen can be jerked or thrown about as much as you please; it cannot spill. Until it is opened for use the nib (which is a gold one of the finest quality) is immersed in the ink. Consequently it writes at once, without giving any trouble.

It is easily suited to the writer's hand, and is so easily filled and convenient for desk use that it surpasses all other pens whatever.

Prices from 12s. 6d.

"Caw pens have a repute beyond their neighbours."—Westminster Budget.

The CAW STYLOGRAPHIC PEN has not all the advantages of the FOUNTAIN PEN; but for people who prefer a stylo this is the best stylo on the market. Prices from 5s.

British Depot: 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

THE MOST NUTRITIOUS.

E P P S ' S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A

BREAKFAST AND SUPPER.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

B I R K B E C K B A N K ,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 28s.
A SUMMARY CATALOGUE of WESTERN
 MANUSCRIPTS in the BODLEIAN LIBRARY at OXFORD, which have not hitherto been Catalogued in the Quarto Series. With Reference to the Oriental and other Manuscripts. By FALCONER MADAN, M.A., Sub-Librarian.

WITH MARGINAL REFERENCES. Fcap. 8vo, long primer type, 4s. 6d.
THE GREEK TESTAMENT. With the Readings adopted by the Revisers of the Authorised Version.

Immediately, demy 8vo, with a Portrait, cloth, 2 vols., 21s. net.
HINDU MANNERS, CUSTOMS, and CERE-
MONIES. By the Abbé J. A. DUBOIS. Translated from the Author's later French MS., with Notes, Corrections, and Biography by HENRY K. BEAUCHAMP. With a Preface by the Right Hon. F. MAX-MÜLLER.

Immediately, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.
THE ODES of KEATS. With Illustrations,
 Notes, and Analyses, and a Memoir. By ARTHUR C. DOWNER, M.A., Brasenose
 College, Oxford.

Just published, Vol. I., 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.
 PART I.—CHARLES II.
BURNET'S HISTORY of MY OWN TIME.
 A New Edition based on that of M. J. ROUTH, D.D. Edited by OSMUND
 AIRY, M.A.

*.* The Text has been collated for this Edition with the Original MS. (now in the Bodleian Library) by the Rev. W. D. MACRAY.

SCOTTISH REVIEW.—"If the other parts are edited with the same care as this..... there need be little hesitation in saying that, when completed, this new edition will render those which have preceded it useless."

BIRMINGHAM POST.—"There is nothing inserted that could have been omitted without impairing the value of the work.....Speaking of the editing generally, we have what will probably be a final, as it certainly is an encyclopædic, edition of Burnet."

Just published, extra fcap., stiff covers, 2s. 6d.
FIRST STEPS in ANGLO-SAXON. By Henry
 SWEET, M.A., Ph.D., LL.D., Corresponding Member of the Munich Academy of Sciences.

ATHENÆUM.—"For beginners who have to dispense with the aid of a teacher it may be cordially recommended.....Dr. Sweet's Beowulf saga is a learned and skilful piece of work, and will probably be read with interest even by advanced students."

A SELECTION OF LEXICOGRAPHICAL WORKS PUBLISHED AT THE CLARENDON PRESS.

THE OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY.
ENGLISH. A New Dictionary, on Historical
 Principles. Founded mainly on the Materials collected by the Philological Society.
 Imperial 4to.

Vol. I. {A} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. II. {B} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. III. {C} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. IV. {D} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. V. {E} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. VI. {F} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. VII. {G} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. VIII. {H} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. IX. {I} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. X. {J} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. XI. {K} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. XII. {L} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. XIII. {M} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. XIV. {N} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. XV. {O} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. XVI. {P} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. XVII. {Q} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. XVIII. {R} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. XIX. {S} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. XX. {T} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. XXI. {U} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. XXII. {V} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. XXIII. {W} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. XXIV. {X} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. XXV. {Y} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
 Vol. XXVI. {Z} Edited by Dr. MURRAY... Half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.

To be issued January 1, 1898.

A Double Section of F and G, by Mr. BRADLEY (completing the letter F and containing a portion of G).

Sections of not less than 64 pp. are published every quarter.

AN ANGLO-SAXON DICTIONARY, based on the MS. Collections of the late JOSEPH BOSWORTH, D.D. Edited and Enlarged by Prof. T. N. TOLLER, M.A. Part I.-III. A-SAR. 4to, stiff covers, 15s. each.
 Part IV. Sect. I. SAR-SWIDRIAN, 8s. 6d.

A STUDENT'S DICTIONARY of ANGLO-
SAXON. By HENRY SWEET, M.A. Crown 4to, 8s. 6d. net.

AN ETYMOLOGICAL DICTIONARY of the
ENGLISH LANGUAGE. Arranged on an Historical Basis. By W. W. SKEAT, Litt.D. Second Edition. 4to, £2 4s.

A Supplement to the First Edition of the above, 4to, 2s. 6d.

A MIDDLE ENGLISH DICTIONARY, contain- ing Words used by English Writers from the Twelfth to the Fifteenth Century. By FRANCIS HENRY STRATMANN. A New Edition, Re-arranged, Revised, and Enlarged by HENRY BRADLEY, M.A. Small 4to, half-morocco, £1 11s. 6d.

A CONCISE DICTIONARY of MIDDLE
ENGLISH, from A.D. 1150 to 1580. By A. L. MAYHEW, M.A., and W. W. SKEAT, Litt.D. Crown 8vo, half-roan, 7s. 6d.

AN ICELANDIC - ENGLISH DICTIONARY.
 Based on the MS. Collections of the late RICHARD CLEASBY. Enlarged and Completed by G. VIGFUSSON, M.A. 4to, £3 7s.

SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.

Edited by the Right Hon. F. MAX-MÜLLER.

Now ready, Vol. XLVII., 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

THE MARVELS of ZOROASTRIANISM: being Part V. of THE PAHLAVI TEXTS. Translated by E. W. WEST.

Now ready, Fifth Edition, greatly Enlarged, crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

SHORT HISTORY of FRENCH LITERATURE.
 By GEORGE SAINTSBURY, M.A.

Immediately, cloth, 8vo, price to Subscribers, 12s. 6d. net.

THE FLORA of BERKSHIRE: being a Topographical and Historical Account of the Flowering Plants and Ferns found in the County, with short Biographical Notices of the Botanists who have contributed to Berkshire Botany during the last three centuries. By GEORGE CLARIDGE
 DRUCE, Hon. M.A. Oxon., Sheriff of the City of Oxford, Curator of the Fielding Herbarium.

*.* The price will be raised after the Subscription List is closed.

MINIATURE "OXFORD" CLASSICS.

Now ready, Two Editions: (a) On Writing Paper, for MS. Notes, paper boards, price 3s. 6d. each; (b) On Oxford India Paper, roan, price 5s. each.

THE COMPLETE WORKS of HORACE. Edited by the Very Rev. E. C. WICKHAM, D.D., Dean of Lincoln.

UNIFORM WITH ABOVE.

THE COMPLETE WORKS of VIRGIL. Edited by T. L. PAPILLON, M.A., and A. E. HAIGH, M.A. Including the Minor Works with numerous Emendations by Professor ROBINSON ELLIS.

BERKELEY.—THE WORKS of GEORGE
BERKELEY, D.D., formerly Bishop of Cloyne; including many of his Writings hitherto unpublished. With Prefaces, Annotations, and an Account of his Life and Philosophy. By A. CAMPBELL FRASER, Hon. D.C.L. and LL.D. 4 vols.
 8vo, £2 18s.

THE LIFE, LETTERS, &c., separately, 16s.

SELECTIONS. With Introduction and Notes. For the Use of Students in the Universities. By the SAME EDITOR
 Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

INDEX KEWENSIS: an Enumeration of the Genera and Species of Flowering Plants from the Time of Linnaeus to the Year 1885 inclusive. Edited by Sir J. D. HOOKER and B. D. JACKSON. 2 vols., 4to, half-morocco, £10 10s. net.

A GREEK - ENGLISH LEXICON. By H. G.
 LIDDELL, D.D., and ROBERT SCOTT, D.D. Eighth Edition, Revised and Enlarged throughout. 4to, £1 16s.

A CONCORDANCE to the SEPTUAGINT and the other GREEK VERSIONS of the OLD TESTAMENT (including the Apocryphal Books). By the late EDWIN HATCH, M.A., and H. A. REDPATH, M.A. Six Parts. Imperial 4to, each 21s.

A LATIN DICTIONARY, founded on Andrews'
 Edition of Freund's Latin Dictionary, Revised, Enlarged, and in great part Rewritten by CHARLTON T. LEWIS, Ph.D., and CHARLES SHORT, LL.D. 4to, £1 5s.

A SANSKRIT-ENGLISH DICTIONARY, Ety- mologically and Philologically Arranged, with special reference to Greek, Latin, German, Anglo-Saxon, English, and other Cognate Indo-European Languages. By Sir M. MONIER-WILLIAMS, D.C.L. 4to, £4 14s. 6d.

THESAURUS SYRIACUS: collegerunt Quatremères, Bernstein, Lorschach, Arnoldi, Agrell, Field, Roediger. Editio R. PAYNE
 SMITH, S.T.P. Vol. I. containing Fasciculi I.-V. small folio, £5 5s.
 The First Five Fasciculi may also be had separately: Fasc. VI., $1 1s.; VII.,
 £1 11s. 6d.; VIII., £1 16s.; IX., £1 5s.; X., Part I., £1 16s. (just published).

COMPENDIOUS SYRIAC DICTIONARY.
 Founded upon the above, and Edited by J. PAYNE SMITH (Mrs. MARGOLIOUTH).
 Part I., 8s. 6d. net.

ENGLISH SWAHILI DICTIONARY. By A. C.
 MADAN, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

A HEBREW and ENGLISH LEXICON of the OLD TESTAMENT. With an Appendix containing the Biblical Aramaic, based on the Thesaurus and Lexicon of Gesenius. By FRANCIS BROWN, D.D., S. R.
 DRIVER, D.D., and C. A. BRIGGS, D.D. Parts I.-VI. Small 4to, 2s. 6d. each.

FULL CATALOGUES POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

London: HENRY FROWDE, Clarendon Press Warehouse, Amen Corner E.C.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published for the Proprietor by PETER GEORGE ANDREWS, 48, Chancery Lane, W.C.

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S NEW BOOKS.

THE EXPOSITOR'S GREEK TESTAMENT

Edited by the Rev. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A., LL.D., Editor of "The Expositor," "Expositor's Bible," &c.

The First Volume of 880 pages, handsomely bound in buckram cloth, consists of the Gospel of ST. MATTHEW, the Gospel of ST. MARK, the Gospel of ST. LUKE, by the Rev. Professor A. B. BRUCE, D.D.; and the Gospel of ST. JOHN, by the Rev. Professor MARCUS DODS, D.D.

The price of each volume will be 28s., but for those who SUBSCRIBE IN ADVANCE THE PRICE FOR TWO VOLUMES WILL BE 30s.

A full Prospectus, with specimen sheets, of this important work is now ready, and will be forwarded on application to the Publishers.

THE POTTER'S WHEEL.

By Rev. JOHN WATSON, D.D. (Ian Maclaren). Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth.

OUTLINES OF A PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION.

Based on Psychology and History.

By AUGUSTE SABATIER, Dean of the Faculty of Protestant Theology, Paris.

Authorised Translation by the Rev. T. A. SEED. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE PROVIDENTIAL ORDER OF THE WORLD.

By the Rev. Prof. A. B. BRUCE, D.D.
The Gifford Lectures for 1897.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE SILENCE OF GOD.

By ROBERT ANDERSON, O.B., LL.D., Assistant-Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.
Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s., cloth.

THE LIFE OF F. R. WYNNE, D.D.,

BISHOP OF KILLALOE, with a Collection of Sermons and Addresses.
With Portrait, crown 8vo, 5s., cloth.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND BEFORE THE REFORMATION.

By the Rev. DYSON HAGUE, M.A.
With Introductory Note by the Rev. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE, D.D.
Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d., cloth.

THE LAST THINGS.

A Study of the Coming of Christ, the Eternal Punishment of Sin, and the Eternal City of God.
By the Rev. J. A. B. BENT, D.D.
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON VERSES.

Collected from the British Weekly by W. ROBERTSON NICOLL.
Printed in red and black, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth elegant.

SIDELIGHTS FROM PATMOS.

By GEORGE MATHESON, M.A., D.D. Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

THE RITSCHLIAN THEOLOGY AND THE EVANGELICAL FAITH.

By the Rev. Professor JAMES OBB, M.A., D.D.
A new volume of "The Theological Educator."
Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth.

THE MUSIC FOR THE SOUL.

Daily Readings for a Year, from the Writings of the Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.
Selected and Arranged by the Rev. GEORGE COATES.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

A GUIDE TO BIBLICAL STUDY.

By Professor A. S. PEAKE, M.A.
With an Introduction by the Rev. Principal A. M. FAIRBAIRN, D.D.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth. THIRD THOUSAND.

TRUE AND FALSE AIMS, AND OTHER SERMONS.

By the late Rev. E. HERBER EVANS, D.D.
Edited by the Rev. W. JUSTIN EVANS.
Crown 8vo, 5s., cloth.

A DOCTOR OF THE OLD SCHOOL.

By IAN MACLAREN.
With numerous Illustrations by Frederick C. Gordon.
Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth.

THE IAN MACLAREN KALENDAR.

With Illustrations, and Illustrative Border.
Small folio, in neat box, 2s. 6d.

OTHER PEOPLE'S LIVES.

By ROSA NOUCHETTE CAREY.
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

From her Birth to her Flight into England.
Including Documents hitherto Unpublished.
By D. HAY FLEMING.
Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d., cloth.

THRO' LATTICE WINDOWS.

By W. J. DAWSON.
Crown 8vo, art linen, 6s.

TO THE ANGEL'S CHAIR.

A Story of Ideals in a Welsh Village.
By the Rev. JOHN THOMAS, M.A., Liverpool.
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

CHRONICLES OF THE PARISH OF TAXWOOD.

By J. R. MACDUFF, D.D.
With 8 Full-Page Illustrations by Alex. Gordon.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth.

LIFE'S LOOK-OUT.

The Autobiography of Sidney Watson, with Portrait.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

PERSONAL FRIENDSHIPS OF JESUS.

By the Rev. J. R. MILLER, D.D.
The New Volume of "The Silent Times" Series.
Fcap. 8vo, white and gold, 3s. 6d.

BESIDE THE STILL WATERS.

By Rev. J. R. MILLER, D.D.
A new Christmas booklet, beautifully illustrated. 1s.

THE MINISTRY OF THE HOLY GHOST.

By the Rev. JOHN MORGAN, Edinburgh.
Crown 8vo, 5s., cloth.

THE GOSPEL IN THE FIELDS.

By the Rev. R. C. FILLINGHAM, M.A.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth.

CHIRRUPEE.

By R. BOYD BAYLY, Author of "Jonathan Merle."
With numerous Illustrations by Ursula Wood. 1s.

IVY MEREDITH; or, a Season in the South.

A Story by CELIA ARMAGH.
Crown 8vo, 5s., cloth.

THE GENTLEMANLY GIANT.

And other Denizens of the Never Never Forest.
By BEATA FRANCIS, Author of "Slyboots."
With numerous Illustrations by Geoffrey Strahan.
Fcap. 4to, 3s. 6d., cloth.

IN STRANGE QUARTERS.

A Story of Constantinople.
By EDWIN HODDER, Author of "The Junior Clerk," &c.
With Eight Full-Page Illustrations by J. Finnemore.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE LOST GOLD OF THE MONTEZUMAS.

A Story of the ALAMO.
By WILLIAM O. STODDARD, Author of "The Old Frontier," &c.
With Illustrations. 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 5s.

DOROTHY DARLING.

A Book for Little Children.
By Mrs. GEORGE A. PAULL.
With many Illustrations. Fcap. 4to, 3s. 6d., cloth.

ON THE THRESHOLD OF CENTRAL AFRICA.

A Record of Twenty Years' Pioneering in the Upper Zambesi, among the Banyai and Barotsi.

By FRANCOIS COILLARD, Paris, Evangelical Mission.
Translated and Edited by C. W. MACKINTOSH, with Photogravure Portrait and 40 Illustrations from Photographs by the Author.
Imperial 8vo, 15s.

"Missionary enterprise can have few records so full of general interest as these written so simply yet so effectively by M. Coillard."—The Bookman.

ADDRESSES ON CHRISTIANITY.

Hitherto unpublished.
By the late HENRY DRUMMOND.
With Memorial Sketches by IAN MACLAREN and W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, LL.D.
Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s. [Ready Dec. 10th.]

THE MONKEY THAT WOULD NOT KILL.

Stories for Children.
By the late HENRY DRUMMOND.
With Illustrations by Louis Wain.
Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth. [Nearly ready.]

THE IAN MACLAREN YEAR-BOOK.

Daily Readings from the Works of Ian Maclaren.
Royal 32mo, cloth, in a neat small volume, 3s. 6d.

DAVID LYALL'S LOVE STORY.

By the Author of "The Land of the Leal."
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth. [Nearly ready.]

THE DOCTOR'S DILEMMA.

By HESBA STRETTON.
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

BY FAR EUPHRATES.

A New Story by the Author of "The Spanish Brothers."
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

WILLIAM TAYLOR OF CALIFORNIA, BISHOP OF AFRICA.

Revised with a Preface. By the Rev. C. G. MOORE.
With Portrait, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE CLERICAL LIFE.

A Series of Letters to Ministers.
By JOHN WATSON, D.D., Professor MARCUS DODS, D.D., Professor JAMES DENNEY, D.D., Principal T. C. EDWARDS, D.D., W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, LL.D., T. G. SELBY, T. H. DARLOW, M.A., and J. T. STODDART.
Crown 8vo, 5s., cloth. [Nearly ready.]

FRIENDSHIP.

By the Rev. HUGH BLACK, M.A., Free St. George's, Edinburgh.
Cloth, 2s. 6d.

LITTLE BOOKS ON RELIGION.

Cloth elegant, 1s. 6d.

New Volumes of the Series.

1. THE RIGHTEOUS FATHER AND THE LIVING CHRIST.

By the Rev. P. T. FORSYTH, D.D., Cambridge.
[In the press.]

2. FROM STRENGTH TO STRENGTH.

By the Rev. J. H. JOWETT, M.A., Carr's Lane, Birmingham.
[Nearly ready.]

THE BOOK OF THE TWELVE PROPHETS.

By Prof. GEORGE ADAM SMITH, D.D., LL.D.
Volume II.
Being the Completion of the Work and of "The Expositor's Bible" Series.
Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d., cloth. [Preparing.]

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NEW COPYRIGHT NOVELS

3s. 6d. each.

Large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

THE WORLD'S COARSE THUMB.

By CAROLINE MASTERS. With Original Illustrations by Lancelot Speed.

"Will speedily establish itself a great favourite among the novel-reading public."—Chester Courant.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

THE STOLEN FIDDLE. By Walter H. MAYSON.

The action of this novel takes place mostly in the Lake District, and the incident turns upon a celebrated trial in connection with a stolen violin. The novel is from the pen of an author well known in musical circles, where it should find a ready acceptance.

Third Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

MR. SILAS K. HOOKING'S NEW NOVEL.

IN SPITE OF FATE. Illustrated by F. Reason.

"His stories have grit in them; there is something about them—a tenderness, a subtle pathos, a genuine human interest—that allures one on, and leaves one at last in a condition of mental satisfaction."—Daily Mail.

Edited by ANDREW LANG.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

HIS GRACE OF OSMONDE.

By FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT.

The DAILY MAIL, of November 23rd, says: "Gerald Mertoun, Duke of Osmonde, is a veritable King Arthur of the seventeenth century, brave, manly, high-souled, stately, and yet as joyous of nature as he is blameless in life; he is a winning, lovable, and princely figure, well drawn and well rounded."

The DAILY TELEGRAPH, of November 24th, says: "All the indefinable charm of Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's treatment of women and children appears again in this volume of hers. She fascinates us from the first pages."

Just Published. Medium 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, 6s.

THE NURSERY RHYME BOOK.

With upwards of 100 Pen-and-Ink Drawings by L. LESLIE BROOKE, and an Introduction by ANDREW LANG.

The WORLD says: "Mr. L. Leslie Brooke can draw for children as well as any one on this side of the Channel."

No more delightful present could be had for a child than this beautifully designed volume, which contains all the favourite Nursery Rhymes, printed upon art paper, in large type, and elegantly bound.

London: FREDERICK WARNE &amp; CO., Chandos House, 15, Bedford Street, Strand.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

Large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, 3s. 6d.

ICELANDIC FAIRY TALES.

By Mrs. M. HALL.

With 26 Original Illustrations from Drawings by E. A. Mason.

"A young reader could scarcely have a more promising introduction to the literature of the Sagas. Sigurd and Frithjof and Ingeborg are not, indeed, such imposing creatures as they are in the sterner tales; but they are always people whom every child ought to know, and the giants are giants of the proper sort."—Scotsman.

NEW ART GIFT BOOK.

FOR XMAS, 1897

In demy 4to, enamelled picture cover, cloth back, price 2s. 6d.

DEAR OLD NURSERY SONGS.

Beautifully Illustrated with 8 Full-Page Plates in 10. Colours, and 32 Pages Illustrated with Wash Drawings printed in Two different Tints from Original Designs by Constance Haalewood. This Volume is a completion of its companion Volume, "THE DEAR OLD NURSERY RHYMES," issued last year. The Two together, containing all the best known of the Nursery Rhymes.

Illustrated by L. LESLIE BROOKE.

WARD, LOCK & CO.'S CHRISTMAS LIST.

THREE SPLENDID 3s. 6d. NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt.

Illustrated by Harold Piffard, Sydney Cowell, Stanley L. Wood, and others.

SECOND EDITION.

The CRIME and the CRIMINAL. By Richard Marsh.

"We know of no similar tale so thoroughly readable and so consistently exciting since Wilkie Collins's Woman in White, or Conan Doyle's Study in Scarlet."—Black and White."A book to be enjoyed."—Glasgow Herald.

AT MIDNIGHT. By Ada Cambridge.

"The best elements of engaging fiction are exemplified."—Dundee Advertiser."Written with that compactness of plot, crispness of dialogue, and swiftness of action which make the successful story."—The Glasgow Herald.

BEACON FIRES. By Headon Hill.

"Told with singular skill. Interests and holds the reader to the end."—Pall Mall Gazette."Decidedly clever, and for a Christmas gift-book we do not know of a better."—British Weekly.

FIVE-SHILLING NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt.

Profusely illustrated by Stanley L. Wood.

The DORRINGTON DEED-BOX. By Arthur Morrison.

"Of breathless interest, and told with the dramatic power we should have expected from the author of 'Tales of Mean Streets.'"—Illustrated London News.

JUST PUBLISHED.

BUSHIGRAMS. By Guy Boothby.

"Intensely interesting. Forces from us by its powerful artistic realism those choky sensations which it should be the aim of the humane writer to elicit, whether in comedy or tragedy. The book will enhance Mr. Boothby's reputation and bring him into the very front rank of emotion writers, as well as confirm our opinion of him as a most powerful imaginative author. His humorous vein is fascinating and attractive. His pathos is true and often most touching."—Manchester Guardian.

GUY BOOTHBY'S VERY SUCCESSFUL NOVELS.

THE FASCINATION OF THE KING. Fourth Edition.

"A brilliant tale dramatically and vigorously told."—Daily News."Highly ingenious and exciting. A stirring romance."—We id."A most picturesque romance, noteworthy for its spirited style, chivalrous tone, powerful human interest, and freedom from commonplace in plot and characterisation."—Globe.

DOCTOR NIKOLA. Fourth Edition.

THE BEAUTIFUL WHITE DEVIL. Seventh Edition.

A BID FOR FORTUNE. Fourth Edition.

IN STRANGE COMPANY. Fifth Edition.

THE MARRIAGE OF ESTHER. Fourth Edition.

BEAUTIFUL GIFT BOOKS.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. each.

Profusely illustrated by Harold Copping and A. J. Johnson.

"Beautifully bound."—Scotsman."Make ideal Christmas presents."—British Weekly.

PRINCESS SARAH. By John Strange Winter.

"So brightly and fluently written is it, and so refreshing an admixture of humour and pathos does it present, that one may safely predict for it a numerous circle of enthusiastic readers."—Daily Telegraph."Charmingly written. It is to be hoped that Santa Claus will have the good sense to make a big purchase of this fascinating book."—Dundee Advertiser.

AUSTRALIAN FAIRY TALES. By Atha Westbury.

"Very pretty. Beyond the reach of carping criticism."—Pall Mall Gazette.

MISS BOBBIE. By Ethel Turner.

"Simply delightful.... In its humour and its penetrating insight it is quite a masterpiece, comparable only with Miss Alcott's 'Little Men.'"—Daily Mail."In every way a delightful book. It is one of those simple histories of every-day life that children of all ages like to read, full of a fast and furious fun."—British Weekly.

ETHEL TURNER'S WORKS.

Uniform with the above.

THE LITTLE LARK. 8s. 6d.

SEVEN LITTLE AUSTRALIANS. 8s. 6d.

THE FAMILY AT MISRULE. 8s. 6d.

THE MOST EXQUISITE GIFT-BOOK OF THE SEASON.

POEMS of the LOVE and PRIDE of ENGLAND.

Edited by F. and M. Wedmore.

Crown 8vo, art canvas, gilt, gilt top, 5s. With special Title-page designed by A. A. Turbayne. A rich collection of patriotic verse, worthy to grace any bookshelf.

Crown 8vo, art buckram, gilt, gilt top, 5s.

AT RANDOM. By L. F. Austin.

"A series of fantasies which it would be difficult to overpraise for their grace, their beauty, and their lightness. There is in them, too, a certain seriousness and depth which add to the attraction. Nothing of the kind so good has recently been published, and they will interest many by the sheer swiftness and strength of their style who may not see all that has gone to the making of them. The publishers have achieved a triumph. The form of the book is most inviting and dainty, and the contents are more than worthy of the form."—Dr. Bonarson Nicoll in the British Weekly.

IMPORTANT WORK ON THE VIOLIN. SECOND EDITION.

Dedicated by Special Permission to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh.

VIOLIN-MAKING. By Edward Heron-Allen.

With Photographs, Folding Supplements, 200 Engravings. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

A historical, theoretical and practical treatise on the art, for the use of all violin makers and players, amateur and professional. Preceded by an essay on the violin and its position as a musical instrument.

"A book which all who love to hear or play the instrument will receive with acclamation."—The Yorkshire Post.

WARD, LOCK &amp; CO., LIMITED, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

M R. M U R R A Y ' S L I S T.

NEW BOOKS.

SECOND EDITION OF TWO SUCCESSFUL BOOKS.

NOW READY.

"RODDY OWEN."

(Late Brevet-Major Lancashire Fusiliers, D.S.O.) By his Sister, Mrs. A. G. BOVILL, and G. R. ASKWITH, M.A., F.R.G.S.

With Portraits and Maps, crown 8vo, 12s.

"He died as he would have wished, at the front, mourned by all who knew him, leaving a bright example of a life unspoil by success, and an earnestness of purpose rarely surpassed."—Times.

UNDER the RED CRESCENT:

Adventures and Experiences of an English Surgeon in the Service of the Turkish Government during the Sieges of Plevna and Erzeroum, 1877-78. Related by CHARLES S. RYAN, M.B., C.M. Edin., in association with his friend, JOHN SANDES, B.A. Oxon.

With Portraits and Maps, crown 8vo, 9s.

"Vivid descriptions of the heavy fighting by which a second and a third time the Russian attacks were shattered before the extemporised fortresses, glimpses of the underground life led by the defenders, and bright little character-sketches combine to make up an admirable study of war . . . a distinctly remarkable book."—Times.

With Portraits and Maps, 8vo, 16s.—Just out.

THE LIFE of JOHN NICHOLSON, Soldier and

Administrator. Based on Private and hitherto Unpublished Documents. By Captain L. J. TROTTER.

With Portrait, crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.—Just out.

TWELVE INDIAN STATESMEN: Charles

GRANT, Sir HENRY LAWRENCE, JOHN (Lord) LAWRENCE, Sir JAMES OUTRAM, Sir DONALD McLEOD, Sir HENRY MARION DURAND, Lieut.-General COLIN MACKENZIE, Sir HERBERT EDWARDS, JOHN CLARK MARSHMAN, Sir HENRY MAINE, Sir HENRY RAMSAY, Sir CHARLES U. AITCHISON. By Dr. GEORGE SMITH, C.I.E.

"Few will arise from the perusal of these pages without a conviction that the strong fibre of Puritan England and Presbyterian Scotland and Ireland played a larger part than is usually supposed in the achievements of our countrymen in the East."—Times."It ought to be placed in the hands of every one who is looking forward to a career in the East."—Leeds Mercury.

With Portrait, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.—Just out.

THE LIFE and LETTERS of the REV. JOHN

BACCHUS DYKES, M.A., Mus. Doc., late Vicar of St. Oswald's, Durham. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH T. FOWLER, Vice-Principal of Hatfield Hall, Durham, &amp;c.

A man of saintly character and deep devotional feeling, he was able to give such hymns as "Lead, kindly Light," "I heard the Voice of Jesus say," "Eternal Father, strong to save," "Now the labourer's task is o'er," that living voice of music which intensifies their fullest meaning.

With Portrait and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 18s.—Just out.

THE LIFE of WILLIAM PENGELLY, of

TORQUAY, F.R.S., GEOLOGIST. With Selections from his Correspondence. By his Daughter, HESTER PENGELLY. And a Summary of his Scientific Works, by Prof. BONNEY, F.R.S.

"Though we have read many records of Pengelly's work, we have never seen anything so clear and concise, and yet comprehensive. . . . The life is one to be treasured by all interested in the progress of geology."—Western Morning News."A biographical sketch which will be read with interest and pleasure not only by those who enjoyed his personal acquaintance, but also by students of geology and anthropology in general."—Times.

With Portrait and Illustrations, demy 8vo, 18s.—Just out.

THE LIFE of the REV. SOLOMON CÆSAR

MALAN, D.D., Scholar, Linguist, Artist, Divine, formerly Vicar of Broadwindsor, Dorsetshire. With Extracts from his Correspondence. By his Son, the Rev. A. N. MALAN.

"A highly interesting biography."—Glasgow Herald."A pleasant unconventional biography has just appeared of Cæsar Malan."—Leeds Mercury."This memoir should have many readers."—Yorkshire Post.

Crown 8vo, 5s.—Just out.

THE CHILDHOOD and YOUTH of OUR LORD:

based on the Gospel Narrative, and the Manners and Customs of the Jews of Palestine. By the Rev. J. BROUGH, M.A., Chaplain to the Forces.

"This work shows careful study and an intimate knowledge of the Bible and Biblical expositions. We can strongly recommend it, and honestly thank the author for his book."—Manchester Guardian.

BOOKS FOR PRIZES.

* * These volumes may be had "in sheets" for binding as desired.

Two Shillings and Sixpence each.

THE ONLY COMPLETE AND AUTHORISED EDITION OF THE ## WORKS of GEORGE BORROW.

1. THE BIBLE in SPAIN—2. THE ZINCALI—3. LAVENGRO—4. THE ROMANY RYE—5. WILD WALES.

Three Shillings and Sixpence each.

A NEW AND COMPLETE EDITION OF

DR. SMILES' SELF-HELP SERIES.

SELF-HELP—THRIFT—INDUSTRIAL BIOGRAPHY—LIFE of THOMAS EDWARD—LIFE and LABOUR—LIFE of WEDGWOOD—CHARACTER—DUTY—MEN of INVENTION and INDUSTRY—LIFE of JAMES NASMYTH—BOY'S VOYAGE ROUND the WORLD—LIFE of JASMIN.

DARWIN'S VOYAGE of a NATURALIST ROUND the WORLD.

THE STORY of the BATTLE of WATERLOO. By Rev. G. R. GLEIG.

DEEDS of NAVAL DARING; or, Anecdotes of the British Navy. By EDWARD GIFFARD.

Five Shillings.

SIR W. NAPIER'S ENGLISH BATTLES and SIEGES in the PENINSULAR WAR. Portrait.

Seven Shillings and Sixpence.

RECORDS of a NATURALIST on the AMAZON during ELEVEN YEARS' ADVENTURE and TRAVEL. By H. W. BATES. Illustrations.

LETTERS from HIGH LATITUDES: a Yacht Voyage to Iceland, Jan Mayen, and Spitzbergen. By Lord DUFFERIN. Woodcuts.

NARRATIVE of the DISCOVERY of the FATE of SIR JOHN FRANKLIN and HIS COMPANIONS in the ARCTIC SEAS. By Admiral Sir J. MCCLINTOCK. Illustrations.

MISS BIRD'S TRAVELS.

SIX MONTHS in the SANDWICH ISLANDS, among the PALM GROVES, CORAL REEFS, and VOLCANOES. Illustrations.

A LADY'S LIFE in the ROCKY MOUNTAINS. Illustrations.

UNBEATEN TRACKS in JAPAN. Travels in the Interior of Japan. Illustrations.

Twelve Shillings.

LIVES of the EARLY ITALIAN PAINTERS, and the PROGRESS of PAINTING in ITALY. By Mrs. JAMESON. With 50 Portraits.

WILD SPORTS and NATURAL HISTORY of the HIGHLANDS of SCOTLAND. By CHARLES ST. JOHN. New and beautifully Illustrated Edition, with Notes, a Memoir, and Portrait of the Author. Edited by the Rev. M. W. WATKINS.

One Guinea and upwards.

A NATURALIST'S VOYAGE ROUND the WORLD in H.M.S. "BEAGLE." By CHARLES DARWIN, F.R.S. With Views of the Places and Animals described, by R. T. PRITCHETT. With Maps and 100 Illustrations. 21s.

THE HEART of a CONTINENT. Travels in Manchuria, Turkestan, the Pamirs. With Maps, Illustrations, &amp;c. By Captain FRANK YOUNGHUSBAND. Third Edition. 8vo, 21s.

AN ILLUSTRATED BOOK on the AFGHAN FRONTIER TRIBES.

LIGHTS and SHADES of INDIAN HILL-LIFE in the AFGHAN and HINDU HIGHLANDS: a Contrast. By F. ST. J. GORE, B.A., Magdalen College, Oxford. With 73 Full-Page Illustrations from Photographs taken by the Author, Illustrations in the Text, and Maps. Medium 8vo, 31s. 6d.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

L. REEVE & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

COMPLETION OF THE FLORA OF BRITISH INDIA.

NOW READY, Double Part 23 and 24, 18s. net; also Vol. VII., 38s. net.

FLORA of BRITISH INDIA. By Sir J. D. HOOKER, C.B., G.C.S.I., F.R.S., &c., assisted by various Botanists. Complete in 7 vols., £12 net.

* Persons having incomplete Sets are advised to complete their Copies without delay, as the Parts will be kept on Sale for a limited time only. No Part or Vol. will be sold without its continuation to the end of the work.

FLORA CAPENSIS: a Systematic Description of the Plants of the Cape Colony, Caffraria, and Port Natal. Vols. I.-III., by W. H. HARVEY and O. W. SONDER, 18s. each net. The Continuation by various Botanists edited by W. T. THISELTON-DYER, F.R.S. Vol. VI., 24s. net. Vol. VII. Part I., 7s. 6d. net. Published under the authority of the Governments of the Cape and Natal.

FLORA of TROPICAL AFRICA. By D. OLIVER, F.R.S. Vols. I. to III., 20s. each net. The Continuation by various Botanists edited by W. T. THISELTON-DYER, F.R.S. Vol. VII. Part I., 8s. net. Published under the authority of the First Commissioner of Her Majesty's Works.

In Monthly Parts, royal 4to, with 4 Plates, 5s. plain; 7s. coloured, net.

The POTAMOGETONS (Pond Weeds) of the BRITISH ISLES. By ALFRED FRYER. Illustrated by Robert Morgan, F.L.S.

VOL. LIII., 42s. net.

The BOTANICAL MAGAZINE: Figures and Descriptions of New and Rare Plants. By Sir J. D. HOOKER, F.R.S., &c. Third Series. Vols. I. to LII., each 42s. Published Monthly, with 6 Plates, 3s. 6d. coloured. Annual subscription, 42s.

A Complete Set from the commencement, 123 vols., £125.

HANDBOOK of the BRITISH FLORA. By G. BENTHAM, F.R.S. Sixth Edition. Revised by Sir J. D. HOOKER, C.B., K.C.S.I., F.R.S. 10s. 6d.

ILLUSTRATIONS of the BRITISH FLORA. Drawn by W. H. FITCH, F.L.S., and W. G. SMITH, F.L.S. 1,315 Wood Engravings. Fourth Edition. 10s. 6d.

BRITISH GRASSES. By M. PLUES. Sixteen Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 10s. 6d.

BRITISH FERNS. By M. PLUES. Sixteen Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 10s. 6d.

BRITISH SEAWEEDS. By S. O. GRAY. Sixteen Coloured Plates. 10s. 6d.

SYNOPSIS of BRITISH MOSSES. By C. P. HOBKIRK, F.L.S. Revised Edition. 7s. 6d.

HANDBOOK of BRITISH MOSSES. By the Rev. M. J. BERKELEY, M.A., F.L.S. Second Edition. Twenty-four Coloured Plates. 21s.

BRITISH FUNGOLGY. By the Rev. M. J. BERKELEY, M.A., F.L.S. With a Supplement of nearly 400 pages by WORTHINGTON G. SMITH, F.L.S. 2 vols. Twenty-four Coloured Plates. 36s. Supplement only, 12s.

BRITISH FUNGI, PHYCOMYCETES and USTILAGINEÆ. By GEORGE MASSEE. Eight Plates. 7s. 6d.

BRITISH WILD FLOWERS, familiarly described in the Four Seasons. By THOMAS MOORE, F.L.S. Twenty-four Coloured Plates. 16s.

The NARCISSUS: its History and Culture. By F. W. BURBIDGE, F.L.S., with a Scientific Review of the entire Genus, by J. G. BAKER, F.R.S., F.L.S. With 48 beautifully Coloured Plates. Super royal 8vo, 32s.

The BRITISH FERNS. Coloured Figures and Descriptions, with Analysis of the Fructification and Venation of the Ferns of Great Britain and Ireland. By Sir W. J. HOOKER, F.R.S. Royal 8vo, 66 Coloured Plates, £1 2s.

GARDEN FERNS. Coloured Figures and Descriptions, with Analysis of the Fructification and Venation of a Selection of Exotic Ferns, adapted for Cultivation in the Garden, Hothouse, and Conservatory. By Sir W. J. HOOKER, F.R.S. Royal 8vo, 64 Coloured Plates, £2 2s.

PHYCOLOGIA BRITANNICA; or, History of British Seaweeds. By Dr. W. H. HARVEY, F.R.S. New Edition. Royal 8vo, 4 vols., 360 Coloured Plates, £7 10s.

PHYCOLOGIA AUSTRALICA: a History of Australian Seaweeds. By Dr. W. H. HARVEY, F.R.S. Royal 8vo, 5 vols., 300 Coloured Plates, £7 10s.

The RHODODENDRONS of SIKKIM HIMALAYA. Being an Account, Botanical and Geographical, of the Rhododendrons recently discovered in the Mountains of Eastern Himalaya by Sir J. D. Hooker, F.R.S. By Sir W. J. HOOKER, F.R.S. Folio, 20 Coloured Plates, £4 14s. 6d.

FOR ALL LOVERS OF CAGE BIRDS.

FOREIGN FINCHES in CAPTIVITY. By ARTHUR G. BUTLER, Ph.D., F.L.S., F.Z.S., F.E.S. With 60 Plates, beautifully Coloured by Hand. Royal 4to, cloth, £6 6s.; half-morocco, £7 net.

"Dr. Butler treats his subject more exhaustively than Herr Wiener; he has adopted a more scientific classification, and his book is infinitely better illustrated. Indeed, the hand-coloured plates in Dr. Butler's book are in themselves fully worth the price which is charged for the whole book."—Feathered World.

In Monthly Parts, demy 4to, with 4 Coloured Plates, 7s. 6d. net.

TERACOLUS: a Monograph of the Genus. By E. M. BOWDLER SHARPE. Illustrated by Miss M. Horman-Fisher.

Part XLVI., with 4 Coloured Plates, 5s. (completing Volume IV.).

The LEPIDOPTERA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By CHARLES G. BARRETT, F.E.S. Vols. I. to IV., each 12s.; Large Edition, Vol. I., with 40 Coloured Plates, 53s.; Vol. II., with 48 Coloured Plates; Vol. III., with 50 Coloured Plates; Vol. IV., with 48 Coloured Plates, each 63s. net.

The LARVÆ of the BRITISH LEPIDOPTERA, and their FOOD PLANTS. By OWEN S. WILSON. With Life-sized Figures, Drawn and Coloured from Nature by Eleanor Wilson. 40 Coloured Plates, 63s. net.

Part XXIX., with 8 Coloured Plates, 15s.

LEPIDOPTERA INDICA. By F. MOORE, F.Z.S., F.E.S. Vol. I., with 94 Coloured Plates; Vol. II., with 96 Coloured Plates, each £9 5s., cloth; £9 15s., half-morocco.

The LEPIDOPTERA of CEYLON. By F. MOORE, F.L.S. 3 vols., medium 4to, 215 Coloured Plates, cloth, gilt tops, £21 12s. Published under the auspices of the Government of Ceylon.

The HYMENOPTERA ACULEATA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By EDWARD SAUNDERS, F.L.S. Complete, with 3 Plates, 16s.; Large-Paper Edition, with 49 Coloured Plates, 68s. net.

The HEMIPTERA HETEROPTERA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By EDWARD SAUNDERS, F.L.S. Complete, with a Structural Plate, 14s.; Large Edition, with 81 Coloured Plates, 49s. net.

The HEMIPTERA HOMOPTERA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By JAMES EDWARDS, F.E.S. Complete, with 2 Structural Plates, 12s.; Large Edition, with 28 Coloured Plates, 43s. net.

The COLEOPTERA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By the Rev. Canon FOWLER, M.A., F.L.S. Complete in 6 vols., with 2 Structural Plates, £4; Large Edition, with 180 Coloured Plates, £14 net.

The BUTTERFLIES of EUROPE. Described and Figured by H. C. LANG, M.D., F.L.S. With 82 Coloured Plates, containing upwards of 900 Figures. 2 vols. £3 18s.

BRITISH INSECTS. By E. F. STAVELEY. 16 Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 14s.

BRITISH BUTTERFLIES and MOTHS. By H. T. STAINTON. 16 Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 10s. 6d.

BRITISH BEETLES. By E. C. RYE. New Edition, Revised by the Rev. Canon FOWLER, M.A., F.L.S. 16 Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 10s. 6d.

BRITISH BEES. By W. E. SHUCKARD. 16 Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 10s. 6d.

BRITISH SPIDERS. By E. F. STAVELEY. 16 Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 10s. 6d.

BRITISH ZOOPHYTES. By A. S. PENNINGTON, F.L.S. 24 Plates. 10s. 6d.

CURTIS'S BRITISH ENTOMOLOGY. Illustrations and Descriptions of the Genera of Insects found in Great Britain and Ireland. 8 vols., royal 8vo, 770 Coloured Plates, £28.

The PHYSIOLOGY of the INVERTEBRATA. By A. B. GRIFFITHS, Ph.D., F.R.S. (Edin.), F.C.S. Demy 8vo, with 81 Illustrations, 15s. net.

RESPIRATORY PROTEIDS, Researches in Biological Chemistry. By A. B. GRIFFITHS, Ph.D., F.R.S.E. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

METEORS, AEROLITES, and FALLING STARS. By Dr. T. L. PHIPSON, F.C.S. Crown 8vo, 25 Woodcuts and Lithographic Frontispiece, 6s.

L. REEVE & CO., Publishers to the Home, Colonial, and Indian Governments,
6, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

DAVID NUTT, 270-271, Strand.

JUST OUT.

ENGLISH and RUSSIAN MILITARY VOCABULARY. Compiled by Lieut. A. MEARS, Indian Staff Corps (Interpreter in Russian). Crown 8vo, 128 pp., cloth, net 3s. 6d.

SELECTIONS from SIR THOMAS MALORY'S MORTE D'ARTHUR. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Glossary by W. E. MEAD, Ph.D., Professor of the English Language in Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., U.S.A., lii+346 pp., cloth, net 4s. 6d.

*.* Intended for School and College use. The Text, comprising Books I., II., XIII., XVII., XVIII., XXI., occupies pp. 1-240; the Notes, which fully elucidate the language and subject-matter of Malory, pp. 240-323; the double-columned Glossary, pp. 324-345.

THE CONSTITUTION and ADMINISTRATION of the UNITED STATES of AMERICA. By BENJAMIN HARRISON, Ex-President. Crown 8vo, 360 pp., cloth, 3s. 6d., or paper wrappers, 2s. 6d.

*.* A popular and at the same time thoroughly accurate account of the governmental machinery of the United States. In an Appendix is printed The Constitution of the United States.

POETRY PUBLISHED BY D. NUTT.

LONDON VOLUNTARIES, and Other Poems. By WILLIAM ERNEST HENLEY. Second Edition. 5s. net.

LYRA HEROICA. An Anthology, from Shakespeare to Kipling. Edited by WILLIAM ERNEST HENLEY. Library Edition, 3s. 6d. School Edition, 2s.

THE CHILD of the BONDWOMAN, and Other Poems. By JEAN CARLYLE GRAHAM. Net 1s.

MUSA CONSOLATRIX. By Charles SAYLE. 3s. 6d.

A TRILOGY of the LIFE to COME, and Other Poems. By ROBERT BROWN, Jun. 2s. 6d.

TELLIS and CLEOBEIA, and Other Poems. By ROBERT BROWN, Jun. 2s. 6d.

ANTHERO DE QUENTAL. Sixty-four SONNETS. Translated from the Portuguese by EDGAR PRESTAGE. Net 5s.

IDYLS and LYRICS of the NILE. By Canon H. D. RAWNSLEY. 3s. 6d.

SHANFARA'S LAMIYYAT UL' ARAB. Translated into English Verse for the first time. By GEORGE HUGHES. Net 3s. 6d.

RECENT HISTORICAL AND PHILOLOGICAL PUBLICATIONS.

GOSSIP from a MUNIMENT ROOM. Being Passages in the Lives of Anne and Mary Fytton, 1574 to 1618. Transcribed and Edited by Lady NEWDIGATE-NEWDEGATE. Small 4to, xii+158 pp., printed on antique paper, with deckle edges. With 3 Photogravures from the Gallery at Arbury, representing Anne and Mary Fytton as Girls, Mary Fytton as Maid of Honour, and Anne Fytton (Newdegate) in Widow's weeds. Bound in gilt buckram, stamped with the arms and devices of the Fytton and Newdegate families. 7s. 6d. net.

BOETHIUS' CONSOLATION of PHILOSOPHY. Translated from the Latin by GEORGE COLVILLE (1856). Edited, with an Introduction, by ERNEST BELFORT BAX. Royal 8vo, net 8s.

*.* Forms Vol. V. of the sumptuous Tudor Library, printed at the Chiswick Press on the finest laid paper. The volumes already issued in this series are:—(I.) More's Giovanni Pico della Mirandola, 10s. 6d.; (II.) Day's Daphnia and Chloe, 10s. 6d.; (III.) The Strife of Love in a Dream, being the first book of the Hyperborean, 41 1s.; (IV.) Narcissus, a Twile Night Merriment, 7s. 6d.

The Tudor Library is designed to reprint rare and valuable works of the sixteenth century in a form to satisfy the most exacting book-lover. The edition is limited, some of the volumes are nearly out of print, and two volumes will not be reprinted.

THE LEGEND of SIR GAWAIN. Studies upon its original Scope and Significance. By JESSIE L. WESTON, translator of Wolfram von Eschenbach's Parzival. Net 4s. (Grimm Library, Vol. VII.)

THE VOYAGE of BRAN, Son of Febal, TO THE LAND OF THE LIVING. An old Irish Saga. Edited and Translated by KUNO MEYER. With Essays upon the Irish Vision of the Happy Otherworld and the Celtic Doctrine of Rebirth, by ALFRED NUTT. Two vols., net £1 1s. (Grimm Library, Vol. IV. and VI.)

*.* The Grimm Library is designed to include works relating to Folklore and the history of Romantic Legend. Besides the two works cited above, the following have also appeared:—

GEORGIAN FOLK TALES, translated by MARGERY WARDROP. Net 5s.

THE LEGEND of PERSEUS: A Study of Tradition—Story, Custom, and Myth. By E. S. HARTLAND.

Vol. I. THE SUPERNATURAL BIRTH. Net 7s. 6d.

Vol. II. THE LIFE TOKEN. Net 13s. 6d.

Vol. III. ANDROMEDA and MEDUSA. Net 2s. 6d.

STUDIES of BIBLICAL SUBJECTS. By the Rev. A. SMYTHE PALMER, D.D., Author of "English Folk Etymology," &c. No. 1: BABYLONIAN INFLUENCE ON THE BIBLE AND POPULAR BELIEFS: THOM and Tiāmat, Hades and Satan. A Comparative Study of Genesis i. 2. Crown 8vo, 111 pp., with Illustrations. Cloth uncut, 3s. 6d.

*.* A careful study of the conceptions connected in the Mythology of Babylonia and in the Hebrew record with Chaos, and the Abyss personified as a dragon and as the embodiment of the lawless and evil element in the universe.

LIFE in EARLY BRITAIN. Being an Account of the Early Inhabitants of this Island and the Memorials which they have left behind them. By BERTRAM C. A. WINDLE, M.D., Dean of the Medical Faculty, Mason College, Birmingham. Crown 8vo, 250 pp., 67 Illustrations, Plans, and Map. Cloth, uncut, 3s. 6d.

*.* In spite of its issue at a very unfavourable moment, a few days before the Jubilee, over 2,200 copies have been sold, emphatic testimony to the interest and merit of this admirable little work. A few Press Notices follow:—Standard: "Valuable and suggestive." Antiquary: "Thoroughly useful." Bookman: "Serviceable and attractive." Daily Chronicle: "Shows large knowledge and wide reading." Speaker: "An admirable introduction to prehistoric archaeology." Scotsman: "Admirably clear and comprehensive view of the past." Literary World: "Contains the gist of all that is known and reasonably conjectured about the inhabitants of this island previous to the Norman Conquest." Saturday Review: "We commend this book sincerely to every one who takes an interest in the past." Times: "An excellent hand-book of the results of modern ethnological research."

THE CELTIC CHURCH of WALES. By W. J. WILLIS BUND. Demy 8vo, viii+533 pp. Cloth, 12s. 6d. net.

Some Press Notices:—Athenaeum: "Brimful of interesting points." Guardian: "Certain to be welcomed by all who are interested in the early history of the Welsh Church." Record: "An attempt to show the nature of the Celtic Church found here by Augustine, and of the conflict which went on between the two forms of Christianity." Literary World: "Brings out with admirable clearness the many points of contrast between the Celtic and Roman Churches." Freeman: "Shows considerable research, and is marked by a candour that in these days of strong religious bias calls for praise."

AUCASSIN and NICOLETE, done into English by A. LANG. 1s.

BOURDILLON (F. W.) Tote l'estoire de FRANCE. Being an edition of an hitherto inedited MS. (in Poitevin dialect) of the thirteenth century Saintonge chronicle, with a full collation of the vulgate text, introduction, notes, and appendix, dealing with the linguistic, historic, and legendary questions raised by the text. With a prefatory introduction by M. GASTON PARIS. Small 4to. Net 10s. 6d.

CHILDREN'S BOOKS.

FAIRY TALES from the FAR NORTH.

By P. C. ASBJÖRNSSEN. Translated by H. L. BRAEKSTAD. With 94 Illustrations by E. Werenakjöld and T. Kittelsen. The only English Edition Authorised by Asbjörnsen's representatives. A beautifully printed volume of upwards of 330 pages, on paper of the finest quality, in specially designed cloth cover, small 4to ("Wonder Voyages" size). 6s.

*.* Mainly from the second series of Asbjörnsen's "Eventyr," comparatively little known in this country. The illustrations have excited keen admiration throughout Scandinavia for their vigorous, racy, and genuinely national character, and will be appreciated by artists as well as by children. The humour and spirit which make Asbjörnsen's one of the best collections of popular tales ever issued are too well known to require recommendation.

A NEW BOOK BY JUDGE PARRY AND ARCHIE MACGREGOR.

THE FIRST BOOK of KRAB. Christmas Stories for Young and Old. By His Honour Judge EDWARD ABBOTT PARRY. With Illustrations by Archie Macgregor. A beautiful volume in square crown 8vo. Printed at the Ballantyne Press, on special paper. Bound in specially designed cloth cover, 3s. 6d.

*.* Judge Parry's new work will be welcomed as heartily as "Katawampus" (3s. 6d.), and "Butterscotia" (6s.).

"His Honour's success has been enhanced by the fact that he has known how to make even the domestic black-beetle interesting."—Athenaeum.

"Judge Parry knows to perfection what will give the little ones pleasure."—Literary World.

"Most delightful stories."—Educational Review.

"Children who have read 'Katawampus' and 'Butterscotia' will look eagerly for Judge Parry's new Christmas story-book."—Manchester Guardian.

"A terrible blank world would have been felt this Christmas if 'Krab' had not put in his appearance."—Manchester Courier.

"The reader will find here the same display of pleasant wit and cheery humour, the same queer delightful fancy, the same wholesome robustness of expression and aim that were revealed in the two companion animals."—Manchester City News.

THE GIANT CRAB, and Other TALES from OLD INDIA. Retold by W. H. D. ROUSE. With many Full-page Plates, Vignettes, Tailpieces, and Illustrations in the Text by W. ROBINSON. A beautiful volume in square crown 8vo. Printed at the Ballantyne Press, on special paper. Bound in specially designed cloth cover, 3s. 6d.

SOME PRESS NOTICES.

"This most delightful book, which old and young will alike enjoy. The stories are excellent—simple as really old stories always are, but all the better for that, humorous and full of lessons in kindness."—Athenaeum.

"These stories have been grounded upon the oldest story-book in the world, viz., the 'Jataka,' or Birth-Stories of Buddha, but altered wherever this would better fit them for the object in view—to amuse children. Every child, we think, would be charmed to have these stories with their quaint illustrations."—Educational Review.

"Quite the best book of children's tales that we have recently seen published, and we may recommend it not only for young folks as a Christmas gift, but for those who care to make themselves acquainted with the spirit of the legends contained in the 'Jatakas.'"—Weekly Sun.

"Brightly written and highly amusing."—European Mail.

THE HISTORY of REYNARD the FOX.

With some Account of his Friends and Enemies. Turned into English Verse by S. F. ELLIS. With Illustrative Devices by WALTER CRANE. Square crown 8vo. Printed at the Chiswick Press, on handmade paper. Cloth, 6s.

A CHRISTMAS GIFT FOR EVERY BRITISH SUBJECT.

THE IMPERIAL SOUVENIR. A Verse

of God Save the Queen, in Fifty Languages Spoken Throughout the Empire. With Portrait-Autograph of the Queen. Designs by Sir W. B. RICHMOND, K.C.B., R.A., and Accompanying Music Page. An attractive Album, in boards, 1s. All the Translations are Metrical and Phonetic, so that everyone can, thanks to the Souvenir, sing "God Save the Queen" in every language from China to British Columbia, from Labrador to New Zealand. Edition de Luxe, in cloth, 2s. 6d.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS' LIST.

NOW READY AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

BEATRICE HARRADEN'S UNTOLD TALES OF THE PAST.

A CHRISTMAS BOOK FOR CHILDREN.

With 40 Drawings. Square 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

WITH the CONQUERING TURK:

Confessions of a Bashibazouk. By G. W. STEEVENS. Author of "The Land of the Dollar," &c. With 4 Maps. Small demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"Mr. Steevens's descriptions are vivid and graphic in the highest degree."—Black and White.

"A remarkably bright and vivid book."

St. James's Gazette.

"The pen pictures here given are unique in the war correspondence of the campaign."—Sheffield Telegraph.

"The most entertaining of the volumes we have had about the Ten Weeks' Campaign in the spring."—Times.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS' AND LIBRARIES.

DARIEL:

A ROMANCE OF SURREY.

MR. R. D. BLACKMORE'S

NEW NOVEL.

Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

THE HISTORY OF THE FOREIGN POLICY OF GREAT
BRITAIN. By MONTAGU BURROWS, Chichele Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford; Captain R.N.; F.S.A., &c.; "Officier de l'Instruction Publique," France; Author of "Commentaries on the History of England," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Professor Burrows has given us a very excellent and readable account of the steady growth of England as a Continental Power. The whole of his book is interesting and excellently well written."—Spectator.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

PEACE WITH HONOUR. By Sydney

C. GRIER, Author of "An Uncrowned King," "His Excellency's English Governess," "In Furthest Ind," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The setting of the story is excellent. For the originality of its plot and for the freshness and wholesomeness of its characters, 'Peace with Honour' is well worth reading."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Is distinctly bright and amusing."—Scotsman.

"An excellent novel."—Athenæum.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 986.—DECEMBER, 1897.—2s. 6d.

JOHN SPLENDID: THE TALE OF A POOR GENTLEMAN, AND THE LITTLE WARS OF LOREN, by Neil Munro. Chaps. v.-viii. —THE ENTRY AND TRAINING OF NAVAL OFFICERS.—ADVENTURES OF THE COMTE DE LA MUEITE DURING THE REIGN OF TERROR: THE FOOTPAD; DES PIERRETTES, by Bernard Capes.—KER OF KERBLAND, CAMERONIAN, JACOBITE, AND SPY, by Andrew Lang.—MARUSKA: AN INCIDENT IN MODERN LIFE.—DR. PUSEY AND THE OXFORD MOVEMENT.—THE EGLINTON TOURNAMENT.—THE STORY OF ST. PAUL'S.—THE FUTURE OF OUR N.W. FRONTIER.—SIR RUTHERFORD ALCOCK AND THE FAR EAST.—"THE BRIDE OF LAMMERMOOR": SIR HENRY CRAIK, K.C.B., AND PROFESSOR SAINTS-BURY.—"MAGA" AND HER PUBLISHERS.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO'S. LIST.

With 3 Portraits, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 24s.

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF CARDINAL WISEMAN.

By WILFRID WARD,

Author of "William George Ward and the Oxford Movement," "William George Ward and the Catholic Revival," &c.

[On December 7.]

SERVIA: the Poor Man's Paradise. By Herbert Vivian, M.A.

With Portrait of the King and a Map. 8vo, 15s.

"We do not seem to suspect that within little more than two days' rail from our capital there lies an undeveloped country of extraordinary fertility and potential wealth, possessing a history more wonderful than any fairy tale, and a race of heroes and patriots who may one day set Europe by the ears."—Extract from Preface.

A CHILD'S HISTORY OF IRELAND. From the Earliest Times

to the Death of O'Connell. By P. W. JOYCE, LL.D., Author of "A Short History of Ireland," "Irish Names of Places," &c. With specially constructed Map and 160 Illustrations, including Facsimile in Full Colours of an Illuminated Page of the Gospel Book of MacDurnan, A.D. 850. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

[On December 7.]

The ORIGIN and GROWTH of PLATO'S LOGIC. With an

Account of Plato's Style, and of the Chronology of his Writings. By WINCENTY LUTOS-LAWSKI. 8vo, 21s.

ROCK-CLIMBING in the ENGLISH LAKE DISTRICT. By

OWEN GLYNNE JONES, B.Sc. Lond., Member of the Alpine Club. With 30 Full-Page Illustrations in Collotype and 9 Lithograph Plate Diagrams of the Chief Routes. 8vo, 15s. net.

A TSAR'S GRATITUDE: a Story of Modern Russia. By Fred J.

WHISHAW, Author of 'A Boyer of the Terrible,' &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A story which leads the reader through the terrors of prison life in Russia, and introduces him to the dread circle of Nihilists. The interest is absorbing and sustained, and the evolution of happier times for the misrepresented hero is skilfully and naturally worked out."—Sheffield Independent.

POEMS of a COUNTRY GENTLEMAN. By Sir George Douglas,

Bart., Author of "The Fireside Tragedy." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

[On December 7.]

STANDARD BOOKS FOR THE LIBRARY.

By WILLIAM E. H. LECKY.

HISTORY of ENGLAND in the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.

LIBRARY EDITION. 8 vols, 8vo, £7 4s.
CABINET EDITION. 12 vols, crown 8vo, 6s. each.
(History, 7 vols.; Ireland, 5 vols.)

HISTORY of EUROPEAN

MORALS, from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 16s.

HISTORY of the RISE and IN-FLUENCE of the SPIRIT of RATIONALISM in EUROPE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 16s.

DEMOCRACY and LIBERTY.

2 vols, 8vo, 36s.

POEMS. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

By SAMUEL RAWSON GARDINER.

HISTORY of ENGLAND, from the Accession of James I. to the outbreak of the Civil War, 1603–1642. 10 vols., crown 8vo, 6s. each.

HISTORY of the GREAT CIVIL WAR, 1642–1649. 4 vols, crown 8vo, 6s. each.

HISTORY of the COMMON-

WEALTH and PROTECTORATE, 1649–1660. Vol. I. 1649–1651, with 14 Maps, 8vo, 21s. Vol. II. 1651–1654, with 7 Maps, 8vo, 21s.

The STUDENT'S HISTORY of ENGLAND. With 378 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 12s.

By HENRY THOMAS BUCKLE.

HISTORY of CIVILISATION in ENGLAND and FRANCE, SPAIN and SCOTLAND, 3 vols, crown 8vo, 24s.

By Sir T. ERSKINE MAY.

The CONSTITUTIONAL HIS-

TORY of ENGLAND since the Accession of George III., 1760–1870. 3 vols, 8vo, 18s.

By Sir JOHN EVANS, K.C.B.

The ANCIENT STONE IMPLEMENTS, WEAPONS, and ORNAMENTS of GREAT BRITAIN. Second Edition, Revised. With 537 Illustrations. 8vo, 28s.

By PETER M. ROGET.

THESAURUS of ENGLISH

WORDS and PHRASES, Classified and Arranged so as to Facilitate the Expression of Ideas and Assist in Literary Composition. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

By MANDELL CREIGHTON, D.D.,

Lord Bishop of London.

A HISTORY of the PAPACY, from the GREAT SCHISM to the SACK of ROME, 1378–1527. 6 vols., crown 8vo, 6s. each.

By JOSEPH GWILT.

An ENCYCLOPÆDIA of ARCHI-

TECTURE. Illustrated with more than 1,100 Engravings on Wood. Revised (1888), with Alterations and Considerable Additions, by WYATT PAPWORTH. 8vo, £2 12s. 6d.

By the Right Hon.

ARTHUR J. BALFOUR, M.P.

The FOUNDATIONS of BELIEF.

Being Notes Introductory to the Study of Theology. 8vo, 12s. 6d.

By JOHN STUART MILL.

A SYSTEM of LOGIC. Crown

8vo, 3s. 6d.

POLITICAL ECONOMY.

POPULAR EDITION. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

LIBRARY EDITION. 2 vols., 8vo, 30s.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO., London, New York, and Bombay.

MR. AUSTIN DOBSON'S WORKS.

COLLECTED POEMS. Crown 8vo, with Portrait, 6s.

"No gift more charming than these 'Collected Poems' can be very readily conceived."
Globe.

THE STORY of ROSINA, and other Poems. With 49 Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Large Paper Edition, printed on hand-made paper, with the Illustrations on Japan paper, including a small Portrait of the Author by William Strang, and a design for the Dedication not included in the ordinary Edition, 21s. net.

THE BALLAD of BEAU BROCADE, and other Poems of the Eighteenth Century, with 60 Illustrations, by HUGH THOMSON. Eleventh Thousand. Uniform with "The Story of Rosina." Crown 8vo, 6s.

PROVERBS in PORCELAIN. With 25 Illustrations by BERNARD PARTRIDGE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Large Paper Edition, uniform with "The Story of Rosina." Only a few left at 21s. net.

OLD WORLD IDYLLS, and other Verses. With Frontispiece. Eleventh Edition. Elzevir 8vo, 6s.

A new Revised and Enlarged Edition of WILLIAM HOGARTH. With Bibliography, Portrait of Hogarth, and numerous Illustrations from his Works. Royal 8vo, 12s.

RECENT FICTION.

DOWN by the SUWANEE RIVER. By AUBREY HOPWOOD. Crown 8vo, 6s.
A Tale of adventure and romance among the orange plantations of Florida.
"The story is strong and picturesque, full of shrewd observation, not without humour, and not without pathos." *Daily Graphic.*MARCUS WARWICK—ATHEIST. By ALICE M. DALE. Crown 8vo, 6s.
A novel dealing with the Criminal Law of England.

A STORY OF THE BRONTE COUNTRY.

A MAN of the MOORS. By HALLIWELL SUTCLIFFE, Author of "The Eleventh Commandment." Crown 8vo, 6s.

A GREAT CANADIAN HISTORICAL NOVEL.

THE FORGE in the FOREST. By Professor CHARLES G. D. ROBERTS. Crown 8vo, 6s. With Seven Full-Page Illustrations by Henry Sandham, R.C.A.

"The book may be recommended to all readers as a good exciting story written with a very scholarly pen, and especially those readers who love a study of fresh woods and pastures new, from the hand of one intimate alike by collection of traditions and by personal familiarity with their scenes. It was Professor Roberts who wrote the celebrated poem for 'Dominion Day.'—DOUGLAS SLADEN in the Literary World.

AN ANTHOLOGY OF ROMANCE.

THE GARDEN of ROMANCE: being a Collection of the Best Short Stories of all Ages and Countries. Edited by ERNEST RHYS. With a Cover Design by Laurence Housman. Fcap. 4to, cloth gilt, 6s.

"No one can read these masterpieces without feeling glad to have them in good print and pretty binding. They can interest the general reader, improve the taste of the young, and refresh the memory of the older generation."—Athenaeum.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ASTECK'S MADONNA."

THE WAY of the WIND. By CHARLES KENNETT BURROW. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"Infinitely pathetic. The finale is original and unexpected."—Pall Mall Gazette.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SPELL OF URSULA."

THE FAULT of ONE. By EFFIE ADELAIDE ROWLANDS. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The whole novel does the author credit."—Times."The whole book is well balanced and shows some insight into human nature." Standard.

STUDIES in PSYCHICAL RESEARCH. By FRANK PODMORE. Demy 8vo, with Plans and Illustrations, 12s.

"The book is a valuable one in many ways, and particularly for the reassurance it gives as to the methods of the Society of which Mr. Podmore is a member." Perthshire Adviser.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF HEGEL.

THE WISDOM and RELIGION of a GERMAN PHILOSOPHER: being Extracts from the Works of Hegel. Translated and arranged by ELIZABETH S. HALDANE. With a Portrait. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A WINDOW in LINCOLN'S INN, and WHAT was SEEN WITHIN and WITHOUT. By ADDISON M'LEOD. Fcap. 8vo, 6s.

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

THE ELEMENTS of HYPNOTISM. The Induction, the Phenomena, and the Physiology of Hypnosis. By RALPH H. VINCENT. With 17 Illustrations. Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged. Crown 8vo, 6s.

HAWTHORNE'S FIRST DIARY. With an Account of its Discovery and Loss. By SAMUEL T. PICKARD, Author of "The Life of John Greenleaf Whittier." 16mo, 3s. 6d. net.

LONDON:

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO., LTD.,
PATERNOSTER HOUSE, CHARING CROSS ROAD, W.C.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO.'S BOOKS

Suitable for Christmas Presents.

TENTH THOUSAND.

ALFRED LORD TENNYSON: a Memoir. By

HIS SON. With Photogravure Portraits of Lord Tennyson, Lady Tennyson, &amp;c.; Facsimiles of Portions of Poems; and Illustrations after Pictures by G. F. Watts, R.A., Samuel Laurence, Mrs. Allingham, Richard Doyle, Biscoombe Gardner, &amp;c. 2 vols., medium 8vo, 36s. net.

HUGH THOMSON'S NEW VOLUME.

MANSFIELD PARK. By Jane Austen. With

40 Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON and an Introduction by AUSTIN DOBSON. Crown 8vo, cloth, uncut edges, 3s. 6d. "Peacock" Edition, cloth elegant, 5s. [ILLUSTRATED STANDARD NOVELS.]

LITERATURE.—"The drawings are full of humour and form delightful studies in dress and furniture."

NEW BOOK BY RUDYARD KIPLING.

Fifteenth Thousand. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

"CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS." A Story of the Grand Banks. By RUDYARD KIPLING. Illustrated by I. W. TABER.

GRAPHIC.—"There should not be a more popular book for boys this season."
DAILY NEWS.—"As we follow the narrative we are in the very middle of the scenes he describes."

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS BY JOSEPH PENNELL AND HUGH THOMSON.

Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

HIGHWAYS and BYWAYS in DEVON and

CORNWALL. By ARTHUR H. NORWAY. With Illustrations by JOSEPH PENNELL and HUGH THOMSON.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"So delightful that we would gladly fill columns with extracts were space as elastic as imagination. The text is excellent; the illustrations of it are even better."

Fcap. 8vo, antique paper, cloth elegant, 7s. 6d.

AUCASSIN and NICOLETTE: an Old French

Love Story. Edited and Translated by FRANCIS WILLIAM BOURDILLON, M.A. Second Edition, the Text Collated afresh with the MS. at Paris, the Translation Revised, and the Introduction Re-written.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

FOR PRINCE and PEOPLE: a Tale of Old

Genoa. By E. K. SANDERS.

NEW NOVEL BY F. MARION CRAWFORD.

CORLEONE: a Tale of Sicily. In 2 vols., globe 8vo, 12s.

PUNCH.—"The reader's interest in the story, roused at the commencement, grows in intensity as the plot is artistically developed to its climax. Mr. Crawford's pictures of Italian scenery are perfect, and his characters belonging to the Roman Society with which he has familiarised us in so many of his books are living beings before our eyes."

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

ADAM JOHNSTONE'S SON. By F. Marion

CRAWFORD, Author of "Sant' Ilario," "Don Orsino," &amp;c.

SPEAKER.—"A book to be enjoyed by everybody."

MRS. MOLESWORTH'S NEW VOLUME.

MISS MOUSE and her BOYS. By Mrs. Moles-

WORTH. With Illustrations by LESLIE BROOKE. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 4s. 6d.

SPECTATOR.—"Our readers know how Mrs. Molesworth deals with a subject of this kind. It suits her powers exactly. No one can describe child-life better. A very pleasant little story."

SECOND EDITION.—Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

SKETCHES of RURAL LIFE, and Other Poems.

By FRANCIS LUCAS.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Mr. Lucas dedicates his book to 'all lovers of the rural life of Old England.' Certainly all lovers of that will thank him for his delightful sketches; and who, worthy of opening a book of verse, is not a lover of the rural life of Old England?"

ALICE'S ADVENTURES in WONDERLAND.

By LEWIS CARROLL. With 42 Illustrations by JOHN TENNIEL. Eighty-sixth Thousand. Extra crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THROUGH the LOOKING-GLASS, and WHAT

ALICE FOUND THERE. By LEWIS CARROLL. With 50 Illustrations by JOHN TENNIEL. Sixty-first Thousand. Extra crown 8vo, 6s. net.

* * These Editions of ALICE and LOOKING-GLASS are printed from entirely New Type, and New Electros from the Original Woodblocks.

Demy 4to, 8s. 6d. net.

SINGING VERSES for CHILDREN. Words by

LYDIA A. COONLEY. Pictures by ALICE K. TYLER. Music by ELEANOR SMITH, JESSIE L. GAYNOR, F. W. ROOT, F. H. ATKINSON, Jun.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., Ltd., London.

CHATTO &amp; WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

MORE TRAMPS ABROAD

By MARK TWAIN, Author of "A Tramp Abroad."
 "You may open the volume wherever you please, sure to find something to amuse you. This is the observant, humorous, witty, and wise record of a lecturing tramp round the world, starting from Paris for New York."—Daily News.

Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s.

THIS LITTLE WORLD.

By DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY,
 Author of "Joseph's Coat."

Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s.

BY THE RISE OF THE RIVER:

Tales and Sketches in South Tynesdale.

By AUSTIN CLARE,

Author of "For the Love of a Lass," &amp;c.

"Decidedly able descriptions of life as it used to be.... Mr. Austin Clare writes well, and with deep feeling for South Tynesdale and its people."—Glasgow Herald.

TALES from the VELD. By Ernest

GLANVILLE. With 12 Illustrations by M. Nisbet.
 Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"For humour and imagination the collection may hold its own with the best. The episode of 'Peaceful William,' the goat, is exquisitely funny; but in many of the stories pathos and humour struggle for mastery."—Manchester Guardian.

THE DRAM-SHOP (L'ASSOMMOIR).

By EMILE ZOLA. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"A realistic story which, for intensity of interest, has never been surpassed."—People.

THE WITCH-WIFE. By Sarah Tytler.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"The spell of witchcraft and the spell of love are blended cunningly together in this vigorous romance."—Leeds Mercury.

THE THREE DISGRACES, &amp;c. By

JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"In 'The Three Disgraces' Mr. McCarthy has performed the tour de force of striking a note of originality in connection with a Russian theme.... The primary idea—that of three beautiful women masquerading as questionable characters in order to shield a proscribed husband and father, is excellent."—Daily Mail.

THE EXPRESS MESSENGER, and other Tales of the Rail. By CY WARMAN. Crown

8vo, cloth, 5s. 6d.

"It is not at all necessary to be an engine-man in order to appreciate the singular fascination of these tales—some weird and horrible enough to challenge Poe, and some rude and strong and technical enough to rival Kipling."—Morning Leader.

HALL CAINE'S NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. each; post 8vo, boards,
 2s. each; cloth limp, 2s. 6d. each.

THE DEEMSTER: a Romance of the Isle of Man.

THE SHADOW of a CRIME.

A SON of HAGAR.

* Also LIBRARY EDITIONS of THE DEEMSTER and THE SHADOW of a CRIME, reset in new type, and bound uniform with "The Christiana," 6s. each.

THREE PARTNERS; or, the Big Strike

on Heavy Tree Hill. By BRET HARTE. With 8 Illustrations by J. Gulich. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY NOVELS.

A WOMAN INTERVENS. CYNTHIA. By LEONARD

REVENGE! By ROBERT BARR. MERRICK.

INTERFERENCE. By B. M. THE CITY OF REFUGE By

CROKER. HAWLEY SMART. WALTER BESANT.

A THIRD PERSON. By B. A RACING RUBBER. By

M. CROKER. HAWLEY SMART. THE CRUCIFORM MARK

THE QUEEN'S CUP. By By RICCARDO STEPHENS

G. A. HENTY. THE SUICIDE CLUB. By

PETER'S WIFE. By Mrs. R. L. STEVENSON.

HUNGERFORD. AN EASY GOING FELLOW

DE. RUMSEY'S PATIENT By C. J. WILLS.

By L. T. MEADE.

SHAKESPEARE the BOY. With

Sketches of the Home and School Life, the Games and Sports, the Manners, Customs, and Folklore of the Time. By Dr. WILLIAM J. ROLFE. With 43 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

WESTMINSTER. By Walter Besant.

(Uniform with the Cheap Edition of "LONDON.") With an Etching by F. S. Walker, R.P.E., and 120 Illustrations by W. Patten and others. Cheaper Edition. Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE LIFE of J. M. W. TURNER, R.A.

Founded on Letters and Papers furnished by his Friends and Fellow-Academicians. By WALTER THORNBURY. With 8 Illustrations in Colours and 3 Woodcuts. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

London: CHATTO &amp; WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

JOHN LANE'S LIST.

Ready Next Week. Mr. WILLIAM WATSON'S New Book.

THE HOPE OF THE WORLD, AND OTHER POEMS.

Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

POEMS (with which is incorporated Christ in Hades).

By STEPHEN PHILLIPS. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

[Ready Shortly.]

GIFT BOOKS.

READY NEXT WEEK.

ALL THE WAY TO FAIRY-
 LAND. By EVELYN SHARP. With 8 Coloured Illustrations and Cover by Mrs. Percy Dearmer. Uniform with "Wympe." Small 4to, 6s.

KING LONGBEARD: Fairy
 Tales. By BARRINGTON MACGREGOR. With over 100 Illustrations by Charles Robinson. Small 4to, 6s.

THE CHILD WHO WILL NEVER GROW OLD. By K. DOUGLAS KING,
 Author of "The Scripture Reader of St. Mark's." Crown 8vo, 5s.

NOW READY.

LONDON: as seen by C. D.
 GIBSON. Fifty-five Large Cartoons Uniform with "Drawings" and "Pictures of People," by the same Artist. Oblong folio, 12 in. by 18 in., 30s.

THE PEOPLE OF DICKENS.
 By C. D. GIBSON. Six Large Photogravures. Proof Impressions from Plates, in a Portfolio, 30s.

PICTURES OF PEOPLE. Eighty-five Large Cartoons by C. D. GIBSON. Oblong folio, 30s.

DRAWINGS. Eighty-five large Cartoons by C. D. GIBSON. Oblong folio, 30s.

IN VANITY FAIR. Seventy Large Cartoons by A. B. WEYZELL. Oblong folio, 30s.

LULLABY LAND: Poems for Children. By EUGENE FIELD. Edited with an Introduction by KENNETH GRAHAME. With 200 Illustrations by Charles Robinson. Uncut or gilt edges.
 Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE MAKING OF MATTHIAS.

By J. S. FLETCHER, Author of "Life in Arcadia," &c. With over 40 Illustrations and Decorations by Lucy Kemp-Welch. Crown 8vo, 5s.

BY WALTER CRANE.

CINDERELLA'S PICTURE-
 BOOK. Containing—1. CINDERELLA. 2. PUSS IN BOOTS. 3. VALENTINE and ORSON. Re-issue with New Cover Design, End Papers, and newly-written Preface. The Three bound in 1 vol. with a decorative cloth cover, 4s. 6d.; separately, 1s. each part.

THE CHILDREN. By ALICE MEY-
 NELL. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

THE COLOUR OF LIFE. By
 ALICE MEYNELL. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

THE RHYTHM OF LIFE. By
 ALICE MEYNELL. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

THE GOLDEN AGE. By KENNETH
 GRAHAME. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

A CHILD'S GARDEN OF VERSE. By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. With over 150 Illustrations by Charles Robinson. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

THE HAPPY EXILE. By H. D.
 LOWRY. With 6 Etchings by E. Philip Pimlott.
 Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE FLIGHT OF THE KING.

A Full, True, and Particular Account of the escape of his Most Sacred Majesty King Charles II. after the Battle of Worcester. By ALLAN FEA. With 16
 Portraits in Photogravure and nearly 100 other Illustrations. 21s. net.

THE COMPLEAT ANGLER. By
 IZAAK WALTON and CHAS. COTTON. Edited by RICHARD LE GALLIENNE. With nearly 250 Illustrations by EDMUND H. NEW. Fcap. 4to, buckram, 15s. net.

KEMBLE'S COONS: 30 Drawings of Coloured Children and Southern Scenes. By E. W. KEMBLE. Oblong 4to, 6s.

Illustrated Catalogues post free to any address on application.

THE BODLEY HEAD, Vigo Street, London, W.

NEW AND RECENT POETRY.

THE COMING OF LOVE, and
 Other Poems. By THEODORE WATTS-DUNTON
 Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

THE FAIRY CHANGELING,
 and Other Poems. By DORA SIGERSON (Mrs.
 Clement Shorter). Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

THE EARTH BREATH, and
 Other Poems. By A. E., Author of "Homeward:
 Songs by the Way." Square 32mo, 3s. 6d. net.

SELECTED POEMS of JAMES
 CLARENCE MANGAN. With a Biographical and Critical Preface by LOUISE IMOGEN GUINEY.
 Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

LYRICS. By JOHN B. TABB. Uniform with the Author's Poems. Square 32mo, 4s. 6d. net.

POEMS. By F. B. MONKY COUTTS.
 Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

SONGS FROM PRUDENTIUS.
 By ERNEST GILLIAT SMITH. Pott 4to, 5s. net.

POEMS. By Col. JOHN HAY (American Ambassador at the Court of St. James). Including "Pike County Ballads." Authorised Edition, with Photogravure Portraits after Hollyer. Crown 8vo,
 4s. 6d. net.

POEMS. By ALICE MEYNELL. Fcap.
 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

POEMS. By FRANCIS THOMPSON. Pott
 4to, 5s. net. [Fourth Edition.]

RECENT FICTION.

FANTASIAS. By GEORGE EGERTON.
 Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

WHEN ALL MEN STARVE:
 Showing how England hasarded her Naval Supremacy and the Horrors which followed the Interruption of her Food Supply. By CHARLES GLEIG. 3s. 6d.

DERELICTS. By W. J. LOCKE,
 Author of "At the Gate of Samaria." 6s.

THE TREE OF LIFE. By NETTA
 SYRETT, Author of "Nobody's Fault." 6s.

THE MAKING OF A PRIG.
 By EVELYN SHARP, Author of "Wympe" and "At the Belton Arms." 6s.

MAX. By JULIAN CROSKY. 6s.

MIDDLE GREYNES. By A. J.
 DAWSON, Author of "Mere Sentiment." 6s.

SYMPHONIES. By GEORGE EGER-
 TON. 6s.

THE QUEST OF THE GOL-DEN GIRL: a Romance. By RICHARD LE GAL-LIENNE. 6s. [Fifth Edition.]

PATIENCE SPARHAWK AND
 HER TIMES: a Novel. By GERTRUDE ATHER-
 TON. 6s. [Third Edition.]

KING NOANETT: a Story of Devon Settlers in Old Virginia and the Massachusetts Bay. By F. J. STIMSON. With 12 Full-Page Illustrations by Henry Sandham. 6s.

CECILIA. By STANLEY V. MAKOWER,
 Author of "The Mirror of Music." 5s.

A CHILD IN THE TEMPLE.
 By FRANK MATHEW, Author of "The Wood of the Brambles." 3s. 6d.

DEATH, THE KNIGHT, AND
 THE LADY: A Ghost Story. By H. DE VERE STAC-
 POOLE, Author of "Pierrot." 3s. 6d.

SOME OF
GARDNER, DARTON & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

A new edition ready in a few days. Large crown 8vo, printed on superfine paper, gilt top, 6s.

A companion volume to Mr. Crockett's ever popular "Sweetheart Travellers."

SIR TOADY LION and General NAPOLEON SMITH. An Improving History for Old Boys, Young Boys, Good Boys, Bad Boys, Big Boys, Little Boys, Cow Boys, and Tom Boys. By S. R. CROCKETT. With numerous Illustrations by Gordon Browne, R.I.

"When we say 'Sir Toady Lion' is one of the most delightful stories we have ever read, we are still short of the mark."—DAILY CHRONICLE.

"Distinctly the best book of the season."—DAILY MAIL.

"Cleverly and charmingly illustrated by Mr. Gordon Browne. One of the most popular gift-books of the year."—SCOTSMAN.

NICCOLINA NICCOLINI. By the Author of "Middle Mori," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

"Girls can read this volume with impunity and advantage. The author has a thorough knowledge of Italian character."—MORNING POST.

STORIES from the FAERIE QUEENE.

By MARY MACLEOD. With Introduction by Professor HALES. Illustrated by A. G. Walker, Sculptor. Large Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Without exception the most admirable book of the kind which we have seen this season. The tales themselves from Spenser's inimitable allegory are daintily and vividly told, and the glamour of the old romance rests on each picturesque passing page.....The book is beautifully produced, and ought to satisfy the most fastidious and exacting taste."—LEEDS MERCURY.

SONG FLOWERS: from "A Child's Garden of Verses" By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. Set to Music by KATHARINE M. RAMSAY. Introduction by S. R. CROCKETT. Illustrations by Gordon Browne, R.I. Demy 4to, fancy boards, printed on superfine paper, 7s. 6d.

"The settings have the same unconscious charm as the poems, together with such grace and distinction of style as prove the writer to be a musician of taste and high accomplishment. The illustrations are exceedingly pretty, and are an additional attraction to one of the prettiest gift-books of the year."—TIMES.

"A charming gift."—PUNCH.

Printed in Colours, 5s.

ZIGZAG FABLES. By J. A. SHEPHERD.

"Delightful and original. Nobody since the time of Caldecott has put more fun into pictures of animals than this genial draughtsman."—SCOTSMAN.

GARDNER, DARTON & CO., Paternoster Buildings, London.

THE FINEST LITERARY RENDEZVOUS IN THE WORLD.

39, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.

(One Minute from Trafalgar Square).

Messrs. H. S. NICHOLS, Ltd., have the honour to announce that their splendidly appointed LITERARY RENDEZVOUS (which is without doubt the finest and the most luxurious and delightful Literary Lounge ever planned) is now OPEN DAILY (admission free) from 10 a.m. to 7.30 p.m. (Saturdays included).

Now ready, 8vo, price 18s.

THE SECRET OF HEGEL.

Being the Hegelian System in Origin, Principle, Form, and Matter.

By JAS. HUTCHISON STIRLING, LL.D. Edin.

New Edition, Unabridged, but carefully Revised.

Edinburgh: OLIVER & BOYD; London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON & Co., Ltd.

BLACKIE & SON'S
NEW ILLUSTRATED STORY BOOKS.

BY G. A. HENTY.

WITH FREDERICK the GREAT: a Tale of the Seven Years' War. With 18 Page Illustrations by Wal Paget, and Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.

"A vivid, picturesque, and moving story."—Daily Telegraph.

WITH MOORE at CORUNNA. With 12 Page Illustrations by Wal Paget. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.

"This is a very spirited story, well worthy to be ranked with the best of Mr. Henty's work."—Spectator.

A MARCH on LONDON: being a Story of Wat Tyler's Insurrection. With 8 Page Illustrations by W. H. Margeson. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 5s.

"The exciting episodes of a picturesque period lose nothing in the narration, and are full of interest."—World.

BY A. J. CHURCH.

LORDS of the WORLD: a Tale of the Fall of Carthage and Corinth. With 12 Page Illustrations by Ralph Peacock. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.

"The volume is an ideal Christmas present for boys, and may teach a great deal in a very agreeable way to many of their elders."—Record.

BY HERBERT HAYENS.

PARIS AT BAY: a Story of the Siege and the Commune. With 8 Page Illustrations by Stanley L. Wood. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 5s.

"A capital story of the siege of the Commune."—Times.

"Will be much appreciated by boys. It is full of adventures."—Athenaeum.

BY GORDON STABLES.

THE NAVAL CADET: a Story of Adventure on Land and Sea. With 6 Page Illustrations by William Rainey, R.I. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

"A lively, spirited story of adventure upon land and sea."—World.

"One of those dashing stories of adventure in which this author delights."—Graphic.

BY EDGAR PICKERING.

A STOUT ENGLISH BOW-MAN: being a Story of Chivalry in the Days of Henry III. With 6 Page Illustrations by W. S. Stacey. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

"The story affords a good picture of the times, and is full of interest and adventure."—Standard.

"There is something unusually attractive about Mr. Edgar Pickering's style, and his story has only to be read to be thoroughly enjoyed."—World.

FINELY ILLUSTRATED CHILDREN'S BOOKS.

RED APPLE and SILVER BELLS: a Book of Verse for Children of All Ages. By HAMISH HENDRY. Every page is decorated with charming illustrations by Alice B. Woodward, amounting in all to over One Hundred and Fifty. Square 8vo, cloth elegant, gilt edges, 6s.

"A book of verse which will assuredly delight all youngsters, and the illustrations reflect the utmost credit on the taste and ingenuity of Miss Alice Woodward."—Daily Telegraph.

ADVENTURES in TOYLAND. By Edith King

HALL. With 8 Page Pictures printed in Colour, and 70 Black-and-White Illustrations throughout the Text, by Alice B. Woodward. Crown 4to, decorated cloth boards, gilt edges, 5s.

"One of the funniest as well as one of the daintiest books of the season."—Pail Mail Gazette.

JUST FORTY WINKS; or, The Droll Adventures

of Davie Trot. By HAMISH HENDRY. With 70 humorous illustrations by Gertrude M. Bradley. Square 8vo, cloth elegant, gilt edges, 5s.

"The illustrations are as delightful as the story itself."—Westminster Budget.

"Full of capital child's fun, and is delightfully illustrated by Miss Bradley."—Black and White.

BLACKIE'S HALF-CROWN SERIES.

NEW VOLUMES. Cloth elegant. Illustrated.

A Daughter of Erin. By VIOLET G. FINNY.

Nell's School Days. By H. F. GETHEN.

The Luck of the Eardleys. By SHEILA E. BRAINE.

Picked up at Sea. By J. C. HUTCHESON. New Edition.

The Search for the Talisman. By HENRY FRITH. New Edition.

Also NEW STORY BOOKS at 1s. 6d., 1s., 9d., and 6d.

BLACKIE & SON'S New Catalogue of Books suitable for Presentation, School Prizes, Rewards, &c., sent post free on application.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, OLD BAILEY.

BY ROBERT LEIGHTON.

THE GOLDEN GALLEON:

being a Narrative of the Adventures of Master Gilbert Oglander, and of how in the year 1891 he fought under the gallant Sir Richard Grenville in the great Sea Fight off Flores on board Her Majesty's Ship "The Revenge." With 8 Page Illustrations by William Rainey, R.I. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 5s.

"This well-constructed and lively historical romance."—Spectator.

"This attractive story."—Daily Telegraph.

BY KIRK MUNROE.

WITH CROCKETT and BOWIE: a Tale of Texas. With 8 Page Illustrations by Victor Perard. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 5s.

"This is in every sense one of the best books for boys that have been produced during the present publishing season."—Spectator.

"Mr. Munroe knows his ground well, and his book has a historical value, as well as a strong attraction as a story."—Pail Mail Gazette.

BY CHARLES W. WHISTLER.

KING OLAF'S KINSMAN: a

Story of the Last Saxon Struggle against the Danes in the Days of Ironside and Canute. With 6 Page Illustrations by W. H. Margeson. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 4s.

"A capital picture of those rude times, and teems with life and incident, to say nothing of the care for historical accuracy."—Graphic.

"A brightly written picture of the last Saxon struggle against the Danes."—Pail Mail Gazette.

THE UNIVERSITY PRESS, LTD.,
WATFORD, LONDON.

PSEUDO-PHILOSOPHY
AT THE END OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.
By HUGH MORTIMER CECIL.
10s. net.

A Vigorous Refutation of the well-known Pseudo-Philosophical Works: "Social Evolution" (Kidd), "The Ascent of Man" (Drummond), and "The Foundations of Belief" (Balfour).

THE DYNAMICS
OF RELIGION:
An Essay in English Culture History.
By M. W. WISEMAN.
7s. 6d. net.

This work is a concise History of the Religious Lie from Henry VIII. to our Times.

Part I. deals with the Reformation, Part II. with the Rise and Fall of the Deistic Movement, and Part III. with Modern Thought.

THE SAXON AND THE CELT
By JOHN M. ROBERTSON.
8s. net.

An original treatise by the eminent author on the question of race in Ireland, and on its relation to the present Irish troubles. The book contains chapters on Irish History, on the Scottish Celts, on the Duke of Argyll's, W. Goldwin Smith's, and Mr. Balfour's works, and in an epilogue "A Programme for Ireland."

MONTAIGNE AND SHAKSPEARE.
By JOHN M. ROBERTSON.
5s.

A highly important treatise by the eminent author of "Buckle and his Critics," showing the relation of Shakspeare to Montaigne.

THE BLIGHT OF RESPECTABILITY:
An Anatomy of the Disease, and a Theory of Curative Treatment.
By GEOFFREY MORTIMER.
2s. 6d. net.

STUDIES IN THE PSYCHOLOGY OF SEX.
By HAVELOCK ELLIS.
Vol. I.: SEXUAL INVERSION.
10s. net.

The most important work on Sexual Inversion published hitherto in England.

THE UNIVERSITY MAGAZINE
AND FREE REVIEW.
Edited by DEMOCRITUS.
THE MAGAZINE OF THE RATIONALISTS.
Monthly, 1s. net.

Allows a free discussion of all Tabooed Subjects, Religious, Social, and Political.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & CO.

MESSRS. BLISS, SANDS & CO.

AN IMPORTANT MILITARY WORK.
LETTERS on APPLIED TACTICS.
By Major GRIEFENKERL, Battalion-Commander in the Regiment "Von Voigts-Rhetz" (3rd Hanoverian), No. 79. Translated by a Retired Officer. Square demy 8vo, 8s. net.

The book contains twenty-four Tactical exercises dealing with the operations of a small detached force of the three arms; with numerous examples of actual orders worked out by the Author. With five large Maps in pocket at end of book, and four Coloured Maps inserted in the volume.

The work is based on the operations around Metz in 1870. It has already reached a Fourth Edition in Germany; has been translated into French, and has also, by command of the Japanese War Office, been translated into Japanese. [Now ready.]

AN ART BOOK.
GREEK ART on GREEK SOIL. By JAMES M. HOPPIN, Professor of the History of Art in the Yale University. With 13 Illustrations. Cloth extra, gilt top, demy 8vo. Price 7s. 6d.

A COLLECTION OF LYRICAL POEMS.
PAN.

By ROSE HAIG THOMAS.
A book of verses beautifully bound in white vellum, printed on hand-made antique paper. Price 6s. [Ready immediately.]

POPULAR SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.
THE ADVENTURES of JOHN JOHNS. A Realistic Novel. By FREDERIC CARREL, Author of "The City." Price 6s.

"His conquests are related with most uncompromising realism of detail."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"The volume which lies before us is one of the most daring, and at the same time one of the most interesting stories we have read for some months. The book is a direct libel on womanhood. . . . We should like to hear more of John Johns."—Manchester Courier.

GEORGE MALCOLM. A Novel. By GABRIEL SETOUN, Author of "Robert Urquhart," "Barnoraig," &c. [Now ready.]

"Mr. Setoun has seized upon a device that has in it both boldness and novelty, and has set before us a tragic drama. Mr. Setoun's book is a success; shows a great advance, and should strengthen the author's hold on his public."—Scotsman.

CHLOE. A Novel. By Darley Dale. Author of "The Village Blacksmith," &c. Price 6s. [Now ready.]

"'Chloe,' the latest literary effort of Darley Dale, is a charming creation. There is not a single unreal character in the book; they palpitate with life and feeling. The situations are frequently most amusing, whilst the dialogues are very smart and satirical."—Dundee Advertiser.

A WEEK of PASSION. A Novel. By EDWARD JENKINS, Author of "Ginx's Baby." Price 6s. [Now ready.]

"The book is a capital detective romance. The fine melodramatic plot will keep the reader's attention firmly fixed, and when he has reached the close he will find time to reflect upon the neat character-drawing, and the fact that the story is well written in addition to being well told."—Literature.

IN YEARS of TRANSITION. A Novel. By SAMUEL GORDON, Author of "A Handful of Exotics." 6s. [Now ready.]

"The descriptions of low life in Paris are strong without being coarse; and the writing is excellent."—Academy.

LADS' LOVE. An Idyll of the Land of Heather. A Novel. By S. R. CROCKETT, Author of "Bog-Myrtle and Peat," &c. 6s.

"In some of the rustic scenes, and notably in the opening chapters, we see Mr. Crockett at his very best. Mr. Crockett has seldom done anything more admirable."—Times.

LONDON:
BLISS, SANDS & CO., 12, BURLING STREET, STRAND, W.C.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S
NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

NEW NOVELS.

THE KING WITH TWO FACES.

By M. E. COLERIDGE, Author of "The Seven Sleepers of Ephesus." Cloth, 6s.

Spectator.—"A brilliant novel. We despair of giving to those who have not read this beautiful romance an adequate impression of the delicacy and variety of its portraiture, the freshness, the subtlety, and distinction of its dialogue and the poignant interest excited in the fortunes of the leading dramatic persons. In the whole range of contemporary fiction we know of no more picturesque royal figure than that of Gustavus as he is limned by Miss Coleridge. Above all the book has, to a quite exceptional degree, the quality of glamour."

BY THE AUTHOR OF "STEPHEN REMARK."

PAUL MERCER. By the Rev. the HON. JAMES ADDERLEY. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

Church Times.—"Exhibits all the artless sincerity, the humour, the hopeful idealism, which gave to 'Stephen Remark' its interest and charm."

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MISTHER O'BRYAN."

THE SON OF A PEASANT. By

EDWARD McNULTY. Cloth, 6s.
Standard.—"An excellent Irish story."

BY THE AUTHOR OF "NO PLACE FOR REPENTANCE."

JOB HILDRED By ELLEN F. PINSENT. Cloth, 3s. 6d.
Birmingham Post.—"Will greatly increase the author's reputation."

FIFTH THOUSAND.
THE NEW NONSENSE BOOK BY H. B. AND B. T. B.
MORE BEASTS (For Worse Children). By the Authors of "The Bad Child's Book of Beasts." Quarto, 3s. 6d.
Daily Mail.—"It has created a furore."

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.
RECOLLECTIONS OF AUBREY DE VERE.

1 vol., with Portrait, demy 8vo, 16s.
Truth.—"The most genial, charming, and amusing volume of reminiscences of the year."

A MEMOIR OF ANNE J. CLOUGH,
Principal of Newnham College, Cambridge. By her Niece, BLANCHE CLOUGH. With 2 Portraits, 8vo, 12s. 6d.
Glasgow Herald.—"A fitting memorial of much valuable work."

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY AND LETTERS OF THE RIGHT HON. JOHN ARTHUR ROBBUOK, Q.C., M.P. Edited by ROBERT EADON LEADER. With 2 Portraits, demy 8vo, 16s.
Leeds Mercury.—"A lifelike picture of an impetuous, ebullient, outspoken, but stubbornly honest man."

BENIN, THE CITY OF BLOOD:
An Account of the Benin Expedition. By R. H. BACON, D.S.O., Commander R.N. Illustrated by W. H. Overend. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Daily Mail.—"As fascinating as it evidently is complete and accurate."

STYLE. By Walter Raleigh, Professor of English Literature at University College, Liverpool, Author of "The English Novel," "Robert Louis Stevenson," &c. Crown 8vo, 5s.
Pall Mall Gazette.—"A model treatise on a most difficult and important theme."

Speaker.—"In our judgment Mr. Raleigh's volume on 'Style' is an amazingly good and pre-eminently interesting and suggestive book."

THE CHIPPENDALE PERIOD in ENGLISH FURNITURE By K. WARREN CLOUSTON. With 300 Illustrations by the Author. Demy 4to, handsomely bound, 21s. net. (In conjunction with Messrs. Debenham & Freebody.)

Standard.—"Mr. Clouston has produced a book which will be of real value not only to the serious student of the history of furniture, but to every reader who wishes to be well informed upon a topic at once so pleasant and so popular."

BY THE AUTHOR OF "WILD SPAIN."
WILD NORWAY. With Chapters on the Swedish Highlands, Spitzbergen, and Denmark. By ABEL CHAPMAN, Author of "Wild Spain," &c. Fully illustrated by the Author and Charles Whympster. Demy 8vo, 16s.

MAJOR MACDONALD'S BOOK.
SOLDIERING AND SURVEYING IN BRITISH EAST AFRICA. By MAJOR MACDONALD, R.E. Illustrated from Photographs and Sketches by the Author, and by numerous Maps. Demy 8vo, 16s.

EDWARD ARNOLD, London and New York.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO.'S LIST.

THE LAUGHTER OF PETERKIN.

Tales of the Celtic Wonder World. By FIONA MACLEOD. Illustrated by SUNDERLAND ROLLINSON. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Of all the story-books to delight and instruct young readers, there is none to surpass 'The Laughter of Peterkin.'"—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Miss Macleod's latest and most excellent piece of work."—Spectator.

THE KING'S STORY-BOOK.

Historical Stories Collected in Illustration of the Reigns of the English Monarchs. Illustrated by HARRISON MILLER. Over 500 pp., crown 8vo, 6s.

"One of those delightful volumes which furnish us with bird's-eye views of English History, stirring tales of famous battles and fights for freedom."—The Morning Leader.

LONDON RIVERSIDE CHURCHES.

By A. E. DANIELL. Profusely Illustrated by ALEX ANSTED. Imp. 16mo, 6s.

"A book which will appeal successfully to a large public."—The Globe.

"A book of unusual interest.....an ideal guide-book."—Westminster Budget.

A HOUSEFUL OF REBELS. A

Fairy Tale. By WALTER C. RHOADES. Illustrated by PATTEN WILSON. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

THE PUPILS OF PETER THE

GREAT. By R. NISBET BAIN. With Portraits. Demy 8vo, 16s. net.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF THE

LAFAYETTES. By EDITH SICHEL. Demy 8vo, 16s. net.

"She has treated a mass of material with rare judgment."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE SELECTED POEMS OF

GEORGE MEREDITH. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A volume which abounds in imaginative vision as well as intellectual strength."—Standard.

THE WAVERLEY NOVELS.

Constable's Reprint of the Author's Favourite Edition. With all the Original Plates and Vignettes (Re-engraved). In forty-eight vols., fcap. 8vo, cloth, paper label, 2s. 12s. net the set; cloth gilt, gilt top, 2s. 16s. net the set; and half-leather gilt, 4s. net the set. On light but opaque paper.

CONSTABLE'S EDITION OF

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON.

Edited by AUGUSTINE BIRRELL. Six vols., fcap. 8vo, cloth, paper label, or gilt extra, 2s. net per volume. Also half-morocco, 3s. net per volume. Sold in sets only.

THIRD EDITION NOW READY OF

SISTER JANE. By "Uncle Remus."

6s.

"Of all Mr. Harris's recent stories 'Sister Jane' is the best."—Academy.

"A charming book. A most engaging book."—Daily Chronicle.

RICHARD BAIRD SMITH. The

Leader of the Delhi Heroes in 1857. By Colonel H. M. VIBART, R.E. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

"A very valuable book."—Times.

OUR TROUBLES IN POONAH AND

THE DECCAN. By ARTHUR TRAVERS CRAWFORD, C.M.G., late Commissioner of Poona. Fully Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 14s.

FARTHEST NORTH. By Fridtjof

NANSEN. Two Vols. Large Demy 8vo, 2s. 2s. net.

"A masterpiece of story-telling."—Times.

"A book for everybody who loves a story of romance and adventure."—Westminster Gazette.

"The genius of Defoe could scarcely contrive a more absorbing story than we have in the second volume of the book."—Spectator.

Dr. Nansen's Great Book contains over 100 Full-Page Illustrations, a large number of Text Illustrations, sixteen Coloured Plates, four Large Maps, two Photogravure Plates, and an Etched Portrait.

2, WHITEHALL GARDENS, WESTMINSTER.

HENRY SOTHERAN & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. MILLAIS'S NEW WORK.

BRITISH DEER and THEIR HORNS. By JOHN GUILLE MILLAIS, F.Z.S.

With 185 Text and Full-page Illustrations, mostly by the Author; also 10 Electrogravures and a Coloured Frontispiece by the Author and Sidney Steel, and a Series of Unpublished Drawings by Sir Edwin Landseer, which were formerly on the walls of Ardevrikie. One volume, imperial 4to, printed by Messrs. R. & E. Clark, on Art Paper, bound in buckram, top edges gilt, 24 4s. net.

A BREATH from the VELDT. By the Same. With numerous Illustrations by the Author, and Frontispiece by the late Sir J. E. Millais, Bart., P.R.A. One volume, imperial 4to, printed on Art Paper, with Illustrations by the Swatney process, &c., or engraved on wood by G. E. Lodge; with a Frontispiece by Sir John Millais (one of his last drawings); and in all containing 13 Full-page Electro-Engravings, 13 Full-page Illustrations, and 125 Illustrations in the Text. Bound in buckram, top edges gilt, price 24 4s. net.

GAME BIRDS and SHOOTING SKETCHES. By the Same. Illustrating the Habits, Modes of Capture, Stages of Plumage and the Hybrids and Varieties which occur among them. New and Cheaper Edition, in one volume, 8vo, printed on Art Paper, bound in buckram. With 87 Illustrations by the Author, and a Frontispiece by Sir John Millais. Price 18s. net.

Dr. COPINGER'S NEW WORK.

THE BIBLE and its TRANSMISSION: An Historical and Bibliographical View

of the Hebrew and Greek Texts, and of the Greek, Latin, and other versions of the Bible (both Manuscript and Printed) prior to the Reformation. With 28 Illustrations. By Walter Arthur Copinger, LL.D., F.R.S., Barrister-at-Law, Professor of Law in the Victoria University; sometime President of the Bibliographical Society; Author of "Incunabula Biblica," "Supplement to Hain's Repertorium Bibliographicum," &c. One large and thick volume, folio, beautifully printed on fine toned paper at the Oxford University Press, from Bishop Fell's celebrated fount of large Antique Type, and illustrated with 28 fine Colotype Facsimiles from the most important MS. Codices and Primary Printed Editions. The whole Edition limited to 250 copies, of which only 150 copies can be offered for sale. Price, handsomely bound in half white vellum extra, uncut, top edges gilt, 25 4s. net.

SUPPLEMENT to HAIN'S REPERTORIUM BIBLIOGRAPHICUM.

In Two Parts. The first (already issued) containing nearly 7,000 corrections of, and additions to, the Collections of Works described or mentioned by Hain. The second, a list, with numerous Citations and Bibliographical Particulars, of nearly 6,000 volumes printed in the Fifteenth Century, not referred to by Hain. To be completed in three volumes, demy 8vo, strongly bound in red buckram, uncut, limited to 500 copies, price 24 14s. 6d. net.

On the completion of the work, the price of the remaining copies will be raised.

The publishers much regret the quite unexpected delay in the completion of the work, but they feel sure that if subscribers only realise its cause in the enlargement and improvement of the work at no cost to themselves, they will gladly excuse it. The labour of reading the proofs (in which Drs. Jenkinson and Burger have taken part throughout) has been immense, while the additions from numerous sources have been very large. The last sheets of Volume II. are now in the press, and the publishers hope to issue it before the close of the present year.

INCUNABULA BIBLICA: A Set of the 54 large Plates in Photo-lithography, illustrating the important work by Dr. Copinger. In portfolio, price 25 2s. net.

The above work is well known to have become prematurely out of print, owing to the destruction by fire of a large number of copies of the text. The corresponding plates were, however, spared, from their being in another warehouse, and the author thinks that for purposes of reference they may be found of use.

Dr. SHARPE'S GREAT WORK.

UNIFORM WITH MR. GOULD'S WORKS IN FOLIO.

MONOGRAPH of the PARADISEIDÆ; or, Birds of Paradise, and Ptilono-

rhynchids or Bower Birds. By R. BOWDLER SHARPE, LL.D., F.L.S., &c., of the Ornithological Department, British Museum. The Work will be published in Eight Parts, each containing 10 magnificent Hand-coloured Illustrations; forming Two Volumes, imperial folio, uniform with Mr. Gould's Works, price 25 3s. each Part, to Subscribers only; the whole edition being limited to 350 copies.

MONOGRAPH of the HIRUNDINIDÆ or FAMILY of SWALLOWS.

By Dr. BOWDLER SHARPE and CLAUDE W. WYATT. Illustrated with 103 Hand-coloured Plates and 26 Coloured Maps, showing distribution. Two vols., 4to, half morocco gilt, top edges gilt, 21s.

IN FORWARD PREPARATION.

MONOGRAPH of the FAMILY of THRUSHES. By the late HENRY

SEEBOHM. Edited and completed by Dr. BOWDLER SHARPE. Illustrated with 141 Plates drawn by J. G. Keulemans and Coloured by Hand; also fine Photogravure Portrait.

Messrs. H. Sotheran & Co. have great pleasure in announcing the immediate publication of the above very important work, on which Mr. Seebohm was at work up to the time of his death. To ensure its satisfactory production Dr. Bowdler Sharpe, who, as Mr. Seebohm's intimate friend, was well acquainted with his intentions in the work, has completed the portions left unfinished, and will see it through the press; and no further guarantee is needed for the production of the work as the author would have wished.

The work will be published in Parts, each containing 12 Plates, and the whole edition will be strictly limited to 250 copies, for which immediate application is recommended.

A CALENDAR of the INNER TEMPLE RECORDS. Edited by F. A.

INDERWICK, Q.C., one of the Masters of the Bench. Vol. I.—21 Hen. VII. (1505)—45 Eliz. (1603). With Illustrations drawn by T. G. Jackson. A.R.A. Imperial 8vo, Roxburghe binding, price 21 net.

TWO NEW PRINTS.

MILLAIS (Sir J. E., P.R.A.)—THE LAST TREK. Very finely reproduced in

Photogravure from the Artist's Original Drawing (his last finished production). The whole Impression limited to 550 copies. Proofs before letters on India paper, price 2s. 2s. net.

The above Print is a wholly new photogravure from Sir John Millais's last complete drawing, which he produced as a frontispiece to his son's work, "A Breath from the Veldt," where it appears on a reduced scale. It therefore possesses twofold interest, as one of the very last productions of its Author's pen, and from its own touching subject—the death of a hunter on the Veldt, watched by his two faithful native "boys," under the rays of the setting sun. The reproduction is a very fine one, and conveys with remarkable success the effect of the original drawing.

SEEBOHM (HENRY, F.Z.S.), Author of "Siberia in Europe," &c., Portrait of, finely

reproduced in Photogravure from the last Photograph of the Author. Proof Impressions on India paper, 15s. net.

From Mr. Seebohm's great eminence as an ornithologist, and the great respect in which he was held by his many friends, it has been thought that many would like to possess a good portrait of him in a permanent form. The above has been excellently reproduced on a good scale as a photogravure from a photograph approved by Mrs. Seebohm, and is limited to 100 copies.

MR. GOULD'S WORKS.

A full Descriptive List of the Grand Ornithological and other Works of the late JOHN GOULD, F.R.S., F.Z.S., &c., with Memoir of the Author and other information, will be sent post-free on application to the Publishers.

HENRY SOTHERAN & CO., Publishers, 140, Strand, W.C.; and 37, Piccadilly, W.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

WHAT IS LIFE?

Or, Where are we? What are we? From whence did we come? And whither do we go?

By FREDERICK HOVENDEEN, F.L.S., F.G.S., F.R.M.S.

With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 6s.

[In a few days.]

THE JOURNALS of WALTER WHITE.

Assistant Secretary to the Royal Society. With a Preface by his Brother, WILLIAM WHITE, and a Photogravure Portrait. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Saturday Review says:—"The little volume makes good reading. Mr. White came in contact with celebrities and notabilities innumerable, and has something unpleasant and pleasant to say of most of them."

MODERN ARCHITECTURE. A Book

for Architects and the Public. By H. HEATHCOTE STATHAM, F.R.I.B.A., Editor of the Builder and Author of "Architecture for General Readers," &c. With Numerous Illustrations of contemporary buildings. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE ART of PAINTING in the QUEEN'S

REIGN. Being a glance at some of the Painters and Paintings of the British School during the Last Sixty Years. By A. G. TEMPLE, F.S.A., Director of the Guildhall Gallery, London. With upwards of Sixty Colotype Illustrations reproduced from the works of the chief Artists of the Period. Demy 4to, £3 3s. net.

AQUITAINE: a Traveller's Tales. By

WICKHAM FLOWER, F.S.A. With 12 full-page Photogravures, and numerous other Illustrations by JOSEPH PENNELL. Demy 4to, 63s. net.

SONGS for the CHILDREN, with PIC-

TURES for THEM in BLACK and WHITE. By SIDNEY HEATH. Containing 30 large and many smaller Illustrations and Vignettes. In decorative binding, with coloured designs on cover, gilt edges, demy 4to, 6s.

The Scotsman says:—"Charmingly illustrated. Mr. Sidney Heath's work has quite a distinction of its own."

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE MARCHIONESS AGAINST the

COUNTY. By E. H. COOPER, author of "Mr. Blake of Newmarket." Crown 8vo, 6s. [Next week.]

HIS CHIEF'S WIFE. By Baroness

ALBERT D'ANETHAN. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

EDITED BY W. L. COURTNEY.

DECEMBER.

A FRENCH VIEW of the BRITISH EMPIRE. By Baron PIERRE DE COURBETIN.

SHAKESPEARE'S SONNETS. By WILLIAM ARCHER.

THE INFLUENCE of HENRY GEORGE in ENGLAND. By J. A. HOBSON.

LORD ROSEBURY'S APOSTASY.

ANNALS of a PUBLISHING HOUSE. By C. STEIN.

"LA REVOLTE." By VILLIERS DE L'ISLE ADAM.

THE CRISIS in SPAIN. By MARQUIS DE RUYIGNY, CRANSTOWN METCALFE, and LEONARD WILLIAMS.

DANTE as a RELIGIOUS TEACHER.—II. By Rev. E. MOORE, D.D.

MOUNET SULLY. By YETTA BLAKE DE BURY.

ENGLAND and FRANCE in WEST AFRICA. (With Map.) By Rev. W. GREENWELL.

THE MONSTROUS REGIMENT of WOMEN. By JANET E. HOGARTH.

POETRY of WILLIAM MORRIS. By NOWELL SMITH.

PARLIAMENTARY DIFFICULTIES in AUSTRIA. By GERMANICUS.

CHAPMAN & HALL, LTD., LONDON.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW BOOKS

THE FINE ART BOOK OF THE SEASON.

THE WORK of CHARLES KEENE.

With Introduction and Comments by JOSEPH PENNELL, and a Bibliography of Selected Works by W. H. CHESBON. Contains over 130 illustrations, many of which have never before been printed. In imperial 4to, buckram binding, £3 13s. 6d. net. Also a Fine Edition, limited to 15 copies, in superior binding, containing an Original Drawing by Charles Keene, and a duplicate set of the Pictures on India Paper, in a portfolio, £15 15s. net.

Large crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.

LETTERS of DANTE GABRIEL

ROSSETTI to WILLIAM ALLINGHAM, 1854-1870. Edited by G. BIRKBECK HILL, D.O.L. Illustrated with Photogravures and other Pictures.

"It is full of curious and interesting matter, not only in the actual letters of Rossetti, but in the copious annotations contributed by the editor. He shows not only a perfect acquaintance with the literature of the movement, but a more or less intimate knowledge of the leading figures."—Daily Chronicle.

JOHN OLIVER HOBBS' NEW NOVEL.

THE SCHOOL for SAINTS. By the Author of "The Sinner's Comedy," "The Herb Moon," &c. Green cloth, gilt top, 6s.

W. L. COURTNEY in the DAILY TELEGRAPH—

"The School for Saints" leaves all sketches and skeletons behind the work of an artist assured of her powers. . . . It is Thackeray touched here and there to higher emotions."

"This novel is a brilliant tribute to the memory of Disraeli. . . . Written with artistic intelligence and no small distinction."—Daily Chronicle.

NEW VOLUME OF THE "BUILDERS OF GREATER BRITAIN." Edited by H. E. WILSON.

SIR THOMAS MAITLAND: the

Mastery of the Mediterranean. By WALTER FREWEN LORD.

Recently issued, in same Series.

SIR WALTER RALEIGH. By MARTIN A. S. HUMER. Each with Photogravure Front, and Map, cloth, price 6s.

NEW VOLUME OF "THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."

MODERN FRANCE, 1789-1895. By

ANDRÉ LEBON. Memb. House of Deputies, late Minister for Trade and Industry. Many Illustrations and Index, cloth, 6s. [Shortly.]

27,000 copies printed; over 17,000 sold.

HUGH WYNNE: Free Quaker, sometime Brevet Lt.-Colonel on General Washington's Staff. By Dr. WEIR MITCHELL. Unwin's Green Cloth Library. 6s.

"A full-blooded narrative, rich in stirring incidents, in shrewd delineation of character, and most pleasantly rich in charm and mellowness."—Academy.

"The feeling is true, the humour genuine, the setting picturesque, the character-drawing delicate and firm."—Westminster Gazette.

SECOND EDITION.

WILD LIFE in SOUTHERN SEAS.

By LOUIS BECKE. Cloth gilt, 6s.

NEW NOVEL, BY THE AUTHOR OF

"NANCY NOON."

THE TORMENTOR. By Benjamin

SWIFT, Author of "Nancy Noon" Unwin's Green Cloth Library, 6s.

"Is witty, vivid, and subtle. The chief character, 'Bristol,' is drawn with singular power."—To-Day.

LORD ERNEST HAMILTON'S NEW ROMANCE.

THE OUTLAWS of the MARCHES.

By Lord ERNEST HAMILTON. Fully illustrated, green cloth, gilt top. 6s.

"Stirring and well-sustained story. . . . Incidents which any writer might be proud to have created. . . . They are the culminating points of a well-written and stirring tale."—Pall Mall Gazette.

MASTERS of MEDICINE. Edited by

ERNEST HART, D.O.L. Each with Photogravure Frontispiece, cloth, 3s. 6d.

1. JOHN HUNTER. By J. WILLIAM HARVEY.

STEPHEN PAGET. By D'ARCY POWER.

Vol. III. will shortly be ready.

SIR JAMES Y. SIMPSON. By H. LAING GORDON.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "LIFE IN THE TUILLERIES."

THE STORY of MARIE ANTOINETTE.

By ANNA L. BICKNELL. Illustrated, demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. [Shortly.]

A SELECTION from the POEMS of

MATHILDE BLIND. Edited by ARTHUR SYMONS. With Photogravure Frontispiece, fcap, 8vo, parchment gilt, 7s. 6d.—Also an Edition de Luxe, on Japan paper, bound in vellum, 10s. 6d.

A Complete List of Mr. T. Fisher Unwin's Recent Publications will be sent post free to any address on receipt of card.

LONDON:

T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

MACMILLAN & CO'S LIST.

BY THE RIGHT HON. JAMES BRYCE, M.P.

Demy 8vo, 14s. net.

IMPRESSIONS of SOUTH

AFRICA. By JAMES BRYCE, Author of "The Holy Roman Empire," &c. With 3 Maps.

STANDARD.—"In no work that we know have the earlier causes which have produced the existing state of affairs in South Africa been laid bare so plainly, or the problems of the future stated with so much insight and force."

CHRISTMAS and DECEMBER

NUMBER OF

THE CENTURY.

ILLUSTRATED, PRICE 1s. 4d.

CONTAINS:—

TENNYSON and his FRIENDS at FRESHWATER.

By V. C. SCOTT O'CONNOR.

Illustrated.

MERRY CHRISTMAS in the TENEMENTS

By JACOB L. RIIS. Illustrated.

EDWIN BOOTH IN LONDON.

By E. H. HOUSE.

SECOND INSTALMENT OF

MRS. HARRISON'S NOVEL, "GOOD AMERICANS."

AN ESSAY BY

THE LATE GEN. FRANCIS A. WALKER ON "THE CAUSES OF POVERTY."

SECOND PART OF

JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY'S POEM, "RUBAIYAT OF DOC SIFERS,"

Begun in November.

SIX COMPLETE STORIES

By HENRY VAN DYKE, MARION MANVILLE POPE, AND OTHERS.

&c., &c., &c.

THE "JUST-SO" STORIES.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

SEE CHRISTMAS AND DECEMBER

NUMBER OF

ST. NICHOLAS.

ILLUSTRATED. Price 1s.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, LONDON.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS	PAGE
An Unscientific View of Christianity ... ..	473
Donne ... ..	474
Omar and Others ... ..	475
In Praise of Jones and Wren ... ..	477
The Authoress of the Odyssey ... ..	478
Charles the Great ... ..	478
Victorian Literature ... ..	479
CHRISTMAS BOOKS ... ..	480
For the Boy ... ..	482
NOTES AND NEWS ... ..	483
1897: A RETROSPECT ... ..	486
SOME YOUNGER REPUTATIONS ... ..	488
THE FRENCH ACADEMY ... ..	497
WHAT THE PEOPLE READ ... ..	498
THE QUEEN'S ENGLISH ... ..	499
THE BOOK MARKET ... ..	500
NEW CENTURY THEATRE ... ..	501
THE WEEK ... ..	502
NEW BOOKS RECEIVED... ..	502
CORRESPONDENCE ... ..	503
BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..	503
FICTION SUPPLEMENT ... ..	117-120

REVIEWS.

AN UNSCIENTIFIC VIEW OF CHRISTIANITY.

The Evolution of the Idea of God. By Grant Allen. (Grant Richards.)

SOME years ago an enterprising magazine editor conceived the idea of asking a dozen popular novelists to describe the circumstances under which they came to write their first books. All gleefully accepted the invitation to this new kind of symposium, and in due time the account of the genesis of their earliest productions appeared in print. Most of these descriptions were more or less coloured by the artistic imagination—one lady confined herself, if we recollect rightly, almost entirely to abuse of the reviewers—and only Mr. Grant Allen insisted upon regarding the thing seriously. He informed his readers that at the outset of his career he had written over a hundred sketches, essays, and longer works on scientific subjects, but that all were rejected by publishers and editors. At last in despair he turned his attention to fiction, and thus attained the eminence which we all know.

A perusal of the book before us leads one to doubt whether the publishers and editors of his youth were, after all, so ignorant of their business as Mr. Grant Allen would have us believe, and whether he would not have done well to continue to leave science alone. Its title is rather misleading, for it goes a long way beyond "the idea of God" in the strict acceptance of the term, and attempts to show the growth or evolution of modern Christianity from the earliest religious ideas conceived by man. Now this, unless the book is to be taken as a mere polemic against Christianity—a view of it which Mr. Grant Allen expressly deprecates—is strictly an affair of science, that is, of positive and exact knowledge, and as such requires scientific treatment. There are, we believe, two ways in which a book on such a subject may be effectively written. The first mode, which is the one dear to German and English scholars, is to rake together every discoverable scrap of evidence bearing upon it, and to publish this without too particular an inquiry as to its quality, but interspersed with more or less succinct statements of the conclusions which in the collector's view are to be drawn therefrom. A book written on this plan, though read by few, is consulted by many, and comes in time to be regarded as "a great storehouse of facts" for future writers. The other mode is to study the subject until one becomes thoroughly saturated with it, to sift and re-sift the evidence until only the most perfect proofs remain, and then to endeavour by rhetoric and lucid statement to impress the author's view of the matter upon every reader, whether previously interested in the subject or not. A book thus written, if successful, is read by thousands instead of by dozens; but it requires genius as well as industry to write it, and Renan's Vie de Jésus is perhaps the only perfect example extant. As for Mr. Grant Allen, he has adopted neither one method nor the other. He has produced a huge unhandy volume of some 450 pages, in which nearly all the main facts are borrowed, as he frankly admits, from books like Prof. Tylor's Primitive Culture, Mr. J. G. Frazer's Golden Bough, and Mr. Sidney Hartland's Legend of Perseus; while he has not (to use his own words) "thought it necessary to encumber his pages with frequent and pedantic footnotes" giving the provenance of the other supposed facts on which he relies. How much dependence can be placed on these by others we shall see later.

Now Mr. Grant Allen begins his book with Mr. Herbert Spencer's assertion that all religious ideas took their rise in the worship of dead men. But he does not seem to know, or at any rate gives us no hint, that this theory has been so signally refuted by Prof. Albert Réville and others, that no writer of authority on the history of religions now thinks it worth while even to refer to it. Mr. Herbert Spencer's position really carries its own refutation along with it; for in setting it up he has to avow his disbelief in the existence of animism, or the mental stage in which primitive folk believe every object in animate or inanimate nature to be possessed of a volition and passions like their own. And not only are savage races known who are confirmed animists, without in any way worshipping their dead, but we see the phenomenon of animism repeated in the strictly analogous case of our own children. The first baby who beats the table against which he has knocked his head demolishes Mr. Herbert Spencer's theory at one blow. Starting, then, with this sufficiently unstable foundation, Mr. Grant Allen gives a dissertation upon sacred stones, sacred stakes, and sacred trees. The exact bearing of these upon the issue is not at once apparent, until one sees it to be necessary to account for the Jewish worship of Jehovah, a deity who cannot by any possibility be twisted into a dead and deified man. Mr. Grant Allen gets over the difficulty by supposing that Jehovah "was in His origin nothing more or less than the ancestral sacred stone of the people of Israel"; the chief evidence for which supposition he finds in the fact that the Ark of the Covenant is said to have contained the stone tables of the Law. Then follows another digression upon the gods of Egypt, the justification for which appears in the statement that the conception of the Christian Trinity was "influenced" by the Abydos triad of Osiris, Isis, and Horus. The author then returns to the Hebrew religion, in which he attempts to trace "the rise of monotheism," and the remaining half of the book is devoted to corn and wine gods, human sacrifice, the doctrine of atonement, and the origin of the Christian sacraments. The use which he makes of this can be guessed from what has gone before. Jesus, on whose existence as an historical personage he several times casts doubt, is "a survival of the corn-god." The Eucharist, with its bread and wine, is the descendant of the old custom by which "the priest who slew the slayer" of Mr. Frazer's theory becomes at once victim and deity; and all the accounts of the Passion are coloured, if not inspired, by these shadowy beliefs of primitive races. The book closes with the author's hope that he has made it "tolerably clear that the vast mass of existing gods, or divine persons, when we come to analyse them, do actually turn out to be dead and deified human beings."

Mr. Grant Allen has, of course, a perfect right thus to express his opinion; but when an author, not undistinguished in his own walk of literature, sets himself to run a tilt, even under the shield of Mr. Herbert Spencer's name, at the deliberate opinion of nearly every scientific writer on religions, from the President des Brosses down to his own witness Mr. Frazer, we think he may be fairly asked to play the game according to the rules. In other words, we have a right to require of him that his generalisations should be made with due deliberation, that his information should be carefully tested, and that his quotations from other authors, even if unsupported by "pedantic" footnotes, should fairly represent the opinion of the author quoted. We will take these requirements in their order, and see how far the present book complies with them.

Of Mr. Grant Allen's generalisations we choose the first four instances. "The existence of a priesthood," he tells us (p. 26), is "essential to religion"; "In the presents brought to the dead man's grave to appease the ghost we have the central elements of all worship, the practical key to all cults past and present" (p. 28); "The ceremonial and oracular (!) preservation of the head [of a corpse, bien entendu] is a common feature of all religious usages" (p. 66); and "all temples may be reduced in the last resort either into graves of the dead, or into places where worship is specially offered up to them" (p. 74). But none of these very distinct assertions can be accepted as literally true. Neither in Ancient Greece nor in any Mohammedan country has there ever existed a priesthood in the strict sense of the word; the presents brought to the dead man's grave are not the central element of the worship of (for instance) Quakers or Unitarians, nor is the preservation of a corpse's head a common feature of their religious usages; while the examples of Herod's Temple at Jerusalem and the Caaba at Mecca are enough to destroy the theory that all temples are associated with the worship of the dead. All these exceptions to his rules must be perfectly familiar to Mr. Grant Allen, and we can therefore only suppose that he did not think it worth while to frame his sweeping generalisations correctly.

There are other instances where we are uncertain whether it is Mr. Grant Allen's want of care or of information which is at fault. "It is the oldest gods," he tells us, "that are always the most sacred" (p. 128); "Monotheism bases itself entirely upon the great God of the Hebrews" (p. 154); "Osiris is invariably represented as a mummy" (p. 166); "Nut and Seb as gods . . . are quite recent ideas in Egypt" (p. 177). But does Mr. Grant Allen really not know that in Greece some of the most ancient gods and heroes gradually fell so low in the estimation of their worshippers that they at last became, like the Bellerophon in Apuleius' Metamorphosis, the objects of popular derision; that monotheism, as Prof. Réville has shown in his Religions des Peuples non-civilisés, is the heritage of the African negro quite as much as of the Semite; that Osiris, as king of the underworld, is never represented as a mummy; and that Nut and Seb, the Egyptian sky-goddess and earth-god, were so far from being "recent" gods that Prof. Hommel has drawn from their early appearance in Egypt the conclusion that they are the equivalents of the (to him) yet older Babylonian deities who fulfil the same functions? After this, it hardly seems worth while to mention that Khons is not the "rising sun," but a moon-god, and that Byblos, and not "Bablos," is the town on the Phœnician coast which was associated with the legend of Osiris.

We have space for but two examples of Mr. Grant Allen's mode of quotation. The Pseudo-Plutarch, in his tract De Iside et Osiride, tells us that the Egyptians used at certain festivals to abuse red-haired men and to sacrifice red oxen because Typhon, the murderer of Osiris, was held to have red hair. Eusebius, writing hundreds of years later, says that Manetho says that in one city living men who were called "Typhonians" were burnt and their ashes scattered to the winds. Mr. Grant Allen alters this into the statement that the Egyptians "sacrificed red-haired men as the representatives of Osiris," whom he makes a corn-god, and afterwards amplifies it "on the direct authority of Manetho," the red oxen, he thinks, being used "to produce red wheat." The other instance is even more daring. Athenæus, quoting Berossus, says:

"In the eleventh month, called Loos, is celebrated in Babylon the feast of Sacæa, or Sacæa, for five days, in which it is the custom that the masters should obey their domestics, one of whom is led round the house, clothed in a royal garment, and him they call Zoganes."

This is Mr. Grant Allen's amplification of the passage:

"During the five days of the festival called the Sacæa, a prisoner, condemned to death, was dressed in the king's robes, seated on the king's throne, allowed to eat, drink, and order whatever he chose, and even permitted to sleep with the king's concubines. But at the end of five days he was stripped of his royal insignia, scourged, and crucified."

And on this he founds a long argument about the "formation of a groundwork for the doctrines of Christianity."

We have dealt thus faithfully with Mr. Grant Allen, because his book is one of a class which has lately become unpleasantly common. In England, at any rate, few people trouble themselves with the comparative study of religions, and when a man becomes acquainted with other religious beliefs than those in which he was himself brought up he is therefore astonished at the many points which they appear to have in common. That the likeness is not entirely apparent it would be idle to deny, for the mind of the savage does not operate in a different way from that of the savant, but much of the illusion is produced by want of familiarity with the subject looked at. Thus the European thinks at first that the faces of all Chinamen are exactly alike, while to the Oriental all European nations have so many features in common that he classes them under the generic name of Franks. If the inquirer at this stage of his instruction rushes into print, he is sure to pitch upon some one feature which he thinks gives him the key to the religious history of the world. In this way the Jew is likely to exaggerate the part played in religion by Semitic ideas, the Phallicist that of the reproductive function, and persons like Mr. Grant Allen the importance of the worship of the dead. And, as persons of strong imagination generally manage to see what they wish to see, we soon find them discovering points of resemblance which do not exist, and even altering facts to support their theories. This it is, we suppose, which leads Mr. Grant Allen to talk such nonsense as that "it is by no mere accident" that our modern Guy Fawkes "is a man of straw"; and that "the copious libations of cider" drunk at the Ram Feast on Dartmoor show "a survival of primitive feeling . . . sacramental intoxication being the integral part of all these proceedings." We can assure Mr. Grant Allen, on our personal experience, that boys use straw in the manufacture of guys because it is cheap and inflammable, without any reference to the custom of making the last shock of corn into a "corn-baby"; and that agricultural labourers will get drunk on festive occasions without regarding their intoxication as "sacramental." We can tell him, too, that if he pursues his inquiry into the religions of the world in a more systematic manner, and gives some heed to the nature of the evidence from which he draws his conclusion, he will be relieved from the "parallelomanie" under which he at present suffers, and will find that "the practical key to all cults" is the unprejudiced and scientific study of them.

DONNE.

John Donne, Sometime Dean of St. Paul's. By Augustus Jessopp, D.D. (Methuen & Co.)

DR. JESSOPP professes himself a life-long enthusiast on behalf of Donne—calling him "my great teacher, and master, and friend"—he has here written a biography of Donne, yet he declares himself no lover of Donne's poetry; and the mass of critics have agreed to consider Donne before all else a poet. More striking still, we feel little disposition to regret Dr. Jessopp's avowed limitation. It is well that Donne's other side, as one of the great seventeenth century preachers, should be brought before the public; and Dr. Jessopp has done it very pleasantly, with knowledge and enthusiasm. This volume is intended to supplement Walton's loving, but not always accurate, biography by the more modern information we possess about Donne; and it fulfils its purpose very excellently. Dr. Jessopp has forborne the characteristic temptation of the biographer—to draw out the thread of his verbosity finer than the staple of his argument; and his account is short, compendious, yet entertaining.

A very singular, many-sided, complex personality is Donne. His complexity begins even in his parentage. On his father's side he was descended from a Welsh family numbering belted knights on its family tree—the Dwnns of Radnorshire. Remembering that the Welsh "w" is pronounced like "oo," one cannot resist the wonder whether these Dwnns were the ancestors (by some migratory process) of the Doones renowned in modern fiction through Lorna of lovable memory? On his mother's side he descended from the household of Sir Thomas More; and was himself educated a Catholic. This early education is traceable enough in his theological writings—anti-Catholic though they be. His history carries out the complexity. It suggests to us somewhat an Anglican à Becket, in its transit from worldly brilliancy to ecclesiastical strenuousness; though, unlike à Becket, he never held pre-eminent rank either in State or Church. He began as an attendant at the court of Elizabeth. He shared as a volunteer in the first expedition against Cadiz—which, curiously complementing his early Catholic associations, was commanded by Lord Howard of Effingham, the Catholic Lord High Admiral, who had led the victorious English fleet against the Spanish Armada. He shared in the same capacity the disastrous fortunes of the second expedition against Cadiz; but the results for him were fortunate, since he became the friend of his fellow-volunteer, the son of the Lord Keeper Egerton, and so became the secretary of the Lord Keeper himself.

Brilliant seemed then his prospects. His poems, passed from hand to hand in MS., were the admiration of all the young wits about court, and set the fashion of that literary seventeenth century which was beginning to succeed the sixteenth. The veteran Ben Jonson admired them, though he schooled the young poet upon his harsh form. The Lord Keeper's secretary, moreover, had among scholars the reputation of the most versatile talents and encyclopædic learning; among courtiers and women the reputation of a seductively graceful person and irresistibly attractive manners. He read all night, and was the brilliant courtier by day. Truth to say, the youthful portrait of him here reproduced from Isaac Walton's Life is far from showing a handsome face. It may be libellous—the writers of that day had scant justice from portrait-painters. Yet the portrait of the aged Donne in his grave-clothes (for the truth of which his friend Sir Henry Wootton vouched) confirms it as to the chief structural details of the face. In both there is the same long nose and upper lip, the same pointed chin, the same high cheek-bones with hollows beneath—accentuated in the later portrait by age and disease. No doubt Donne's was a grace of expression and manner rather than of feature.

But here Donne's hasty gait on the road to advancement tripped disastrously. He fell in love with a lady who was staying in the Lord Keeper's house—the daughter of the Keeper's friend, Sir George More, and above Donne in fortune. Their commerce was discovered, and the angry father called his daughter home from London. After a period of separation relieved by stolen meetings, the lovers lost patience and married secretly. The enraged Sir George More had Donne dismissed from the Lord Keeper's service and thrown into prison. At last he relented; but the mischief was done. Donne was obliged to live away from court until Queen Elizabeth's death; and when he returned he had to push his fortunes afresh under a new sovereign. The stupid James I. made up his mind that Donne's acquirements in His Majesty's favourite science of theology marked him out for the Church, and he made the young poet's taking orders a sine quâ non of his advancement. Donne, to be plain, felt no call to ecclesiasticism, and for years he struggled against the Royal Solomon's wish, hoping—ever in vain—for secular advancement through the influence of this favourite and that. But the "most learned fool in Christendom" was dogged in the wrong—as usual—and at length the cares of increasing family forced Donne to yield. He was royally constrained into an ecclesiastical career, as Á Becket had been before him; resisting, like Becket, to the last; but, like Becket, resolving to play his new part thoroughly when he could resist no longer. From the time of his ordination he renounced poetry, and only returned to it in the ending of his days. But he did not renounce his desire for preferment, which, after some minor advancements, was gratified by his promotion to the Deanery of St. Paul's. He held also other livings; and was, in fact, an eminent pluralist, after the ill-fashion of the Anglican Church in those days. But a wife and family have to obtain provision; and to this, rather than to down-right ambition, may charitably be ascribed Donne's petitions for Church preferment. Otherwise, his life seems to have been almost ascetic, and it seems impossible to doubt the sincerity with which he followed the career into which he had reluctantly been driven. He became a great preacher, outlived his first wife, and finally died with every sign of unaffected piety and resignation. In those last days he once more reconciled himself with his discarded mistress, Poetry; though his latter poems were all religious.

As a preacher, he displayed the qualities of his poetry. There were bursts of fine and manly eloquence; but in the main he was subtle and intellectual. There was a logical, constructive backbone in all his sermons, to a degree which may be called scholastic, which makes him difficult reading for lax moderns. In fact, he showed the influence of the early Catholic preachers. His style seems to us admirable, nay, classical, in regard to its purpose, rising and subsiding at will. Moderns call it "involved." But it is the involution of logical exactitude, not of slovenly confusion. It is apprehensible enough to a strenuous intelligence, though not to the average intellectual laziness of the present day. There can be no greater treat to an energetic and exact mind, which has also some share of imagination, for upon imagination, in its true and loftier sense, Donne's sermons make demand. Of his poetry, with which Dr. Jessopp deals little, something the same may be said. It might, we are convinced, have been better than it is, had the royal unintelligence not forced him chiefly to develop that theological side of his character, which by nature was only a subordinate side. For if it be true that the poet is not made, it is unfortunately true that he can be unmade—or at least baulked of his complete making; whether that unmaking take the form of compulsory ecclesiasticism, or of compulsory journalism. Such as we have been allowed to have it, Donne's poetry is frightfully, impermissibly rough in form and metre; it is intellectual in character, and subtilising to a pettifogging degree. At its best it demands the active co-operation of the reader.

The typical modern, who wants to lie and let the plums of poetry fall into his mouth, had better hold aloof from Donne. He throws out teeming suggestions of ideas, and expects the reader to pursue, amplify, and make them his own. He who is not prepared arduously to co-operate with his poet, had best (we repeat) let Donne go by. But for the few modern readers who have intellectual energy, Donne is a most stimulating poet.

Poets, especially, can receive from Donne's poetry abundant fertilisation. This was the case in his own day; he was the cause of indefinitely more poetry in others than he wrote himself. Crashaw, and Cowley, and the whole of the "Cavalier lyrists," drew directly or indirectly from Donne. It was he who sowed, it was they who reaped. We doubt whether he ever wrote a completely fine poem. Let him be on fire with emotion, his intellectual subtilising in small matters choked the fiery current with icy blocks.

Here, for instance, is the opening of a two-stanza poem which probably refers to one of his enforced separations from the girl he eventually married. He must have been fervid with feeling; and the opening is worthy to be ranked with the great sonnet of Drayton, if not with the great sonnets of Shakespeare:

"So, go, break off this last lamenting kiss,
Which sucks two souls, and vapours both away.
Turn, thou ghost, that way, and let me turn this;
And let ourselves benight our happiest day."

But this beautiful passionate commencement incontinently subsides into an arrangement of coldly ingenious conceits. When he felt deepest, Donne's intellect was an overpowering barrier against the impetuous current of feeling. Most happy lines and stanzas are to be cited from him; he is a poet to be read, and loved, and judiciously imitated; none can study without learning from him; he is, in our opinion (Milton, of course, excluded), the poet fullest of primal genius in his time, except Crashaw. Yet this admirable and many-sided genius is only for the judicious. He has, we must iterate, left not one completely happy poem behind him. But read him, read all he wrote, for he is a mine of rough but priceless ore.

OMAR AND OTHERS.

Rubáiyât of Omar Khayyám. A Paraphrase by Richard Le Gallienne. (Grant Richards.)

EARLY in the eleventh century of our era a rather curious compact was entered into by three youths who were attending lectures at the famous school of Nishápúr in Khórasan. Their understanding was that whichever of them attained to fortune should share it with the other two, and not preserve it for himself. This arrangement, in which the flippant will perceive only a kind of Persian edition of The Three Musketeers, was destined to have far-reaching consequences. These three schoolmates curiously enough were all fated to make a noise in the world; but the first of them to do so was Nizám ul Mulk, who became vizier to Sultan Alp Arslan. He kept his part of the agreement, and the two whom he assisted to name and fame are even better known, at any rate in Europe, than himself. One of them was Hasan bin Sabbáh, the founder of the sect of the Assassins. Nizám ul Mulk himself eventually fell a victim to a dagger directed by this terrible Old Man of the Mountain. The other was the subject of this article, the Hakim Omar Khayyám, more correctly Abul Fath Omar bin Ibrahim al Khayyám. The last part of his name (Mr. Le Gallienne, by the way, invariably accents it upon the wrong syllable) indicates his father's profession as having been that of a tent-maker, and Omar has more than one allusion to it in his poems—e.g.,

"Khayyámi ki kháimahi hâkmat midúkht"; or, as Mr. Le Gallienne has it:

"Khayyám who long at learning's tents hath sewn."

Until recently Omar's reputation in the West depended mainly upon his revision of the Persian Calendar—in the words of Gibbon: "A computation of time which surpasses the Julian and approaches the accuracy of the Gregorian style." We remember once seeing a German encyclopædia of fifty years ago or thereabouts, which, after devoting two long columns to an account of this feat, wound up with the remark: "Ist auch als Dichter bekannt." The whirligig of time has brought round its revenges, and nowadays, like Lewis Carroll, it is not for his works on algebra that Omar is known. They exist, nevertheless, and were published at Paris in 1851. In 1859 Edward FitzGerald gave the world his translation or paraphrase of the quatrains, a book which at first fell flat, but ultimately, by its four editions during the lifetime of its author, showed that the tide had turned. Henceforth Omar the mathematician and astronomer is swallowed up by Omar the pessimist, philosopher, and poet.

The rubái or quatrain, although associated in England exclusively with the name of Omar, is by no means an invention or monopoly of his, but on the contrary a favourite, and, indeed, a national metre added by the Persians to the sixteen which they borrowed from the Arab prosody. It contains four feet, and consequently four main accents: firstly, a foot of three syllables (an anti-bacchius or molossus) accented on the central one; secondly, two very irregular and variously accented feet of three or four syllables each; lastly, a foot of one or two syllables, one syllable if the final of the preceding foot is long, but an iambus if it is short, in either case the fourth ictus is upon the last syllable of the whole line. Altogether there are twenty-four different ways in which these elements may be varied, so that the quatrain is by no means a monotonous medium of expression. It will be perceived that a line may consist of as many as thirteen or as few as ten syllables. Graceful and musical as the rubái is, it has always seemed to us curious that none of the translators of Omar have made any attempt at reproducing these characteristic and varied rhythms. FitzGerald invented, or at any rate naturalised, the famous line of ten syllables, and his successors are alike in having slavishly kept to it. Whinfield admits that it does not exactly correspond to the original, but declares that it very clearly suggests it, and to this opinion Mr. Le Gallienne presumably refers when he says that "it is accounted by those able to judge a beautiful echo of the old Persian music. There appears to be this difference," he adds, "that the rhymes in the Persian are trisyllabic," whereas, of course, they may consist, and do consist, of almost any number of syllables. We must confess that as regards ourselves, with the best will in the world, we have been unable to detect in the decasyllabic line the slightest movement of the Persian. Indeed, it is difficult to see how a line of five regular feet could suggest one of four feet, which are never all alike, and frequently all differ. However, we should be the last to deny the intrinsic beauty of FitzGerald's line, once it is admitted to be his and not Omar's. His was the true Midas touch. His subtle alchemy turned all to gold, and we have not the heart to say more in complaint of either his decasyllables or what we may call the cento method which he inaugurated, and in which Mr. Le Gallienne has followed closely in his footsteps. No one knows how many of the quatrains ascribed to Omar are really his or how they should be arranged, so if the English translators choose to depart from the non-committal alphabetic order of the Persian editions, and classify them according to their own sweet will, there is no harm done, if only the effect produced be good. The following trilogy from Mr. Le Gallienne is fine, though we should be sorry to say that every line of it originated in Omar's brain:

"Spring, with the cuckoo-sob deep in his throat,
O'er all the land his thrilling whispers float,
Old earth believes his ancient lies once more,
And runs to meet him in a golden coat.

And many a lovely girl that long hath lain
Beneath the grass, out in the sun and rain,
Lifts up a daisied head to hear him sing,
Hearkens a little, smiles, and sleeps again.

Yea, love, this very ground you lightly tread,
Who knows! is pillow to some maiden's head,
Ah! tread upon it lightly, lest you wake
The sacred slumber of the happy dead."

Death, according to Poe, is most poetical when it most closely allies itself to beauty. The death of a beautiful woman is the most poetical topic in the world, and we find in Omar the use again and again of that art which intensifies the throb of love poetry by keeping ever in mind the precariousness of the tenure by which we hold love from death. Thus FitzGerald:

"I sometimes think that never blows so red
The Rose as where some buried Caesar bled,
That every Hyacinth the Garden wears
Dropt in its Lap from some once lovely head.

And this delightful Herb whose tender Green
Fledges the River's Lip on which we lean—
Ah, lean upon it lightly! for who knows!
From what once lovely Lip it springs unseen!"

The first of the above two is much better rendered by Whinfield, who in 1883 published a version of 500 of the quatrains with the Persian text adjacent (Trubner's Oriental Series) a book which next to FitzGerald should be the most prized possession of every lover of Omar:

"Where'er you see a rose or tulip bed,
Know that a mighty monarch's blood was shed;
And where the violet rears her purple tuft,
Be sure a black-moled girl hath laid her head."

The second is much better rendered by Garner, an American who published a translation of some of the quatrains in a book little known in this country, in 1888:

"The violets that by this river grow
Sprang from some lip here buried long ago;
And tread thou lightly on this tender green,
Who sleepeth here so still thou ne'er wilt know."

On the other hand, Mr. Johnson (1887), another translator little known, has undoubtedly improved upon Whinfield in another instance. We refer to the quatrain which Whinfield has as follows:

"Heaven's wheel has made full many a heart
to moan,
And many a budding rose to earth has thrown,
Plume thee not on thy youth and lusty
strength,
Full many a bud is blasted ere 'tis blown."

The following is the form which it assumes under Mr. Johnson's pen:

"Lo! blood of men, slain by the stroke of doom Lo! dust of men strewn on the face of earth,
Oh, take what life may give of youth or mirth,
Full many an opening bud shall never bloom."

But let it be remembered always that FitzGerald came first.

Of the three translators we have principally in our eye—FitzGerald, Whinfield, and Mr. Le Gallienne (the order of date is the order of merit)—Whinfield has by far the largest number of quatrains. He, so far as we know, is the only writer who gives a rendering of an extremely beautiful and melodious quatrain which is quoted (by no less an authority than the King of Oude) as a model of a quatrain should be, in the Fifth Stream of the Second Sea in the Haft Kalzum (first line, "As bád i sabd dilam chu buyi tu girift"): "

"The zephyrs waft thy fragrance, and it takes
My heart, and me, his Master, he forsakes;
Careless of me he pants and leaps to thee,
And thee his pattern and ensample makes!"

Omar's work has from the first been like the Song of Songs, in the fact that it has been interpreted by one school literally, but by the mystics each according to his own mysticism. FitzGerald discards the latter in favour of the former, and refuses to read for "wine" "Dieu or La Divinité," as suggested by a French translator, or to see in the lover and his goddess but a parable of the worshipper and his God. Altogether quite a lover's breviary or handbook of the tender passion can then be culled by judicious selection from numerous quatrains, such as the following:

"Oh! love, chief record of the realm of truth,
The chiefest couplet in the ode of youth.
Oh! thou who knowest not the world of love,
Learn this that life is love, and love is truth."
Johnson.

"Long have I sought, but seldom found a lover;
To love aright is to be nought but lover;
He who would love, yet eat and rest him too,
Is still an animal, and not a lover.

For love is a great sleepless, foodless fire,
Love never moves his eyes from his desire;
Were love to sleep—awakening, love were gone,
And what gross sustenance should love require?"
Le Gallienne.

"This worldly love of yours is counterfeit,
And, like a half-spent blaze, lacks light and heat;
True love is his, who for days, months, and years,
Rests not, nor sleeps, nor craves for drink or meat.

Who so aspires to gain a rose-cheeked fair,
Sharp pricks from fortune's thorns must learn to bear,

See! till this comb was cleft by cruel cuts,
It never dared to touch my lady's hair.

My love shone forth, and I was overcome,
My heart was speaking, but my tongue was dumb;

Beside the water-brooks I died of thirst,
Was ever known so strange a martyrdom?"

Whinfield.

Omar's views upon religion, judging from his poems, veered at one time or another to every point of the theological compass. It is an experience many another has lived through, and as he himself says:

"From doubt to clear assurance is a breath,
A breath from infidelity to faith;
Oh, precious breath! enjoy it while you may,
'Tis all that life can give, and then comes death."

Whinfield.

"In my left hand I hold the Koran tight,
And grasp the wine-cup firmly in my right—
Thus do I stand beneath the eye of heaven,
Not quite a saint, nor yet a sinner quite."

Le Gallienne.

Or, as Mr. Le Gallienne more tersely expresses it, Omar is always ready to curse God with one cup and love Him with the next. There can be no doubt that FitzGerald frequently improved considerably upon his author; to use the eloquent words of Mr. Theodore Watts-Dunton: "Made richer still his opulent epigram"; witness the following:

"Oh, Thou, who didst with Pitfall and with Gin
Beset the road I was to wander in!
Thou wilt not with Predestination round
Enmesh me, and impute my Fall to Sin?"

Oh, Thou, who Man of baser Earth didst make!
And who with Eden didst devise the Snake;
For all the Sin wherewith the Face of Man
Is blacken'd, Man's forgiveness give—and take!"

These are what Mr. Swinburne called the "crowning stanzas" of all FitzGerald wrote, but the following is the literal version from Whinfield:

"With many a snare Thou didst beset my way,
And threatenest, if I fall therein, to slay;
Thy rule resistless sways the world, yet
Thou
Impute'st sin, when I do but obey!"

Oh, Thou! who know'st the secret thoughts of all,
In time of sorest need who aidest all,
Grant me repentance, and accept my plea,
O, Thou, who dost accept the pleas of all!"

The sense of fatality, "Kismet," to be dimly read, indeed, in the magician's mirror of ink, or in the geomancer's bowl of sand, but in no wise to be put aside, is not often absent from Omar. But Black Care does not always occupy the crupper; "Eternal Hope" succeeds "Divine Despair":

"Our wildest wrong is part of His great Right,
Our weakness is the shadow of His Might,
Our sins are His, forgiven long ago,
To make His mercy more exceeding bright."

Le Gallienne.

To sum up, and leaving out of the question the prose versions, as we have throughout this article, FitzGerald's "Rose of the Hundred and One Petals" will remain the Omar par excellence to all who do not desire an absolutely literal translation. Those who do, can fall back on Whinfield, and check him by his own (the best) edition of the Persian text. The Villon Society promises us, at no distant date, a rendering by Mr. John Payne, which will be different from all others, in that it is to reproduce the rhythms of the original, to which we referred above. This should be a boon. It is heartening to find that someone is going to make a fresh start, instead of merely publishing another variation on FitzGerald.

IN PRAISE OF JONES AND WREN.

A History of Renaissance Architecture in England, 1500—1800. By Reginald Blomfield, M.A. (George Bell & Sons.)

THIS book is a chronicle and a criticism; in both aspects it is complete. In these days of facile production it is a compensation to meet with a work wherein intelligence, zeal, and labour have joined to make a success. The research of the antiquary and the knowledge of the specialist have ranged far and near for subjects worthy to be catalogued and to be analysed. Neither patriotic predilection nor reverence for the past has prevented Mr. Blomfield from being impartial in his judgments; the pathos of age does not soften him, traditional reputation does not make him afraid; in appraising the work of men who are dead he is no less vivacious than if he were scourging a contemporary, or apologising for an R.A. On well-defined issues come forth his praise or his blame: the excuse is weighed against the blunder, the good points against the bad, the rare perfection receives a mural crown of praise.

Behind the judge is nevertheless the man; the human fibre shows itself in his personal and unstinted admiration for the two men of the English Renaissance, Inigo Jones and Sir Christopher Wren. To Inigo he attributes the greater gifts, but of both his appreciation is enthusiastic and just. The bays always to the originator. Mr. Blomfield says that Jones "showed his extraordinary capacity" by starting English architecture "on a line of fresh development, which was followed by the best intelligence of the country for one hundred and fifty years." When Jones, shortly after the beginning of the seventeenth century, began to design, the world of building was in a bad way. The Gothic style, which sometimes seems to have been almost as much the result of an instinct as of an art, had been dying, or dead, for more than a century. During that time as much destroying as building had probably been going on; but whatever new buildings sprang up were composed by men who had lost their native notes, and who had only heard distorted echoes of the sensuous music of the Renaissance. Elizabethan discords, harmonised now only by time, were the results. These Inigo set himself the task of abolishing. For his own and for a much later time he succeeded; but that tidal wave has spent itself, and many things have of late been done which would cause the judicious Jones to grieve. Fortunately the fantastic aberrations of our own day do not come within the scope of this history; the inspiration of the seventeenth century and the sanity of the eighteenth make subjects less contentious and more given to edification.

Gay invention flowered under the Stuarts; the music of Purcell, the songs of Herrick and his peers, the architecture of Jones and Wren, added lustre for more than a century to the luckless dynasty. When, in a monarchical country, the court has the artistic temperament, the plastic and all the other arts begin to flourish. The cynic will not deny that the Stuarts loved beauty. Therefore, the artists of the Netherlands gathered in London; the magnificent design for Whitehall was projected by Inigo Jones. It is true that the first Charles was beheaded in front of one of its few completed windows, but this disaster did not prevent his son from enacting the Coal and Wine Dues—recently pedantically abolished—for the raising up of the only great cathedral since the Reformation. Under the dull Hanoverians Art began to languish, and but for the phenomenal outburst of portrait-painting towards the end of the eighteenth century, little beyond a quiet approval could be extended to the product of the cycle; while, even taken at its best, portrait-painting is not the crown of a high ideal. Under the Georges the outward signs of all the more graceful arts were absence of imaginative-ness, intention most clearly expressed and generally realised, together with that sense of order and balance which should be common to us all, but is not. It might be said of the Pegasus of the eighteenth century, that he had turned pack-horse; in the seventeenth century his wings were there.

Historically, this book of Mr. Blomfield begins with the architectural break-up of the sixteenth century; that being the time of the master masons who had lost their tradition and had found nothing to take its place. Then came the scholastic invasion inspired by the genius of Inigo; the period, therefore, of the advent in England of the architect as now understood. The next era was that of Wren, who continued the academic method; but a method still flushed with the life-blood of brain power and high invention—witness his London spires. Wren found London a charred acreage; he left it a garden of tall white flowers. With Wren much of the glory of the English Renaissance departed. Mr. Blomfield says:

"The men who succeeded him were undoubtedly able, but they lacked the warm humanity of Wren. Their work was not spontaneous, and their inferiority appears in their conscious effort after academical correctness, and their attempts to systematise architecture into a mere grammar of ornament."

Still, we all agree that to the eighteenth century we owe thanks for some good things. St. Mary-le-Strand, St. Martin-in-the-Fields, Somerset House, we should not care to lose. Sir John Vanbrugh, Hawks-moor, Gibbs, Dance, Sir William Chambers, and the Adamsons are men who have not been accounted failures. The planning was often ingenious, and the execution of their buildings was almost invariably good. Vanbrugh, who was owned by two centuries, and died in 1726—only three years after the death of Wren—was dramatist, architect, a foreigner—and above all a portent. He did not aim at the English sobriety of design; he loved the bizarre; he seemed to make possible in massive stonework the loaded-brush impossibilities of the scene painter. By his fierce financial quarrels with his client Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough and friend of Queen Anne, he added a semi-historic dignity to the misfortunes of practise. His opportunities, however, were splendid and not unworthy of a man of wit.

To write a book on architecture without illustrations would be to serve a banquet without salt. But Mr. Blomfield is above all an architect, and probably prefers to draw his buildings than to write about them; he certainly shows his love for the work of his second greatest hero in his drawing of the steeple of St. Bride's, Fleet-street, and the other drawings have much interest and character; the reproductions from various sources are garnered from as far and are as necessary as his own sketches; in particular the photograph of the Porch of St. Mary's, Oxford, well displays the breadth of treatment and the masculine force of the work of his treasured Inigo Jones. Plans, elevations, and sketches of many other men, who are not as these giants, abound; they go to complete a volume which, from an English standpoint, is searching as a criticism, and exhaustive as a history, of the architectural Renaissance.

A FREAK.

The Authoress of the Odyssey. By Samuel Butler. (Longmans & Co.)

MR. BUTLER is always amusing, especially when he writes about Mr. Darwin. But he has not influenced scientific opinion, one fears, and his proofs that the Odyssey was "written" by a woman, in Sicily, will not influence scholars. In fact, Mr. Butler's own confessions prove that scholars are bored by his treatment of the subject. In Germany they might take up his paradox, but they are in bondage to the other paradox—that the Odyssey was composed by nobody in particular. They "specks it growed," like Topsy. Women are more frequently on the scene in Odyssey than Iliad. Domestic life and romantic adventure are its themes. This everyone admits. That the author did not know all about rudders we do not admit (p. 9). If she did not how did she acquire the technical terminology of ship-building? As to the axes through which Odysseus shoots, Mr. Butler will find sketches of ancient axes through which anyone could shoot in the notes to a prose translation. It is not a case of female ignorance. As to the a priori difficulty of a lady poet Mr. Butler cites several in later Greece. But a poet in heroic Greece—whether he or she "wrote" or not—did not write for a reading public. The profit came from the author's oral recitations. There is no lady reciter in the Odyssey, any more than in the Iliad. Demodocus recites, not Nausicaa.

After a sketch of his general ideas, Mr. Butler gives his theory of the Homeric house. It is rather like Mr. Lang's conjecture, but Mr. Butler thinks that the Megaron was unroofed. Else how could Athena fly up out of it into air? On one occasion she was not under a roof, on the other there is a crux in the Greek; nor are Mr. Butler's other arguments more convincing on this point. Mr. Butler next abridges the story, in language grotesquely commonplace and of the modern suburb. He then comes to the "Preponderance of Women," who "run" the men, as he says. Thus the returned Odysseus will on no account entrust his secret to a woman. "The men are mechanical." Odysseus is mechanical! "Men cannot draw women without laughing at them." Witness Helen, Andromache, Hecuba, Lady Macbeth, Imogen, Amelia, and so on. Brides come first in Hades, not men, and women play a great part in Hades, therefore a woman is the author. Was The Eoiai written by a woman? "Ulysses, Alcinoos, Menelaus, and Nestor are all so like one another." There is no use in arguing against such criticism as this.

"Let them have it as they please, Geese are swans and swans are geese."

The Iliad "was written with an eye to money." There is no mention of money in either poem. Why are the wooers not jealous of each other? Because their real aim is "thigging and sorning." Helen is penitent in the Odyssey. So she also is in the Iliad, which is not by a woman. There is "jealousy for a wife's rights" in the Odyssey, though Penelope does not complain of Circe and Calypso. There is also "jealousy for a wife's rights" in the Iliad, in the story of Phoenix. "The Cyclops incident" is "impossible as a man's or a matron's writing." It is, of course, merely a dateless world-wide Märchen. Most of the aporiai apply as well to a man's as to a woman's work. The Sun left his cattle to the care of his daughters; so did Jacques d'Arc; so do Highlanders often. "Ulysses should have hugged Argus"—so a woman would think. Odysseus, however, was not minded to reveal his identity. The author of the Odyssey is not "a great poet" (p. 153). In Book XX. the sympathy with "a poor weakly woman" "suggests a female hand." Precisely the same sympathy occurs in the Iliad, and Mr. Butler may look for a similar passage in Barbour's Brave. Only a woman would make the wooers fail to use the axes in the hall at the massacre. The wooers had swords, and did not need axes. Nor could they come to close quarters. This kind of argument might be produced endlessly.

In comparing Iliadic with Odyssean passages—to prove that the author of the Odyssey knew the Iliad—it is necessary not to reckon the "runs" (as they are called in Gaelic poetry) which are common to, and probably much older than, either poem. "Runs" describe incidents of common occurrence, common modes of address. They are found in Maori, as in Greek and Gaelic narratives, and are adapted to various occasions. Perhaps Mr. Butler has no great comparative knowledge of the subject. Putting the Odyssey in the eleventh century, Mr. Butler credits the author with knowing the Cyclic poems, usually dated much later. Obviously the author of the Odyssey may have known, not the Cyclic poems, but the traditions on which these were based. Mr. Butler does not know whence his own grandfather (in 1813) got the idea of the Chorizontes. Why not from the Chorizontes?

Into Mr. Butler's topography about Trapani we do not enter; there are interesting points, but Trapani has no river, as Phaeacia had. His "authoress" lived in Sicily. Be it so; if it pleases him. His aporiai are his best things, and show in him a truly Teutonic taste and humour. We do not gather that he knows Willamowitz Möllendorf at first hand. He will find him eminently sympathetic. But the learned German is no master of the New Humour, and does not render the immortal words of Homer into the English of Bayswater. "Calypso wanted to marry him"—pray compare the liquid words of the Greek. "The Ethiopians lie in two halves, one half looking on to the Atlantic, and the other on to the Indian Ocean." Homer mentions neither of these seas; Mr. Butler might as well write "looking on to Margate Harbour and Pegwell Bay." The book is a freak, and a freak not in the best taste. Mr. Butler had better finish his "secular oratorio" (or comic opera?) of Ulysses; or if he must write about Homer, he should acquire more knowledge of the early epics of the world, and un peu de goût.

CHARLES THE GREAT.

Charles the Great. By Thomas Hodgkin. "Foreign Statesmen" Series. (Macmillan & Co.)

THE rapid manufacture of new "series" sometimes looks too much like a publisher's attempt to palm off on an easily gullible public a number of indifferent books by tempting it with a few that are sure to be of considerable merit. But a series may be held to justify itself if it is the means whereby a writer of acknowledged authority is induced to popularise the subject of his study. Now, the period of Charlemagne is slightly later than the period which we have hitherto associated with Dr. Hodgkin's name; but this little book must only be an anticipation of what the author intends to tell the world in due course at greater length. It is doubtful whether the publishers or the editor of this particular series of "Foreign Statesmen" had sufficiently made up their minds as to the exact class of readers for whom they were catering. History is not systematically taught at English schools; but the outlines of English history are now demanded for so many examinations that a smattering of it may be presupposed in any reader of intelligence. But the history of foreign countries stands on quite a different footing, and, although the names of the statesmen comprised in this series are familiar enough—Richelieu, William the Silent, Charles the Great—no sufficient outline knowledge of the times in which they lived can be taken for granted. Of such a series, then, simplicity should be the general note; and the more remote from our own day lies the subject of any particular volume in the series, the more incumbent is it on the author to handle it with a directness that should leave no essential point unexplained. But Dr. Hodgkin writes far too much as a student for other students. The casual reader who has once read his Gibbon will lay down this Life of Charlemagne with a sense of the confusion rather than of the greatness of the subject with which it has essayed to deal. In a certain sense it is a good and careful piece of work, written from a knowledge both of the original authorities and of the chief modern writers. No side of the subject is left untouched, and a very fair proportion is preserved between its several parts. Moreover, there is an elaborate introduction of some eighty pages, for which in his preface Dr. Hodgkin rightly pleads justification. But he has not sufficiently remembered that his book is bound to fall into the hands of many who are not systematic students of history. For such, the few pages of introductory matter devoted to the general features of the situation should have been many: the purely historical part should have been dismissed in the briefest possible space. In fact, the preliminary matter, which, in the case of such a period, was necessarily large, should have taken the form of an essay. The four chapters into which it is thrown choke us with details before we reach the subject of the book.

The forms of Charlemagne's activity were so numerous, that when we reach his life we must expect to be immersed in details. Separate chapters are devoted to his relations with the Saxons, the Saracens, the Avars. The fall of the Lombard monarchy, the relations with the Eastern Empire, and the assumption of the Western Empire form the subjects of three other chapters. In scarcely any other way is it possible to set forth the many-sided work of the great Charles. But Dr. Hodgkin writes far too much with his eyes fixed on the page of the chronicler. We miss that grasp of the whole situation, that subtle connexion of cause and effect, that interpretation of actions and unravelling of motives, which make us feel the permanent importance of the subject we are studying and the reality of the characters, whether they happen to have lived in the ninth century or in the nineteenth.

For the general reader, then, this volume will probably be too hard a nut to crack. On the other hand, the historical student of the eighth and ninth centuries will find much real help. The author takes us not infrequently to the very words of his authority: he makes us feel the confused nature of the period and its imperfect civilisation. We are given just enough of the contemporary legends to enable us to understand something of the prevailing intellectual atmosphere. On one or two of the most disputed historical questions Dr. Hodgkin expresses an opinion of his own. Thus, instead of explaining away the words of Charles's celebrated confirmation of Pippin's grant to the Pope in 774, he declares his own impression to be, "that at least the hand of the interpolator, if not that of the wholesale fabricator, must have been at work in the passage" on which the Papal advocates rely. Again, with regard to the attitude of Charles towards his own imperial coronation, Dr. Hodgkin's conclusion is, "that Charles, though he accepted the imperial crown, accepted it with genuine reluctance, and that he was the passive approver rather than the active and ambitious contriver of the great revolution of 800." The account of the literary coterie at Charles's court is interesting—it could hardly be otherwise; and the well-known picture which Eginhard draws of his master's appearance and habits is reproduced in full. There is an interesting note at the end of the book, dealing approvingly with the doubt which has been thrown upon Otto III.'s alleged opening of the tomb of Charlemagne. There are also two useful genealogies of Charles's ancestors and of his family. Far more indispensable to our mind is a map, and for that we look in vain. Few libraries possess a reliable historical atlas. Until the issue of Mr. Poole's maps is completed, there is no English atlas that can be recommended. On the whole, then, while Dr. Hodgkin has done a good piece of work, the ordinary reader will still go for his knowledge of the "Dark Ages" to Dean Church's admirable "Beginning of the Middle Ages," or to Mr. Oman's succinct study of Europe between 476—918. But although the English life of Charles the Great still remains to be written, the careful student will be glad of Dr. Hodgkin's help.

VICTORIAN LITERATURE.

The Masters of Victorian Literature, 1837-1897. By Richard D. Graham. (Edinburgh: Thin.)

THE following extract is from Mr. Graham's Introductory Retrospect:

"To an extent never before known in its history, there is manifest a tendency to judge literary productions not so much by their intrinsic value, as by the pecuniary possibilities involved in them. . . . But it may be hoped that somehow, before the degradation of letters goes too far, it may be found possible, if not by an English Academy of Letters, then by some other device, for works of the highest genius, made to live and not to sell, to receive the stamp of national approval or reward."

After this devout expression of faith the reader turns with zest to the succeeding pages, glad to hope that here at last is a historian of literature who is going to apply a higher test than that of the market-place. But he finds an extraordinary contrast between profession and performance. A single fact will at once illuminate Mr. Graham's theory of letters and indicate the nature of the book. To Walter Pater—that master of so many disciples—six words are devoted; to Mr. Hall Caine nearly as many pages. Perhaps we may best indicate what are Mr. Graham's real tests of merit by quoting three typical pieces of information given about one who is evidently his favourite novelist:

1. "As a novelist Mr. Hall Caine has known few, if any, of the difficulties and pangs of publication. Almost from the first it has been his good fortune to have rival publishers bidding against each other for the privilege of producing his works. [So much for Mr. Graham's contempt of pecuniary possibilities.]

2. "It was in the early part of his career, while he was still pruning his wings for flight, that he made the acquaintance of Dante Gabriel Rossetti. At a time when he was fast losing his hold on life, Mr. Hall Caine was one of several who gave him the benefit of their sympathy and companionship. [There is more in the same strain—not a syllable to indicate Rossetti's generous patronage of the youth whom he took to be his private secretary.]

3. "The work upon which Mr. Hall Caine is understood to have spent the greatest amount of pains and labour is a Life of Christ, which still, however, remains unfinished because it has hitherto failed to attain the high standard of excellence at which the author has aimed."

Comment upon this would be superfluous, but there are a few more facts that only need setting down to make the nature of this book fully apparent. Among poets Mr. Robert Buchanan figures as a master, and has a long notice all to himself. Other masters include Lord de Tabley, Mr. Norman Gale, Mr. Alfred Austin, and Mr. J. Davidson; let it not be thought we are denying genuine merit by instancing them thus, but we venture to think not one of those enumerated would countenance the attempt to rank them as masters, while singers at least as great and genuine as themselves—Coventry Patmore, Mr. Bridges, Mr. Henley, Mr. George Meredith, Sir Edwin Arnold—are dumped into one paragraph as "other poets." Our wonder is that Martin Tupper does not appear. It seems that he is neither a master nor one of the "other poets."

But the omissions in this book are astonishing. Miss Corelli has a place, but Mrs. Henry Wood is forgotten; here is Miss Braddon, but not "Ouida." Laurence Oliphant is ignored and also Mrs. Norton. Not once does the author fix on a little-known book and say, "Here is a work that was neglected, but that approached genius." We might give "A Trivial Woman's Misfortune" as an example. All the members of the new Scotch school appear as masters, but Captain Marryat, Mr. James Payn, Mr. Baring-Gould, and Mrs. F. A. Steel—to take but a few names—are only "other novelists." Surely, in face of these facts, we need not accentuate the contrast between Mr. Graham's actual history and the profession of faith by which it is prefaced.

CHRISTMAS BOOKS.

Sir Toady Lion. By S. R. Crockett. (Wells, Gardner, Darton & Co.)

MR. CROCKETT has made here a small kailyard for children. When we say small we do not refer to bulk. It is a story of nearly four hundred large pages, or rather above the size of an ordinary six-shilling novel. But the scenes and figures of his other stories are all reduced to miniature size here. Instead of bearded warriors, there are children and "smutchies," and gipsies; instead of carnage, battles of boys. The thing is interesting as an exhibition, alike of the merits and demerits, of Mr. Crockett. It has the briskness and energy and story-telling faculty that made his work always interesting to look at, and it has the imitative quality to which his early success was due. Not only "The Gospel of Dasht-mean," but the whole of the "business" it leads up to, is pure Barrie. Sir Toady Lion—the name is a child's mispronunciation of Cœur de Lion—is very obviously one of Helen's babies. All the same, he is a charming little chap—the best in the book—and would have been excellent but that the author persists in filling his mouth with witticisms that belong to mature age. For example, the following moralisation—and there are heaps like it—would be more natural in the mouth of Alfred Jingle, Esq., than in that of a child of five:

"'Money,' said Toady Lion thoughtfully, 'well, dere's the money that you get gived you, and wot Janet says you muss put all in your money-box. That's no good! Money-box locked! Janet keeps money-box. "Get money when you are big," she sez—rubbage, I fink—shan't want it then; lots and lots in trouser pocket then—gold and sixpences and fings."

That is neither childish thought nor childish language. But all the characters are precocious. It seems to us a pity that Mr. Crockett could not get through without making his boys and girls fall in love and kiss and languish just as the heroes and heroines of his ordinary novels do. Sound, healthy-minded boys and girls can play together without thinking of anything of the kind. For that matter, we hope they would not deliberately set to work reading a novel of this immense size. At any rate, those fathers and mothers who know the importance of cultivating taste in reading will reject Sir Toady. The dialect is not so coarse as Mr. Crockett can produce, but the glittering English between is full of those faults one would teach them to avoid.

Aaron in the Wildwoods. By Joel Chandler Harris. (Harper & Brothers.)

FROM internal evidence we judge this book to be a sequel or companion volume to another work called The Story of Aaron. This we have not read, but hope to; for Aaron is a treasure. He knew the language of beasts, and could tame a wild stallion with a word, and when the bloodhounds were after him—Aaron being a runaway slave—the swamp wherein he dwelt in hiding rose to the occasion and preserved him. The White Grunter and the Brindled Steer behaved perfectly. Mr. Harris's ambition seems to have been the provision of a "Jungle Book" for American children—hence the swamp. Instead of Mowgli, we have Aaron the Arab. But though Mr. Harris has made a good story he has not made so good a one as he might have done. There is a tiresome Abolitionist tutor, and there is negro talk which is not funny (which coming from the author of Uncle Remus is almost a criminal offence), and there are tantalising references to Brer Rabbit and Brer Coon which lead to nothing—all of which means that Mr. Joel Chandler Harris is not quite the whole-hearted writer for children that he ought to be. None the less, we like Aaron in the Wildwoods a good deal; but we like the illustrations to it (with the exception of the Pain Goblin) not at all.

Red Apple and Silver Bells. By Hamish Hendry. (Blackie.)

MR. HAMISH HENDRY writes the very daintiest and simplest of child-verse, so dainty and so simple that we know not whether parents or children will like the book best. Perhaps this is for the parents:

"It was a little Child
Who from her cot had crept,
And in the dawn she smiled,
While yet her mother slept.

Smiled at the curtained chink
To see the wondrous Snow;
Her widened Eyes a-wink,
Her morning Face aglow.

"Breathless she gazed upon
This Magic of the night;
Her old black World had gone
And sent this World of white."

And this for the children:

Have you met Sammie,
Sammie the sly?
He is the Lad who can prowl and pry;
He prowls for the Pudding, peeps for the Pie—
Sammie the sly!

Have you met Tammie,
Tammie the sleek?
He is the Lad who can play the Sneak;
He plots all the Mischief and looks so meek—
Tammie the sleek!

"Sammie and Tammie
Are always Twins;
One in their nature, two in their sins;
Where the one stops, there the other begins—
The ugly Twins!"

Miss Alice Woodward's illustrations are very unequal. Those to the two poems quoted are charming. So are the little boy and girl who dance over hearts at the beginning. But many of her more ambitious designs are strangely ill-composed, full of crudely simplified or unexplained detail, and of tortured decoration. And the curious granular shadows which she affects are a very unpleasing convention.

Fairy Tales from the Far North. By P. C. Asbjørnsen. Translated by H. L. Brækstad. (Nutt.)

THE children are likely to give this book a very hearty welcome. It consists of a series of the most delightful fairy tales from Norway, that land where the supernatural still lingers. Some, of course, are very old friends, and have been read in the pages of Hans Andersen, Grimm, and Perrault; but even they have a flavour of the North, as if the author had gathered the variants from the lips of his neighbours. And the translator deserves congratulation on the success with which his work is done. He does not always attain the same level, but more than once his rendering is divinely felicitous. We might take "The Lad with the Beer Keg" as an example, and but for its length would quote it in justification of praise that may seem extravagant. The subject itself is a singular mixture of the gruesome, the humorous, and the fantastical. But the story is related, as all fairy tales should be, in the matter-of-fact, unconcerned, supremely natural style that pays no heed to the auditor's reflection any more than to the credibility of the story. God, the Devil, and Death come after the beer in the intimate and familiar, yet not irreverent, manner in which we can imagine they used to figure in an Easter play or a Christmas mumming. And the racy colloquialism is maintained without recourse to slang or its equivalent. The English is very pure as well as being simple and familiar. We have alluded only to one story, but dozens might be quoted. In many the usages of modern life are introduced into the stories in a manner that seems to show that the Norwegians believe as sincerely in trolls and fairies as ever they did. Nor would it be fair to omit from mention the very clever illustrations. They are the original pictures made by three Norwegian artists—E. Weren-skiöld, T. Kittelsen, and O. Sinding. It might perhaps be objected that they are too clever and original for children; but the book is likely to be often referred to, and a picture is none the worse for being able to bear a third or a fourth scrutiny. Nor does it after all demand a very mature judgment to recognise the character that beams from the three troll faces on p. 15, or the brightness and humour in nearly every cut. The book deserves the very highest recommendation.

The Wallypug in London. By G. E. Farrow. (Methuen & Co.)

THE publishers describe this as an "Extravaganza for Children, written with great charm and vivacity," but it begins soberly enough with a Jubilee Poem, which the author calls a "Chant Royal." After that we come to a medley of prose and verse in the style of Alice in Wonderland. It seems intended to cheer the homes of ill-prospering literary men. At all events, no children, except those of a downtrodden author, could understand Mr. Farrow's witty mockery of the publisher, the "publishes" and the half-profits system. We hope that not even they are so preternaturally clever and up-to-date as to be able to feel the point of the other satire—that, for instance, which is directed against strikes and labour movements. Luckily, it is not all so very “topical.” Of the pure fun, or what is meant for fun, the following is a brilliant example:

“’Twill be the truth, for man and wife
Are one, I beg to state;
This fact’s as clear as 4/4,
Or 2/6 make eight.”

On the whole, we imagine that it would be possible to devise a more screaming amusement for Christmas than that of reading the adventures of the Wallypug. Mr. Farrow is too clever for the bairns, not quite clever enough for their elders.

“DUMPY BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.” — The Flamp, the Ameliorator, and the Schoolboy’s Apprentice. By E. V. Lucas. (Grant Richards.)

MR. LUCAS is evidently fond of children, and he has taken great pains to please them. There is much, both of humour and fancy, in this tiny volume that they will enjoy; but also, alas! there is a good deal that they will not appreciate, and something that they will fight shy of. Mr. Lucas seems to have set out with the double purpose of writing delightful nonsense after the fashion of Edward Lear and Lewis Carroll, and of insinuating, in the garb of fiction, wholesome truth. Possibly he has a theory that children do not, after all, mind a moral so much as they are supposed to, and possibly he is right. In any case, in two, at least, of these stories the moral is rampant; and, in certain passages, Mr. Lucas forgets his audience. “The Flamp” collects the poisoned meat spread for its destruction and deposits it upon the doorstep of the sanitary inspector. Surely this is meaningless to the child mind, for which the official responsible for the cleanliness of the town is not the sanitary inspector, but the visible dustman. Nevertheless, this story of “The Flamp,” which Tilas and Tobene pursue with sympathy, is an original and pleasing fiction. It is much the best thing in the book.

More Beasts (for Worse Children). By H. B. and B. T. B. (Edward Arnold.)

THE full significance of this title will be apparent only to those that remember The Bad Child’s Book of Beasts, a work of humour, by the same gentlemen, to which the ACADEMY gave a welcome last winter. This is a sequel. We cannot praise it as we praised its fore-runner: the fun is less effervescent; the versification is more elaborate and self-conscious; while the drawings have lost in drollery, although B. T. B., the artistic member of the firm, is conspicuously the better man this year. Again, the shape of the book is less interesting: it has become long and unwieldy, whereas the earlier volume was compact and upright. The new Beasts are the Python and the Welsh Mutton, the Porcupine and the Crocodile, the Vulture and the Bison, the Viper and the Llama, the Mammoth, the Chamœis, and the Microbe. The only verses worthy to rank with those in The Bad

Child’s Book of Beasts are those appertaining to the Python (which contains the matchless line—

“I had an Aunt in Yucatan”) and the Welsh Mutton. We quote the latter in full:

“The Cambrian Welsh or Mountain Sheep
Is of the Ovine race,
His conversation is not deep,
But then—observe his face!”

Incidentally, we would remind H. B. that it is no fun to a child to have new words like Tuptophilist, one that loves to strike (from τυπτω = I strike, and φίλω-ω = I love), invented for it.

Cherriwink: A Fairy Story. By Rachel Penn. (John Macqueen.)

RACHEL PENN—it is not safe to say Miss or Mrs. Penn—allegorises us thus into her narrative:

“One lovely summer day, not so many years ago, a Pen went out for a walk in this England of ours, which the fairies call the other side of Fairy Land. . . . The Pen had not gone far down the lane when he saw a harvest-mouse sitting on a toadstool nibbling a nut.”

This mouse is Cherriwink, whose adventures form the story. We wish for our part that Rachel Penn had not been so self-conscious, and let it out so plainly that conversing mice and good fairies and her supernatural machinery are plain make-believe. Why could she not begin in the ancient way—“Long, long ago, my dears, there lived a harvest-mouse, and his name was Cherriwink”? But she fears the miraculous more than a little, and the interest of her story lies mainly in the very realistic studies introduced sideways, such, for example, as the sketch of the miserly cheesemonger and his wife. Rachel Penn has a lively fancy when she gives us a bit of elfdom, a keen eye when she paints the manners of grocers. But her book would have been more agreeable if she had stuck more rigidly to one side or the other, given fairy-lore for the children or a novel for the elders. It is so good, one is vexed that it is not better.

The Garden of Delight. By Netta Syrett. Illustrated by Nellie Syrett. (Hurst & Blackett.)

THE frontispiece of the book, you find after reading it, is typical of the contents. It represents a fair and stately prince with an equally fair and stately princess, and both clothed æsthetically in mediæval garments (though the gentleman has a very modern walking-stick), and they pass a lawn, whereon are peacocks and well-clipped bushes and a regular row of tree-trunks and steps ascending to a terrace. The tale that follows appears to be partly, or wholly, symbolical—though we stayed not to puzzle out the meaning—and has the aroma of roses, the atmosphere of the forest, though the scene is laid in fairydom. There are nine other tales very like The Garden of Delight, nine other full-page illustrations wherein the figures have features very similar to those of the lady and gentleman in the frontispiece. Taken altogether, the book is a pleasant one, without being extraordinary. The authoress writes well, and has a lively imagination, and her inclination to over-stateliness and austerity is held in check by an evident aim at being natural, and a certain humour that, without being pronounced, is genuine and attractive.

Nursery Rhymes. Illustrated by F. D. Bedford. (Methuen & Co.)

MR. BEDFORD is a decorative artist, gifted with a delicate colour-sense and a quaint and pretty fancy; but we cannot consider that he is in his right place as an illustrator for children. The child world which he offers us between these covers—the world of his own invention—will have for some adult minds fascination enough, but we fail quite to see children themselves interested in it. Children want a more dramatic, more humorous, draughtsman. Mr. Bedford’s imagination is, in these pictures, at once too quiet and too serious. He has been more eager to make a picture than to amuse the young critic. For example, in his drawing of Miss Muffet the spider is almost invisible; his Little Boy Blue has no horn to blow; his blacksmith’s smithy is without sparks. The child must have either drama or fun. We can imagine that many parents will wish to frame Mr. Bedford’s pictures, but that should not be the end of a book issued nominally for children.

The First Book of Krab. By His Honour Judge Parry. (David Nutt.)

To the friends of Katawampus and Butter Scotia, the two high-spirited, mirthful works with which Judge Parry has already enriched the nursery libraries of England, The First Book of Krab will be welcome. Our old acquaintances—Tomakin and his sisters—appear again; while the excellent Pater again offers selections from his Book of Rhymes, which some day Sir John Bridge should set to music as a companion volume to his songs from Katawampus. The First Book of Krab consists of five short stories, strung upon one thread; best of which we like “Butterwops,” the tale of a beetle. Beetles make very suitable actors in a whimsical story for children. We quite agree with Jimmy, the youthful cockroach, who describes the narrative of Butterwops and the Hedgehog as being “fit to be written in letters of treacle on the skirting-boards of Time.”

Zig-Zag Fables. Pictured by J. A. Shepherd. (Gardner, Darton & Co.)

MR. SHEPHERD’S drawings are well known. The inimitable “Barn Dance,” which he once contributed to Punch, is historic, and his grotesques to accompany Mr. Morrison’s “Zig-Zags at the Zoo” found many admirers. In this book we are offered colours (printed, of course, abroad), but Mr. Shepherd’s work gains nothing thereby. He is as droll in line as he can be in any medium. The accompanying fables serve to suggest subjects, but beyond that we cannot esteem them. The superior efforts of Mr. George Washington Esop recur ever to mind. None the less, Zig-Zag Fables is a treasury of comic invention.

The Revelations of a Sprite. By A. M. Jackson. (Fisher Unwin.)

The Revelations of a Sprite were made to Lily Neville, with a note-book in her hand, at twelve o'clock. Lily's father was a journalist, and she had the instinct. The revelations comprised a brief natural history of elves, trolls, and fairies, and several illustrative stories. Mr. Jackson has a graceful fancy; but, to our mind, invented fairy tales, that were made instead of growing, are but insipid things.

Miss Mouse and her Boys. By Mrs. Molesworth. (Macmillan & Co.)

MRS. MOLESWORTH has long been a favourite in the schoolroom. Miss Mouse and her Boys, in which an unruly male family is tamed by the advent of an unselfish little girl, has all the old charm, the wholesome moral tone, the delicacy of art. The three boys—Justin, Pat, and Archie—as well as Miss Mouse herself, are capitally done.

The Giant Crab, and Other Tales from Old India. Retold by W. H. D. Rouse. (David Nutt.)

THESE stories, which bear a suspicious resemblance to fables, or gilded pills, have been adapted by their author from the Fāṭuḥa—that curious collection of Buddhist lore. Mr. Rouse, who is a Pāli scholar of repute, is to be thanked for rescuing so much for the benefit of children; although, as we have said, the bulk of this book is a shade too didactic to be received with unmixed enthusiasm. Mr. Rouse's narrative style has, however, plenty of vivacity, and Mr. W. Robinson's drawings are always simple and pertinent, and often exceedingly droll.

Various.—The Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge is sending out prize books and children's story books in battalions. Following a large batch of notices by us last week, we have Mr. Merriman's Godchild, by H. Louisa Bedford, a story laid in a country village and ending with wedding-bells; Beside the Guns, by May E. Shipley, a tale of Christian life with a bearing on the African mission-field; and Goals and Tries, by V. Brooke-Hunt. The last is a football story, written in the interests of the purity and manliness of English games. The Homeward Voyage is a boys' book of adventure, by Harry Collingwood, and concerns the voyage of The Fiery Cross from Melbourne to London, laden with gold, and carrying passengers whose true character comes out on the voyage with startling results.

Other books for the young worthy of mention are: The Story of Edison, by Frank Mundell (Jarrold & Son), a brightly written sketch of Edison's life and his inventions. Wee Doggie, by Elizabeth C. Traice (Nelson & Sons), is the biography of a little Irish terrier who is thrown over a garden wall at Hampstead, and falls metaphorically, if not literally, "on his feet." His adventures are many; he is stolen and dyed, is recovered, and again lost and found; but he redeems the follies of his youth by a noble act, and settles down to a quiet life—an example of fidelity to his friends. Three Comely Maids and their Affairs, by Mary L. Pendred (Hutchinson & Co.), is a pleasantly written account of the struggles of three girls. We fear, however, that the editor who offers Chris Payne a permanent place on his staff of writers, apparently on the strength of a single contribution, is not often found in real life.

FOR THE BOY.

PICTURESQUE titles and eloquent covers are an aid to classification. First, in the shiny gilt-edged group before us, comes, of course, the class

MARITIME.

With the exception of handsome reprints of those always delightful books, The Three Commanders and The Three Admirals (Griffith, Farran, & Browne), this batch has treasure for its objective. None of them falls below a reasonable standard of workmanship. Here are their names: The Island of Gold, by Dr. Gordon Stables (Nelson); The Vanished Yacht, by E. Harcourt Burrage (Nelson); The Gold Ship, by F. M. Holmes (Sampson Low); and For Treasure Bound, by Harry Collingwood (Griffith, Farran, & Browne).

Mr. Collingwood's seems to me the best; but, like the others, it is overcrowded with incident—the like of which is familiar to every reading boy before Confirmation. What lays hold upon the imagination particularly is a delightfully incomprehensible description of the lines and fittings of a dear little schooner in which a nice lad, with only one sailor for a crew, sailed everywhere in search of treasure and his father. There is a splendid running fight with a pirate, and many other adventures. The end of the story is marred by the entry of a quite superfluous girl.

THE YOUNG GENTLEMAN OF SPIRIT

has his fling in Dr. Burleigh's Boys, by Charles Edwardes (Griffith, Farran, & Browne). "Visions of burning Calcutta House and putting Dr. Burleigh on the rack" inspired them, and they came surprisingly near to the fulfilment of their dreams. Mr. Avory calls his Soldiers of the Queen (Nelson) "a story of the dash to Khartoum," but in reality it belongs to the same category. Schooldays are the important part of it, and he pays more attention to the development of character than is usual in books of this class. The principal boy falls into unmerited dishonour, and goes to Khartoum as a private. The story seems quite spirited and readable. The Battledown Twins are two pairs and an odd one, and Mrs. Everett-Green is responsible for them. They are extraordinarily good boys who masquerade as villains. They have two lovely ponies and such perfectly buttoned gaiters as, alas! one has never seen at home. The same indefatigable writer gives us two "Costume" stories—A Clerk of Oxford (Nelson) and Tom Tufston's Travels (same publisher). The former is a tale of the Barons' War; the second, the adventures of a young county squire in the London of Queen Anne. Three books in one year! The first time that Miss Green produces one book that represents three years' work we shall examine it very hopefully. As to these books, they are good, but not good enough. Here is a nice phrase upon which we opened Mr. Manville Fenn's Frank and Saxon (S.P.C.K.), a story of the days of Queen Elizabeth: "'I never think about' my hurts 'at all,' said the boy proudly. 'It is only like having a big cut finger somewhere else.'" It is full of fighting, and the fighting is various and comprehensive. The Golden Galleon (Blackie), by Robert Leighton, comprises an account of Lord Thomas Howard's expedition against the West India treasure-ships, in which the author follows Sir Walter Raleigh's report closely, and it might be expected to make a fellow hold his breath; besides, there is plenty of rattling adventure ashore. In the same period is set Mr. Bennett's story, Master Skylark (Macmillan), but the atmosphere is more peaceful. The boy hero, for the sake of his sweet voice, is stolen from his home at Stratford by the master-player of the Lord High Admiral's players. Mr. Bennett tells of his adventures in this merry company, of how he sings before the Queen, and of how, forsaking his triumphs, he wanders home to Stratford. There is some sort of literary conscience about Mr. Bennett, and he has contrived to write a story that is picturesque and charming beyond what is common. Mr. Griffith, in his Knights of the White Rose (White), brings us down to a later era—to the scene of the last serious effort of the last Stuart king to win back his own. The scene is Ireland, and the Battle of the Boyne is the pivot of the story. The hero comes at last into contact with the Stadtholder, and the figure of William is touched in rather skilfully. With this batch it is somewhat of a licence, perhaps, to class The King's Story Book (Constable). It is a sort of anthology of historical romance and drama, comprising passages from Shakespeare, Scott, Lytton, Ainsworth, Kingsley, Thackeray, and Charlotte Brontë, among others. The passages are arranged in chronological order, so as to form a sort of literary cinematograph, and among them are many passages which thrilled us in the days when such an experience was more frequent. The book is 500 pages long, and is rather nicely illustrated.

With Crockett and Bowie, by Kirk Munro (Blackie), is a story of the Texan war of independence, which seems to have been decided principally by the prowess of a youth named Rex and the preternatural sagacity of his horse. It is the kind of story that the next generation probably will see turned out by machinery. Very much better is Mr. Whishaw's White Witch of the Matabele (Griffith, Farran, & Browne)—a story of an English boy who grows to manhood among a tribe of natives.

THE ACADEMY FICTION SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1897.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

THE NIGGER OF THE "NARCISSUS."

BY JOSEPH CONRAD.

This is a book for men. It is about the crew of the Narcissus, and what happened to that crew during a certain cruise. Nothing is slurred. The characters are presented ruthlessly, vigorously. They speak sailor's speech. As thus: "Donkin said, 'You put no more weight on the rope than a bloody sparrer.'" The action passes at sea. There is not so much as the hint of a petticoat in the pages. When all is over the author apostrophises the crew thus: "As good a crowd as ever fisted with wild cries the beating canvas of a heavy foresail; or tossing aloft, invisible in the night, gave back yell for yell to a westerly gale." (Heinemann. 259 pp. 6s.)

AMONG THORNS.

BY NOEL AINSLIE.

An earlier work of this author is An Erring Pilgrimage. In this book we are in the thick of modern life, in what now passes for Bohemia. Some of the characters: Peggy, who begins by being simply a landlady's daughter and ends—differently; Paul Eden, an engineer; Jack Graham, an artist; Miss Meynell, who writes for the Decade. This lady, whose Christian name is Lesbia, is the central figure. People who care for a study of the temperament of a woman-journalist should like the story, but it has too many unsatisfied lovers for some tastes. (Lawrence & Bullen. 319 pp. 6s.)

DEBORAH OF TOD'S.

BY MRS. HENRY DE LA PASTURE.

Deborah is a beautiful Devonshire farmer, and Tod's is the name of her farm, and the story is of her adventures in London and in love. Deborah's aunt, says Deborah, once "did beg me never to buy novels and such trash"; and we honour the old lady for it. Mrs. De La Pasture's story does not, however, come under that heading: for it is bright and entertaining, and Deborah is a fine creation, finely drawn. Her simplicity in the midst of artificiality and insincerity is most winning. (Smith, Elder & Co. 392 pp. 6s.)

SOME WESTERN FOLK.

BY MABEL QUILLER-COUCH.

Fifteen short stories of Cornish people. Miss Quiller-Couch might be called the Cornish Miss Wilkins. She has skill in treating a pathetic or lowly subject, also a pretty gift of tenderness and an acceptable sense of humour. This is a quiet and charming book. (Horace Marshall & Son. 200 pp. 3s. 6d.)

FLORA MACDONALD.

BY J. GORDON PHILLIPS.

The testimony of the title-page establishes Mr. Phillips as the author of five novels and "&c., &c." We know them not. Their names suggest that they, like the book before us, are Caledonian. Flora Macdonald is "a romance of the '45," and it is long and tedious. The author should know that it is not enough in a romance of the '45 to say that a thing happened—we must see the thing happening. A less dramatic story one could hardly imagine. (Digby, Long & Co. 312 pp. 6s.)

A MODERN MERIBALE.

BY GERALDINE KEMP.

This is an awful book. It means so well and is so terrible. The hero is a perfect man—Salvator—"as powerful in stature as in character," and he wears "a kingly look about him," and the face of one who had been permitted to lift the veil from some of the mysteries of God. Rites and ceremonies follow, and a novice is initiated, and Salvator prays in capital letters, and—well—the more one reads the more one is bemused. The writer should write no more. (Skeffington & Son. 216 pp. 3s. 6d.)

REVIEWS.

Dariel. By R. D. Blackmore.
(Blackwood & Sons.)

Writers of romance who choose to tell their stories vicariously, in the person of another, should be watchful to make their spokesman attractive. If we do not like the wielder of the first-person-singular it is almost certain that we shall not like his narrative. Dariel is a proof of this remark. Mr. Blackmore has invented for his hero and mouthpiece a young man, George Cranleigh, who is almost always objectionable and often unbearable. Not that he transgresses laws of decency: on the contrary, he is a model of the virtues; but, alas! he is also a prig. A smuggler youth has rarely put pen to paper. Whether Mr. Blackmore thinks him an ideal Briton or is conscious of his shortcomings, we are not prepared to say. Nor does it matter. The serious thing is that the fellow's personality is stamped on nearly every page of Dariel, and we do not care for it.

It is ungracious to say hard things of Mr. Blackmore, and we are loth to do so; but he sometimes exasperates us beyond words. He so persistently plays about on the road instead of walking straightforwardly. In a romance we want deeds, and instead we are here put off with jocosities and irrelevant personal opinions and hints of entertainment that will arrive a chapter or so ahead. The story is of royal refugees from the Caucasus, who are plotting in a Surrey mill; of the love of a young English squireen for the daughter of Súr Imar, the Leeghian prince aforesaid; and of the campaign against Súr Imar's enemies, and the restitution of his rights—yet this kind of thing occurs and recurs:

"I followed him, for he was a leading man; and in little matters I submit my steps to theirs. Verily, on this occasion I did not walk amiss. For when we were in Jackson Stoneman's little crib, such a—any man of nous, with a big roof over his head, is fain to keep for his own better moments, there was something which no magnificence can bring home into the simple human breast. Who is the most delightful writer of our race, since Heaven took Shakespeare away in hot haste, when his hand was too close on the Tree of Life? The answer, although so long in coming, comes louder, as every year adds to the echo—'William Makepeace Thackeray.'"

That man of vast brain, with the fresh heart of a child, would have been pleased to see what I beheld; and his tender touch only could have touched it off. . . . Peeping in over the lid of the alcove, which had an enamel lining, I saw four partridges hung skilfully from hooks, with a swivel to each; so that every bird might revolve with zeal, or pause with proper feeling, as his sense of perfection and of duty bade him. While in the tray beneath them some clear brown gravy was simmering, with a beaded eddy where the basting touched. In and out among them the silver spoon was gliding, most skilfully and impartially administering a drop to each, as sweetly and fairly as their own dear mother did it in their happy nest."

The incident of the partridges is nothing in the story. But Mr. Blackmore, it may be objected, has earned the right to digress. True; but there is no harm in saying that we find the habit distressing. A book which bears the words Dariel: A Romance of Surrey on its title-page should be business-like.

Mr. Blackmore is forced into relevance towards the close, and we there have something brisker and more spirited; but he never seems to be quite in earnest. The sense of verisimilitude which John Ridd communicated is quite out of the reach of George Cranleigh. Here is the one stirring incident of the book. Súr Imar, bound a prisoner, is confronted by his long lost son:

"But betwixt their gaze a dark form leaped, quivering with fury, wild for blood, too ravenous for slaughter to have formed a proper plan of it. An this was a very lucky thing for me."

For while he danced between them thus, with his hateful face on fire, in the voluptuous choice of murder, there was time for me to leap out of my hole, and get my cramped limbs flexible; not a moment, however, for any kind of thought, and whatever I did was of instinct. What it was I know not, nor does anybody else; it can only be told in a whirl as it befell.

Hisar, I think, made a jump at Hafer, before he saw me, and smacked his face (as if he had been a child), and tried to snatch his sword, but was thrust back, and then drew his own, and flew with it at the shackled Imar's heart. But another was there—thank the Lord in Heaven—I caught the flame of Hisar's eyes on mine, as his blade went straight for Imar's breast, and dashed it into splinters with my toorak. Then he hurled the stump at me, drew his kinjal, and sprung, as if he were made of wings, at my breast. I stepped aside quicker than I ever moved at cricket, and as he passed me he ran against so hearty a whack upon his wicked temples that no more sin was concocted there.

Down he went, like a thistle at a ploughshare, and threw up his long legs, and lay dead, with a tuft of bloody moss between his teeth. I took the stump of his sword, which had struck me in the breast, and cut Sûr Imar free, and hurried him inside (for he was lost as in a vision), and stood with my revolver in the doorway, ready for the onset of the fighting men."

There is some good writing in the book, there is the old zest for the open air, for England's rural beauty, for strength and simplicity; but the reader must be endowed with more leisure and patience than has ever fallen to our lot, admirers and lovers of Mr. Blackmore though we be. The 505 pages of the story might well be 250.

* * * *

Secretary to Bayne, M.P. By W. Pett Ridge. (Methuen.)

This is a novel of incident rather than of character; but the incidents are amusing enough, and occasionally exciting. For Mr. Herbert Prince, who is really the heir to a potentate of the near East, comes to London with a view of investigating the life of the poorer classes of the still nearer East. To this end he becomes secretary to Bayne, M.P., and has many stirring adventures with Anarchists, with Netroff, an admirable scoundrel, and with a straw-hatted cockney blackmailer of a class which Mr. Pett Ridge knows to the finger-tips. Young women flit across the page—Jennie Maxwell and Olga Netroff—and love interest is not wanting to lighten the dark plots of Anarchic conspirators. But those who have followed Mr. Pett Ridge's work will look for their amusement to the comic relief, and that is plentiful. Herbert Prince, for example, knowing but one man in London, and dining at a small restaurant in Wardour-street, asks for a directory.

"A youth at the next table, who was diverting his companion to such an extent that she had had to loosen her jacket, remarked that the young gent apparently couldn't find the text he wanted.

"Oh, dear!" cried the amused young lady exhaustedly, "pon me word you are too setirical for anything. You take everybody off before any one else has time to think."

The directory contained a good many facts, but apparently not the information he desired. So he closed the huge red book, and, resting one elbow upon it, gazed steadily at the mirror before him.

"Thus endeth," said the humorous youth at the next table, "the first lesson."

"If you make me laugh any more," declared the young lady despairingly, "I shall have the heecups."

Mr. Pett Ridge has written so much of such dialogue, and written it so well, that he appears to have forgotten that it is not the universal speech of educated people. The speech of Jennie Maxwell's aunts—women of position—differs only in spelling from that of the young lady who feared the "heecups." For all that, Secretary to Bayne, M.P. is a brisk, entertaining book.

* * * *

Paul Mercer. By James Adderley.

(Arnold.)

Mr. Adderley has a wholesome dislike of the new-rich, the humbug, and the superior fool; moreover he has a theory of social reform to preach; so the 200 pages which make this book are scarcely quiet and sober reading. Paul Mercer is a millionaire, the grandson of a tramp, and the son of a soap-boiler, who is brought up on the marrow of Nonconformist divinity. After some really remarkable years at Eton and Oxford, he embarks—an atheist and a spendthrift—on a life of fashion. In a sort of haphazard way he drifts through Church congresses, slumming expeditions and revival meetings to the bosom of Christian Socialism. When his father dies, Paul, so to speak, upsets the whole apple-cart by turning the soap works into a sort of Cistercian brotherhood, where the operatives gallop about on horseback by way of recreation or dance round the maypole, have holidays five days a week, and fill up their scanty remaining time by attending the frequent services of the Cistercians. When the soap is made does not quite appear. Paul is undoubtedly a remarkable character, for he was in the habit of "fixing two beautiful sad eyes on his father, grasping the chair with one hand, crunching up the bank-notes with the other, and then beginning," &c. The lady he marries is no less noteworthy. This, for example, is one of the questions by which she showed her sense of the realities of life, when travelling on the Underground Railway. "Do you consider, Lucy, that one in every five of us here in this carriage will die in a prison, a workhouse, or a lunatic asylum?" We cordially agree with her, but we should have thought the proportion higher.

The author has so much that is honest and true in his purpose that one is loth to be severe. But, indeed, the book is not good, whatever way one looks at it. Its two main features are a chirpy facetiousness and a robustious sermonising, and it is hard to tell which is the more objectionable. The characterisation is grotesquely unreal. Paul, we are told, was a young man of enormous intellect, yet his purpose in life and his general style of argument suggest a softening brain. Father Bax, as obviously based on a well-known philanthropist, seems to us indefensible. Finally, Mr. Adderley's rhetorical solution of social difficulties appears in the highest degree crude and facile. Of course he may very well reply that our opinion is due to our hardness of heart, which answer is at least final and closes the discussion.

* * * *

A Daughter of Strife. By Jane Helen Findlater. (Methuen & Co.)

The success of Miss Findlater's book, The Green Graves of Balgowrie, made me turn to this book with considerable interest, but, alas! only to be disappointed. A Daughter of Strife is an incoherent book, loosely constructed, without form and void. It begins with the story of Anne Champion's mock marriage with Richard Meadows—an old theme, but one which may usually be expected to lead to exciting incidents. For a while all goes as one expects. Anne finds out that she has been tricked, and leaves Meadows. Her old lover, Sebastian Shepley, returns from the wars, learns how he has been betrayed, and vows vengeance. He and Meadows fight, and

"the whole had been ended, and ended with it there would also have been the larger half of this story, if an unaccountable impulse had not moved Sebastian Shepley to mercy. . . . 'There,' he said, 'you have your life at my hand, for all it may be worth,' and he turned away as if to leave the house."

This ends the first stage of Miss Findlater's story, and wipes out one of the principal characters—viz., Annie Champion. The rest is occupied with the loves of Meadows's illegitimate son by her and of Caroline Shepley, Sebastian's daughter. But Miss Findlater displays a fatal inability to distinguish between what is essential and what is incidental in her book. For example, a great many pages are wasted in the description of Sebastian's wife, whose character has no bearing whatever upon the story, and who dies, indeed, while its chief character—Caroline, "the daughter of strife"—is still in infancy. Nor is the story she has to tell in itself a very interesting one. There is no logical sequence in the events. Richard Meadows (the father) is murdered, and Philip (the son by Anne Champion) is accused of the murder, tried somewhat cursorily, and convicted. He escapes the hangman by consenting to submit to a surgical operation at the hands of Sebastian Shepley. This is a sufficiently gruesome termination to a story, but it is also a somewhat futile one; for, after Philip's hand has been amputated, the real murderer, being in extremis, confesses his guilt. There is a specious affectation of realistic methods about this which is quite out of place in a romance.

SMITH, ELDER &amp; CO.'S LIST.

NOW READY, with 16 Portraits and 11 Plans, crown 8vo, 6s.

DEEDS THAT WON THE EMPIRE.

By the Rev. W. H. FITCHETT ("VEDETTE").

These Tales are written not to glorify war, but to nourish patriotism. Each sketch is complete in itself; and though no formal quotation of authorities is given, yet all the available literature on each event described has been laid under contribution. The sketches will be found to be historically accurate.

READY THIS DAY.—Demy 8vo, with Map, 3s. 6d.

INDIAN FRONTIER POLICY: an Historical

Sketch. By General Sir JOHN ADYE, G.C.B., R.A.

CHEAPER EDITION OF MRS. BROWNING'S WORKS.

MRS. BROWNING'S COMPLETE WORKS.

NEW and CHEAPER EDITION. Complete in 1 volume, with Portrait and Facsimile of a "Sonnet from the Portuguese." Large crown 8vo, bound in cloth, with gilt top, 7s. 6d.

*. This Edition is uniform with the Two-Volume Edition of ROBERT BROWNING'S COMPLETE WORKS.

MRS. BROWNING'S "LETTERS."

NOTICE.—A SECOND EDITION of "THE LETTERS of ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING," 2 vols., with Portraits, crown 8vo, 15s. net, will be ready on December 7th.

From the ATHENÆUM.—"It is not too much to say that these volumes are the first adequate contribution which has been made to a real knowledge of Mrs. Browning. The inestimable value of the collection is that it contains not merely interesting critical writing, but the intimate expression of a personality."

THE STORY of the CHURCH of EGYPT: being an Outline of the History of the Egyptians under their Successive Masters, from the Roman Conquest until now. By E. L. BUTCHER, Author of "A Strange Journey," "A Black Jewel," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 16s.

THE WAR of GREEK INDEPENDENCE, 1821-1833. By W. ALISON PHILLIPS, M.A., late Scholar of Merton College, Senior Scholar of St. John's College, Oxford. With Map, large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

TWELVE YEARS in a MONASTERY. By Joseph McCabe, late Father Anthony, O.S.F. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"A striking book. . . . Well for Mr. McCabe that he lives in the Victorian age. If this were the age of Mary Tudor most of us would be trooping off to see Mr. McCabe fried at Smithfield."—Daily News.

LORD COCHRANE'S TRIAL BEFORE LORD ELLENBOROUGH in 1814. By J. B. ATLEY. With a Preface by EDWARD DOWNES LAW, Commander, Royal Navy. With Portrait. 8vo, 18s. [On December 6th.]

THE LIFE of SIR JOHN HAWLEY GLOVER, R.N., G.C.M.G. By LADY GLOVER. Edited by the Right Hon. Sir RICHARD TEMPLE, Bart., G.C.S.I., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S. With Portrait and Maps. Demy 8vo, 14s. [In a few days.]

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of ARTHUR YOUNG. With Selections from his Correspondence. Edited by M. BETHAM-EDWARDS. With 2 Portraits and 2 Views. Large crown 8vo, 12s. 6d. [In a few days.]

TWO NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

DEBORAH of TOD'S. By Mrs. Henry de la Pasture, Author of "A Toy Tragedy," "The Little Squire," &c.

THE MILLS of GOD. By Francis H. Hardy.

CORNHILL MAGAZINE

For DECEMBER.—Price One Shilling.—CONTENTS.

THROUGH TO THE KLONDIKE.

By T. C. DOWN (of the Bar of the North-Western Territories).

THE ENGLISHMAN'S CALENDAR (December).

JOHN WILKES: an Anniversary Study. By W. B. DUFFIELD.

AURORA LEIGH: an Unpublished Letter from Leigh Hunt.

THE PENINSULA and WATERLOO: Memories of an Old Rifleman. By Major-Gen. Sir EDMUND F. DU CANE, K.C.B.

LAUGHING ASPEN. By G. L. CALDERON.

ABNER'S WHALE. By FRANK T. BULLEN.

CONCERNING CLOTHES. By E. V. LUCAS.

MATERFAMILIAS. By Mrs. HENRY MANERSON.

MORE HUMOURS of CLERICAL LIFE. By the Rev. STEWART F. L. BERNAYS.

THE LOSS of the "PHILIP HERBERT." By A. H. NORWAY.

PAGES from a PRIVATE DIARY.

ONE APRIL MONTH. Chaps. 4-6. (Conclusion.) By A. H. BERRIS.

LONDON: SMITH, ELDER &amp; CO., 15, WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.

J. M. DENT &amp; CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THE WAVERLEY NOVELS OF SIR WALTER SCOTT.

A NEW EDITION in 48 vols., pott 8vo, printed on Thin paper suitable for the pocket.

Introductions by Mr. CLEMENT K. SHORTER.

With Portraits and Photogravure Frontispieces by HERBERT RAILTON. Decorated Title-page by W. B. MACDOUGALL.

Cloth, 1s. 6d. net; limp leather, 2s. net. [See Special Prospectus.]

"A better pocket edition, or a prettier, for actual use, it is not easy to imagine."

"None is more charming or attractive in every way than that of Messrs. Dent."—Guardian, Westminster Gazette.

BY HOUSTON STEWART CHAMBERLAIN.

RICHARD WAGNER.

Translated from the German by G. AINSLIE HIGHT, and Revised by the Author.

With numerous Photogravures, Collotypes, Facsimiles, Full-page and Text Illustrations.

Demy 4to, £1 5s. net. [See Special Prospectus.]

"The illustrations are beautiful as well as plentiful, and the book is one of deep interest and great weight."—Times.

By EMILE LEGOUIS.

THE EARLY LIFE OF WILLIAM WORDSWORTH, 1770-98: A Study of the Prelude. Translated by J. W. MATTHEWS.

With a Prefatory Note by LESLIE STEPHEN and a Photogravure Portrait of Wordsworth. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"The work will appeal strongly to all lovers of Wordsworth, and all students of literature in this country."—Times.

"M. Legouis has written a book which must interest the English reader, and may even make a few more French readers learn English."—Academy.

By MARGARET ARMOUR.

THE FALL OF THE NIBELUNGS. Translated from the German by MARGARET ARMOUR and illustrated by W. B. MACDOUGALL.

With sixteen full-page Drawings, &c. Small fcap. 4to, printed on rough antique paper, 6s. net.

"I congratulate Miss Armour on her achievement. . . . In this translation I have exulted over genius, authentic genius, brought home to me in my mother tongue."—FRANCIS THOMPSON in the Academy.

IN THE VALLEY OF TOPHET. By H. W. NEVINSON.

Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

"A Barrie in Staffordshire."—Daily Chronicle.

"The strongest book of short stories we have come across for some time."—Athenæum.

JOAN SEATON: A STORY OF PARSIFAL.

By MARY BEAUMONT. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

"A noble and moving story."—Daily Telegraph.

"This is one of the most beautiful idylls we have ever read."—Manchester Courier.

By the Author of "The Choir Invisible."

SUMMER IN ARCADY. By James Lane Allen.

Fcap. 8vo, 3s. net.

"Mr. Allen's 'Summer in Arcady' marks an epoch in his artistic career."—Atlantic Monthly.

BABOO JABBERJEE, B.A. With about Thirty

Full-page Illustrations by J. Bernard Partridge. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"From the first page to the last Mr. Hurry Bungsho Jabberjee is irresistibly amusing."—Pall Mall Gazette.

ANIMAL LAND WHERE THERE ARE NO PEOPLE.

With an introduction by ANDREW LANG. Small oblong crown 4to, 2s. 6d. net.

These Thirty Pictures of Grotesque Animals have been drawn by the Hon. Mrs. Corbet from graphic descriptions given by her daughter Sybil between the ages of three and four.

"An exceptionally delightful picture book."—Spectator.

MEADOW GRASS. A Book of New England

Stories. By ALICE BROWN. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

AMERICAN LANDS and LETTERS. The

"Mayflower" to Rip Van Winkle. By DONALD S. MITCHELL. With numerous Full-page and Text Illustrations, Portraits, Facsimiles, &c. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

THE SPECTATOR.

A NEW EDITION in 8 vols., with an Introductory Essay by AUSTIN DOBSON.

The Text Annotated and Edited by G. GREGORY SMITH, of Edinburgh University.

With a Photogravure Portrait in each Volume.

Fcap. 8vo, dull gilt top, quarter canvas, cloth sides, 3s. net per Volume.

"In short, we have for the first time a reprint of the scarce first edition, or rather a reprint that is formally as well as textually satisfactory."—Times.

Copies of the Christmas Catalogue, and of any Prospectus above mentioned, will be forwarded post free on application.

ALDINE HOUSE, E.C., and 67, ST. JAMES'S STREET, S.W.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST OF BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

THE GARDEN of DELIGHT. Fairy Tales. By Netta SYRETT, Author of "Nobody's Fault," &c. Illustrated by Nellie Syrett. In 1 vol., large 8vo, handsomely bound, 6s.

MISS SECRETARY ETHEL. A Story for Girls of To-day. By ELLINOR DAVENPORT ADAMS, Author of "The Disagreeable Duke," &c. Illustrated by Harry Furniss. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, extra cloth, gilt edges, 4s.

SUNSET. By Beatrice Whitby, Author of "The Awakening of Mary Fenwick," &c. Third Edition. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

YOUNG NIN. By F. W. Robinson, Author of "Grandmother's Money." Second Edition. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

ACE O' HEARTS. By Charlotte Bain. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

SALTED with FIRE. By George Macdonald, LL.D. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE NEW FICTION, and Other Essays on Literary Subjects. By H. D. TRAILL, Author of "The New Lucian," "The Life of Sir John Franklin," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

IN CAMP and CANTONMENT. Stories of Foreign Service. By EDITH E. CUTHELL, Author of "Only a Guard-room Dog," "The Wee Widow's Cruise," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Now ready, in 1 vol., small 4to, extra cloth, gilt top, HALF-A-GUINEA.

WOMEN NOVELISTS of QUEEN VICTORIA'S REIGN. A Book of Appreciations. THE SISTERS BRONTE, by Mrs. OLIPHANT. GEORGE ELIOT, by Mrs. LYNN LINTON. MRS. GASKELL, by EDNA LYALL. MRS. CRAIK, by Mrs. PARR. And other Essays by CHARLOTTE M. YONGE, ADELINA SERGEANT, Mrs. MACQUOID, Mrs. ALEXANDER, and Mrs. MARSHALL.

Now ready at all Booksellers' and Libraries, in 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Portrait of Author, 12s.

AN OLD SOLDIER'S MEMORIES. By S. H. Jones-Parry, J.P., D.L., late Captain Royal Dublin Fusiliers, Author of "My Journey Round the World," &c.

LADY HAMILTON and LORD NELSON. By John Cordy JEAFFRESON. New and Revised Edition. Containing Additional Facts, Letters, and other Materials. With Portrait of Lady Hamilton. 1 vol., large crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

FAMOUS BRITISH WARSHIPS, and their Commanders. By WALTER WOOD, Author of "Barrack and Battlefield," With Portrait of Admiral Viscount Nelson. 1 vol., large crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

THE TAME FOX, and Other Sketches. By Finch Mason. With 6 Full-Page Coloured Illustrations. 1 vol., large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

BARRACK and BATTLEFIELD Tales of the Service at Home and Abroad. By WALTER WOOD. 1 vol., large crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

THE SHOWMAN'S DAUGHTER. By Scott Graham, Author of "The Golden Milestone," "The Sandcliff Mystery," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

WHERE the SURF BREAKS. By Mary F. A. Tench. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

BEATRICE WHITBY'S NOVELS.

Each in One Volume, crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

THE AWAKENING of MARY FENWICK.	ONE REASON WHY.
PART of the PROPERTY.	IN THE SUNTIME of HER YOUTH.
MARY FENWICK'S DAUGHTER.	A MATTER of SKILL.

EDNA LYALL'S NOVELS.

Each in One Volume, crown 8vo, price 6s.

DONOVAN.	WE TWO.	KNIGHT ERRANT.
IN THE GOLDEN DAYS.		WON BY WAITING.
TO RIGHT THE WRONG.		A HARDY NORSEMAN.

NOVELS BY GEORGE MACDONALD, LL.D.

Each in One Volume, crown 8vo, with Frontispiece, price 5s.

DAVID ELGINBROD.	ALEC FORBES
ROBERT FALCONER.	SIR GIBBIE.

HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED, 13, Great Marlborough Street.

MESSRS. C. ARTHUR PEARSON'S NEW BOOKS.

SECOND EDITION NEXT WEEK.

IN JOYFUL RUSSIA.

By JOHN A. LOGAN, Jun.

Crown 8vo, cloth, bevelled boards, gilt top, with 4 Coloured Plates and 46 beautifully executed Full-Page Illustrations from Photographs, 10s. 6d.

SPECTATOR.—"This book is one of the most attractive additions to the literature of travel which recent years have made. . . . Whether they hold with his roseate views or not, all who can interest themselves in Russia will be beholden to him for showing them the reverse of the old shield."

SUNDAY TIMES.—"Russia is so frequently depicted in sombre colours that it is a positive relief to find her here described as a pleasant, hospitable, and jovial country. . . . Some of the most striking pictures are those in which the author tells us of the average peasant."

MANCHESTER COURIER.—"The book is well and promiscuously illustrated."

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

MEN WHO HAVE MADE THE EMPIRE.

By GEORGE GRIFFITH.

With 16 Full-Page Illustrations by Stanley L. Wood. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, price 7s. 6d.

A Series of Twelve Life-Pictures of the men who have done most to build up the greatest Imperial Fabric that the sun has ever shone upon.

SCOTSMAN.—"It is impossible not to be thoroughly interested by his treatment of the Empire-builders, and impressed with the lofty patriotic spirit which pervades the whole book. It is a volume for everyone to read, but it is essentially one to place within the reach of the youth of the land."

MORNING ADVERTISER.—"The book is decidedly well done. Mr. Griffith has a fresh, forcible style and a real belief in the destiny of our race. Yet, as his excellent account of Nelson shows, he is no Jingo, but has a very gentlemanly respect for the feelings of other nations whom we have at one time worsted in war. He has consulted the best authorities on the various periods of which he treats, yet does not follow any of them slavishly. . . . He has produced a thoroughly readable popular book on a subject of which too many Englishmen know far too little."

NEW VOLUME JUST READY.

PEARSON'S MAGAZINE.

Volume IV. July to December, 1897. Price 6s. net.

Containing H. G. WELLS' latest Work "The War of the Worlds." Also Stories by CONAN DOYLE, GUY BOOTHBY, ROBERT BARR, L. T. MEADE and CLIFFORD HALIFAX, GEORGE GRIFFITH, &c., together with numerous Articles of popular interest. Fully Illustrated. Small 4to, bevelled boards, gilt edges. This volume includes the splendid Christmas Number, just issued, containing 4 magnificent oil paintings by ABBY ALTON, R.B.A., reproduced in all the perfect colouring of the originals, illustrating a new Poem by SIR LEWIS MORRIS.

A STIRRING ROMANCE OF THE TIMES OF FRANCIS I.

JOHN OF STRATHBOURNE.

By R. D. CHETWODE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

TIMES.—"We can only say that had it appeared anonymously it might have passed for the handiwork of Mr. Stanley Weyman, and it would be difficult to give higher praise. It is a romance of the days of Francis I., and it has this in common with 'A Gentleman of France,' that the hero's unselfish devotion and dauntless courage change the scorn of a fair and high-born damsel into sentiments of the fondest affection. But there the resemblance ends. Mr. Chetwode has too much spirit and originality to be indebted to any one for his ideas. . . . There are striking pictures of feudal France—when justice slumbered during the civil wars, when bands of brigands ravaged unprotected districts with impunity, and each noble, if he could muster sufficient following, did what seemed right in his own eyes."

A NEW CHILDREN'S BOOK.

JUMBLES.

By LEWIS BAUMER.

With 48 pages illustrated by the Author, printed in Colours, and bound in paper boards with cloth back, price 2s. 6d.

The ACADEMY says: "Mr. Baumer is a clever and vigorous draughtsman, with a true gift of irresponsible fun—of nonsense in fact—which he is able to express with pencil and with pen. His verses are crisp and simple, and in no way self-conscious. They serve to introduce the picture, and then their work is done. The pictures themselves, some in colours and some in monochrome, are merry and sufficient. They teem with drollery of the exquisite obvious variety. There is a scene of two lady pigs on bicycles, which may become a nursery classic. But all Mr. Baumer's pigs are a delight. He loves little pigs with a love not exceeded by Charles Lamb."

MESSRS. C. ARTHUR PEARSON LIMITED will be happy to forward their List of New Season's Novels by Popular Authors, on receipt of Post Card addressed to

"BOOK DEPARTMENT," HENRIETTA STREET, STRAND, W.C.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1897.

No. 1335, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . .	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

WE take the following from Le Journal des Débats. Mr. Swinburne may care to see how his letter looks in French, and how it strikes Frenchmen:

"En cette fin de mois, dit-il, après que le grand serpent de mer eut une fois encore, comme de coutume, émergé à la surface de la presse, — peut-être seulement pour s'y étouffer dans l'effort nullement inopportun de rivaliser avec les prodiges de digestion des autres contributeurs en avalant le canard géant, — aucun homme sensé n'approuvera et aucun homme honnête n'affectera la moindre surprise en constatant la résurrection d'un monstre ridicule plus authentique que ces deux-là.

La notion d'une Académie anglaise est trop sérieusement stupide pour valoir comme farce et trop essentiellement vulgaire pour paraître comique. Mais qu'un homme, qui n'a cessé pendant des années de proclamer son dédain pour l'idéal ou l'idée académique et qui a offensé des censeurs innombrables, mais bien pensants, en exprimant franchement son mépris et en ridiculisant cette notion avec une véhémence sans réserve, jouisse de l'honneur non sollicité d'être nommé en bon rang dans une Assemblée tellement inimaginable qu'elle serait sans doute, colluvies litterarum, si jamais elle prenait corps et advenait à l'existence, — réellement, il me semble que le soin de donner la définition complète et adéquate d'une impertinence si démente doit être laissé à d'autres qu'à celui qui porte le nom choisi pour l'auréole d'un tel outrage."

L'Écho de Paris also translates Mr. Swinburne's letter for the benefit of Frenchmen, with this comment: "Quel style, bone Deus!"

WITH the present number Mr. W. E. Henley resigns his editorship of the New Review. This step is forced upon him by uncertain health and the necessities of his own literary work. In consequence of his retirement, it is not intended to continue the publication of the Review in its present form. An entire break will be made with the past. Shape, price, style, mode of publication—all will be changed. There will be an interval of a few weeks between the publication of this last number and the appearance of the next, which will start as a weekly journal instead of a monthly magazine. Although the editorship and control are in new hands, Mr. Henley has kindly consented to give, for a while at least, the new venture his advice and help. The price will be three-pence.

IN connexion with Mr. Kipling's eloquent tribute to the average tenacity of purpose displayed so often and so nobly by doctors, especially in India during times of plague, it may not be inappropriate to quote the testimony of a brother novelist. In the dedication to Underwoods, Mr. Stevenson wrote:

"There are men, classes of men that stand above the common herd: the soldier, the sailor, and the shepherd not unfrequently; the artist rarely; rarer still, the clergyman; the physician almost as a rule. He is the flower (such as it is) of our civilisation; and when that stage of man is done with, and only remembered to be marvelled at in history, he will be thought to have shared as little as any in the defects of the period, and most notably exhibited the virtues of the race. Generosity he has, such as is possible to those who practise an art, never to those who drive a trade; discretion, tested by a hundred secrets; tact, tried in a thousand embarrassments; and what are more important, Herculean cheerfulness and courage. So it is that he brings air and cheer into the sick room, and often enough, though not so often as he wishes, brings healing."

Mr. Kipling's confession that he once played about the outskirts of St. Mary's Hospital at Paddington, with the idea of becoming a doctor, will be news to most.

MR. NICHOLSON'S Almanack of Twelve Sports (W. Heinemann) is not, we think, the equal of his Alphabet. The delineation of single types seems to be a task better suited to his genius. None the less it is a work containing more force and originality than scores of kindred publications. For Mr. Rudyard Kipling's accompanying verses we find it hard to say a good word; they are often obscure, and never in the least worthy of him. Mr. Kipling obviously should not write to order. This, for example, is the best that that strong Pen can do for cricket:

"Thank God who made the British Isles,
And taught me how to play,
I do not worship crocodiles,
Or bow the knee to clay!
Give me a willow wand and I,
With hide, and cork, and twine,
From century to century,
Will gambol round my shrine."

AND this, to face a superb drawing of skaters by Mr. Nicholson, is in a manner foreign to Mr. Kipling's wont. We expect it in the comic papers, but not from him:

"Over the ice she flies,
Perfect, and poised, and fair;
Stars in my true lover's eyes,
Teach me to do and to dare."

Now will I fly as she flies . . .
Woe for the stars that misled!
Stars that I saw in her eyes,
Now do I see in my head!"

The best of the scraps is that on "Coaching:"

"The Pious Horse to church may trot,
A maid may work a man's salvation.
Four horses and a girl are not,
However, aids to reformation."

BUT it is needless to dally with Mr. Kipling in one of his rare poverty-stricken moods. Let us just remark that to no man falls so few, and pass to his song of the go-fever in Scribner's Magazine. The "Feet of the Young Men" is the title, and the stanzas, which have a fine swinging lilt, set forth the joys of the adventurous. Thus:

"So for one the wet sail arching through the rainbow round the bow,
And for one the creak of snow-shoes on the crust;
And for one the lakeside vigil where the bull-
moose leads the cow,
And for one the mule-train coughing in
the dust.
Who hath smelt wood smoke at twilight?
Who hath heard the birch-log burning?
Who is quick to read the noises of the night?
Let him follow with the others, for the young men's feet are turning
To the camps of proved desire and known delight!"

And thus:

"Do you know the shallow Baltic, where the seas are quick and short,
Where the bluff, lee-boarded fishing luggers ride?
Do you know the joy of threshing leagues to leeward of your port
On a coast you've lost the chart of over-side?
It is there that I am going, with an extra hand to bale her—
Just one single 'long-shore loafer that I know.
He can take his chance of drowning, while I sail and sail and sail her,
For the Red Gods call me out and I must go!"

THE refrain runs:

"And we go—go—go away from here!
On the other side the world we're overdue!
Send the road is clear before you when the old spring-fret comes o'er you,
And the Red Gods call for you."

While Mr. Kipling can write such verse as this he may well leave others to trifle with sports.

ONE more paragraph about Mr. Kipling, and we are done. We take the following from an American contemporary, Current Literature. The poems are placed in parallel columns under the heading, "Kipling's Echo of Emerson."

BRAHMA.

By Emerson.

If the red slayer think
he slays,
Or if the slain think
he is slain,
They know not well the subtle ways,
I keep, and pass, and turn again.

AN AMERICAN.

By Rudyard Kipling.

If the led striker call
it a strike,
Or the papers call it
a war,
They know not much
what I am like.
Nor what he is, my Avatar.

They reckon ill who leave me out,
When me they fly I am the wings;
I am the doubter and the doubt
And I the hymn the Brahmin sings.

Through many roads by me possessed
He shambles forth in cosmic guise;
He is the jester and the jest
And he the text himself applies.

There is, of course, no plagiarism here, as the American periodical angrily suggests. Emerson's poem is so well known that a satirist has no call to apologise for borrowing its formula to lend point to an inquiry into the American character.

THE discount question persists like a tooth-ache, and like the tooth-ache it roves—now perceptible in one part of the press, now in another. Thus in the current Chapman's Magazine we find a symposium on the subject formed of contributions from Mr. Frankfort Moore, from a publisher, and from Mr. Frederick Evans of the bookselling firm of Jones & Evans. Mr. Moore draws a graphic picture of the low estate to which the book-selling shop of his childhood had fallen when he went back to it. It had dropped books altogether, and in the place where Mr. Moore sought The Amazing Marriage he bought a greenhouse thermometer. Mr. Moore is, of course, in favour of the proposal to reduce booksellers' discount to 2d.; but he thinks that "unless complete unanimity prevails among publishers, unless complete unanimity prevails among booksellers, enterprising as well as unenterprising, nothing will be accomplished in the way of removing one anomaly from a business that is furrowed with anomalies."

THE publisher tells us that fifteen or twenty years ago a well-known London publishing firm had on its books the names of over a thousand booksellers, each of whom dealt exclusively in books; to-day—such has been the blighting effect of a 3d. discount—the same firm knows of only 245 such booksellers! This writer states the issues clearly, and shows that the publishers and booksellers are agreed, and the authors wavering.

WHAT of the fourth party to the transaction—the public? Mr. Evans, who ought to know, answers this question as follows: "The real reading, book-loving, book-buying public will never grudge the extra penny in the shilling; it is a mere trifle on their occasional, scattered purchases, not felt in any appreciable degree, or sufficiently to deter them from having a book they may really want." The solution, you see, looks near and simple, but that is just what it is not. You can get any number of people to talk reasonably and blandly about book discount; but if it takes a threat of Holloway to get twelve men into a box, it will take force of some kind to unite the book-dealing world on this subject. That force doth not yet appear.

THE dinner given to Mr. Sidney Low on his retirement from the editorial chair of the St. James's Gazette was a scene of good humour. Mr. Gosse presided; Mr. Kipling made a speech; Mr. Henley sent a rhymed message; Mr. Alfred Austin offered a set of verses; Mr. Low surveyed modern journalism and read two stanzas of Mr. Kipling's "Galley Slave," which were calculated to strike a chill into Mr. Chisholm, the St. James's new chief. Mr. Chisholm should make an excellent editor; but none the less Mr. Low will be missed. He was a good editor of a good paper, ever watchful for merit and fearless in the expression of opinion. On his return from a trip to India Mr. Low will join the staff of the Standard.

ON another page will be found an article upon Omar Khayyam and his English translators. The writer's remarks upon the reluctance of these experimentalists to endeavour to reproduce the metres of the original may to some extent be illustrated by the following stray quatrains which appeared anonymously in Cornhill some few years ago. The translator has attempted to rhyme and accentuate the lines just as in the Persian.

Ya rabb, tu karimi va karimi karam ast.
Thou art gracious, Lord!—The Gracious by his grace is known.
Why from Iram's bower is he, whom sin abases, thrown?
I obey, and Thou forgivest: grace is none therein.
I rebel, and Thou forgivest: thus Thy grace is shown!

Ya rabb, ba-dil asir man rahmat kun.
Lord! to my heart trepanned, be merciful!
Lord! to my breast grief-spanned, be merciful!
—Pity, oh Lord, this tavern-haunting foot!
To this goblet-snatching hand, be merciful!

Khush bash, kih alami guzrân kha'ahad bud.
Be gay! for the world will onward plod in time to come;
The soul still cry for its fleshy pod, in time to come;
This skull thou seest so sprightly will be lying
Under the foot of the potter trod, in time to come!

Maksud zi-jumla-i afrinish ma'im.
Creation's perfect plan and muster we are.
In the eye of Heaven, its pearl of lustre we are.
The world's great orb is like a ring; and, doubtless,
The graven gem of its bezelled cluster we are!

The English poet whose work is suggested by the foregoing—at least by their technique—is William Barnes. His casual readers are unaware of the intricacy of his measures and the mastery he exerted over them.

WITH reference to Maltus Q. Holyoake's "Memories of Charles Dickens" in the December number of Chambers's Journal, Mr. Gladstone writes: "I recognise Dickens as a great fact in the literature of the century. But it made me angry to read somewhere that Dante was as familiar a name in Florence as Dickens in London." Mr. Gladstone will find many persons to agree with him.

MR. LANE is about to publish, under the simple title Poems, a volume containing all the work of Mr. Stephen Phillips to the present time. Mr. Lane has arranged with Mr. Elkin Mathews for the inclusion of the little Christ in Hades book. The admirers of Mr. Phillips are a growing band, owing in some measure to some exquisite verses which have recently appeared in the Spectator, notably the pieces, "Old Age" and "Youth and Sorrow."

AT the close of a review of the late Mrs. Oliphant's history of the House of Blackwood, in the current number of Blackwood's Magazine, there is a touching reference to the valued contributor who will write no more "We must go back," says the critic, "to the days of Wilson and Lockhart and Aytoun for any parallel to the brilliancy and loyalty and unwavering devotion of Margaret Oliphant."

MR. HENLEY's prologue to Admiral Guinea, most musically recited by Miss Elizabeth Robins, had the following passage:

"Once was a pair of Friends, who loved to chance
Their feet in any by-way of Romance.
They, like two vagabond schoolboys, unafraid
Of stark impossibilities, essayed
To make these Penitent and Impenitent Thieves,
These PEWS and GAUNTS, each man of them
with his sheaves
Of humour, passion, cruelty, tyranny, life,
Fit shadows for the boards; till in the strife
Of dream with dream, their Slaver-Saint came true,
And their Blind Pirate, their resurgent PEW
(A figure of deadly farce in his new birth),
Tap-tapped his way from Orcus back to earth;
And so, their Lover and his Lass made one,
In their best prose this Admiral here was done."

MISS ROBINS, however, missed the point of the last two couplets in the following final sextet:

"One of this Pair sleeps till the crack of doom
Where the great ocean-rollers plunge and boom.
The other waits and wonders what his Friend,
Dead now, and deaf, and silent, were the end
Revealed to his rare spirit, would find to say
If you, his lovers, loved him for this Play."

It is not to be fantastic to assume that Mr. Henley's intention was not over complimentary to Admiral Guinea nor to those that rave of its merits. But Miss Robins gave the lines a pathetic note which probably pleased the audience quite as well.

LAST week we drew attention to a curious development of Ian Maclarenism—a Calendar for 1898. Now arrives The Ian Maclaren Year Book (Hodder & Stoughton), which differs from the Calendar mainly in the length of its extracts. Each day has one—but they extend commonly to more than half a page instead of to a single line. But it is a queer, inconclusive, scrappy work.

LITERARY matters make such demands upon our space that we cannot devote as much attention as we should like to Art; but we really must find space for these simple rules for telling to what school a painter belongs. They were published first, we believe, in the Boston Transcript.

"If he paints the sky gray and grass brown, he belongs to the Old School.

If he paints the sky blue and the grass green, he belongs to the Realistic School.

If he paints the sky green and the grass blue, he belongs to the Impressionist School.

If he paints the sky yellow and the grass purple, he is a Colourist.

If he paints the sky black and the grass red, he is an artist of great decorative talent—great enough to make posters."

MR. W. J. STILLMAN's bright book of essays, The Old Rome and the New, and Other Studies (Grant Richards), ranges over many subjects and people, including Mr. Ruskin and his art teaching. Incidentally, Mr. Stillman quotes a letter he received from Mr. Ruskin in 1851, containing the following counsel on reading: "You should read much—and generally old books; but, above all, avoid German books—and all Germanists, except Carlyle, whom read as much as you can or like: read George Herbert and Spenser and Wordsworth and Homer, all constantly; Young's Night Thoughts, Crabbe, and, of course, Shakespeare, Bacon and Jeremy Taylor and Bunyan; do not smile if I mention also Robinson Crusoe and the Arabian Nights, for standard places on your shelves."

BESIDES the books already announced—namely, Sigurd the Volsung, Love is Enough and The Sundering Flood, only two other books will be printed at the Kelmscott Press. These are Some German Woodcuts of the Fifteenth Century, being thirty-five reproductions from books that were in the library at Kelmscott House, together with a list of the principal woodcut books in that library; and A Note by William Morris, being the account of his aims in starting the Kelmscott Press, together with facts concerning the Press, and an annotated list of all the books there printed, compiled by Mr. S. O. Cockerell. These will be the last books printed at the Kelmscott Press, which will close early in the New Year. The type will remain in the hands of the trustees for future use, but all the special ornament will be discontinued, and the woodblocks deposited in the British Museum.

BOTH editions of Mr. Andrew Tuer's recently published History of the Horn-Book are out of print. The author informs us that neither will be reprinted and that the types have been distributed.

MR. ANTHONY HOPE's sequel to The Prisoner of Zenda, which he calls Rupert of Hentzau, begins in the December Pall Mall Magazine. The opening chapters are rich in the promise of good intrigue. The historian is Fritz. The King has become fretful, and continually suspicious both of his enemy Rupert and his friend Rudolf Rassendyll. The Queen is unhappy. The only man who retains his old calm is Colonel Sapt, now Constable of Zenda. On the threshold of the story Fritz is despatched by the Queen with a letter to Rassendyll, and straightway the brave business of romance begins. We will not say more than this.

A NEW story by Dr. Weir Mitchell, the author of Hugh Wynne, will run through the Century. Its title is The Adventures of François: a Story of the French Revolution.

MR. F. E. ROBINSON, M.A. Cantab., announces that he is about to publish two series of Oxford and Cambridge College Histories. The "Oxford Series" will consist of twenty-one, and the "Cambridge Series" of eighteen volumes. Each volume will be written by some one officially connected with the college of which it treats, or at least by some member of that college who is specially qualified for the task. The two series will extend over a period of about two years, and no particular order will be observed in the publication of the volumes. It is hoped that the first volume will be ready early in the New Year.

A RUMOUR, to which the Daily News gave currency, that Wentworth House at Hampstead is about to be pulled down, and the fear that "Lawn Bank," where Keats lived, is likely to go too, is vigorously contradicted by the Highgate and Hampstead Express, and we prefer to believe the contradiction.

OUR notice of Mr. Jacobi's amusing book, Gesta Typographica, in our issue of November 20, anticipated some of the stories told in the new number of Macmillan's Magazine; but, of course, not all. The writer revives the old newspaper report which said that "Sir Robert Peel, with a party of fiends, was shooting peasants in Ireland." Landor once found a curious error in a proof of a set of verses he had written for the Keepsake. The last stanza was made to end:

" 'Yes,' you shall say when once the dream
(So hard to break) is o'er,
'My love was very dear to him,
My farm and peace no more.' "

It should have been fame; well might Landor exclaim: "Pity it was not printed my farm and peas!"

THE error by mis-punctuation is illustrated by several good instances. In the Poet's Corner of a provincial newspaper the following note was appended to some verses: "These lines were written nearly fifty years ago, by a gentleman who has for several years lain in the grave for his own amusement." Soon after the last Egyptian campaign the following curiously arranged and punctuated sentence appeared in a London evening paper: "To show the enthusiasm with which our troops have been received, we may mention that we have been told of several instances where cabmen have driven soldiers from Egypt to the barracks without charge."

A VOLUME called Fidelis, and Other Poems, which was reviewed in a recent ACADEMY, has for title-poem a eulogy of a favourite dog. Curiously enough, another volume of poetry simultaneously published—Lays of Iona, and Other Poems, by the Rev. S. J. Stone (Longmans & Co.), a thoughtful, reverent book—contains a sonnet inspired by precisely similar feelings.

"SANCHO: AN OLD FRIEND.

"A large brown Irish retriever, buried in the Vicarage garden of St. Paul's, Haggerston. A stone to his memory is on the school wall, with this inscription:

" 'In the centre of this lawn lies

SANCHO,

a gentleman in all but humanity; thoroughbred, single in mind, true of heart; for seventeen years the faithful and affectionate friend of his master, who loved him, and now for him 'faintly trusts the Larger Hope' contained, it may be, in Romans viii. 19-21.

He died April 26, 1883."

"Not sparse of friends the world has been to me,

By grace of God; sweetness and light to life

Their love has given; many a stormy strife,
Many a pulseless torpor, on my sea,
Through them—their presence or their memory—

Have been or stilled or quickened; and to thee,

My Dog, the tribute, as the term, is due,
My Friend! not least of all dear, near and true

These seventeen years—and through the years to be,

Sure in my heart of immortality,

Must this be all? 'I' the great Day of the Lord,

Shall aught that is of good and beauty now

Be missing? Shall not each gift be restored?

Paul says 'the whole creation'—why not thou?"

A collection of poems in honour of pets would make an interesting book.

A CORRESPONDENT writes:

"Miss Ellen Nussey, the lifelong friend of 'Currier Bell,' has passed away at the age of eighty, at her home in Gomersal, and was laid to rest in Birstall Churchyard (the 'Briarfield' of Shirley) on November 30. The friendship between Charlotte and her schoolmate bids fair to remain for long noteworthy in the history of literature. The little, forlorn, motherless child of alien race, pining in the rarefied atmosphere of Roehead School, opened her heart to the warm-hearted and kind English friend. Her common sense and strong, purposeful, motherly nature invited confidence and offered rest, and it is to Charlotte's letters to her that we owe most of what we know of the self-revelation of the eldest of the three gifted sisters. Miss Nussey remained loyal and true to the memory of her well-loved and famous friend, and the letters she furnished to Mr. Wemyss Reid for his monograph, and later to Mr. Clement Shorter for his last work on Charlotte Brontë and Her Circle, form the most authentic staple for our later knowledge of her character, as earlier a selection from them made by Mrs. Gaskell, contributed much to the 'classical' life of Charlotte which she published. There is little doubt that Miss Nussey served, at any rate in part, as the original model for the portrait of Caroline Helstone in Shirley; and many of the traits with which Charlotte endued that character are those which in Ellen Nussey drew forth her love, and maintained it unshaken to the last. If Miss Nussey goes down to posterity as the friend of the foremost woman writer of the time, it will be a deserved honour, for in her counsel and affection Charlotte found much solace in her troubled pilgrimage."

1897 : A RETROSPECT.

EARLY in the year the publishers came to the conclusion that the public was reading less than usual. The absorbing interest of foreign politics, and, later, the patriotic and expensive delights of the Jubilee, were rightly or wrongly held responsible for this disinclination towards literature; and many publications believed to be of importance were deferred to a more convenient season. The result has been a tempestuous autumn. For three long months the tide of books has beaten about the doors of the ACADEMY office. Its impetus is not yet exhausted; but, at least, the ebb has set in, and the opportunity seems a favourable one to pause for a retrospect, and to attempt some summing-up of the total achievement, since last Christmas, of so many pens.

The first thing which strikes the candid and judicious observer of current literature must be, we think, that, where so much is good, so little is, or even aims at being, of the very best. A considerable proportion of English brain-power is devoted, year by year, to the business of writing, but of this proportion a very insignificant fraction is spent even in the attempt at creating masterpieces. It goes in the pursuit of what are, in most cases, consciously ephemeral ends; in the service not of art, but of bookmaking. Excellent and entertaining bookmaking it is, very often, but none the less bookmaking. The great bulk of modern literature may reasonably be divided under two heads. There is the literature of commerce, written by men who make a profession of writing for a livelihood. By the very law of its being, this literature has to consult the taste of that strange creature, the public. The taste of the public is subject to fits and eddies; it is swayed by fashion; and so schools of writing arise and vanish. A book makes a lucky hit; it catches the ear of the public; the public clamours for something more of the same kind; and, in accordance with the economic law of supply and demand, a host of clever imitators come forward to provide what is wanted. The "Keynotes" school has its vogue, the "Kailyard" school, the school of saddle and spur romance: they come and go, hailed and unregretted. With much of this literature the ACADEMY has nothing to do: such books enjoy a vast subterranean circulation, and do not rise to the light of day. Much, on the other hand, is aimed at that section of the public which takes in the literary papers. This from week to week we sedulously review: but the standard of criticism applied is not an absolute one; it is relative to the aims of the book and the needs of its probable reader. "Good" means "good, upon a certain level," and "bad," that even that level is not attained. With all of this we have no quarrel. It is an excellent thing that a public which is ready to pay should have plenty of entertaining books to read, and it is an excellent thing that quick wits should be able to make an honest livelihood out of supplying them. Both readers and writers might be much worse employed. Nor do we suggest that art is altogether disregarded. It is not so. Most successful authors, we suppose, patch up some sort of a compromise between their consciences and their pockets. They write as well as they can afford, as well as the public will let them; and in many cases, no doubt, they write their best, and their best happens to be just what the public likes. But, of course, this is not the way that masterpieces are made. It were idle and probably priggish to cry aloud in the market-place because men prefer supporting a wife and family in comfort to the pursuit of so elusive a will o' the wisp as art. We take what we can get, and do not pretend to find no pleasure in the capital reading our talented novelists provide for us. Nevertheless, when all is said and done, art is still art, and not commerce, and our whole-souled admiration is reserved for the few who, through good report and evil report, manage to keep their artistic conscience pure and undefiled.

The literature of commerce, then, accounts for nine-tenths of the books that come in such profusion. To some of its triumphs during the past year we shall briefly allude in the course of this review. Of the remaining tenth a large part is claimed by another form of literature, which, valuable and important as it is, is yet in our eyes not quite the highest. This is the literature of knowledge. It would be difficult to over-estimate the amount of serious work which is now being done by Englishmen in almost every branch of scholarship and science. The catalogues of the leading publishers, and, still more, the transactions of innumerable learned societies, bear witness to the fact. This literature we are rarely able to notice in detail in these columns, but we are not unconscious of its existence, or of its value. Nevertheless, we make no apology for calling it not quite the highest. For the literature of knowledge, like the literature of commerce, contains, of its very essence, the seeds of impermanence. Knowledge is progressive, while art is stationary; and the hardly won learning of one generation is inevitably refuted by, or absorbed into, that of the next. The highest literature, then, because the only lasting literature, is the literature of art, established upon the universally beautiful and the universally true; and in surveying the writing of our day we are obliged to make this our central question. How far is the highest type of literature, this permanent and disinterested literature, represented?

We cannot profess to be much encouraged by the answer which we are going to give. It is ill speaking for posterity, and we do not suppose that any year, since literature began to be, has produced more than two or three books which have kept their savour for a century. But a decade is no extravagant length of life for a book, and how many out of all the hundreds of books printed in 1897 can we imagine as enduring and claiming attention in a decade's time? Some poor dozen, surely, at most, and the rest, save for their ironical appeal to the student, will have gone the way of the snows of yesterday.

POETRY.

The vintage of poetry has been an especially scanty one. Of the Jubilee odes, the less said the better; the more official, the more exiguous in inspiration were they. The most successful was Mr. Francis Thompson's; while one of the most considerable poetic achievements of the year is to be found in the same writer's New Poems. Less amazing, perhaps, than the author's earlier work, the book represents a notable advance in craftsmanship. Mr. Thompson has much to learn still, affectations to dismiss, harshnesses to slough off, obscurities to elucidate; but the critic must be strangely blind who does not see that he has the root of the whole matter in him, the divine gift of song, the sincere impulse and the authentic thrill. Brain and soul in no small degree have gone to the making of these strange, difficult poems, with their tangled conceits, their subtle introspection, their lofty and penetrating spirituality.

There are five other volumes which seem to us, in their own degree, of no inconsiderable merit. There is Mr. Lionel Johnson's Ireland, learned, meditative, dignified, full of fine thought and fine feeling. There is Mr. Arthur Symonds's Amoris Victima, delicately wrought, and free from the offence of his London Nights, but too insubstantial, too much lacking in the inspiration of a broad humanity, to be quite great poetry.

There is the slender but exquisite verse of The Earth-Breath, so modestly put forward by the secluded Irish writer who calls himself "A. E." This is genuine, if little regarded poetry, in which the natural magic of the Celt and the mysticism of the Platonist join in a wistful music which no other writer, except, perhaps, Mr. Yeats, has quite caught.

Finally, there is the long-expected volume, the contents of which have already enjoyed an esoteric reputation, of that critic, scholar, and friend of poets, Mr. Theodore Watts-Dunton. We must own that to us The Coming of Love is something of a disappointment. Mr. Watts-Dunton has absorbed so much poetry that he could hardly help writing some now and then. And it is a curious thing that under these circumstances his verse should be so much his own, so little an echo of that of other men. He has a great command of technical expedient, a facility and a smooth flow of rhythm. But with all this it is but only too rarely that he strikes us as inspired, or if inspired it is an inspiration born only of the desire, and not the need, to write poetry. New volumes by Mr. William Watson and Mr. Stephen Phillips are promised before the close of the year.

Mr. Le Gallienne's "paraphrase" of Omar Khayyam, from a language which he does not understand, into a metre appropriated by Fitz-Gerald, Mr. Alfred Austin's commonplace Conversion of Winckelmann, Mr. Benson's Lord Vyet, Mr. Bourdillon's Minuscule, Mrs. Fuller Maitland's Song-Book of Bethia Hardacre, make up, perhaps, all that call for mention, save that a word of praise is due to the stirringly patriotic Admirals All, of a nearly new writer, Mr. Henry Newbolt. A single fine poem by Mr. Kipling attracted much attention when it appeared in a daily paper, and in the absence of new verse, the wise reader may console himself with the Select Poems of Mr. Meredith, and with the one-volume editions of Mrs. Browning and of Mr. Austin Dobson.

CRITICISM.

Of first-rate criticism there is even less to record than of first-rate poetry. The one book that stands out is Mr. Henley's brilliant and thorough study of Robert Burns. Those who most disagree with Mr. Henley's conclusions are bound to admit the extraordinary energy and vividness with which they are put and enforced. It is criticism of a very high order, genuinely creative criticism, in the sense that it creates, fixes a presentment of its subject which is salient, consistent, permanent. Unless, and until, some equally potent critic give us an equally luminous counter portrait, Burns must remain to the imagination, if not to the reason, Burns as he is interpreted by Mr. Henley. Next to Mr. Henley's work we place Mr. Walter Raleigh's elaborate and somewhat antastatic essay on Style. Mr. Raleigh has undeniable things to say, and he says them in a manner full of epigram and metaphor, a deliberate, highly wrought, highly self-conscious manner, which will attract some as much as it will inevitably repel others. If you like it, it is a fine; if you dislike it, it is at least a remarkably suggestive book. And in it we seem to detect the influence of Mr. Meredith—a reprint of whose long-buried essay on The Comic Spirit has given great joy alike to those who knew it and to those who knew it not. A privately printed selection of Mr. Pater's contributions to the Guardian is probably the last legacy we shall have from a man who more than any other has left his mark upon modern criticism. These reviews are the very genius of reviewing. In the second flight of critical work we put some half-dozen books—Mr. Symons's Essays in Two Literatures, Mr. Traill's The New Fiction, Mr. Robertson's New Essays Towards a Method in Criticism, Mr. Whibley's Studies in Frankness. And of these we venture to pick out that of Mr. Symons, in whom the influence of Mr. Pater is very strong, as showing at once the finer art and the rarer sensitiveness. Of essays in the older and wider sense there are none worth mention of native growth. Matthew Arnold's Friendship's Garland has been reprinted, and a translation of M. Maeterlinck's Tresor des Humbles, together with one of his Aglavaine et Selysette, has made a profound impression. M. Maeterlinck is rapidly becoming one of the few living foreigners who can be regarded as a force in English letters.

FICTION.

We pass now to the novel, admittedly the characteristic art of our age, as the drama was the characteristic art of the Elizabethan age; less potent in its hold upon the mind and heart of the few than poetry, but more universal in its appeal, more catholic in its comprehensiveness. In the novel, we venture to think, the outlook is one for moderate and chastened hope. Of the two acknowledged masters of prose fiction, Mr. Meredith has, this year again, given us nothing. Mr. Hardy has given us The Well-Beloved, a book which represents a return to the happier pre-Judean period of his development, but which, nevertheless, cannot be regarded as an unqualified success. Mr. Stevenson might possibly have hammered St. Ives into a romance worthy to rank with Catriona. Possibly, but not certainly, for the Vailima Letters show that he was profoundly dissatisfied with it. But as he left it it is incomplete, ragged, lacking in unity. Upon Mr. Kipling's second attempt to write a long book, Captains Courageous, we have spoken recently. In The Spoils of Poynton and What Maisie Knew Mr. Henry James's hand is, perhaps, surer, his art more subtle than ever before. To his unexampled mastery of words, to his profound psychological analysis, he adds a new idealism, and paints the victory of beauty, the beauty here of inanimate things, there of the unspotted soul, triumphing over the sordid and vulgar in its surroundings. Another honest and imperfectly appreciated workman is Mr. Gissing. The Whirlpool lacks the distinction of Mr. James's books, for style was the gift left out by the fairies at Mr. Gissing's christening. But, for all that, it is a powerful novel, well constructed, informed with moral ideas, interesting from beginning to end. And if it paints life in lurid colours upon a background of drab, it is none the less true to that side of life which catches Mr. Gissing's vision. In Human Odds and Ends, Mr. Gissing develops some qualities of humour and irony which are not so conspicuous in his longer works. The School for Saints is a far more important book than any which John Oliver Hobbes has hitherto essayed. It is a remarkable advance. The fantastic has given way to the human. In a less measure, this is true also of Mr. Benjamin Swift. The people in The Tormentor are at least partly human. They have elements of the fantastic, the grotesque; but they have human qualities also, very closely and acutely studied. In other respects, The Tormentor compares favourably with Nancy Noon. The construction is more orderly, the style less coruscating, more Mr. Swift's own; at moments it attains a rare beauty. These are, we think, the conspicuous successes of the year, and to them should, perhaps, be added, for its distinction of style and its touch upon character, Mr. G. S. Street's The Wise and the Wayward.

Mr. Morris's archaic romance, The Water of the Wondrous Isles, has a beauty, a recondite artificial beauty, of its own; and the same may be said of Mr. Yeats' The Secret Rose. Mr. Wells, in The Invisible Man and The Plattner Story, pursues the vein of scientific marvel which he has found so rich. Miss Wilkins' admirable Jerome heads a train of sojourners from over the Atlantic, among which Mr. Allen's The Choir Invisible and Mrs. Atherton's Patience Sparhawk are the most noteworthy. A few other books have struck us as having real artistic accomplishment, or, at the least, intention; it is sufficient to enumerate Mr. Sturgis's The Folly of Pen Harrington, Miss Schreiner's Peter Halkett, Miss Sinclair's Audrey Craven, Miss Violet Hunt's Unkist, Unkind, Mr. Voynich's Gad-Fly, Mr. Pain's Octave of Claudius, Mr. Jacobs's The Skipper's Wooing, Mrs. Fleming's A Pinchbeck Goddess, Miss Harraden's Hilda Strafford, Mr. Algernon Gissing's A Scholar of Bygones, Mr. Prevost's False Dawn, Mr. Brewer's Speculators, Mr. Burrow's The Way of the Wind. The list, no doubt, might bear expansion from others that we have overlooked. Several books have, naturally enough, received attention out of all proportion to their intrinsic merits. Among these we should class Mme. Sarah Grand's Beth Book, Mr. Le Gallienne's Quest of the Golden Girl, and Mr. Hall Caine's The Christian. So far as popularity goes, romance is in the ascendant; the problem novel and the idyll languish, while our young men and maidens pore over thrilling tales of clattering spurs and "hairbreadth escapes i' th' imminent deadly breach." The leader, after Stevenson, of this school, Mr. Anthony Hope, maintains his place. In Phroso all his old fertility of invention is combined with a certain originality of setting. Mr. Crockett, on the other hand, seems to falter. But a score of youthful aspirants crowd up to take his place. The recipe is an easy one: a chivalrous gentleman, a dash of historic colour, an eyebrow, a mouthful of strange oaths, and the trick is done. But the repetition will pall, and in a year or two we shall all be writing novels on politics or religion or spiritualism again. The present fashion is at least a wholesome one, and in Scott and Dumas its followers have excellent models to work from.

BIOGRAPHY.

Other branches of literature claim all too brief consideration. The mania for biography shows no signs of abatement. Of the most trivial people, upon the slightest excuse, voluminous and, as a rule, ill-edited lives are thrust before a reluctant public. Few of these productions, we should imagine, pay the cost of printing. They are published to gratify the monstrous vanity of relatives and friends, a class of people singularly inept to see the subjects of them in their true proportions. Even in the case of those whose biographies might reasonably be written, we have again and again to complain of too great diffuseness, of too ardent a desire to gather up the last shred of unimportant or uncharacteristic detail. The biography which makes any claim to be a work of art is the rarest of things. Madame Darmesteter's Renan, Captain Mahan's Nelson are welcome exceptions. So far as subject-matter is concerned, the Memoir of Lord Tennyson, by his son, is of the first importance. It is an official biography, somewhat grudgingly given, in which the traditional presentment of Tennyson is elaborated with extreme fidelity and reticence. The Autobiographies of Gibbon, Lord Roberts's Forty-one Years in India, the Life of Jowett, the Letters of Mrs. Browning, stand out from the ruck as of exceptional interest.

ANTHOLOGIES.

The reprinting of old poets goes on apace, and still more the making of anthologies. Amongst such Mrs. Meynell's Flower of the Mind and Mr. Henley's English Lyrics come in the very front rank. A second series of the Golden Treasury does not reach the level of that earlier volume, to which so many gratefully owe their first introduction to the joys of English literature. Less comprehensive are the aims of Mr. E. V. Lucas's Book of Verses for Children, Mr. Sayle's In Praise of Music, Mr. Couch's English Sonnets, Mr. Aubrey Stewart's Epigrams and Epitaphs, Mr. Crawford's Four Poets; all are carried out with knowledge and discrimination.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Scholarship appears to us to be suffering under the dominion of the series. On every conceivable subject some publisher or other has started a collection of manuals or handbooks. Few of these profess to make any real addition to knowledge; they are but rival attempts at mincing learning up small for weak digestions. That this should be done once is well enough; it does not seem necessary that it should be done over and over again. The publisher probably finds that one volume of a series sells another. From a less commercial point of view the disadvantages of the system are apparent. Scholars are called from their independent tasks to serve up once more the funeral baked meats, and the exasperating uniformity of the series drives them into a groove, and robs their work of any originality it might otherwise have possessed. Nevertheless some good books have appeared during the year; so many, in fact, that only a representative few can find mention here. Under the head of literary history we note the second volume of Prof. Courthope's History of English Poetry, Prof. Ker's Epic and Romance, Dr. Hill's Johnsonian Miscellanies, Dr. Gasquet's Old English Bible, and a whole host of writings upon Shakespeare, of which Mr. Lee's article in the Dictionary of National Biography, Mr. Madden's Diary of William Silence, Mr. Carter's Shakespeare, Puritan and Recusant, are the most important. A cheap reprint of some of the volumes of Dr. Furness's New Variorum Shakespeares is a welcome boon. So is the section of the new British Museum Catalogue dealing with Shakespeare. The old controversy as to the Sonnets has revived gaily in consequence of Lady Newdegate-Newdigate's Gossip from a Muniment Room. General history yields new volumes of the well-known works by Prof. Gardiner and Mr. Justin McCarthy, and among special studies Prof. Maitland's Domesday Book and Beyond, Mr. Lang's Pickle the Spy, Mr. Leach's English Schools at the Reformation, Mr. Morley's Macchiavelli, Major Hume's Raleigh and his Philip II. of Spain, Father Taunton's Black Monks of St. Benedict in England, Canon Jessopp's St. William of Norwich and his Life of Donne, Mr. J. W. Clark's Observances of Barnwell, Canon Knox Little's St. Francis of Assisi,

Mr. Beazley's Dawn of Modern Geography. In Philosophy we have Frazer's Philosophy of Theism and R. L. Nettleship's Lectures and Remains; in theology Archbishop Benson's posthumous study of St. Cyprian; in anthropology and folk-lore Mr. Grant Allen's Evolution of the Idea of God, Mr. Borlase's Irish Dolmens, Mr. Nutt's Voyage of Bran; in Economics Mr. Charles Booth's Life and Labour in East London, a monumental work now at last complete. In classical scholarship the signal things are Prof. Jebb's Ajax and the coming edition of the newly discovered fragments of Bacchylides. It need hardly be said that this list is representative rather than exhaustive. To it may be appended the names of two books which have had a popular rather than a literary or academic success. These are Dr. Nansen's Farthest North and Mr. Steevens's Land of the Dollar.

And so we come back to the point from which we started, that while the literature of commerce and the literature of knowledge are flourishing, that highest type of literature, which we ventured to call the literature of art, finds relatively but few adherents. And the question suggests itself whether anything can be done to remedy this disproportion. At bottom, perhaps, it is partly a matter of stimulus. Men must have something tangible to work for: the popular novelist finds his reward in the cheques of his agent, the literary student in the distant beckoning of a professorship. The artist alone works for nothing but the satisfaction of his own conscience and the silent esteem of those who respect art.

AN ACADEMY OF LETTERS.

OUR suggested list of names for an ACADEMY OF LETTERS aroused considerable interest, to which our columns and the columns of the London, provincial, and French presses have testified. We do not propose to make any change in our selection; but if it were desired to increase the number of Academicians from forty to fifty, the suggestions of our correspondents would indicate the following additional names:

James Martineau.	Frederic Harrison.
Edward Caird.	William Watson.
Henry Sidgwick.	Sir Walter Besant.
Lord Acton.	Edward Dowden.
F. Max Müller.	T. Watts-Dunton.

A glance at the article on page 497, with the long list of awards, shows the power of such a body as the French Academy to assist merit. It was with the idea of encouraging authors of younger reputation that we decided to crown two books each year with awards of one hundred guineas and fifty guineas.

In reply to many enquiries, we may add that we hope to announce the names of the authors whose books have been "crowned" in our issue of January 15.

SOME YOUNGER REPUTATIONS.

MR. W. B. YEATS.

MR. YEATS, born near Dublin in 1866, has done much work as an anthologist and critic, to which we need not here allude, nor even to his labours of love in connexion with the mystic Blake. His highest and finest work is to be found in his collected Poems, which comprise the best of his previously published verse; in John Sherman and Dhoya, a little volume of the Pseudonym Series; in The Celtic Twilight, a medley of legend and reverie; and in The Secret Rose, a collection of imaginative tales. All these are steeped in a magic which makes them too aerial and unsubstantial for some readers, too dreamy and dim; and yet they are wonderfully concrete and close to earth as well. This writer is emphatically one of those who have an abiding vision of beauty and truth, embracing all things, since all things are but the immortal moods of an immortal imagination. He finds "In all poor foolish things that live a day, Eternal Beauty wandering on her way."

So to him the old Irish mythology, and the visible world of nature, and the set schemes of the mystics, and the daily life of man, are equally charged with an equal meaning, than which he can see and sing nothing else, whether he take romance, or drama, or lyric, or short story for his chosen method of expression. And he is not a misty, turbid writer, with flashes of beautiful light: he is far too pure and passionate an artist, a craftsman, for that. He has written lyrics of lovely simplicity and pathetic music, which a child could feel; and at his farthest flights toward the ultimate and the primal verities he remains clear and definite. His gift of words, wonderfully fresh and moving, his command over the sights and sounds of nature, his penetrating observation, while they make his poetry and his prose full of colour and cadence, full of romantic charm, are yet turned by him to the service of a higher imagination, which apprehends life sub specie eternitatis; but of didacticism, allegory, moralising, he has no trace. He does not make Oisín, and the whole vast Celtic world of wonder and enchantment, so variously presented in his writings, mere vehicles of an unearthly creed: they are real to him, because they are ideal: not more so the living creatures of the fields and waters, whom he shows to us with so faithful and apt a touch. A pre-historic myth, a peasant poet of the last century, a mediæval mystic, a London suburb—they tell him the same tale of a divine imagination envisaging itself in moods of life: whence a kind of compassionate exultation in his presentments of passions and emotions, be they personal or dramatic. So, he has humour, that precious possession inseparable from true art and spirituality; humour of a gently ironical and sympathetic sort. He suffers, doubtless, somewhat from his English readers' unfamiliarity with his Irish themes and interests, as also from his "transcendentalism"; but no one has questioned the technical side of his excellence; the wistful solemnity and lyrical melody of his verse, the musical rhythm of his prose, his mastery of the proper arresting word, the striking, unaffected epithet. And he has never condescended to inferior stuff, never squandered his talent upon poor matter; his work is always ardent and fine, respecting itself. To Mr. Yeats we look for a masterpiece, since his imagination is of the highest quality, and his execution not far beneath it.

MR. GEORGE GISSING.

THE discriminating have had their eyes upon Mr. Gissing since first, in Demos, he showed what stuff he was of; the popular success which he has never courted he has never won. He is handicapped by the fact that, though an excellent craftsman, he has not style—has not, that is to say, distinction, finish, beauty of style. Yet from first to last, from Eve's Ransom to The Whirlpool, he has written a round dozen of admirable novels—solid, honest, patient novels, such as but few men, in the face of comparative neglect, have the grit to turn out. And they are novels full of ideas. No one works more under the domination of the idea than Mr. Gissing. In New Grub Street, that remorseless analysis and indictment of Mr. Gissing's own profession, Harold Biffen, the realist, who lives on bread and dripping in a garret and rejoices in the Greek choric metres, thus expounds his theory of the art of fiction:

"What I really aim at is an absolute realism in the sphere of the ignobly decent. The field, as I understand it, is a new one. I don't know any writer who has treated ordinary vulgar life with fidelity and seriousness. Zola writes deliberate tragedies; his vilest figures become heroic from the place they fill in a strongly imagined drama. I want to deal with the essentially unheroic, with the day-to-day life of that vast majority of people who are at the mercy of paltry circumstance. Dickens understood the possibility of such work, but his tendency to melodrama on the one hand, and his humour on the other, prevented him from thinking of it. An instance, now. As I came along by Regent's Park, half an hour ago, a man and a girl were walking close in front of me, love-making. I passed them slowly and heard a good deal of their talk—it was part of the situation that they should pay no heed to a stranger's proximity. Now, such a love scene as that has absolutely never been written down; it was entirely decent, yet vulgar to the *n*th power. Dickens would have made it ludicrous—a gross injustice. Other men who deal with low-class life would perhaps have preferred idealising it—an absurdity. For my own part, I am going to reproduce it verbatim, without one single impertinent suggestion of any point of view save that of honest reporting. The result will be something unutterably tedious. Precisely. That is the stamp of the ignobly decent life. If it were anything but tedious, it would be untrue."

In part, Harold Biffen's theory is Mr. Gissing's also. In part, and not entirely, because Mr. Gissing is not a pure realist. The "ignobly decent" is his subject; he observes it laboriously, minutely, from every conceivable point of view. But he does not merely observe it—he condemns. And that makes all the difference; it turns Mr. Gissing from a realist into a pessimist. A pessimist he is, deliberately. He lays his finger, here and there, on every condition of our middle-class life; and points out how each in turn operates to degrade and ruin the humanity which it controls. His books are crowded with failures, failures that might so easily have been successes. He shows you idealism thwarted by the pettiest of barriers, by imperfect education, by imagined social requirements, by natural instinct prompting to foolish marriage, oftenest of all, by just the hundred-a-year too little; ambitions warped, the joy of life crushed. Only once does the idealist get the best of it, in Thyrza. Here Mr. Gissing has given wing to the poetry that is in his soul; therefore, you admire the other books, but you love Thyrza. The middle-class, with its infinitesimal grades, is Mr. Gissing's field of study. His gentle folk do not convince; on the other hand, he can venture into the slums, and in The Nether World has anticipated alike Mr. Morrison and Mr. Maugham, and painted a Bank Holiday in all its Bank Holidayness.

MR. "ANTHONY HOPE."

IF the circulation of Mr. Anthony Hope's books exceeds that of novelists of higher rank, it is no matter of reproach against him: it is neither to puffery nor to vulgarity that he owes his success. The extremes of his field are marked, on the one hand, by The Chronicles of Count Antonio; on the other, by The Dolly Dialogues. The former is his most deliberate effort after effect in style. Probably, also, none of his creations has fallen so perilously near to failure. It is a book, indeed, that one has read with pleasure and with admiration; only, having once closed it, straightway one forgets what manner of book it was. From beginning to end it contains no bungled sentence or discordant collocation; it is not confused or diffuse; it is singularly free from definite defect: only it is lacking, too, in that unspeakable quality which can make a story or a character or a phrase to shine out from its neighbourhood and live in the memory. Yet it is by a kindred work that Mr. Hope is best known; and if one asks why The Prisoner of Zenda has captured the fancy and imagination of so great a company, no other reason suggests itself than that mere suspicion of modern cynicism which imparts to the whole a vague twang of burlesque. To what extent Rupert of Hentzau will preserve this strain it is too early to conjecture. Phroso, in the same species, marks a decline; but the air of Ruritania is invigorating.

As the amused watcher of his own London, Mr. Hope appears at his most considerable stature in The God in the Car. The picture of the "magerful man" is almost too definitely drawn from life to rank among creations; nevertheless, so convincingly to portray the Titan, with his gift of overwhelming vitality and his unconscious power of domination, is no petty feat. It is bright, too, with that illuminative see-saw of dialogue which is characteristic of Mr. Hope on his most modern and frivolous side—the side, that is, which appeals most directly to whatever there is of frivolous in the reader—and which is the essence of the charming Dolly Dialogues. Across the Channel the thing has been done before; and Mr. Hope is not Gyp; and, for the matter of that, English is not French. Anyway, the Dialogues are very clever, and, at points, even brilliant.

His smart dialogue is sometimes held up as a matter of reproach against him; and we acknowledge, thankfully, that the conversations of the people in A Man of Mark, Mr. Witt's Widow, and The Comedies of Courtship, are more amusing than the greater number of those at which, in real life, we are privileged to assist. But it is not always their wit from which the reader derives the most pleasure; more often it is their aptness. The average man speaks 12,000 words a day, the average woman half as many again. Out of the 30,000 words launched between sleep and sleep by, say, a betrothed couple, Mr. Hope has a happy knack of arresting the half-dozen winged sentences that have a real bearing upon the true lives of them. Divorce them from their context, or in anywise modify the circumstances, and these same words that seem so "smart" become as futile as an electro-magnet when the circuit is broken. It is Comedies of Courtship that we have particularly in our mind.

It must be confessed that the man who wrote these books knows his world more than calf-skin deep, that he is detached enough to watch it steadily, and clever enough to read it. We credit him with a modesty that recognises his limitations, and we earnestly entreat him not to be seduced by the critics who worry him to take himself more seriously. He is not a Thackeray or a Stevenson, but he is eminently refreshing; a cynic indeed, but a cynic with a sound digestion and a shapely style.

MR. JOHN DAVIDSON.

IN the seventies and eighties Mr. John Davidson was writing romantic farces and pastorals. These have no dramatic qualities, but they bloom with fantastic humour and fresh poetry, wild-wood notes. Mr. Davidson came from Scotland to London, went through the furnace, and found his living in journalism. In 1890 he published Perseverid; or, the Career of Ninian Jamieson, a fascinating study of the perseveridum ingenium Scotorum. It was little regarded, but, nevertheless, it had, and has, its warm admirers. Mr. Davidson has not ceased to write fiction, but it is in poetry that he has achieved most. Take a sample of his early verse, from In a Music-Hall:

THE SWING.

"We sat on the swing together;
At the end of the orchard-close,
A hill with its budding heather
Like a purple dome arose.

On the heavily ivied chapel
The sun for the windows sought;
In the shadows of pear-tree and apple
The daisies were crowded and ca ght.

And this was her thirteenth summer,
And I was as old as she;
But love is an early comer:
He came to her and me.

O, silently, slowly swinging,
Till a star peered half-afraid,
And the chapel-bell was ringing,
And the shadows were lost in shade."

Fame came to Mr. Davidson with his Fleet-street Eclogues, and was confirmed by his Ballads and Songs. The ballad form suits him admirably. He has not the genius for finish, but he has an impetuous movement, an astonishing vigour. He is a born singer, he carries you off your legs with magnificent stanzas.

"The adventurous sun took Heaven by storm;
Clouds scattered largesses of rain;
The sounding cities, rich and warm,
Smouldered and glittered in the plain."

It has a swing, an entrain.

But the "fundamental brainwork" of Mr. Davidson's poems will rarely bear analysis. He has emotions and instincts, but he has no philosophy—he does not think things out. His ethics are somewhat antinomian, his social fervour vague and rhetorical: he lends himself cruelly to caricature. It is in the pastoral mood that he satisfies most and offends least. Always a sojourner in Fleet-street, he brings thither the smell of the heather and the dew of the morning upon the meadows. Town and country jostle each other throughout the Eclogues, the human impulses and the fascination of Pan. He has breathed a new life into the somewhat worn form which he affects. Outdoor sights and sounds he renders with the eye of a master and the passion of a lover; he renders the atmosphere and the feel of the wind. What a large airiness there is in these two stanzas from In Romney Marsh:

"As I came up from Dymchurch Wall,
I saw above the Downs' low crest
The crimson brands of sunset fall,
Flicker and fade from the West.

Night sank: like flakes of silver fire,
The stars in one great shower came down;
Shrill blew the wind; and shrill the wire
Rang out from Hythe to Romney town."

Were he less a child of nature, Mr. Davidson might sing less; upon a broader intellectual basis he might sing more wisely.

MR. HENRY "SETON MERRIMAN."

Is Mr. Merriman one of the great, or only one of the second-rate? That interesting question cannot yet receive a conclusive answer, but the fact that it can be seriously propounded shows that its subject has already gone far, and may go farther. In fact, Mr. Merriman writes so well that one is disappointed that he does not write better. He has nearly all the necessary qualities for his art. His characters—particularly his men—are real flesh-and-blood creations; his scenery—whether it be the Russian steppes in The Sowers or the tangled jungle of Africa in With Edged Tools—is vividly photographed upon the mind's eye of the reader; his dialogue is concise and occasionally witty. Unlike a good many modern novelists, he can construct a plot, as he shows us in From One Generation to Another, of which the dénouement is at once extremely powerful and perfectly natural. He is intensely patriotic. Not quite so patently as Mr. Kipling, but quite as plainly to those who will read between the lines, he shows us that in his opinion the well-bred young Englishman can go anywhere and do anything. His heroes are just as much at home in Buluwayo as in Bond-street; we find them philandering in a Belgravian drawing-room one week, and tending the fever-stricken in a Russian village the next. Then he is clean. He writes as an English gentleman talks in a mixed company, with a careful choice of topics as well as of language. With all this in his favour, it may be wondered why there should be any doubt as to the answer to our original question. Unfortunately, a novelist may have all these admirable qualities, and yet remain essentially second-rate. So far, Mr. Merriman has not given many indications of deep thought on the great problems of human existence. As a substitute, he is rather too fond of taking the reader aside for a moment, in the manner of Thackeray, in order to make some slightly cynical and occasionally rather trite comment on the situation at which his story has arrived. These remarks come much better from the mouth of one of the characters—for example, that most astute of good fellows, Karl Steinmetz in The Sowers—than from the author in a parenthesis. If the importunity of publishers and editors will only give Mr. Merriman time to think over his stories a little longer before writing them, and to edit them a little more severely after they are written, we believe that he will justify the great promise of some of his early stories, and achieve a work which will take rank as literature. Otherwise, he will merely remain one of the most agreeable of our many ephemeral romancers.

MR. A. T. QUILLER-COUCH.

MR. QUILLER-COUCH is thirty-four, a scholar and a Cornishman. Those seem to be the main facts which bear upon his literary work. He was educated at Clifton, where the late Mr. T. E. Brown was among the masters. From Clifton Mr. Couch went to Oxford, where he took a scholarship at Trinity, but distinguished himself chiefly by contributions to the Oxford Magazine. More than that, he actually started an undergraduate paper—The Rattle—which had a brief existence for the Eights week, and seemed at the moment a marvel of brilliancy. Whether Mr. Couch could read over those early efforts without a cold shudder is another question; but his talent was undoubtedly precocious. Dead Man's Rock, by "Q.," appeared before its author had taken his degree, and there is a tradition that he sent it in among his credentials when applying for a fellowship at Magdalen. Troy Town followed at no long interval, and this book revealed, although in a very imperfect form, the true bent of Mr. Couch's genius. For Troy Town, as most people know, is Fowey, where "Q." lives, and this was only the beginning of a long series of Cornish studies. Mr. Couch is one of those writers who find their best inspiration in the air of their native county, and, unlike so many of them, he seems to feel that influence more strongly when he is living on the spot. Mr. Barrie, if we mistake not, was in England when he wrote the Window in Thrums, and Stevenson seemed to experience the fascination of Scotland most intensely when it was heightened by contrast with his Samoan abode; but Mr. Couch always has been at his best when writing of the sights and the people who were actually about him. After he left Oxford, and before he settled down in Fowey, there was a period of literary work and journalism in London which resulted in a temporary breakdown of his health. One journalistic connexion he took with him to Cornwall, where he has written for several years weekly causeries in the Speaker. He has indeed all the equipment of a critic—sound scholarship, keen relish for literature, and a generous readiness to welcome new talent. His interest in the technical business of authorship—what one may call the mechanism of style—has shown itself in an unusually protracted period of discipleship. No author has laid to heart more closely Stevenson's advice to imitate the procedure of greater men; and Mr. Couch's latest published work has been a tour de force in this kind—the completion of St. Ives. Yet not even that is so close a reproduction of Stevenson's manner as the story, "Gabriel Foot, Highwayman," which was included in Noughts and Crosses. In the same volume were several studies after Daudet, paraphrased rather than translated from the Lettres de Mon Moulin and elsewhere. But the best things were those for which one could adduce no original—the story of the mad Mayor of Gantick, or the story of the engine-driver for whom the soul of his burnt wife incarnated itself in butterflies, and who was a peaceable madman, hostile only to entomologists, till the tragic day when a moth fluttered into the flame of altar tapers in the church, and he rushed out a blaspheming and raving maniac. Better still, perhaps, than the best of these admirable short stories is the tale, "I Saw Three Ships Come Sailing," with its vision of tempest on the Cornish coast, and ships appearing for an instant out of the mist before they dash upon the reef. Mr. Couch has hardly surpassed that story yet: la, admirable and pathetic novel though it was, suggested Mr. Barrie's influence too strongly. However, "Q." is young still; and time, compared to the life of man, is long.

MR. "BENJAMIN SWIFT."

MR. BENJAMIN SWIFT published last year a novel, Nancy Noon, which had considerable vogue, and won an amount of more or less injudicious praise. The book was full of a certain moral fervour gone wrong, which appealed to the "great heart," the "Non-conformist conscience," or whatever is the proper name of the turbid popular mind.

We do not wish to be rude to Mr. Swift, but his position is precisely that which once was filled by the gifted author of Festus. Spasms and contortions are always marketable, and he may rest assured that the praise which the book received was not due to its sparse fragments of literary worth. But this year he has given us a new novel, The Tormentor, which doubtless surprised some of the amiable gentlemen who admired its predecessor. Yet the book is a real advance, and it is just because of the good stuff which Mr. Swift has in him that these notes are written.

On a hasty glance both the books seem amazingly bad. A turgid, explosive style, a pretentiousness of language covering a very real triviality of thought, seems at first the only feature. Form, design, there is none. Throughout one catches a glimmer of a conception, but irrelevant rhapsodies rob it of all effect. The characters are in the main ludicrous, for the author has shirked his proper work, and, instead of an honest attempt at adequate characterisation, has fled to the ugly fervours of incompetence. It is a sort of new Byronism, to our mind infinitely less virile and promising than the old. If we are compelled to decide between the rococo and the schwärmerisch we choose the rococo. His ignorance of the little things which give verisimilitude is amazing even in a very young man; his lack of good breeding is incomprehensible in a man of culture. The books are in a way utterly repulsive, and the repulsive feature is not a strength and passion which we fear, but a fictional weakness which we can only deplore. His one apparent gift—a sense, somewhat distorted to be sure, of the dramatic—is made of no avail by his tangled method, and the ordinary reader, with any love of the great things in literature, is moved to wholesale condemnation.

And yet such a condemnation is unjust. For by and by we begin to see that Mr. Swift is not like other men, that he has a theory of art all his own, and that there is really a method in his madness. He does not know the common meaning of the word art. He is obviously familiar with much foreign literature, but he has no trace of the austere ideals of a Balzac, a Flaubert, or a Turgenev. Nor has he anything of the scholar's temper, for though he has clearly dabbled to some extent in philosophy, there is none of the exactness, method, love of "justice and chastity in form" which is the nature of a scholar. But he is very emphatically a moralist and a rhetorician. More: in his own way, he is a stylist and a fine one. He seems to work habitually on a gross theory of the use of words. When he touches scenery or the human form—those most delicate matters—he is often flat, stale and undistinguished. Cheap phrases of rhetoric are always in his ears, and he cannot get rid of them. But now and then in these turgid wastes a word, a chain of words, will flash into poetry, the overlaid sentences will take fire, and we are entranced—for a moment. Again, he has the stylist's most excellent dower, the sense of metaphor. Utterly uncritical, he never knows when he is fine and when he is merely silly, but delivers all with an air of inspiration. Still the jewels are there, and it is a fact to remember.

This, then, is the advance of the second story upon the first—that Mr. Swift gives fuller play to the rhetoric and less painfully strives after the unattainable. In Nancy Noon he was fresh from the influence of great fictional models, and aimed at a fictional success. He failed, not having it in him to succeed, and he wisely turned to work where, with mere skeletons of characters, he could work out his moral problem and give rein to his fervours. It is, perhaps, not a very high gift, this of rhetoric, but it is a real one, and there is room in letters for the moralist. The man who can go mad over what Dr. Johnson called "metaphysical distresses," and feel passionately about "infinities" and "grey-haired eternal ironies," is not to be ignored. Moreover, there is much in that rude style of his which might yet be turned to nobler uses. Now and then there is a note which argues the lyrical gift, and once he gives us a little jingle of unforgettable verse:

"My love, I hear him
Reaping the ripe barley,
Poppy heads near him!
Drowsy poppies, fear him!
Death, they say, is a mower,
Aye, and love too,
And seed comes back to the sower,
And the blush of the rose to the grower."

The man who can write like this may yet take high rank in poetry.

Finally, let this be our advice to Mr. Swift. He has shown no conception of art—nay, he has given positive indications of the absence of all artistic capacity. Nor is he in any way a thinker, even in the limited sense in which one uses the word in fiction. Nowhere in him do we find those profound lantern-flashings into the depths of the human heart which open up long avenues of thought. The very lack of critical power is a sign of the absence of any talent for high intellectual achievement. But he has passion, emotion, and a style, and he may in time be a famous moralist, and so end where great men begin. But let him definitely choose his course, for if he be perpetually going up and down, between the Jerusalem of the artist and the Jericho of the rhetorician, he must sooner or later fall among thieves.

MR. OWEN SEAMAN.

If Mr. Seaman reads the reviews of his books—especially his Battle of the Bays—he must be familiar with the fact that certain critics have declared him the equal, if not the superior, of Calverley. In these days any man who combines rhymes playfully is in danger of being called greater than Calverley. But fortunately Mr. Seaman has shown himself possessed of too much good sense to believe such rubbish. Indeed, that Mr. Seaman must have a very remarkable store of good sense is one of the first reflections which follows a perusal of his work. When it comes to hard fact, he is, of course, no Calverley at all. His aims are different, his equipment is different, although his methods are similar. Calverley's verse was the product of high spirits and the sense of fun. Mr. Seaman has not much fun: he is a castigator. He shoots folly as it flies. Calverley did so too in his song of the Prince of Wales's cherry-stones, and in one or two of his parodies; but apart from the satirical intention, these pieces have independent life. Mr. Seaman is wholly satirist. He is critical and destructive where Calverley laughed and invented. But we ought to be proud of Mr. Seaman. His dexterity sometimes is almost uncanny, and his wit glitters like a stiletto. He hits every time. Despite the cleverness of much of the Tillers of the Sand, and the address to the Emperor of Germany—

"Nor were you meant to solve the nation's knots,
Or be the Earth's Protector, willy-nilly;
You only make yourself and royal Pots-
-dam silly"—

we consider Mr. Seaman at his best when his subject is literary. In political satire, both Mr. Traill and Mr. C. L. Graves are his masters. In his happiest moments Mr. Traill is superb, and the well-nigh diabolical wit of Mr. Graves's Hawarden Horace has never been sufficiently recognised. But as a parodist, and, what is rarer and better, a satirist of literary fads and fashions, Mr. Seaman has no serious rival. His sympathies lie in the direction of literature. Once or twice a week he is engaged in lecturing on Browning to Extension students, and his early rhyming work at Cambridge took the form of a burlesque of Edipus Rex. He is doomed, we suppose, to turn out a mass of political rhyme in his position as poet-in-chief to Mr. Punch; but let him consider that taskwork. Let him keep his leisure for literary satire. He does it to perfection. His "Ballad of a Bun" and his "Ballad of Resurrection," after Mr. Davidson, and his treatment of Mr. Watson, stamp him master.

MR. H. G. WELLS.

THE Pall Mall Gazette under Mr. Cust's editorship was remarkable for its occasional articles. They were by various hands, but readers of that brilliant sheet soon began to discover a congruity in certain of them. Clearly they came from one brain. Nobody knew the author: no member of the staff had ever seen him. They only knew that the articles came in, with unflinching regularity, at the rate of a couple a week, and that they were always acceptable. The Unknown was never declined with thanks. Soon the editor of the Pall Mall Budget, prospecting for talent, tapped this spring. He made the acquaintance of the Unknown, to discover that he was a Mr. H. G. Wells, that he had some figure in the scientific world, that he had helped to edit an educational paper, and that he was willing to try his hand at short stories. He tried, to considerable effect. The stories, like the articles, came into the Budget office at the rate of about a couple a week, and they were also very welcome. These articles and stories may now be found between the covers of Certain Personal Matters and The Stolen Bacillus. About this time Mr. Henley, casting about for a serial for The New Review, heard of The Time Machine that Mr. Wells was writing, his first long attempt in that blend of science and fiction which he has made peculiarly his own. The publication of The Time Machine brings us down to 1894, his second year as a writer of acceptable fiction.

Then, so we read his career, Mr. Wells set himself to gain the public ear. That he succeeded we all know. That he worked too quickly most agree. To write The Wonderful Visit, The Island of Dr. Moreau, The Wheels of Chance, and The Plattner Story in one year was to bustle a loyal and willing brain. The Wonderful Visit is fantasy, fantasy of a delightful and radiant kind, and in our opinion the best thing Mr. Wells has done. Others incline to that lively open-air piece, The Wheels of Chance. The Island of Dr. Moreau, although a tour de force of bizarre imagination, is a shade too horrid for most readers. The Invisible Man was written before 1896, but it was carefully revised in the early spring of this year. Mr. Wells is now re-writing part of the War of the Worlds, that admirable and stirring Martian romance which has just come to an end in Pearson's Magazine. This instinct for revising and improving his work augurs well for Mr. Wells's future. The hot, early fit of production is over. He has won not only the ear of the public, but the encouragement of those whose approval is hard to gain, and still harder to keep. His future rests with himself. If he can forget the popular magazine; if he continues to assimilate; if he is content to live solitary; if he can escape, by some means or another, from that driving necessity to make a certain income—a necessity which has killed the artist in so many—all will be well with him. Mr. Wells is at the parting of the ways. He must choose; only himself can make the choice; only something within himself can guide him to that choice. It would hardly be fair to ask for evidence of it in the two books upon which he is now at work. Love and Mr. Lewisham promises well. It is a novel of human sympathy rather than sensation. When the Sleeper Wakes is a tale of 200 years hence. We give him time in which to make decision.

MR. STEPHEN PHILLIPS.

THERE was once a man in Devon who met Wilkie in a coach and who thanked God that the painter he admired was so young. In the poetry of Mr. Stephen Phillips is a note of maturity; yet biographical notices attribute to him a juvenility that ought to rejoice the reader who believes the battle to be with the young. Still no one would say that Christ in Hades is a "promising" poem. It is performance, and a very complete performance, or it is nothing. It covers only twelve short pages; and the various verses that are bound with it, in the "Shilling Garland" series do not make a larger show. But the little book has gone into many hands; made true friends, had the praise of critics for its rare quality as well as their respect for its limited quantity; and has prepared the way for Mr. Phillips's publication of some singularly fine verses, from time to time, in the columns of the Spectator.

The dominant note of Mr. Phillips might be deduced from the very title of his book. He strives to give a bygone calm to thoughts and feelings that are still in ferment in most minds. He has the old dignity in union with the modern intimacy:

"Teach how the crucifix may be
Carven from the laurel tree,
Fruit of the Hesperides
Burnish take on Eden trees;
The Muses' sacred grove be wet
With the red dew of Olivet,
And Sappho lay her burning brow
In white Cecilia's lap of Snow."

To that alluring invitation of another young poet, Mr. Phillips, in a measure, makes response; not, indeed, as an enthusiast of the Cross, but as one who beckons to dead deities from within its shadow. Christianity is too personal to be spoken of impartially. It is precisely this unusual impersonality, this missing moderation, that Mr. Phillips supplies to modern verse. Even in his Hades, when the Saviour descends thither, the attitude of those whom He is to deliver, is one of human hesitation, a hope that has in it the lurking fear of disappointment, according to canons of human experience, not those of Heavenly optimism:

"Yet how shall we in Thy tormented face
Believe? Thou comest from the glistening sun
As out of some great battle, nor hast Thou
The beautiful ease of the untroubled gods.
Most strong are they, for they are joyous cold.
Thou art not happy! We can trust Thee not.
How wilt Thou lead with feet already pierced?
And if we ask Thy hand, see it is torn."

The handful of "Lyrics" at the end of the book, above all the little series of verses called "The Apparition," contain Mr. Phillips's strongest cry to the reader:

"Nine nights she did not come to me:
The heaven was filled with rain;
And as it fell and fell, I said:
'She will not come again.'

Last night she came, not as before,
But in a strange attire;
Weary she seemed, and very faint,
As though she came from fire."

And again:

"She is not happy! It was morn;
The sun fell on my head:
And it was not an hour in which
We think upon the dead.

She is not happy! As I walked,
Of her I was aware:
She cried out, like a creature hurt,
Close by me in the air."

Poignant as these verses and others of the series are, they lack a sequence of arrangement which could have been easily theirs. Yet so fine a poet, and we use the words advisedly, as Mr. Phillips here proves himself, must needs be a well-grounded philosopher at root; and it is in the power of expressing himself accordingly that we look for new increase in the volume he is now preparing for the press.

MR. CHARLES WHIBLEY.

THOSE who have followed the career of Mr. Charles Whibley cannot fail to have noticed the vast improvement in his style since the time when he began to write slashing articles for the National Observer. This is the pleasantest and most promising trait of his writing. It means that he is taking pains and giving thought to his craft and frankly criticising himself. Also it encourages us in the belief that his efforts will not cease, that he will not fall into a rut and become utterly hopeless. Looking at the progress made it is reasonable to believe that he still has an interesting career before him. Yet one cannot disguise the fact that there are great obstacles to surmount. In a critic the first requisite is style, and of that Mr. Whibley has only the beginnings. He has gained in clearness and accuracy; he is less addicted to the brusque forcible-feeble of his early efforts, when his language was generally so very much more violent than was warranted by any vigour in his thought. But even yet the style is too bookish and Johnsonese, reminding one of a Quarterly Reviewer in a bad moment. The cadences fall so mechanically that one cannot read a page aloud without falling into sing-song as though it were pointed for chanting. Worst of all, the words seem to grow dead in his hands—he has not the art of making them glow with life, colour, music, and picture. It is this verbal lifelessness he must now contend with if his ambition be to write really noble prose. We would rather convince than dogmatise, and to any one desirous of testing the truth of this a simple experiment may be suggested. First read a page or two of the Book of Scoundrels and then open Jonathan Wild, its model and inspiration. What we mean will then require no words to explain. And doing that will suggest a thought or two about Mr. Whibley's matter. He does some things very well indeed, but he never seems to have defined his own borders. The slating, slashing, bull-baiting style of rhetoric in which he used to write his art criticisms defeated its own object. "It is better to fight for the good than to rail at the ill," and he was much more interesting when expounding the merits of Mr. Whistler than when belabouring the Royal Academy. In the best work he has achieved—introducing some of the Tudor Translations—the value lies wholly in the exposition. When he stops to fling defiance at the Puritan or a gibe at the middle-classes, to ridicule Clapham or jeer at the Realist, the only effect produced is that of making the reader see that he is uncomfortable himself and engendering discomfort in others. A man with a worthy task in hand does not stop every ten minutes to defy the passer-by—he goes fearlessly on with it and trusts to winning the approbation of the few for whom he is working. This task of explaining and elucidating books that have been stranded or half-forgotten really seems to be that for which Mr. Whibley is best equipped by scholarship and temperament. He might perform a valuable service by sticking to it. But in his critical essays you see him straining a paradox beyond its natural limits, as if he had too literally accepted those wild sayings (not without a grain of truth in them, but never meant seriously) in which genius will occasionally indulge; he lacks urbanity and that dexterous lightness which made Arnold so formidable. He is too ambitious of earning the praise of Bungay: "For a slashing article, sir, there is nobody like the Captive—nobody like him."

MR. ARTHUR MORRISON.

MR. MORRISON appears to have arrived at a very interesting and critical stage of his career, for no one can say whether promise is going to ripen into performance or not. He is of the French school; Daudet might have taught him his method, and Zola selected his subjects. In his Jago he trusted little or nothing to imagination, but a great deal to his notebook. Ever seeking the clean-cut picturesque phrase and the vivid word, he produced a very striking picture of the East End. But, nevertheless, it was not quite satisfactory and convincing. Human nature does not alter so much with conditions as he seems to think. A little less or a little more morality does not affect its elements. The conventions of Mayfair or the conventions of Poplar touch nothing but environment. Mr. Albert Chevalier made his early success by recognising this fact; the coster of his songs is recognisably alive and human. The coster of Mr. Morrison does not seem to be a man, but only a stuffed figure carrying a blotch of horrible characteristics. One feels this the more because Mr. Morrison's strongest gift in writing is a cynicism that is almost brutal. With it he elaborates the features of all his characters till the impression is produced that one savage, hideous, ugly coster and one gaudy-feathered, bedizened "donah" have acted as models for all his studies of Jagodom. Moreover, his success has been achieved in pictures of the brutal. There are times when he seems to reflect that, after all, passion and hatred and love and tears and sorrow and forgiveness, if he could but see them, play the same part in the slum that they do in Piccadilly; but so far this discernment has resulted in no more than the reproduction of some of the worst faults of Charles Dickens, catch-penny pathos, and weak sentimentality where he intended real feeling. Mr. Morrison never will do first-rate work till he shuts up his Dickens, a writer who had no command of the harsh, bitter cynicism in which Mr. Morrison excels, and whose sunny love of what was bright and cheerful is inimitable.

To pronounce any final judgment upon Mr. Morrison's writing would be absurd. The truth is, he has not yet found himself; he has not searched his mind so thoroughly as to be able to say how much of it is second-hand Kipling, second-hand Daudet, Dickens, Zola, and what remnant is pure Morrison. We do not urge this in a spirit of blame or fault-finding. Every young writer does well to study carefully the technique of his predecessors, and in doing so much that is foreign will be sure to get encrusted on what is his own. The very best way to get rid of such accretion is to throw it off in writing. But, and this is to be carefully noted, the imitation that is freely pardoned at the beginning of a career is not to be so easily forgiven in more ambitious tasks. So, also, the lack of sympathy—we do not mean pity or compassion so much as the power to enter into and share another's views and thoughts and passions—may be passed by once, but without it there can be no really great imaginative writing. Thus it happens that those who have watched Mr. Morrison's career with attention await his next work with unusual interest. He has great merit and very grave faults. The question is really whether he has sufficient frankness of self-criticism to know the one from the other, to develop the former and pare down the latter. He has already made a good impression, and that is more than half the battle.

MR. KENNETH GRAHAME.

IN Mr. Kenneth Grahame we have a clear thinker and an exuberant prose artist who is content to wait for the visitations of the muse. The business of his life is not writing. We know not what it is, but have heard that the Old Lady of Threadneedle-street is pleased to number him among her servants. If this truly be so, we may be thankful that she asks not all his time and energy, thankful that she allowed Mr. Henley the use of some. It may be that when the history of the Scots and National Observer is written—and it would make, with selections, a most agreeable and invigorating book—we shall be told to what extent Mr. Henley supplied not only a haven for young writers, but also an impulse and momentum. We shall then know whether Mr. Grahame wrote his stirring essay on Orion—The Hunter—from within or without, whether it was his own idea to continue the diverting narrative of the childhood of Harold and Edward, Charlotte and Selina. As the cause of wit in others Mr. Henley holds a very high position. One charm of The Golden Age is its felicity in combining the philosophy of a man of the world, blessed with more than a dash of poetry and romance in him and a pretty taste for paganism, with the philosophy of the thoughtful boy. By a remarkable feat Mr. Grahame has been able to remember his childhood, and preserve it sweet and unsullied alongside his maturer wisdom. The first-person-singular of The Golden Age is charming and unique in its mixture of grave juvenility and whimsical humorous manhood. We never confuse the dual character of the historian: we see him as boy and listen to him as man, and both boy and man are a delight; one for his boyishness, his mischief, and his proprietary sense (common to all adventurous boys) with respect to the world; the other for his humour, his sympathy, his literary distinction. All the children are life-like. By a thousand minute touches Mr. Grahame establishes their reality. So typical are their thoughts and actions, misgivings and ambitions, that The Golden Age is to come extent every reader's autobiography. Everything is slightly "toned up"—the duty of the romanist as opposed to the realist—but truth is never violated. Mr. Grahame's deftness in selection is remarkable. As a short story "The Burglars," for example, is truly excellent. And his style is so fresh and buoyant. "The masterful wind was up and out, shouting and chasing, the lord of the morning"—how strong and communicative, this opening sentence! The joy of living has at the moment in Mr. Grahame an exponent of rare sympathy. His essays—in the Pagan Papers—are devoted to it, with that on Orion ever at their head. But there he is sometimes too conscious a phrase-maker. It is The Golden Age that is written with the golden pen. After all, it matters very little whether or not Mr. Grahame writes any more. In The Golden Age he has given us a book, a four-square piece of literature, complete in itself. Many a literary man writes hard all his life, and never a book—in the best sense of the word—is forthcoming. Mr. Grahame made one the first time.

MR. ROBERT HICHENS.

THREE years ago Mr. Hichens made his splash with a book described at the time, by a leading weekly, as "the most impudent work of fiction we have ever met with"—The Green Carnation. It is probable that a natural hesitancy to endorse so direct an attack upon a living author of the first rank, and a prominent figure in society, did dispose critics rather to underrate the promise of its writer; but the splash was none the less effective. And the reputation for quite uncommon cleverness won by his first audacious venture Mr. Hichens has not forfeited by his subsequent work. This comprises two novels—An Imaginative Man and Flames—and two volumes of short stories, of which the second has appeared within the last few weeks. From the eccentric—from Eustace, the man who lived to be original—to the abnormal is but a step, and in An Imaginative Man you have an exercise in mental analysis which is more nearly akin to the work of M. Huysmans in his A Rebours period than may be found elsewhere in contemporary English literature. It is the study of a mind touched with incipient mania—a mind of considerable native vigour, which, for lack of stimulus, whether of lawful ambition or of external necessity, is running to seed. Harry Denison was intended by nature to be the reformer of Scotland Yard. By an oversight he was left master of a sufficient private income, and so must amuse himself by dogging the thoughts and motives of his acquaintance. He passes the border of insanity (one conjectures) at the moment when the secret, which for many months had held him at fault, is disclosed; it is mere simplicity; and at the last he batters his jaded brains out against the adamant mystery of the sphynx. "The Folly of Eustace" and many another of Mr. Hichens's short stories are based upon similar cases. From the study of the abnormal he passes, in Flames and in such short stories as "The Return of the Soul," to the fantastic and terrific, upon the further side of nature. His preternatural element he takes from the common storehouse for such wares: in Flames it is nothing more recondite than Spiritualism in combination with the frenzy of soul-transference; and it says much for his mastery of the details that with material so generally discredited, by virtue of skilful handling, he has contrived a very successful illusion. With soul-transference, hypnotism, a trifle of diabolism, telepathy and the like, for his corner-stones, he has constructed a host of short stories, and is likely, for he is young enough, to write a multitude more. His new collection shows a growing mastery of technique; he commands a style that is something more than tolerable; he has wit, and now and then, as in "The Tee-to-tum," permits us to see that he is not destitute of a sense of humour. In the case of an author who does well the kind of work he has made his own, the suggestion may seem ungracious; but if, in the years to come, Mr. Hichens should chance to find himself interested in a group of quite sane and wholesome-minded people—why, we shall be curious to see the portrait of that group when it shall have passed through the camera that developed The Green Carnation and Flames.

MR. BARRY PAIN.

THERE are some writers to whom one cannot be otherwise than friendly. Give us a young man, neither prig nor pedant, who delights in the oddities of life and has a gift for neatly setting them down, and we are ready to shake hands. For to-day our young men are so owlishly inclined, so flown with the cheap wine of theory, that we can get few words of comfort. Doubtless they will come all right in the end, but meantime the praise is greater for one who has never gone wrong. In a certain kind of humorous verse Mr. Barry Pain is unexcelled, and he has a serious vein too, more or less unworked, but of rich promise. What, then, is this quality of his which wins our liking and often our hearty approval?

In the first place he is honestly open to the eternal comic aspect of the world. He follows the comic muse—which is not to say that he has either wit or humour. Wit, indeed, he has shown little of, and this is the fault which spoiled so much of his "Smoking-room" journalism. What is wanted is a sparkling nicety of language, a sense of the needle-points of the ridiculous. Mr. Pain, having little of this, gives us rollicking fooling, mixed with some real wisdom and a certain vulgarity, and we are not satisfied. Humour, too, in its special sense, is scarcely his, for his fun is got less from the ordinary side of life than from certain freakish, though possible, aspects. But the comic, the farcical, are his in a very high degree. His Daily Chronicle verses, besides showing a remarkable gift for metre, are full of this extravagant fun. It does not penetrate gently by way of the intellect like a cultured wit, nor like humour affect one with a cheerfulness not far from sorrow, but it commits the rudest assault and battery upon the feelings by its incongruous and absurd suggestion. Would that we had space for illustration! Would, also, that we had space for parallels, for it is a gift which Mr. Pain shares with great masters! In his work in To-Day (we like Mr. Pain so well that we follow him even there) he uses the gift in prose with much success. At his best what strikes one most is his extreme naturalness. There is nothing laboured. You feel that this is exactly what would have been said and done had the thing really happened, and you bless the writer for conceiving the delightful improbability.

But such work has a danger of its own, which Mr. Pain does not always avoid. In a deliberate hunt for the extravagant one may find an easy success in a simple harping upon trivialities, where the sole point lies in the fact that the trivial is so identified with the normal that the exaggeration seems grotesque. We cannot honestly say that Mr. Pain is always free from the domestic funniness of some of his contemporaries. The earlier part of the Canadian Canoe seemed to us simply wearisome and ill-bred. The stuff was unworthy of so genuine an artist. For surely it is a man's duty, if he have the priceless gift of fun, to concentrate it in the striking and the memorable, and not spread it out thin on something which is very near twaddle.

Then there is his gift as a prose parodist—again slightly marred by an obtuseness and lack of subtlety. He aims at broad effects, and does it with immense gusto; but this is not the whole work of parody. The finer nuances of style he does not catch; his is always rather the heavy bludgeoning of a harlequin than the polished thrust of a master of wit.

But in all this we are only speaking of one side of our author. He has another, though he is in no hurry to impress the world with the fact. The connexion of a broad humour with a sense of the uncanny has been often remarked, and Mr. H. G. Wells, in our own day, is a shining example. And Mr. Pain, in a high degree, has this gift of "wide imagining," the poetry of the prosaic. The reader who stumbled upon the Canadian Canoe might miss the last stories, but they are the best of the book. "The Celestial Grocery" and "The Girl and the Beetle" have just the mystery, joined with a vivid realism and a hint of allegory, which belonged to Poe and Hawthorne. Here a humorist has a clear advantage. For by the use of this gift he can link his fancy with the real in a way which no elaboration of detail can achieve. So far, then, we looked on Mr. Pain as a young man of curious gifts, but we waited for his first achievement.

Then came the Octave of Claudius, which surprised many of us. To begin with, the first chapter and scraps of dialogue throughout showed a wit, which was just what we thought the author did not possess. There was the old humour, the cheerful, farcical view of the world, but it was joined with a new shrewdness, and a gift for charac-terisation we had not suspected. The construction of the tale is skilful enough, and the interest goes breathlessly. The main incident produces its full emotional effect, and the vague horror of the unknown is never absent. At the same time, there is no extravagance. Dr. Lamb is not a monster, and the consummation works itself out smoothly and clearly. Half a dozen of the people could scarcely be better—Claudius himself, Mrs. Wycherley, Sir Christopher, the atrocious Burrage. But yet they are only thumb-nail sketches. The book is still a humorist's story; less a presentment of life than a tour de force to show the author's neatness of construction, curious fancy, and unflagging humour. Good as it is, Mr. Pain can do better still; and—well, some day we shall see.

MR. G. W. STEEVENS.

Of the potentialities of Mr. Steevens we know less than of any man on our list. Once we might have said he was capable of everything except sentimentality, but our recollection of certain articles descriptive of the Diamond Jubilee is too lively. As a shrewd observer who sees straight and sets down an honest tale of what he sees he is not surpassed. Already, although still in the twenties, he has done enough to make impossible a revival of the tortuous verbosity of the late Mr. Sala; at any rate, as a serviceable asset with which to begin a journalistic career. His achievement is to lay before his readers whatever, in his capacity as special correspondent, comes before his eyes and is interesting—and to lay it before his readers with as many of the hues of life upon it as may possibly be retained. The spectacle of a brilliant Balliol man and Fellow of Exeter travelling with a note-book for the amusement of readers of a half-penny morning paper is testimony both to the good sense of democracy and to the acumen of Mr. Harmsworth. We are grateful to the controller of the Daily Mail for many benefits, but most for his encouragement of Mr. Steevens. He found Mr. Steevens at the right moment and gave him his opportunity. Mr. Steevens took it. Hitherto he had shouldered it with the other gay subalterns who gathered around Mr. Cust at the Pall Mall Gazette: he had been witty at the expense of Jane Cakebread, the minor poets, and the Radical party; he had had no "show," as the saying is, for his rare talents. For one man who can see straight and write sense, there are thirty who can be witty at the expense of Jane Cakebread. The universities are full of them. That is why those persons who watched the recent war between Turkey and Greece through Mr. Steevens' eyes, who have lately followed him to Germany, and who, last year, accompanied him to the "Land of the Dollar," should be grateful to Mr. Harmsworth. Mr. Steevens' chief gift is self-possession. He always keeps his head, he allows nothing to blur his vision, and he brings to whatever subject he is studying always the same personality, the same

English sense of superiority, of amused but concealed interest, alertness for incongruity, and all the time we are made aware, as we read, that our informant is not merely a journalist earning his daily bread, but a young man of unusual attainments progressing towards the fulfilment of himself. What his next stage will be we cannot say. Hitherto Mr. Steevens has done brilliantly in whatever he has essayed. His Monologues of the Dead are treasures of robust humour. It is cheering to come upon so full-blooded an imagination as that which gives us "Alcibiades" and "Xanthippe," "Augustus" and "Constantine the Great." Mr. Steevens has also shown a mastery of imperial questions, and we have heard that he is contemplating a historical romance of a fantastic order. A man at once so young and so various in accomplishment eludes prophecy. We can but confidently wish Mr. Steevens well.

MISS WINIFRED LUCAS.

THE easy way to a poetical renown is the way of rhetoric. It was so in Byron's case; but the fate of Byron is an abiding warning to the young poets who carry the position by a rush of words, by a storm of literary passion. Not of their ranks is Miss Winifred Lucas, a young poet whose appeal to the public has been made in one slender volume, Units, published a year ago. When she enters she will enter by way of the intellect, and where she enters there she will abide. She is a poet of thoughts rather than of words. Her expression is sometimes cramped and often difficult; at times, again, it is at perfection. She is always brief, and in being so she spares the reader's time, but makes demands upon his attention. No merely idle reader should seek her acquaintance. No industrious one, having made it, will ever allow himself to lose it.

Who, for instance, that once has felt will lightly forget the pity, not short of passion, that pervades the lines addressed to one who is sleepless? All the poets have been at work on that theme, but they left a new situation for Miss Lucas, who has no reproaches for Sleep, and only the tenderest and most soothing ones for Sleep's refractory children disobedient to its spells:

"With downward lashes veiling deep
Soft stars of pain,
The troubled angel of thy sleep
Is here in vain,
Sad with the wasted dreams that he
Had brought for thee.

O hush then, only for his sake!
In pity go
With him a little, who would make Thee happy so,
Away from sorrow, hand in hand,
As he had planned."

Another of Miss Lucas's sleep poems offers itself to our memory for quotation, not for the sake of its opening lines, with their rather commonly prosaic vocabulary, but for the flight of tenderness that takes it to its close. It is called "Night Thoughts":

"For thoughts of good or thoughts of ill,
I have the whole still night to spare.
Whom shall I summon forward there?
No lack of scenes the stage to fill,
No want of players thronging still
From casts of many a bygone year,
Since the first day they did appear,
The shadowy creatures of my will.

Oh child, the night is wild for thee!
Her loftiest lights announce from far
Their tremulous importunity
About thy young soft ways to be,
Sweet lamb of all the flocks that are Penned in my folds of memory!"

Equally near to the heart go some of the lines in the poem called "Drought." In time of drought, says the lover, a flood is rather to be feared; life, unready to quench its thirst, might perish of the flood. So he, fainting for sight and sound of the beloved, finds the channels of his joy run dry:

"Yet, were they flooded, love might perish too,
That lives so much on what the heavens deny."

Equally memorable, in thought and in expression, are the lines headed "A Question":

"Poor body, sinking ever toward the grave Death keeps for you; poor heart; uneven beat
Of countless petty pulses; wave on wave
Of blood now cold, and now at fever heat!

"Out of you all, what profits now, or ails
Where fall at last the deathly cypress shades?
How comes the love of such another one
To seem an immortality begun?"

Miss Lucas must take herself as the answer to her own question. It is because such women as Emily Brontë have suffered and sung—Emily Brontë, who would recognise a sister in the author of the lines just quoted—that men can and do lose sight of the merely mortal in woman. The profound feeling that goes into noble literature can never fade away, and it is more than a personal belonging. It passes into the general treasury of womanhood, from the hands of women of genius; and in that common possession every woman, as she is regarded by man, has her proper share.

MR. MAX BEERBOHM.

IT is puzzling to write judicially of Mr. Max Beerbohm. During the trial he is so certain to commit contempt of court and so equally certain to escape punishment. But the attempt ought to be made. At the present moment he enjoys the felicity of playing juvenile lead among English critics; or, if you prefer it, he is the spoilt child in the critical family. The world lies like a ball at his feet—and he kicks it. What the future has in store for him we cannot even conjecture. It may be that he will make more literature; it may be that he has already done his best work, that his career is over—a succès de jeunesse. With all our heart we trust not, because life is the gayer, the more frolicsome, for him, and writers are for the most part dull and one-ideated; but on Mr. Beerbohm's present "form" one cannot hope too confidently. During 1897 he has written much, but nothing compares with the earlier essays collected in the Works of Max Beerbohm. To ridicule The Christian, to assail Mr. Clement Scott—this is no employment for the brain that devised "Diminuendo" and the history of "1880." There is enough wit in the Works to furnish forth a score of ordinarily smart journalistic privateers, together with imagination far beyond them, and a genuine feeling for style. Besides, the man can laugh. He is the merry foe of pretentiousness and big-wiggery: he has written sensibly and wittily of Pater, and what is part of the fun, he went to Chicago to do it. For a wise laughter we ought to be on our knees day and night. For the sake of those that love him, Mr. Beerbohm ought to be prevented from engaging in weekly journalism. His path lies before him: he is the heaven-born historian of remote yesterdays and the Houses of Hanover and Guelph. He might even go farther afield and trifle with William of Hohenzollern. But he ought not to contribute to any paper more than once a year, and he should eschew stories: The Happy Hypocrite was not the equal of the essays. These, however, are counsels of perfection. Our own persistent fear is that Mr. Beerbohm's work is over. He is no longer young: he is twenty-five. Rumour has it that he is to marry soon; his mots are reported, and already gossips are attributing Sydney Smith's best things to him. Signs of decadence!

MR. G. S. STREET.

MR. STREET, although he has written also short stories, critical essays, and The Wise and the Wayward, a novel of modern life, remains none the less a single-book man, and that book The Autobiography of a Boy. His essays are ingenious and witty, and, to the unsympathetic reader, as intensely irritating as the author must have wished them to be; his short stories are crisp and workmanlike; his novel is well considered and incisively written; but beside the Autobiography they are unimportant. In each department other men can do better. Mr. Street's glory is to have invented Tubby and made him credible and unforgettable. No man is to be considered lightly who can set on paper a type so firmly and unmistakably as this. Everyone with eyes had been aware that Tubbies were "about"; but Mr. Street was the first writer to turn the type to artistic account. Adrian Harley, the wise youth, is distinctly Tubby's ancestor; but Adrian was a wit and a philosopher, and Tubby was not: Tubby was a product of the decadent movement. How brilliantly Mr. Street presents him, the readers of The Autobiography of a Boy know. The autobiographical method is, perhaps, a difficulty: it may justly be objected that so lazy a boy would not have kept a diary with such precision; but once that fence is cleared all is easy running. Mr. Street never loses sight of his hero, never nods, never permits himself liberties. Few authors have more discretion than he. To what extent he has employed self-revelation we cannot say—there is something of Tubby in most of us. Meanwhile it is stated that Mr. Street, who has, as readers of the ACADEMY know, tried his hand at criticism of the drama, intends henceforth to employ the dramatic method for the presentation of his ideas. His plays are likely to be more interesting than “successful.” He lacks so many qualities needful to the all-round dramatist: sympathy first of all. A play requires also a broader treatment of life than Mr. Street has yet given or shown signs of being able to give. On the stage everything must be highly coloured and everything must be said. Mr. Street is too clever to be tolerant of the average man’s intelligence, yet it is the average man’s intelligence at which the dramatist must aim. We wish him as much success as he desires on the boards; but before he decides to give up all his time to stagecraft will not Mr. Street finish Tubby? The initial chapter of the Autobiography—“The Editor’s Apology”—condenses so much of Tubby’s life that ought to be amplified in diary form: his quarrel with his father, growing from a remark made at the dinner table to a bishop (what did Tubby say to the bishop? we have a right to know); his removal to town; his experiences in Canada; his return (for surely he is here again now); his vicissitudes in a garret; his interviews with publishers concerning the “Ballad of Shameful Kisses.” Mr. Street should give us these further chapters. The history of Tubby is not complete. A time comes when such boys pass from boyhood one way or another, and we are entitled to be taken to the turning-point.

MR. LAURENCE HOUSMAN.

MR. HOUSMAN is one of a remarkable family. His elder brother wrote A Shropshire Lad; his sister, who lives with him in London, has published a book called The Were Wolf, which is said to be full of imaginative quality, but her main occupation is wood-engraving after her brother’s designs, for he insists that his work shall be reproduced by this process. Mr. Housman’s labour is also rather with the artist’s pen than the writer’s; his reputation, and presumably his professional income, are derived rather from his drawings than from his books, though with a natural perverseness he values himself on the less appreciated of his talents. Art was the profession for which he was educated; he received an elaborate training from South Kensington, and though he is sometimes at pains to conceal the fact, is a master of formal draughtsmanship. The object with him, as with the rest of the school to which he belongs, is to draw not so much things as the spirit of things; and if in his compositions a leg is occasionally twisted into impossible shape, that is because he wishes to suggest the contortion, rather than the anatomy. One naturally connects him with Rossetti, whose technique in verse he has imitated; but there is a broad distinction. The element of mysticism which is present in both, as it was present in the earlier artist-poet Blake, is with Rossetti allied to a very sensuous imagination. Mr. Housman’s temperament is opposed to this. He uses forms, indeed, in his drawing to suggest ideas and emotions not merely of beauty; but he seldom uses words as Rossetti so often did—for instance, in the Song of the Bower—to suggest visual images. The sensuous charm of strange and decorative words appeals to him, but what is best and most characteristic in his prose and poetry is simple, even to baldness.

His books are not many. A Farm in Fairyland is a volume of fairy stories marked by that quaintness which, taken together with his name, makes one suspect a German strain in Mr. Housman. Green Arras is a volume of verses, mostly very imitative and often very obscure, which was commended by good judges in the reviews. His last published book, Gods and Their Makers, was an early piece of his work: a curious parable, farcically told in prose, of an island where the people created gods whom they endowed with their own worst attributes; and the gods survived their makers. We ourselves should base our admiration of Mr. Housman, as a writer, on a single book—All Fellows—a collection of short stories which are described as “Legends of the Lower Redemption.” One, for instance, is the story of the Merciful Drought which God sends once in seven years, letting the souls in hell suck down all the water that is on the face of the earth. But the beasts of the forest were kept alive because a saint allowed them to drink of his holy well, whose water might not be tasted by the wicked. Then a lost soul, wandering on earth, came to the saint and begged to drink of it, but the saint denied him, being the keeper of the well; and next day the well was dried up, and the saint thought that the coming of an evil soul had destroyed its springs, and the animals were dying of thirst. The night after, therefore, he drove away the lost soul again, and the well was still dry; and the saint, seeing the people of his woodland perishing, and being himself tormented with thirst, felt the humiliation of punishment, and knew that he had sinned in turning away God’s poor; till, as he was at the point of death, a stag came, wearing the cross of St. Hubert between his horns, and dropped tears into the well, and water began to bubble up. The lost soul came again, and “Drink,” said the saint, “for now I know your sorrow”; and so the well was again filled, and there was peace in the forest.

This rough outline will give an idea of Mr. Housman’s invention, although it cannot suggest his singular charm of phrase. But beside the stories, the book contains “insets” of verse; short poems, connected in subject, interspersed between the stories. They are the dramatic utterance of a man who has loved a woman, but for the sake of her peace refrained from making her return his love; who has been content to wear a mask, and seem simply to be the friend whom she needed, not the lover whom it was forbidden her to have. The verse is of the very simplest, but the situation is suggested with, one must suppose, a deliberate obscurity. This wilful hiding of a meaning is a current affectation of the moment. Some day Mr. Housman, it is to be hoped, will republish this series of verses, as a sequence, and with such others added as are needful to elucidate his general drift. A quotation should show that such poetry is too rare to be hidden; it has the authentic note of passion and the free utterance of song:

“You, the dear trouble of my days,
When life shall let me cease,
Turn once aside from kinder ways
And look upon my peace.
Let your feet rest upon my roof,
And for the love we bore,
Forgive the heart so far aloof;
You cannot trouble more.
For if the dead man had his will,
Doubt not that he would rise
And waste his soul in passion still
With looking in your eyes.
So come when you have lost your power,
And pardon my release,
And set your feet to rest an hour,
Ayeal upon my peace.”

MR. W. W. JACOBS.

MR. JACOBS came exactly when he was wanted. There was a vacancy for a robust laughter-maker. We had no lack of cultured humorists who provoke to smiles, but there was no one to elicit the precious guffaw. Mr. Jerome, who tickled folk straightforwardly enough with his Three Men in a Boat, had taken to pulpsteering in his weekly paper; Mr. Barry Pain was writing a serious novel and squandering his stores of fun in dribbles for the journals; Mr. Anstey had resorted to the study of the Baboo barrister. We were without a masterly comic writer. Then appeared Many Cargoes, and we laughed again; and later, The Skipper’s Wooing, and over the episodes of Sam with the crust of bread and the cook in the cottager’s chair we became hysterical. But Mr. Jacobs is not merely a funny man. He has observation. Hitherto the Thames below London had been sadly neglected. Dickens went thither in Our Mutual Friend, and occasionally a novelist has resorted to Margate by steamer in search of a background; but of the life of the little craft that ply up and down, and around the coast, we had no delineator from within until Mr. Jacobs came. Mr. Jacobs has enlightened us. He tells us what humour prevails on the lower Thames; what the captains of barges and little schooners are like, what the mates are like, what the cooks are like, what the boys are like, and what the female relations of them all are like. We must take his information with a grain of salt, because he is a humorist, and humorists are entitled to mould facts to suit their own ends; but we are conscious the while that Mr. Jacobs has observed. It is not probable that every mate is a master of sardonic comment, every captain an expert ironist, every boy a mine of ingenious invention, every skipper’s daughter a pert mistress of coquetry and repartee; but Mr. Jacobs is entitled to pick the best. We trust that he will continue to do so, and relate their adventures with the spirit he displays in Many Cargoes. Our advice to him is to stick to the short story and to be as funny as he can. Londoners, in particular, should hail him with applause, for he has done more than make them laugh; he has added character to their river. Henceforward no one who has read Many Cargoes will look at a passing barge with an apathetic gaze. He will see before him not merely a vehicle of portage, but a hotbed of liquorish and acceptable sarcasm.

MR. A. C. BENSON.

THERE is, somewhere in the interior, as it were, of Mr. Benson's poetry, a point of life—a plexus of nerves—a very sensitive place indeed, where thought and feeling are "quick." Poetry and prose both have the power to touch that exceedingly intimate region of human thought and emotion, which lies somewhat at the back of what is generally said and sung; but poetry has the best right to be there. The unanswerable or unanswered questions, with the beauty of their mystery, are most fitly reserved for the exaltations and the restraints of song; and those questions are touched whenever that point of life—that plexus of nerves—is reached. Mr. Benson reaches it in the first and fourth of the sonnets on "Self," and (less penetratingly, but still unmistakably) in "The Artist in Church." These are specimen poems, and others might be cited to the same effect. Verse that achieves these secrets is instantly distinguished, proved, sealed, and signed. It is at once intellectual and passionate, and poetry is, rightly considered, both these things; it is intellectual, not reasoning. Those Elizabethan and Caroline singers who were fond of arguing in verse confused the two things. Here is the last of the "Self" sonnets. The writer has begun by confessing the dark, melancholy, unmanly, lurking self—the essential self—sitting "in a cell of pain" in the centre of life, while imagination and passion range abroad:

"Or I can trace the cycles that have been,
See silent priests, dead Cæsars, face to face;
Laugh with old wits, with serious statesmen pace,
Peep unobserved at many a secret scene.
Thence through wild woods my dreaming way I take,
Through ancient cities piled of ponderous stones,
Or dripping caverns carpeted with bones,
To wattled huts isled in a mountain lake.
Backwards, still backwards, till the glowing earth
Lose beast and tree, and show her haggard scars;
To chaos, and the chill sun's nebulous birth:
Above, beneath, the flaming æons roll:
Still in its cold cell sits the brooding soul,
More to itself than thirty thousand stars."

Except only that "peep unobserved" is rather cheap and poor, this sonnet is fine throughout, and deep. Besides these altogether exceptional poems, Mr. Benson has a secondary class, full of charm, within the more accessible regions of poetic feeling. Among these is that delightful lyric, "Punctual Dawn":

"And patient sheep from folded feet
Rose one by one, alert for food;
And one by one, so small and sweet,
The flattened grass-stems stirred and stood."

Nothing could be better of the delicately observant kind than this; every line is the sign of fresh experience. "The Shepherd" is another of this class, even though it is a poem of mental instead of physical observation. This shepherd is a little less mechanical than the "mechanical old man," immortally silent, hungry, intent, and aloof in the pages of Rhoda Fleming; he seems more aware of his own pastoral world, he even makes "some muttering" in the village church, albeit

"He doth not struggle to o'ertake
The hurrying litanies.

The shadow and what lies behind
He doth not greatly heed."

"Lord Vyet" is the solemn poem of death as the sincere mind of Romance viewed it, with dignity, resignation, and dismay.

Mr. Benson has published three slender volumes of verse—Poems, Lyrics, and Lord Vyet, and Other Poems, which last is chiefly the subject of this brief but cordially congratulatory note. He has not only a future, but his own quite separate and distinct future, before him.

R. H. D. LOWRY.

MR. H. D. LOWRY has been something of a disappointment to his early admirers, who, detecting the imaginative power and, at times, real beauty of his work, had expected that he might do considerable things. But his range, unhappily, appears to be somewhat straitly limited. Both his themes and his characters lack variety, and his work with its consistent minor key carries gloom to the verge of monotony. It may of course be urged, with some show of justice, that Mr. Lowry is concerned almost wholly with the tragedies of life, and that the tragedian cannot fairly be blamed because he does not attempt comic opera; but this does not altogether meet our objection. Mr. Lowry in his serious work seems to us not merely to keep his eye remorselessly fixed on the gloomy side of life, but to keep to one little department of that gloomy side. Life is no doubt tragic enough, to some of us; but Mr. Lowry, for his own sake, should for a time at least divert his attention from his sombre cottagers in Cornwall and his sombre young men in London and turn to some wider field. His stories at present are studies in monochrome, and monochrome, always a depressing medium, may one day grow tedious.

But, with these limitations, no one can deny that Mr. Lowry has very considerable gifts. It is of course a disadvantage to him that a greater than he, Mr. Quiller-Couch, has taken Cornwall and, as it were, appropriated it to himself as a literary domain; but though Q's stories of his Delectable Duchy show a wider range of subject, a deeper insight and a stronger hand, Mr. Lowry's have much of his power and charm. Women's Tragedies (1895), the volume which made his name to most people, contains more than one tale written with a tragic intensity that is not often found in short story writers. If any one doubts this let him read "The Torque" in that volume. Better still, if he wishes to gauge Mr. Lowry's powers correctly, let him read his earlier volume of stories, Wreckers and Methodists (1893), a stronger book in some ways than the more popular volume which succeeded it.

Mr. Lowry has written only one story of any length—A Man of Moods, which appeared in 1896. The plot is of the slightest, and the interest of the volume depends on two things: first and chiefest, on the love of the country, of nature and its beauties, which breathes through its descriptions of the Scilly Islands; and, next, on the analysis of the central character, the "man of moods." The book is not altogether a success, but only a clever man could have written it. Two slighter books of Mr. Lowry's remain to be mentioned—The Happy Exile and Make Believe. The latter is a volume nominally for children, touched with pleasant fancy. The Happy Exile is a collection of fugitive papers, contributed to various journals, inspired by that passionate feeling for the country, and more particularly the West Country, which we have noted above as the distinguishing feature of A Man of Moods and its author. Mr. Lowry is a slow writer, which is in his favour. With his grasp of character and strong poetic feeling he may one day turn out a really good book.

THE FRENCH ACADEMY:

THIS YEAR'S AWARDS.

THE duties and labour of the French Academy are varied and considerable. The Academicians pay for their glory by an amount of responsibility that can neither be shirked nor diminished, and must frequently prove disagreeable. Every form of contemporary talent is submitted to their judgment, and virtue itself, thanks to donations, claims reward at their hands.

Let us examine the programme of the last sitting—Thursday, November 18, 1897—and some measure of its work may be taken. First, there was to be considered the prize poem on Salamis, the subject previously given by the Academy. No prize was awarded, for lack of first-rate qualities; but three accessits, valuing £40 each, were adjudged to MM. Leconte, Gaston Schefer, and Philippe Dufour, so that the prize for poetry has not been taken this year. Next comes the Prix Montyon, the prize for moral and useful works. The Abbé Alphonse Fabier obtained £80 for his work on Peking, and Mme. Bentzon received the prize of £60 for her collected articles from the Revue des Deux Mondes: "Les Américaines chez elles."

Prizes of £40 were distributed to each of the following works:

Tombocou la Mystérieuse. By M. Felix Dubois.
Remords d'Avocat. By M. Masson-Forestier.
Les Derniers Mois de Murat. By the Marquis de Sassenay.
Officier et Soldat. By M. Georges de Lys.
Les Actes de Diotime. By Mlle. Juliette Huzey.

£20 was awarded to each of the following works:

Au Printemps de la Vie. By Jean Sigaux.
De Soussa à Lassa. By Edouard Céalès.
Les Tragédies et les Théories Dramatiques de Voltaire. By Henri Lion.
Le Royaume d'Etrurie. By Paul Marmottan.
La Soif du Juste. By Edmond Thiaudière.
Le Livre d'Or du Diocèse de Reims. By l'Abbé Cerf.
L'Ecole Saint-Simonienne. By Georges Weill.
Alexis de Tocqueville. By Eugène d'Eichthal.
Grandmère et Petit-fils. By Albert Cim.
De Paris au Volga. By Henry Lapauze.
Nos Amis les Bêtes. By Charles Diguët.
Un peu beaucoup, Passionnément. By Mme. Lescot.
Adolphe Baudon. By the Abbé Schall.
L'Armée de Condé pendant la Révolution française. By Bittard des Portes.
A Travers le Salz Kammergut. By Auguste Marquillier.
Histoire du Corps des Gardiens de la Paix. By MM. Rey and Féron.
Ninette Buraton. By Mlle. Ferrier.
Du Cap au Lac Nyassa. By Edouard Foa.
L'Auvergne. By M. J. Ajalbert.
La Hongrie Littéraire et Scientifique. By Kont.
Aile des Saints. By Alfred Poizat.

The prize Narcisse Michaut, value £80 was divided between M. Emile Bourgeois for his Grand Siècle, and Marie-Paul Guiraud, for Fustel de Coulanges. The prize Sobrier-Arnould, of the same value, was divided between Emile Legouis, for his Jeunesse de William Wordsworth, and M. Capus, for a volume on Bosnia and Herzegovina. The important prize Jobert was awarded to M. Charles de Lacombe, for his Vie de Berryer; while M. Dognon carried off the prize of £160 for Les Institutions Politiques of Languedoc in the thirteenth century. The Bordin prize, value £120, was unevenly divided between three competitors: M. Francis de Pressensé, who obtained £60 for his Cardinal Manning; M. Eugène Ritter, who obtained £40 for his Famille et Jeunesse de Rousseau; and M. Bordeaux, who was awarded £20 for La Vie et l'Art. The Marcelin Guérin prize was distributed between the authors of La Maison de Savoie, Carlo Goldini, Histoire des Relations Littéraires entre la France et l'Allemagne, and others. M. Hérèle was awarded £28 for his admirable translation of Annunzio's Vièrges aux Rochers. M. Gregh received £80 for his delightful volume of poetry, La Maison de l'Enfance. The dramatist M. Brioux carried off the Prix Toriac (£160) for L'Evasion, played at the Théâtre Français in 1896. The prize of £80 was allotted to the Cours Historique de la Langue Française, by the late Arsène Darmesteter; and Mistral received £200 for his poem, Le Rhône. The biggest prize fell to M. Duquet for Le Siège de Paris (£480=12,000 francs). Many other more or less insignificant books—poems, novels, and studies that nobody but the authors and the committee will ever read—were crowned, receiving from £20 to £40 each. Except for this pecuniary gratification, and the futile glory of seeing on the title-page of one's book the legend "Crowned by the Academy," this official recognition has no significance whatever. It is well known that intrigue, favour, push, and relations will obtain the crowning of any worthless trash, but the big prizes count, for these are honourably won, and carry weight and honour with them.

All these prizes are not distributed each year. Some are biennial, some triennial and some even quinquennial. In the case of the ordinary prizes, the authors intending to compete should send in five copies of their books before December 31. The committee is formed of four or five members of the Academy, and each receives his copy. Suppose the number of competitors to be thirty or forty: their books will be equally apportioned among the committee. In April the committee is convened to meet and discuss the merits of the books sent in for competition. It is rare that the Academy rejects a book recommended by one of its committees. In the case of the more important prizes, the number of the committee is raised to ten.

Here is the list of the conditions of competition:

1. The works rejected by a commission or by the Academy cannot be presented a second time for the same competition.

2. New editions are not allowed to compete a second time, except when the work has been notably modified by the author.

3. The works destined for the various competitions of the Academy should be directly addressed by the authors to the Secretariate of the Institute, to the amount of five copies, with a letter stating the envoi and indicating the competition for which they are presented.

4. The competitors are to understand that the Academy returns no books presented for its competitions.

5. The same work may not be presented at the same time for two competitions of the Institute.

6. For the Vitet, Jean Reynaud, Botta, Monbinne, Lambert, Maille-Latour, Laudry, Calmann-Lévy, Kastner-Boursault, Estrade, Délcro Née, and Berger prizes the authors cannot offer their candidature, and should not send in their works.

From which it will be seen that intrigue and favours can have nothing to do with the distribution of these prizes, since the authors are debarred from any personal effort to procure them. Here the Academy must justify its existence as a responsible discoverer of merit, and impartially bestow reward where it is neither clamoured for nor sought by means of trickery or favour.

After the report of the annual meeting for the award of prizes, the programme for the next competitions is drawn up and announced. In 1898 a prize will be offered for eloquence. The sum is £160, and the subject Michélet, comprised in thirty printed pages. The prize for poetry will be given in 1899; subject, a legend of the Table Round, within 300 lines. For these prizes a single MS. copy must be addressed to the Secretariate of the Institute before the prescribed term, with a device or an epigraph, which must be repeated in a sealed letter containing the name and address of the author, who must not reveal his identity beforehand. On this condition alone is he admitted for competition. The MSS. are not returned by the Academy, but the authors are free to have copies made.

The testators founding Academy prizes decide upon the conditions. For instance, the Baron Gobert willed that the works crowned for historical eloquence, with which object he founded the annual Gobert prize of 10,000 francs, shall maintain their right to the prize until better works appear; so that if nothing better than M. de Lacombe's Vie de Berryer appears next year, that lucky author will carry off the big Gobert prize a second time. The Thiers prize (£120) is given for the best historical work of the three preceding years. The annual Marcelin Guérin prize (£200) is destined to reward books best calculated "to honour France, to raise ideas, morals, and character, and bring society back to principles the most salutary for the future." The Prix Langlois, carried off this year by Annunzio's excellent translation, M. Hérèle, is exclusively reserved for the best translation of the year. The Prix Jean Reynaud will be awarded in 1899, being quinquennial. The members of the Institute may compete for this prize, which is £400, awarded for the best work of the past five years. "The work must be original, elevated, having the features of invention and novelty." The prize is given whole, and in the event of no work being entirely worthy of it, its value is spent on some literary charity. To obtain this prize is a signal honour. The Jules Favre prize (£40) is destined for the best work in prose or verse of a woman.

The Institute of France is a wealthy institution, and, it must be admitted, considerably alleviates the trials of the literary career.

WHAT THE PEOPLE READ.

VI.—A PUBLISHER.

WE were talking after dinner of current literature; and I noticed that the publisher, who was pensively smoking a cigarette, did not offer a single opinion upon any one of the books that were mentioned. Nevertheless, he seemed to be keeping an eye open to the trend of popular taste, which, after all, is the business of a publisher. Presently someone turned to him, and asked what he thought of a novel which had come from his own firm.

"I only know," said the publisher, "that we have sold just over 3,000 copies; and it has made an excellent start in Australia."

"But haven't you read it?" I asked.

"Certainly not," he replied.

"But you published it."

"Quite true. But you don't expect me to read all the books I publish? As a matter of fact, I never read any of them. Indeed, I very seldom read anything at all. There are so many things that I find more interesting than books—conversation, for instance, and billiards and gardening and looking at the sea. Whenever I read a book it is to amuse myself. And the sort of book that I like—and you like—is not the sort of book I should care to publish. There's Kipling, for instance; I've just finished Captains Courageous, because everything Kipling writes interests me."

"But wouldn't you like to be Kipling's publisher?" He shook his head.

"Not now," he replied. "You see, as soon as a man writes a book that you would like to read, or I should like to read—a man such as Anthony Hope, Wells, or Jacobs—he is spotted at once by the critics, and written up. Then the publisher has to give a big sum to get his work. Generally, he has to give so big a sum that there is no possibility of getting it back again on the sale of his books. Because the public which is composed of people like ourselves, who read only what we consider really fine work, is a very small one indeed. Anyhow, it isn't big enough to carry a circulation. And, after all, what a publisher lives on is his circulation."

"Then why do publishers give big sums to writers who don't bring them a profit?"

"It's quite worth a man's while," he replied, "to throw away money over a big name. You may lose a little every year by publishing Tennyson's poems or Meredith's novels; but the mere fact that you are a Tennyson's or Meredith's publisher brings you a lot of smaller people, out of whom you can recoup your losses. You would be astounded to hear the names of the people who have a really big circulation, and amply repay their publisher. You probably have never heard of them; and you certainly wouldn't read their books. Nor would I. But the big bulk of the novel-reading public is quite uncritical. And so, you see," continued the publisher, after a pause, "literature is exactly like commerce. The market is shaped like a pyramid, of which the base is formed by the mass of average scribblers, and the apex is Kipling."

"But," I asked, "if you never read the books you publish, how do you determine what books to accept?"

"Now and again," he replied, "I pay a big price to a well-known and first-rate man; and then, of course, I publish his book, whether I read it or not. If I do read it, that is only for my own pleasure. But I only want his name on my list. In other cases I turn over all the MSS. that are offered me to one or two people of average common sense, who have no literary fads. If I read any of them myself and liked them, I should feel pretty sure that they would not be popular. But from the notes that my readers send in I can generally tell if the stories have enough stuff in them to sell. For you see, it is the average half-educated woman who is the chief supporter of the novel; not people like you and me. You never bought a novel?"

"Never," I said. "Never in my life, except a shilling shocker off a railway book-stall. But speaking as a man, and not as a publisher, what sort of book do you choose as an amusement?"

"Well, I want a good story, and also a style that doesn't offend me. The average novel reader doesn't care twopence about style, you know. Now I have just read Mrs. Steel's On the Face of the Waters for the second time. And I'm just going to read The Potter's Thumb again. Stevenson, too—Stevenson was popular with the many because he had uncommonly good stories to tell, and with the critics because he knew how to tell them. There isn't a better book going than Treasure Island—unless it's Kidnapped. But, really, I read very little, except when there's absolutely nothing else to do. Sarah Grand says in the Both Book—yes, I've looked at that—that novel reading is a form of opium taking. I think she's right."

C. R.

THE QUEEN'S ENGLISH.

HABITUAL misconduct with the English tongue is an offence which cannot be attributed in any special measure to the outlying regions of the United Kingdom. The Queen's English suffers as much at the lips and at the pens of Englishmen as it suffers at those of any other tribe with whom it is a heritage. Dr. Gerald Molloy does not agree with us. He is an Irishman who has spent years in sorrow over his country's ways with auxiliary verbs. These ways have long been shocking to him. That is because, instead of being those of the uneducated classes, they are the ways of the Irish at large. Dr. Molloy is serious in his vexation. "If you take a cab in Dublin," he writes, "the cabman, when you arrive at your destination, comes to the door of the cab, and says, very politely, 'Will I knock, your honour?'" If you fared any better in the Irish salon, your honour might overlook that little slip; but the speech of the salon is just as bad. "Coming out from a concert," Dr. Molloy "heard a gentleman in evening-dress say to a friend, 'What train will we catch?'" That settled the matter. The evening-dress of Ireland having a frayed hem in the view of grammarians, it behoved Dr. Molloy to instruct his countrymen in the idiom of England. Therefore, he has written a book on Shall and Will (Blackie & Son); and is confident that if his teaching is taken to heart by the rising generation in Ireland, that country will deserve equality with England in the Imperial Confederation which Mr. Chamberlain is establishing. The compliment implicit in the Doctor's gravity is almost disarming. We in London have heard for so many years, from the provinces, of the superiority of the provinces in all respects, that this message from Ireland is a message of peace indeed. So ingenuously is it so, that we will, without delay, wave a flag of truce in the face of will-and-shall-outraging Ireland, and own to worse outrage, in many usages, with an open heart. We might take them from —, but we will not. That way would lie a dangerous invasion of our space. We will take them from Dr. Molloy's book itself. That procedure is in strict accord with the spirit in which the Doctor approaches us. His suzerainty to English authorities such as we have named is quite faithful. He has adopted a representative assortment of their errors.

On his first page, he writes: "And yet, strange to say, there is no book in which the subject is treated with any approach to completeness." Could not he have done without the And? And is a copulative conjunction; yet is an antithetical conjunction. To make a locution of the two words is like unto mixing oil and water, which, even when a storm is going on, is a ridiculous act. It does not save the craft. Besides, if Dr. Molloy sent the And about its business, we should have a word to offer about the yet. That, too, is wrong. Copulative or antithetical, a conjunction has the duty of joining. The Yet, did it stand, would disjoin. Neither that word, then, nor any other, is the right word. The right word is Still, an adverb which, if only they would make its acquaintance in an intelligent spirit, would be of much avail to our contemporaries when, in a tangle, they do not know where to seek an outlet. One must not, however, be too exacting. Our contemporaries find themselves in tangles so various that the children would be heart-broken if we were unsparing of the rod. Take Dr. Molloy's second error. "The student," the Doctor writes, "is left to decide for himself not only on points of special difficulty or delicacy, but on broad general questions of everyday occurrence." There should have been also after the but. The antithetical aspect of the sentence is the result of the Doctor having taken contemporary English models unquestioningly. Also was necessary in the intention of synthesis. Lest the learned Doctor should be tempted to kick against the pricks, we make haste to justify ourselves from his own scriptures. "They seem to me eminently fitted not only to impress these rules on the memory, but also to impress the idiom upon the ear." That sentence is correct; but the assertion which it makes is dubious. There is no use in impressing an idiom upon the ear if the idiom is vicious. Many of the English idioms are open to that charge. There is, for example, takes place. That phrase, which comes from France, is almost invariably incorrect. It is a mode of expressing happens. If the writer intended to call attention to the place of the happening, the phrase might be passed. It could be passed when the Times stated that "the Parliamentary point-to-point steeplechase will take place on Saturday, April 9, near Warwick"; though even there its fortune is probably due to good luck more than to good guiding. It might also be passed in the sentence in which Macaulay remarked that "no transaction in history ought to be more accurately known to us than those which took place round the death-bed of Charles the Second." It cannot be approved when used by Dr. Molloy. "If we pass over two centuries, and come down to the Elizabethan age of English literature, we find," he writes, "that a great change has taken place in the use of will and shall." There the phrase is absurd. It is the resource of a writer who, not knowing the correct method of stating a simple idea, becomes a sloven with the Queen's words. When they write takes place, or took place, or is to take place, nearly all men, English as well as Irish and Scots, are slovenly. They are not concerned with the place of an event. They are concerned only with its date. Mr. Delane, editor of the Times, perceived that fact with such conscientiousness that in his day contributors to the leading journal were not allowed to use the word on any occasion whatever.

It were well if other editors found it in their hearts to be equally scrupulous. One cannot easily endure and which. Some pundits say that, whilst it is incorrect in certain cases, there are cases in which it is justifiable. They say that it is incorrect in a complex sentence the first clause of which does not contain the relative pronoun. They add that if the pronoun has a place in the first clause the phrase may be used in the second, and in any other clauses beyond. They cite Mr. Benjamin Disraeli as being a typical wrong-doer. So he was. He would not have hesitated to say: "The house I entered last year, and which is now in much better order"; and in that case the very butler might have been conscious that the language was most 'orrible. We cannot allow that the speech of the pundits is any less so. Take an excerpt from the writings of Dr. Molloy. He refers to "certain questions of literary interest, which were suggested to my mind in the course of my inquiry, and which are concerned chiefly about the origin and history of the idiom." The pundits would seek to justify that and which. They could not justify it. It is unjustifiable. There is not a sentence in which relative pronouns can be properly copulated. That is, first, because in all sentences in which they seem to be so they are the same pronoun repeated, and a unity copulated with itself is unthinkable; and, second, because the ideas, or the perceptions, which the writers of the sentences wish to connect are not the ideas, or the perceptions, expressed by the repeated pronoun, but those expressed by the verbs. This will become clear when we have written Dr. Molloy's sentence correctly. It should run thus: In the second part I consider "certain questions of literary interest, which were suggested to my mind in the course of my inquiry, and are chiefly concerned about the origin and history of the idiom." The principle which we have stated renders and who as well as and which unjustifiable. Dr. Molloy writes: "Accordingly, I consulted two distinguished scholars, who have devoted a great deal of time to the study of the English language, and who have lived for the greater part of their lives in England." The second who should have been cut out. As the meaning of the sentence is clear without the word, one is astonished that Dr. Molloy put it in. And which, and who, has the sanction of usage by English writers; but that does not matter. There are in the English idiom many phrases which are abominable. Dr. Molloy seems willing to adopt them all. There is, for example, that bad word feature. "By the middle of the seventeenth century," the Doctor writes, "the modern idiom, in its more essential features, was firmly fixed, recognised by grammarians, and reduced to rule." One must strive to unfix it and to set it right. Excepting when one is giving the reading public an idea of the beauty of a heroine, features is always the wrong word. It is not easy to have patience with it. The usage which is its sanction is the usage of the stupid. Later on is another of the horrors which Dr. Molloy cheerfully adopts. We are surprised that he never speaks of "a new departure." It would have been pleasant to throw stones at that pompous vulgarism. Still, Dr. Molloy is generous in the supply of idioms to cavil at. Probably because he has studied the works of Mr. Edmund Gosse, he cannot write is when he has an opportunity to write exists. Once, he tells us, he sought, in vain, "for a plain, thorough, straightforward account of the English idiom as it actually exists." Similarly, he "commences" to do things. To say that he begins would, he feels, be a tame statement of his emprise. Likewise, of course, he finds "phases" in things other than the moon; and the phases give forth sounds. He "made a small collection of extracts, to illustrate the use of should and would, and familiarise the ear with this phase of the idiom." Behold that word extracts. Excerpts would have been correct; but it would not have fallen in with the design of Dr. Molloy, who, with all the other pundits seeking rest under the authority of usage, falsifies our language because he lacks the gift of thinking accurately. We must stop now.

"The fit is momentary; upon a thought
He will be well again: if you note him
You shall offend him and extend his passion."

These lines are quoted in order that Dr. Molloy may be consoled. They show that Shakespeare was as Irish as the gentleman who, being inadvertently in the sea, remarked, "I will be drowned, and nobody shall save me."

W. EARL HODGSON.

THE BOOK MARKET.

THE BOOKS I DID NOT BUY.

THE books I have not bought this year number, I suppose, some scores. Mr. Temple Scott in his Book Sales of 1897 (G. Bell & Sons), has kindly catalogued a few of them for me—just the books, moreover, which I could have bought if—well, there are several ifs involved. Still, it is pleasant to look through my might-have-beens. Mr. Scott has thoughtfully added the prices my selections fetched in the London sale-rooms. He has even specified the buyer of each. It sounds like a knell to read: "Maggs, £2 8s.," or "Quaritch, £4 15s.," or "James, £10." That is the way book sales are recorded. These buyers, whose surnames recur like cannon-shots, are no occasional visitors, migrants attracted by some unwonted bait, but mighty dealers whose sotto voce bids are heard above the shouts of new-comers, and to whom an auctioneer's wink is as good as his most emphatic nod. Well, as I say, I did not buy. But last night I piled high my fire, and made soft my arm-chair, and played at buying books with the aid of Mr. Temple Scott's excellent annual. The game was to see what appetites I could have gratified if during this year of Jubilee I had been able to spend a poor hundred pounds in the sale-rooms. The year covered by Mr. Scott really begins in last December, and with the sale by Messrs. Sotheby of "The Library of H. T. Coghlan, Esq." I should have contested lot 45 in this sale—Mme. D'Arblay's Diary and Letters, in seven volumes, 1842. It is one of those books that one often misses on one's shelves, and it is a little treasure-house of London and biographical lore. I see that Roche snapped it up for £1 19s. A large-paper copy of Mr. Austin Dobson's Eighteenth Century Vignettes, extra-illustrated with ninety-two portraits and two letters from Mrs. Delany and Mrs. Barbauld, was offered a few minutes later and fetched £7 5s.; a pretty purchase, but I should have let Maggs have it. I have quarrels enough with Maggs. For instance, he took the first edition of Gay's Trivia for £2 6s. I would have run him up to £3, perhaps £4. Maggs should not have had that Trivia—Barnard Lintot's imprint, too! Nor should Ridler have paid only £1 16s. for D'Urfey's Pills to Purge Melancholy; and I would have bought the Newgate Calendar, or Villainy Displayed in all its Branches over Karslake's head. He got the six volumes for £1 15s. My only other purchase at this sale would have been Lyson's Environs of London at £2 10s. These books cost their purchasers £10 6s. I will suppose that I should have got them for £12. That leaves me £88 to continue the fight with Maggs and Quaritch. Nil desperandum.

On December 18 there was a sale at Sotheby's of "Books from Various Libraries." I should have wrested Hamerton's Etching and Etchers from the hands of Young; and Tregaskis should certainly not have had two copies of Parker's Glossary of Architecture, with its delightful wood-cuts. These cost their buyers £5 8s.

On January 11, at Puttick & Simpson's, I should have been a force. One hundred and ninety-two volumes of the Gentleman's Magazine, commencing in 1731, went to Tregaskis for £9. I would have given £10. I know a man who would have run Robson hard for Lillywhite's Cricketer Scores and Biographies from 1724-1848. Robson got them for £7 7s.—a bargain! Herrick's Poetical Works in two volumes, uncut, Pickering, 1825, must have been a sweet item, and I should have forestalled Russell, who got it for £1 4s.

On January 29 there was another festivity at Puttick & Simpson's. I should have spoiled it for Maggs, by insisting on having John Florio's Queen Anna's New World of Words. Maggs gave only £1 18s. for it. I see that a first edition of Gray's Elegy fetched at this sale £74 10s.; Sabin the purchaser. There was a time when I should have wanted Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy (1632) for £1 7s.; but, being no longer young, I am cheerful, and Pickering should have had his book.

On February 19 I should have begun operations by disputing Ackermann's Microcosm of London with James; and he should not have taken it at £10, as he did. Sotherean would have been my first victim, for I would have given a little more than 19s. for Howitt's Northern Heights of London.

There was a fine sale on February 22 and following days, when the libraries of Sir Charles Forbes and other gentlemen were dispersed. I should not have made much trouble. But I should have disputed with Wood for the possession of old Thomas Dekker's The Bellman of London. "Bringing to light," says the continued title, "the most notorious Villainies that are now practised in the Kingdome, profitable for Gentlemen, Lawyers, Merchants, Citizens, Farmers, Masters of Householders, and all sorts of Servants to marke, and delightfull for all men to reade." Black letter, 1616. Wood paid £2 8s. It must have been interesting to see a copy of the first edition of Goldsmith's Vicar of Wakefield fetch £60. Maggs carried it off. Sixty pounds is just what Noll got for the manuscript! A first edition of Paradise Lost was offered, and Maggs gave £80 for it. A first edition of John Florio's Montaigne, the edition that Shakespeare studied, was put on the table; and while Maggs was bidding £12 5s. for it, I made a rapid calculation that I was now £30 to the bad.

That left me with £70 when I went to Sotheby's on March 4 to see what I could do among the books of the Rev. M. A. Atkinson and others. I see that my visit resolved itself into a short, sharp tussel with Ellis, who paid £16 10s. for a fine extra-illustrated copy of Nelson's History and Antiquities of Islington. I should have surrendered Nelson.

On the 8th I should have outbid Bumpus, at the Beresford Heaton sale, for Archer's Vestiges of Old London, which he got for £1 3s. This would have proved a serious day for me. Constable's English Landscape, large paper, with its eighteen mezzotint plates by David Lucas, "chiefly India proofs before letters," was offered, and I should have been its purchaser. That would have meant defeating Tucker, who gave £24 10s. for the volume. After this I should have stayed only long enough to see Pearson give £695 for Keats's manuscript of Endymion and £305 for the manuscript of Lamia, and to see a first edition of Lamb's Elia and Last Essays of Elia fall to Bumpus for £23.

On March 10, at Sotheby's, I should have given more than Ellis for Gerarde's Herball, folio, old calf, 1597. He gave £4 8s. I am no herbalist, but Gerarde lived in Holborn, and his book is full of curious references to London gardens and rambles.

At Sotheby's, a full month later, I should have bought Jesse's Literary and Historical Memorials of London, disappointing Dobell, who gave £1 12s.; and at the Sir Augustus Harris sale I, not Maggs, would have bought Coryat's Crudities. As I was not there, Maggs got the book for £2 8s.

On May 6 I should have bought Brayley's Descriptive Accounts of Theatres of London. Samuels had it for £3. On the 21st, I, not Pearson, would have bought from "the Library of a Gentleman" Brathwait's The English Gentleman, with Vaughan's frontispiece, and the folding explanatory broadside. I think I could have had it for £6

Also, for a little more than Maggs gave for it (£1 18s.), I should have been the owner of The Life of Long Meg of Westminster, containing the mad, merry Prankes she played in her life time.

On June 10, at the Bruton sale, one of only four known copies of London Characters (1827), with twenty-four coloured plates, came up for sale. I should have bought it; but Sabin did—for £8 2s. 6d.

I confess that I should have been no more than a spectator at the Ashburnham sale; one excellent reason being that my £100 would then have dwindled to £10. But at the sale of Mr. T. C. Jack's books at Sotheby's, in July—the last sale but one that Mr. Scott records—I should have disputed Stow's Survey of London, 2 volumes, with Quaritch. Quaritch paid £5. Add to the above books a copy of the first edition of Fitz-Gerald's Omar Khayyam. And now, poking the fire, I light my pipe, a happy bankrupt.

W. W.

NEW CENTURY THEATRE.

"ADMIRAL GUINEA."

THE unfortunate effect of all performances undertaken for a purpose other than that of pleasing the general public, performances like those of the late Independent Theatre, or the recently formed New Century Theatre, is that a spirit of insincerity pervades the audience. The cant of culture is abroad. It is known or suspected that the play in question would have no chance in an ordinary theatre. But certain master minds are understood to have detected genius in it, and it becomes a mark of superiority to be able to appreciate literary and dramatic beauties that are caviare to the general. Hence the futility of the flattering verdict passed at the instance of the New Century Theatre upon "Admiral Guinea," one of the several plays written by Mr. W. E. Henley and the late Robert Louis Stevenson in collaboration. The prime movers in our latest Society of Précieux Ridicules—for the underlying motive of the New Century Theatre is as old as the Hôtel de Rambouillet—say in effect to their fellow-members: "Admire this, which we have agreed to call a very fine sample of the literary but misunderstood drama." And admired it is accordingly. For over thirteen years "Admiral Guinea" has remained unacted. No theatre-manager anxious to make his fortune has seen "money in it." During a goodly portion of its existence it has been in print and, according to our copyright laws, unprotected, but no plagiarising adapter has stolen it. So far, however, from this circumstance being regarded as condemnatory of the play, it constitutes its chief recommendation in the eyes of a literary clique who fail to realise that literature and drama, though sometimes combined, are essentially distinct in their methods, and that style divorced from action becomes on the stage a mere weariness of the flesh. By the laws of its being, a play, unlike a book, must appeal to a popular assemblage. It may be over their heads or underneath their feet, but unless it holds their attention by the force and variety of the emotions it excites, it can only be described as a failure. Presumably the object that every dramatist sets before him is to stir pleasurable emotions in the breast of the public—the common public, for whose tastes and instincts the commercial-minded manager caters. If he writes for an audience of demi-gods, or for a theatre that is not run upon commercial lines, he should say so in order to save his well-wishers from disappointment.

As the authors of "Admiral Guinea" have neglected this obvious precaution, it is to be inferred that they wrote with the public, and not the New Century Theatre, in their eye. One is bound consequently to look at this chef d'œuvre from the same point of view as the untutored manager, and so regarding it one is no longer surprised at the indifference shown to the work of two writers of so much distinction in their own sphere. Many excellent novelists and poets have also been successful dramatists—the two Dumas, Bulwer Lytton, Octave Feuillet, Ohnet, Coppée, J. M. Barrie, and others—but the literary style is not necessarily the dramatic style; and the polish of the dialogue in "Admiral Guinea" does not save the play from appearing stunted and meagre in performance. A disproportion between word and deed is not felt in a novel. On the stage it is fatal, as Shakespeare himself very well knew, seeing that with all his beauty of language he took care that his plays should abound in incident. What has failed the authors of "Admiral Guinea" is neither invention nor power of expression, nor sense of character, but the intuition of the born dramatist, who feels how a theme will shape on the stage exactly as a painter does with a subject on his canvas. The mere novelist writing for the stage gropes like a man in the dark; it is chance rather than instinct that saves him from disaster. Take one of the printed plays of Mr. Henry Arthur Jones or Mr. Pinero! It is scrappy reading compared with "Admiral Guinea." But how every word tells when spoken across the footlights! The very qualities that make the style of a novel attractive may be detrimental to a play. Almost the only feature common to the art of the novelist and that of the dramatist is conception of character, and it is naturally in respect of character that the Henley-Stevenson play excels.

Of story there is so little that one is surprised at the confidence of the authors in extending it over four acts, and what there is of it seems scarcely worth so much expenditure of literary workmanship. There are but four working characters in all. A fifth, being purely incidental, hardly counts. The period chosen is that of the slave trade when fortunes were made by shipping "ebony" cargoes from the coast of Guinea to the plantations of America; but little of that is seen save in the costume of the dramatis personæ, the action passing exclusively inside the humble cottage of John Gaunt, the retired and reformed slaver, nicknamed Admiral Guinea, or in the public room of a neighbouring tavern. Accidentally

John Gaunt and his former "bo'sun," the terrible blind ruffian David Pew, come together—for the Henley-Stevensonian drama is as full of coincidences and conventionalities as the work of any Adelphi playwright. Very different have been their paths in life since they sailed together in the slave trade, and both reveal their characters quickly. In remorse for his crimes, the admiral has taken to piety and puritanism as we learn from the sternness of the maxims with which he preaches down the heart of his daughter Arethusa who has allowed her fancy to light upon a manly young sailor. The unregenerate "bo'sun," for his part, is, if possible, more callous and ruffianly than ever. Both these characters are sketched with a masterly hand. There is less to be said for Arethusa and her breezy sailor lad, Kit French, who are conventional sweethearts of the "Black-Eyed Susan" period. If only the play, as a whole, had been constructed to the measure of those two admirably drawn types, the "admiral" and his "bo'sun," what a different tale there would have been to tell!

Considering the literary pretensions of this play, it would be hard to guess its motive. It is an attempted burglary—nothing more—the burglary of the admiral's sea-chest by his old partner in crime, the blind sailor-man. In the dramatic scheme of the ordinary playwright this would rank as a mere episode. Here it is the only question before the house, and four acts are devoted to its elucidation. Such a lack of dramatic proportion and perspective would hardly be credible, were we not dealing with the work of men who, as playwrights, can only rank as amateurs, however distinguished. Moreover, this burglary is handled with a crudity which, from an ordinary theatrical audience, would probably have evoked a smile. Not once or twice, but thrice does the villainous Pew grope about the admiral's cottage in quest of the fateful sea-chest, which in the end is discovered to contain, not a store of ill-gotten gold, but merely a few sentimental relics of the ex-slaver's sainted wife, whom his crimes had sent to her grave long ago. In his second attempt Pew obtains, under false representations, the help of Arethusa's sweetheart, now drowning his love troubles in rum, and promptly rounds upon the luckless youth when the "gaff is blown." The third attempt is made while the admiral himself is stalking round the room in a state of somnambulism—a scene which the "gods" of the Adelphi would have delighted in guying; and on the top of this comes the purely conventional ending of Pew's death and the bestowal of the admiral's blessing on the young couple.

"Admiral Guinea" is the mere rough draft of a play. It is not a play complete. With two such characters in hand as Gaunt and Pew a practical dramatist would have been able to set to work upon the story with fair prospects of success. He would have relegated the burglary to a secondary place, and woven a new fabric of incident for Gaunt. He would have held up the mirror to the period, and shown us, in Hamlet's phrase, its "form and pressure." He would have given his story atmosphere and perspective. Of such qualities, so essential to the drama, we have none in "Admiral Guinea," which is a prolonged duologue with no background. That the two chief characters should have been so graphically portrayed as they were by Mr. Mollison and Mr. Sydney Valentine was its salvation, even with the select public of the Avenue Theatre matinée. In less skilful hands the story would speedily have lost its grip. Miss Cissie Loftus, an excellent mimic of acting, lacks power when required to act upon her own account; but as Arethusa she was sympathetic and interesting, and she had a fine, high-spirited, young salt for a sweetheart in Mr. Robert Loraine, the son of a once popular tragedian. The New Century Theatre chooses its actors well.

J. F. N.

THE WEEK.

A HANDSOME book is the English translation of Viullier's History of Dancing. Dancing is surveyed from the earliest times to which our knowledge of it extends down to the present day. We quote the following passage from the introduction:

"Dancing, a flower of night, is said to have germinated under the skies of the Pharaohs; tradition speaks of rounds, symbolic of sidereal motive, circling beneath the stars on the august soil of Egypt, mighty mother of the world. It manifested itself first in sacred sciences, severe and hieratic; yet even then it babbled brokenly of joy and grief in the processions of Apis. Later on, in the course of ages, it became interwoven with all the manifestations of popular life, reflecting the passions of man, and translating the most secret movements of the soul into physical action. From the solemnity of religious rites, from the fury of warfare, it passed to the gaiety of pastoral sports, the dignity and grace of polished society. It took on the splendour of social festivities, the caressing and voluptuous languour of love, and even dolefully followed the funeral train."

The book is in folio size, with abundant illustrations, and is at once a serious treatise and a delightful gift-book. Many beautiful engravings and drawings are reproduced by permission of the owners of the copyrights.

Dr. Birkbeck Hill has edited a collection of Letters of Dante Gabriel Rossetti to William Allingham, written between 1854 and 1870. Some of these letters appeared in the Atlantic Monthly last year. In republishing these letters in volume form Dr. Hill writes:

"Though the editor of the American magazine was liberal in the space which he allowed me, nevertheless in my former papers it was only a selection, though a large selection, that I was able to give. In reading through the original letters a second time this summer I was surprised to find how much of necessity had been omitted that in point of interest was scarcely inferior to what had been inserted. All these passages I am including in the present volume, with the exception of one or two which might, it was thought, give pain either to those criticised by Rossetti or to their surviving friends. Were I, however, to print all that he wrote little fault could be found with it on the score of severity. In these letters, at all events, the writer was not often harsh in his judgment of his fellow-men."

The book is handsomely produced, and is embellished with about a dozen illustrations, mostly portraits and designs pertinent to the Letters.

Mr. Andrew Lang adds another volume to his nursery series. It is The Nursery Rhyme Book, and, of course, it has a preface. Mr. Lang begins it thus:

"To read the old Nursery Rhymes brings back queer lost memories of a man's own childhood. One seems to see the loose, floppy picture-books of long ago, with their boldly coloured pictures. The books were tattered and worn, and my first library consisted of a wooden box of these volumes. And I can remember being imprisoned for some crime in the closet where the box was, and how my gaolers found me, happy and impenitent, sitting on the box, with its contents all round me, reading."

There was 'Who Killed Cock Robin?' which I knew by heart before I could read, and I learned to read (entirely 'without tears') by picking out the letters in the familiar words. I remember the lark dressed as a clerk, but what a clerk might be I did not ask. Other children, who are little now, will read this book, and remember it well when they have forgotten a great deal of history and geography. We do not know what poets wrote the old Nursery Rhymes, but certainly some of them were written down, or even printed, three hundred years ago. Grandmothers have sung them to their grandchildren, and they again to theirs, for many centuries. In Scotland an old fellow will take a child on his knee for a ride, and sing:

'This is the way the ladies ride,
Jimp and sma'

—smooth ride, then a rough trot:

'This is the way the cadgers ride,
Creels and a'

Such songs are sometimes not printed, but they are never forgotten."

Mr. Lang then launches into pleasant explanations of the characters mentioned in the rhymes, telling his young readers who Old King Cole was; who Simple Simon was (he was not, it seems, Simon Fraser, of Lovat—"that Simon was not simple"); who Tom the Piper's Son was, and Bessy Bell and Mary Gray. The book is charmingly produced, and is full of clever pen-and-ink drawings by Mr. L. Leslie Brooke.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

THE HOLY BIBLE. With an Introduction by J. W. Mackail. "Everaley" Series. Vol. III. Macmillan & Co.
WORKDAY SERMONS. By the Rev. F. B. Meyer. James Bowden. 2s. 6d.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

THE DAWN OF CIVILISATION: EGYPT AND CHALDEA. By G. Maspero. Edited by A. H. Sayce. Third Edition. S.P.C.K. 2s.
RAMSES BOUND MY LIFE: AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY. By Newton Croeland. E. W. Allen.
LETTERS OF DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI TO WILLIAM ALLINGHAM, 1854-1870. By George Birkbeck Hill. T. Fisher Unwin. 12s.
A HISTORY OF DANCING FROM THE EARLIEST AGES TO OUR OWN TIMES. From the French of Gaston Viullier. Wm. Heinemann.
THE BEGINNINGS OF ENGLISH CHRISTIANITY. By William Edward Collins. Methuen & Co. 3s. 6d.
A BENEVOLENT MASTERY IN ENGLAND: BEING THE LAST AND TIMES OF DON JOHN ROBERTS, O.S.B. By Don Bede Cann, O.S.B. Bliss, Sands & Co.

OUR ENGLISH MINISTERS. Edited by the Very Rev. A. P. Purey-Cust. Second Series. Isbister & Co. 7s. 6d.
THE LIFE OF SIR STAMFORD RAFFLES. By Demetrius Charles Boulger. Horace Marshall & Son. 21s.

POETRY, CRITICISM, BELLES LETTRES.

MEDITATIONS IN THE TEA ROOM. By M.P. New edition. Pickering & Co.
SPECIMENS OF THE PRE-SHAKESPEAREAN DRAMA. Edited by John Matthews Manly. Vol. I. Ginn & Co. (Boston, U.S.A.)
SONGS FROM PRUDENTIUS. By Ernest Gilliat Smith. John Lane. 5s.
THE TEMPLE Waverley Novels: GUY MANSFELD. 2 vols. J. M. Dent & Co.
SKETCHES OF RURAL LIFE, AND OTHER POEMS. By Francis Lucas. Macmillan & Co. 5s.
THE GENESIS OF SHAKESPEARE'S ART: A STUDY OF HIS SONNETS AND POEMS. By Edwin James Dunning. Lee & Shephard (Boston, U.S.A.)
A MEDIEVAL GARLAND. By Madame James Darmesteter. Translated into English by May Tomlinson. Lawrence. & Bullen.
A SELECTION FROM THE POEMS OF MATHILDE BLIND. Edited by Arthur Symonds. T. Fisher Unwin.
SONGS OF LIBERTY, AND OTHER POEMS. By Robert Underwood Johnson. The Century Co. (New York).
THE ODYSSEY OF HOMER. Translated by J. G. Cordery. Methuen & Co.
LEISURE HOURS IN THE STUDY. By James Mackinnon. T. Fisher Unwin. 6s.
POEMS. By Henry D. Muir (Chicago).

SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

THE ORIGIN AND GROWTH OF PLATO'S LOGIC. By Wincenty Lutoslawski. Longmans, Green & Co. 21s.
THE SECRET OF HSEEL. By James Hutchison Stirling. Oliver & Boyd (Edinburgh).
STUDIES IN PHILOSOPHICAL CRITICISM AND CONSTRUCTION. By Sydney Herbert Malone. Wm. Blackwood & Sons.

PHILOLOGY.

EUR-ARYAN ROOTS, WITH THEIR ENGLISH DERIVATIVES. By J. Baly, M.A. Kegan Paul. 50s.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

SERBIA: THE POOR MAN'S PARADISE. By Herbert Vivian. Longmans, Green & Co.
WILD LIFE IN SOUTHERN SPAS. By Louis Becke. T. Fisher Unwin. 6s.
EVERYDAY LIFE IN TURKEY. By Mrs. W. M. Ramsay. Hodder & Stoughton.

EDUCATIONAL.

A WELSH GRAMMAR FOR SCHOOLS. By E. Anwyl. Part I. Accidence. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. HISTORICAL CHURCH ATLAS. By Edmund McClure, M.A. S.P.O.K. 16s.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE TRUTH ABOUT AGRICULTURAL DEPRESSION. By Francis Allston Channing, M.P. Longmans, Green & Co. 6s.
GARDEN VASES: HISTORICAL AND DESCRIPTIVE. By Susan Horner. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. 3s. 6d.
FOOTBALL. By Arthur Budd and Others. Lawrence & Bullen, Ltd. 6d.
BY ROADSIDE AND RIVER: GLEANINGS FROM NATURE'S FIELDS. By H. Mead Briggs. Elliot Stock.
MANNERS FOR WOMEN. By Mrs. Humphry James Bowden. THE LAM MACLAREN YEAR BOOK. Hodder & Stoughton. 3s. 6d.
THE LEBLIA OF CATULLUS. Arranged and Translated by J. H. A. Treimanheere. T. Fisher Unwin. 6s.
ETCHING, ENGRAVING, AND THE OTHER METHODS OF PRINTING PICTURES. By Hans W. Singer and William Strang. Kegan Paul. 16s.
LECTURES ON THE PRINCIPLES OF LOCAL GOVERNMENT. By George Laurence Gomme. Archibald Constable & Co. 12s.

JUVENILE BOOKS.

THE BABY PHILOSOPHER. By Ruth Berridge. Jarrold & Sons. DEEDS THAT WON THE EMPIRE. By the Rev. W. H. Fitchett ("Vedette"). Smith, Elder & Co. 6s.
A MODERN PUCK: A FAIRY STORY FOR CHILDREN. By Agnes Gibberne. Jarrold & Sons. 5s.
THE VOYAGE OF THE "AVERGER." By Henry St. John. Jarrold & Sons. 5s.
UNDER THE WHITE ENIGMA. By Arthur Lee Knight. Jarrold & Sons. 5s.
THE MAKING OF MATTHEW. By J. S. Fletcher. John Lane. 5s.
THE GENTLEMANLY GIANT. By Beata Francis. Hodder & Stoughton. 3s. 6d.
ON THE OTHER TACK. By William Charles Metcalfe. Jarrold & Sons. 3s. 6d.
THE ROSEMARY'S EYES. By Jessie Armstrong. Jarrold & Sons. 5s.
TOUR, UNLIMITED. By Martin Leach Warborough. Grant Richards. 5s.
FOUR HUNDRED ANIMAL STORIES. Edited by Robert Cochran. W. & R. Chambers. 2s. 6d.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FRENCH CRITICS.

St. Margaret's Lodge, Kilburn: Nov. 29.

"J. C." is quite right in his letter, dated November 21, from Paris.

Sardou, Sully-Prudhomme, and François Coppée "would be quite as much astonished, as they would surely thank me," for the title of critic; and they would not thank me at all.

The dogmatic statements made in other portions of "J. C.'s" letter I shall not notice, but I fancy that others beside myself will not entirely agree with him. "J. C." I fear, has a very much more limited conception of what a critic really is than I have; and from his own point of view, no doubt, he is right in saying Jules Lemaitre and Anatole France are the only two great critics in the "Académie Française"; but I do not agree with him, and I am not alone in thinking "Rabagas" and "Daniel Rochate" perfect specimens of criticism of their kind.

For criticisms of men and things from the pens of Sully-Prudhomme and François Coppée, I can only refer "J. C." to the daily papers of Paris, where he will surely find some at least twice a week.

JOHN E. YERBURY.

"A POETIC COINCIDENCE."

London: Nov. 29.

Since you have accorded the information it was as much the purpose of my communication headed as above to evoke, as it was to announce a discovery, you will, perhaps, allow me to say, with respect to the last sentence of the appended note to my letter—viz., "that 'Shon Campbell' has been received as an original effort in many quarters," that allusion was made to Mr. Mackenzie's lines in the British Weekly in January, 1894, in the following terms: "This week I [unquestionably Dr. Robertson Nicoll] am in the happy position to be able to present you with a perfect gem—the best verses, I think, ever written by an Aberdeen student, George MacDonald always excepted. I found it in a little pamphlet, entitled 'Rosemary,' of which a hundred copies were printed at Christmas." At a later date Mr. Morrison Davidson bestowed, in another place, an equally high eulogy on the "uniquely graphic, grimly pathetic lines," as he termed them, of Mr. Mackenzie. Neither Dr. Nicoll nor Mr. Morrison Davidson, however, made any allusion to the lines being a parody of Kipling's verses, a circumstance which doubtless accounts, though I do not excuse my ignorance on this ground, for "Shon Campbell" being accepted in some quarters as an "original effort."

J. G.

THREATENED VANDALISM AT HAMFSTEAD.

Hampstead: Nov. 27.

This northern suburb seems fated to encounter more than its just share of difficulties in a laudable effort to preserve the many literary landmarks in which the parish abounds. For example, it was hoped that the wide protest aroused by the contemplated demolition of Church-row had effectually stayed the irreverent hand of the despoiler. From a paragraph in a contemporary, the attack upon our unique and treasured Row has been by no means abandoned. We are informed that "old houses associated with the careers of men like Johnson and Arbuthnot are to disappear, and flats are to be erected in their place." After which we are invited to accept such cold comfort as we may from an assurance how the original design of the buildings has been altered to one "more in harmony with the historic locality."

It is difficult to conceive how any "harmony" of elevation which the subtlest architect can devise will ever accord with those delightful structures which, let it be well borne in mind, have not reached their period of decay. Is it too late for a final attempt to save this spot? Or must healthy sentiment own itself routed by the speculative builder with his cry of "flats, flats, flats," effacing, disturbing on all sides in a hitherto, alas! triumphant march? Trusts, vestries, private enterprise, all seem powerless to intervene. The horizon looks gloomy, and we northern dwellers are sad in consequence.

Nor is this our only trial. The house now known as Lawn Bank, on the south side of John-street, Downshire Hill, where, as a tablet testifies, poor, unappreciated Keats lived for awhile with his friend, Charles Brown, is, it is rumoured, also marked for destruction, along with its neighbour, Wentworth House. Of course the same demon, Flats, would be again answerable for any sacrilege inflicted upon this coveted space. Happily, a local newspaper, most reliable as to its topography, states emphatically that such a dismal report is groundless. May this, indeed, be so. There is prospective pain in the bare thought of finding some cherished medallions reinstated upon the walls of—a flat!

CECIL CLARK.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

"Last Studies." It seems to be generally admitted that this volume makes clear the loss which modern literature suffered by the death of Mr. Crackanthorpe. The Standard, commenting on Mr. Henry James's introduction to the volume, says that these "studies" show that "Mr. Crackanthorpe was slowly broadening down to a cooler and more catholic survey of a world which, after all, is only three parts grimy, and in which there is still room for a little healthy laughter, a few simple tears, and enough romance to keep the records of Vine-street out of sight. Mr. Henry James, in a task of delicacy, has acquitted himself with great tact. He is puzzled, as everyone must have been puzzled, to account for what he discreetly calls in Mr. Crackanthorpe's work 'the juvenility of his candour.' . . . Unfortunately, the test of an artist must remain one of act rather than of intention. It may be true that Mr. Crackanthorpe had 'an almost precocious glimpse of the charm of the technical problem'; he had a literary sense, it is clear; an impossible subject may have appealed to him by its very impossibility. If his publication had been less precocious than his glimpse it would have been better for him, for Mr. James, and for us. These Last Studies, however, are, as we have already hinted, saner and better work than Wreckage."

The Scotsman's critic, in a short notice, writes:

"These themes are treated as near as may be in the manner of De Maupassant. Mr. James hits the keynote of them all when he uses the phrase, 'an excellent felicity of dreariness.' Men who want to be cheered by a book must needs take up with some other author, yet no one could read works so well observed, so frankly written, and so accomplished in the more modern arts of literature, without being moved by admiration and regret."

The Athenæum notes carefully Mr. Crackanthorpe's method:

"It seems but a short time ago that we welcomed his first remarkable little book, Wreckage, and though he has never surpassed the best things in that volume, these three stories show no diminution in his special power. As Mr. Henry James notices in his essay, Crackanthorpe seems to have found a peculiar delight in fixing on a sordid or commonplace incident and drawing out of it the interest to be found in its exhibition of humanity. He never in his most successful stories—of which 'Trevor Perkins' in this volume is certainly one—cared to put a whole life into the glare of daylight, but was content to send a momentary flashlight, as it were, on one incident of it, and so suggest what the whole life would be like. In 'Trevor Perkins,' for example, little more is vouchsafed than a bare conversation one evening in the park between a City clerk and a waiting-girl of a cheap coffee-house. But from this one conversation the whole tragedy of his life and the emptiness of hers are suggested in a far more effective way than if their whole lives had been duly chronicled."

"Finally," says Literature, in a review of generous length, "the real achievement of Hubert Crackanthorpe is in having built so well that, despite his too early removal from among us, we realise that we lost a notable, possibly an eminent, writer."

"Corleone." "To the professional local colourist," says the Saturday Review, "a plot is an untoward thing, and it is with detail that he charms." While heartily praising Mr. Crawford's book, this critic says:

"It has been easy to scrape away enough local colour to lay bare the beauties and defects of Mr. Crawford's work, but what shall we say of the local colour itself? How the peasants talk, what they eat, the colour of the melons they only sell to tourists, the shape of the knives with which they kill each other, are all here. The Aspinall of literature, Mr. Crawford blithely attempts to combine the art of the novelist with the functions of the gazetteer. We feel as we gaze upon his glowing palette that a story is superfluous. Rather, in the search for a medium, let him become a pastelist of the Glasgow school, or, at least, confine his ardours to the writing of 'impressions.'"

And Mr. W. L. Courtney, writing in the Daily Chronicle, has the same thought, when he writes: "It is, indeed, abundantly clear that Mr. Crawford does not always carry through his highly-coloured romance with quite so sure a hand as he manages the analysis of some of his characters, and the pictures which he draws for us of Italian life."

Literature awards high praise both to the story and the execution:

"Those who wish for excitement will find it in abundance; but there is another class of readers who will be pleased also—namely, those who find enjoyment not so much in the tale as in the telling. Their interest in the plot may be languid, especially after a reference to the last page of the book, and they may not greatly care whether the Pagliuca kill the Saracinesca or vice versa. They will, however, relish Mr. Crawford's style and his grave narrative, which, being wholly without an element of comedy, gains immensely in plausibility."

This critic makes the following interesting minor observations on Mr. Crawford's execution:

"A single comic incident or personage would have ruined the whole. As things are, these solemn Romans and these treacherous Sicilians form a gallery of living portraits, and one feels that their adventures either are true or might easily be so. And sometimes one comes across little observations which show the author's careful study of human nature: 'A woman's faculty for finding out that a man has a secret of some sort is generally far beyond her capacity for discovering what that secret is.' That is true enough. We quote it only to show—perhaps superfluously—that there is sense and philosophy, besides dramatic art, in Mr. Crawford's work."

A Short History of Modern English Literature. By Edmund Gosse.

REFERRING to the scope of this book the Times remarks that it is a sign of the triumph of the antiquarian that the term

"modern" should be assigned to literature which begins as far back as Chaucer. Of Mr. Gosse's performance,

"it may be said at once that this is Mr. Gosse's most ambitious book, and probably his best. It bears on every page the traces, if not of that degree of accurate research which some of his exacting critics have asked for and missed in his writings, at all events of wide reading, of a genuine love for his subject, and of a lively critical intelligence."

Concluding a very favourable review the Times critic remarks:

"We like him less, as was perhaps inevitable, when he comes down to recent times; we think that he is too patronising to Macaulay, too scornful towards Carlyle; that he overhaunts the mark in speaking of Shirley as 'a stupendous book,' and that some of his estimates of quite modern writers, such as J. R. Green, are wrong."

The Pall Mall Gazette gives Mr. Gosse credit for "a somewhat dilettante but extensive knowledge of our post-mediæval poetry, particularly of our minor poetry, and of what is ordinarily comprised under the title of belles lettres." With Mr. Gosse's treatment of serious writers such as Hobbes, Bacon, and Hooker, this reviewer is by no means pleased; he writes:

"Nothing could be more inadequate and often misleading than the accounts given of the historians, theologians, philosophers, and critics, many of whom—nay, whole schools of whom—are not noticed at all. Sidney's epoch-making little treatise is dismissed in four lines. Ben Jonson's Discoveries are not even mentioned. . . . In conclusion—for we have not space to enter into further details—we must do Mr. Gosse the justice to say that he has produced with some skill what many will no doubt find a readable book, but he has undertaken a task much, and very much, beyond his powers."

The Daily News thinks that Mr. Gosse's vision is clear only when applied to poetry and belles lettres; and

"even within these restricted limits there are some noteworthy omissions. Perhaps the most remarkable is the almost total absence of any reference to the dramatic literature of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Of Goldsmith it is, indeed, observed that 'as a dramatist he succeeded brilliantly in an age of failures'; but of the author of 'The Rivals' and 'The School for Scandal'—comedies which still hold the stage after considerably more than a century's existence—we have not found a mention."

The Saturday Review is glad to overlook minor faults. It says:

"It is difficult to be too thankful to a historian who, at all events, judges everything from the strictly literary point of view (even if at times it may seem to us that his conception of literature has its limitations of temperament), to whom the word history really means a tracing of the continuous life of literature, not a collection of little essays on individual writers, and to whom the historian himself is a person to be kept rigorously out of sight."

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS' BOOKS.

NIPPUR; or, Explorations and Adventures on the Euphrates. The Narrative of the University of Pennsylvania Expedition to Babylonia in the Years 1889-1890. By JOHN PUNNETT PETERS, Ph.D., D.Sc., D.D., Director of the Expedition. Fully Illustrated. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, 25s.

THE DUNGEONS of OLD PARIS. Being the Story and Romance of the Most Celebrated Prisons of the Monarchy and the Revolution. By TIGHE HOPKINS. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

RELIGIONS of PRIMITIVE PEOPLES. Being the Second Series of American Lectures on the History of Religions, 1896-1897. By DANIEL G. BRINTON, M.A., M.D., LL.D., D.Sc., Professor of Archaeology and Linguistics in the University of Pennsylvania. (Uniform with Rhye-David's "Buddhism.") 8vo, cloth, 6s.

JOHN MARMADUKE: a Romance of the English Invasion of Ireland in 1649. By SAMUEL HARDEN CHURCH. Author of "Life of Oliver Cromwell." Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE LITERARY HISTORY of the AMERICAN REVOLUTION. By MOSES COIT TYLER, Professor of American History in Cornell University and Author of "A History of American Literature during the Colonial Time," &c. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, 25s.

ASTORIA; or, Anecdotes of an Enterprising Beyond the Rocky Mountains. By WASHINGTON IRVING. Tacoma Edition. 2 vols., large 8vo, beautifully printed and bound, cloth extra, gilt tops, 25s. net.

ROBERT BURNS. The Ayrshire Homes and Haunts of Burns. By HENRY C. SHELLEY. With 25 Illustrations by the Author; and a Portrait. 16mo, cloth extra, 5s.

LITERARY MOVEMENT in FRANCE DURING the NINETEENTH CENTURY. By GEORGES PELLISSIER. Translated by ANNE G. BRINTON. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

"HEROES of the NATIONS." Edited by EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford. Illustrated with Full-Page Plates and Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.; prize edition, cloth extra, gilt edges, 6s.

21.—ULYSSES S. GRANT and the MAINTENANCE of AMERICAN NATIONALITY, 1822-1865. By W. C. CHURCH, Lieut.-Col. U.S.A.

22.—ROBERT E. LEE and the SOUTHERN CONFEDERACY, 1807-1870. By HENRY ALEXANDER WHITE, M.A., Ph.D.

New Illustrated Catalogue now ready. 24, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, LONDON; and NEW YORK.

Now ready for DECEMBER, price 6d.

THE EXPOSITORY TIMES.

Edited by JAS. HASTINGS, D.D.

Contents include—Editor's Notes of Recent Exposition—Articles and Contributions by Canon DRIVER, Canon CHETTER, Professors A. R. DAVIDSON, S. D. F. SALMOND, E. NESTLE, Rev. J. WELLS, D.D.—The New Dictionary of the Bible—At the Literary Table—The Great Text Commentary—The E.T. Guild of Bible Study, &c.

Edinburgh: T. & T. CLARK, 38, George Street; London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., Ltd.

EPPS'S COCOA.

EXTRACTS FROM A LECTURE ON 'FOODS and THEIR VALUES' BY DR. ANDREW WILSON, F.R.S.E., &c.—"If any motives—first, of due regard for health, and second, of getting full food-value for money expended—can be said to weigh with us in choosing our foods, then I say that Cocoa (Epps's being the most nutritious) should be made to replace tea and coffee without hesitation. Cocoa is a food; tea and coffee are not foods. This is the whole science of the matter in a nutshell, and he who reads may read the obvious moral of the story."

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS.

THREE CHRISTMAS BOOKS.

The WALLYPUG in LONDON. By G. E. Farrow, Author of "The Wallypug of Why." With numerous Illustrations by Alan Wright Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
A Jubilee extravaganza.

NURSERY RHYMES. With many Coloured Pictures. By F. D. Bedford.
Super-royal 8vo, 5s.

"Its pictures give it an exceptional attractiveness."—Scotsman.
"Beautifully coloured pictures."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"The art is of the newest."—Spectator.

A BOOK of CHRISTMAS VERSE. Edited by H. C. Beeching, M.A., and illustrated by Walter Crane. Crown 8vo, gilt top, 5s.

"An anthology which, from its unity of aim and high poetic excellence, has a better right to exist than most of its fellows."—Guardian.

NEW NOVELS.

LOCHINVAR. By S. R. CROCKETT. Illustrated, and with a Coloured Map. Large crown 8vo, 6s.

"Full of gallantry and pathos, of the clash of arms, and brightened by episodes of humour and love.....Mr. Crockett has never written a stronger or better book. An enraging and fascinating story. The love-story alone is enough to make the book delightful."—Westminster Gazette.

"Always bright and full of stir and movement."—Daily Telegraph.
"A stirring romance of tremendous adventure."—Graphic.

The POMP of the LAVIETTES. By GILBERT PARKER. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Second Edition.]

"We would not wish for a better-told romance."—Westminster Gazette.
"Living, breathing romance, genuine and unforced pathos, and a deeper and more subtle knowledge of human nature than Mr. Parker has ever displayed before. It is, in a word, the work of a true artist."—Pall Mall Gazette.

A PASSIONATE PILGRIM. By PERCY WHITE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

BYEWAYS. By ROBERT HICHENS, Author of "Flames," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A DAUGHTER of STRIFE. By JANE HELEN FINDLATER, Author of "The Green Graves of Balgowrie," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The construction of the plot is close and skilful, and shows no weak points. A story of strong human interest."—Scotsman.
"It has a sweet flavour of olden days deliciously conveyed."—Manchester Guardian.

OVER the HILLS. By MARY FINDLATER. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A strong and fascinating piece of work."—Scotsman.
"The story has considerable charm and undeniable human interest."—Pall Mall Gazette.

A CREEL of IRISH STORIES. By JANE BARLOW, Author of "Irish Idylls." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Frequent humour brightens the shadows."—Daily Mail.
"Vivid and singularly real."—Scotsman.
"Cleverly written, bright, and full of happy characterisation."—Weekly Dispatch.

The CLASH of ARMS. By J. BLOUNDELLE-BURTON. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Second Edition.]

"Uncommonly attractive."—Daily Mail.
"A well-told story of manly adventure in the brave days of old."—Glasgow Herald.
"A brave story—brave in deed, brave in word, brave in thought."—St. James's Gazette.

BLADYS of the STEWPONEY. By S. BARING-GOULD. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Second Edition.]

"A story of thrilling interest."—Scotsman.
"A sombre but powerful story."—Daily Mail.
"Teems with incident and adventure."—Glasgow Herald.

The LADY'S WALK. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A story of exquisite tenderness, of most delicate fancy."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"A very delicate and charming story."—Westminster Gazette.

The BUILDERS. By J. S. FLETCHER, Author of "When Charles I. was King." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Replete with delightful descriptions."—Vanity Fair.
"A masterly piece of work and intensely interesting."—North British Mail.

The SINGER of MARLY. By I. HOOPER. Illustrated by W. C. Cooke. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Full of interest and human pathos."—Western Morning News.
"A thoroughly interesting and charming book."—Sussex Daily News.
"A good historical story of adventure."—Guardian.

The FALL of the SPARROW. By M. C. BALFOUR. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Written with genuine ability."—Glasgow Herald.
"Refreshing and inspiring."—Sussex Daily News.
"A powerful novel."—Daily Telegraph.

SECRETARY to BAYNE, M.P. By W. PETT RIDGE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Sparkling, vivacious, adventurous."—St. James's Gazette.
"Ingenious, amusing, and especially smart."—World.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

ENGLISH LYRICS. Selected and Edited by W. E. HENLEY. Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s.

The ODYSSEY of HOMER. A Translation by J. G. CORDERY. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

The HILL of the GRACES; or, the Great Stone Temples of Tripoli. By H. S. COWPER, F.S.A. With Maps, Plans, and 75 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

The DECLINE and FALL of the ROMAN EMPIRE. By EDWARD GIBBON. Edited by J. B. BURY, M.A. In 7 vols., demy 8vo, gilt top, 6s. 6d. each; crown 8vo, 6s. each. Vol. IV.

The LIFE of ERNEST RENAN. By Madame DARMESTER. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A polished gem. It is difficult to speak without exaggeration of the merits of this admirable biography."—Athenæum.
"A distinguished work; a work whose solid worth is at least as great as the measure and musical beauty of its form. Interpenetrated with dignity and charm."—Academy.

THE CHURCHMAN'S LIBRARY.

Edited by J. H. BURN, B.D.

Vol. I.

The BEGINNINGS of ENGLISH CHRISTIANITY. By W. K. COLLINS, M.A. With Map. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A PRIMER of the BIBLE. By W. H. BENNETT, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"Scholarly, clear, interesting."—Scotsman.
"The cream of many a ponderous and erudite volume."—Globe.

JOHN DONNE. By AUGUSTUS JESSOPP, D.D. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Leaders of Religion.]

LIGHT and LEAVEN: Historical and Social Sermons. By the Rev. HENSLEY HENSON, M.A., Fellow of All Souls', Incumbent of St. Mary's Hospital, Ilford. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A HISTORY of BRITISH COLONIAL POLICY. By H. E. EGERTON, M.A. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

OLD HARROW DAYS. By J. G. COTTON MINCHIN. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A volume of reminiscences which will be interesting to old Harrovians and to many of the general public.

A SHORT HISTORY of the ROYAL NAVY, from Early Times to 1858. By DAVID HANNAY. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

The STORY of the BRITISH ARMY. By Lieut.-Colonel COOPER KING, of the Staff College, Camberley. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

VOCES ACADEMICÆ. By C. GRANT ROBERTSON, M.A., Fellow of All Souls', Oxford. With Frontispiece. Pott 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A PRIMER of WORDSWORTH. By LAURIE MAGNUS. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"A valuable contribution to Wordsworthian literature."—Literature.

RAILWAY NATIONALISATION. By CLEMENT EDWARDS. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Social Questions Series.]

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW CATALOGUE and BOOK GAZETTE sent to any address.

METHUEN & CO., 36, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

FROM W. THACKER &amp; CO.'S LIST.

JUST PUBLISHED

Mr. Keene's very Successful Book.

A SERVANT OF "JOHN COMPANY"

(The Hon. East India Company). Being the Recollections of an Indian Official, by H. G. KEENE, C.I.E., Hon. M.A., Author of "Sketches in Indian Ink," &c. With Portrait of the Author, and Illustrated by W. SIMPSON, from the Author's Sketches. Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 12s.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS.

"Mr. Keene has written an instructive book. Indian biographies are often instructive, sometimes inspiring, but scarcely ever amusing. Mr. Keene is not dull. This book presents a novel view of Indian life. It is the genial record of a man, who from boyhood seems to have been bent on extracting the largest possible amount of pleasure from his surroundings."—The Times.

"He has written a very readable book. It is full of anecdotes, 'original and selected.' There is no end to the good things in Mr. Keene's book."—aily Chronicle.

"The vagueness and the dryness of the ordinary Anglo-Indian book of reminiscences are entirely absent from them. He must have lived a great deal during his Indian career, which is a remarkable record of hard work diversified by travel, danger, and the enjoyment of an observant man gets out of watching closely the contact of two civilisations. The chapter on the decay of dwelling is motive enough for ordering the book; and the tale of the Mutiny is no mere repetition but a very personal impression. In the Appendix will be found a generous and able survey of the present condition of India."—Bookman.

"His book will be sought by most people, however, for its memories of early Indian rule, and its quaint stories. The book will be valuable in time to come, as it is at once, for its pictures of the change wrought upon Indian administration during the Queen's reign."

"But it is unfair to retail Mr. Keene's plums. Our readers will find plenty more in his pages, together with a curious account of duelling in India; a narrative of his successful defence of his district of Behra Dun against the mutineers, and his courageous issue of paper money; and numerous interesting details of life and manners in India under the old and the new régime."—Saturday Review.

A NEW WORK ON TACTICS.

TACTICS: as Applied to Schemes.

By Major J. SHERSTON, D.S.O. P.S.C. (Rifle Brigade), with an Appendix containing "Solutions to some Tactical Schemes," by Capt. L. J. SHADWELL, P.S.C. (Suffolk Regiment), and A.A.G. for Instruction. Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged, with 7 Maps. Demy 8vo, 3s.

A NEW WORK ON BRITISH STOCK.

THE BEST BREEDS OF BRITISH STOCK:

A Practical Guide for Farmers and Owners of Live-Stock in England and the Colonies. By Professors J. P. SHELTON (late Special Commissioner of the Canadian Government), and JAMES LONG, Author of "British Dairy-Farming," and JOHN WATSON, F.R.S. Medium 8vo, boards, 2s. 6d.

A useful and safe guide, written by well-known authorities who are men of science and practical farmers.

CAPT. HAYES' BOOKS ON HORSES.

POINTS of the HORSE: a Treatise

on Equine Formation, describing the points in which the perfection of each class of Horses consists. Second Edition. Revised and enlarged, with over 400 beautiful illustrations. Royal 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 3s.

VETERINARY NOTES for HORSE-OWNERS.

An Illustrated Manual of Horse Medicine and Surgery, written in simple language. Fifth Edition. With 300 illustrations. Crown 8vo, buckram, 1s.

Is revised throughout, considerably enlarged, and incorporates the substance of the Author's "Soundness and Age of Horses."

ILLUSTRATED HORSEBREAKING:

A Description of the Art of giving Horses good Manners and Mouths. Second Edition. Imperial 16mo, 2s.

This edition has been entirely re-written, the Letterpress doubled, and 75 Photographs added.

TRAINING and HORSE MANAGEMENT IN INDIA.

A complete Guide for Amateur Horsemen or Veterinary Surgeons. Fifth Edition. 7s. 6d.

RIDING: on the Flat and Across Country.

A Guide to Practical Horsemanship, Third Edition. Illustrated. 10s. 6d.

THE HORSEWOMAN: a Practical Guide to Side-Saddle Riding.

By Mrs. HAYES. Illustrated. 10s. 6d.

MODERN POLO. By E. D. Miller,

late 17th Lancers. Edited by Captain M. H. HAYES. With 65 illustrations from instantaneous Photographs showing "Points of the Game," &c. Imperial 16mo. 12s. 6d.

Important to the Medical and Veterinary Professions.

INFECTIVE DISEASES of ANIMALS.

Being Part I. of the Translation by Capt. M. HAYES from the recently published 4th Edition of Friedberger and Froehner's Pathology of the Domestic Animals. Annotated by Captain M. H. HAYES, F.R.C.V.S., Author of "Points of the Horse," "Veterinary Notes," &c., Dr. GEORGE NEWMAN, D.P.H., and others. In two vols., Medium 8vo, 12s. 6d. each vol., sold separately.

*. When completed, the work may be had, two vols. in one, 25s. Note.—Owing to the fact that the infective diseases of animals can in many cases be communicated to man, and that their occurrence in our meat and milk products is a serious question of public hygiene, the first volume of this translation will appeal to the medical profession as well as to the veterinary surgeons. The second volume will more particularly concern the latter.

Detailed prospectus on application.

London: W. THACKER & CO., 2, Creed Lane, E.C.
Calcutta: THACKER, SPINK & CO.

WALTER SCOTT'S NEW BOOKS.

THE SCOTT LIBRARY.

Crown 8vo, gilt top, cloth elegant, price 1s. 6d.

NEW VOLUMES NOW READY.

RENAN'S LIFE of JESUS. Translated, with an Introduction, by WILLIAM G. HUTCHISON.

This is an entirely new translation of Renan's work, by the translator of "The Poetry of the Celtic Races, and other Studies by Ernest Renan."

CRITICISMS, REFLECTIONS, and MAXIMS of GOETHE.

Translated, with an Introduction and Biographical Note, by W. B. RONNFELDT. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, gilt top, price 1s. 6d.

"Any competent critic or editor, therefore, who aims at imparting to us a better understanding of one of the greatest of moderns is a genuine benefactor; and this is what Mr. Ronnfeldt has accomplished, not without success, in the present little volume."—Chronicle.

ESSAYS of SCHOPENHAUER.

Translated by Mrs. RUDOLF DIRCKS. With an Introduction.

This is a collection of Schopenhauer's most representative Essays, including Authorship and Style—Education—Reading and Books—Women—Thinking for Oneself—Immortality—Religion—Metaphysics of Love—On Physiognomy—On Suicide—On the Emptiness of Existence, &c.

THE CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.

FOUR IMPORTANT NEW VOLUMES.

Just issued, and First Large Edition nearly exhausted.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d., with Diagrams.

SLEEP: its Physiology, Pathology.

Hygiene, and Psychology. By Dr. MARIE DE MANUEINE (St. Petersburg).

The LANCET says: "Written in a truly scientific spirit." The CHRONICLE says: "It is full of most interesting hints concerning the cure of insomnia, and sufferers therefrom would do well to try the simple expedients there suggested before resorting to the use of any of the so-called hypnotics." The SPECTATOR says: "A most interesting study of the phenomena of sleep."

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

HALLUCINATIONS and ILLUSIONS: a Study of the Fallacies of Perception. By EDMUND PARISH.

"This remarkable little volume."—Daily News.

Crown 8vo cloth, price 6s.

THE PSYCHOLOGY of the EMOTIONS. By Prof. T. H. RIBOT.

"Prof. Ribot's treatment is careful, modern, and adequate."—Academy.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. 124 Illustrations.

THE NEW PSYCHOLOGY. By E. W. SCRIPTURE, Ph.D. (Leipzig).

"We have at present no work in English which gives in so compact a form so comprehensive a view of the subject."—Liverpool Post.

A NEW WORK BY MR. HAVELock ELLIS.

READY IN A FEW DAYS.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

AFFIRMATIONS. By Havelock ELLIS, Author of "Man and Woman," "The Criminal," "The New Spirit," &amp;c.

The series of Essays contained in this volume ("Nietzsche," "Casanova," "Zola," "Huysmans," "St. Francis," and others) is not so much a series of literary studies as a discussion of questions of the day (religion, morals, sex, literature and morals, "decadence," &c.), with as much freedom as it is desirable to exercise. It will be found that the volume is not a mere haphazard collection of unrelated papers, but one informed with a distinct and interesting unity of object.

THE WORLD'S GREAT NOVELS.

Large crown 8vo, illustrated, price 3s. 6d. per Volume. IMPORTANT NEW ADDITION.

LES MISERABLES. By Victor HUGO.

1,384 pages, 12 Full-Page Illustrations, including Frontispiece.

SPECIALLY SUITABLE AS GIFTS.

THE CANTERBURY POETS.

IN ANTIQUE LEATHER BINDING.

A special selection from the Volumes of this Series, issued in an Antique Leather Binding, with a quaint and richly embossed antique pattern (period, sixteenth century), with gilt edges and gilt roll. The selection includes Volumes of Chaucer, Spenser, Shakespeare, George Herbert, Cavalier Poets, Herrick, Wordsworth, Shelley, Coleridge, Arnold, Browning, and others. Complete List sent free on application to the Publishers.

London:

WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED, Paternoster Square.

MR. JAMES BOWDEN'S NEW BOOKS.

CLEMENT SHORTER'S NEW BOOK.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, 2s. 6d.

VICTORIAN LITERATURE:

Sixty Years of Books and Bookmen. By CLEMENT K. SHORTER, Author of "Charlotte Brontë and her Circle."

"THE SPEAKER" says:—"Nobody is better qualified to be a bibliographer than Mr. Shorter."

"THE GLOBE" says:—"Mr. Shorter pronounces judgment with learning and independence. It is wonderful how much freshness and attractiveness he imparts to a theme which has been treated so often.... Besides being a well-equipped and thoughtful critic, he is a careful and trustworthy annalist."

"TRUTH" says:—"Mr. Shorter's 'Victorian Literature' is a model of the art of packing, and will take a permanent place as the most clear, succinct, well-written, and judicious of handbooks of literary reference.... As interesting as it is instructive."

"THE PALL MALL GAZETTE" says:—"Compact and excellently well arranged.... Calculated to be of value, either as a text-book or for handy reference."

CLARK RUSSELL'S NEW BOOK.

Crown 8vo, handsomely bound, cloth gilt, gilt top, 6s.

PICTURES from the LIFE of NELSON.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the 'Grosvenor,'" &c. With Photographs from the famous "Hopper" Portrait, and 8 Full-Page Illustrations.

LORD CHARLES BERSFORD says:—"I think it a splendid boys' book."

"THE MORNING POST" says:—"Mr. Clark Russell's experience as a sailor has provided him with that colour and that quality of sympathy which are necessary ingredients in the equipment of those who write acceptably of the sea and sailors. It is not surprising, therefore, that, with so splendid a subject to treat of, his volume proves to be one of great attractions."

"THE PALL MALL GAZETTE" says:—"We heartily welcome Mr. Clark Russell's popular anecdotal 'Life of Nelson.'"

JUST PUBLISHED.

Crown 8vo, attractively bound, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

CONCERNING TEDDY. By Mrs. MURRAY HICKSON.

"THE STAR" says:—"Sketches of boys home for the holidays, that for truth and sympathy, for bold, yet delicate, workmanship, for insight and moderation, are better than anything we have yet seen on the subject. Teddy himself is irrepressible, villain and hero in one, and quite delightful."

"THE BRITISH WEEKLY" says:—"We have met Mrs. Murray Hickson's entertaining young raconteur many a time in the flesh, and we are charmed thus to renew their acquaintance in print.... We can imagine no more suitable or acceptable Christmas or birthday present."

GUILDFORD HYNES' NEW BOOK.

Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, 6s.

THE PARADISE COAL BOAT.

By GUILDFORD HYNES, Author of "A Recipe for Diamonds," &c.

"THE PALL MALL GAZETTE" says:—"In his tales of the sea, in his pictures of life on reckless traders, in his types of dandified seamen, Mr. Hynes is only equalled by Rudyard Kipling."

"THE SCOTSMAN" says:—"One does not read half-a-dozen pages before he discovers that Mr. Hynes knows the sea, and its sunny side of sea life.... Constructively his stories are always excellent. But he aims at being something more than a mere story teller. He is a literary artist of no mean ability."

CHARMING BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

LAZY LESSONS and ESSAYS on CONDUCT.

By the late WM. BRIGHTY RANDS, the "Laureate of the Nursery." Fcap. 8vo, buckram, 3d pp., 2s. 6d. And buckram, 192 pp., 2s. 6d. With Introductions by E. BRIMLEY JOHNSON.

LILLIPUT LECTURES. Fcap.,

"THE WESTMINSTER GAZETTE" says:—"For reading to children or for children to read for themselves we know of no books of the kind likely to be more enjoyable and at the same time more informing, helpful, and stimulating."

MRS. HUMPHRY'S NEW BOOK.

JUST OUT. Long 8vo, cloth, round corners, 1s.

MANNERS for WOMEN. By Mrs. HUMPHRY ("Madge" of Truth).

Second edition. Twentieth Thousand.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

Uniform with above. Long 8vo, cloth, round corners, 1s.

MANNERS for MEN. Twenty-fifth

Thousand.

"THE GLOBE" says:—"Mrs. Humphry discourses with knowledge, judgment, and good taste."

"THE SATURDAY REVIEW" says:—"The world would be a much pleasanter place if all men read and practised Mrs. Humphry's admirable precepts."

London: JAMES BOWDEN, 10, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

WITH A PHOTOGRAPHIC PORTRAIT TAKEN BY MILLET'S SON-IN-LAW.

In demy 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

J. F. MILLET AND RUSTIC ART. By HENRY NAEGELY (Henry Gaëlyn) Author of "The Mummer, and Other Poems."

The author gives a sympathetic study of Millet's life work as compared with the restricted rustic art of preceding periods, and describes, from personal knowledge, his surroundings and relationships. A number of letters by the mother and grandmother of the great painter are given which have not been published before either in French or in English. Some interesting MS. fragments also are included in the work. A colotype portrait of Millet (the last taken before his death) is given as a frontispiece.

Now published, with Photographic Frontispiece, price 3s. 6d. net; post free, 4s.

By ROADSIDE and RIVER. Gleanings from Nature's Fields. By H. MEAD-BRIGGS.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price, 3s. 6d.

VOICES of the DAY; or, Thoughts on the Message of God in Nature. By C. S. WARDLE.

NEW VOLUMES OF VERSE.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

In LONDON: and other Poems. By C. J. SHEARER, Author of "A Family of Quality" and on "Heather Hills."

"A clever collection of poems. This book will be welcomed by those who delight in high-class literature. Mr. Shearer in his verses proves himself a poet and a scholar."—Public Opinion.

"The volume is a pleasant and attractive one. The style is lucid, simple, and directly to the point."—Weekly Sun.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. net.

LAYS of LOVE and LIBERTY. By JAMES A. MACKERETH.

"A love of nature and humanity breathes through many of the pieces, some of which have no little lyrical sweetness, while embodying delicate thought."—Western Press.

NEW NOVELS.

In crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

A BOOK without a MAN. A Story by AGNES GROZIER HERBERTSON.

"The story is chiefly interesting from its dialogue, which is bright and clever."—People's Friend.

"Daintily imagined and prettily written."
Black and White.

In crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The MEDHURSTS of MINDALA. The Story of the Development of a Soul. By G. M. WATERHOUSE.

NEW VOLUME OF FAIRY TALES.

In crown 8vo, cloth, 6s., illustrated.

PRINCES THREE & SEEKERS SEVEN. Four Fairy Tales by MARY COLQUHOUN. Illustrated by EMILY BARNARD.

"There are enchantment and delight in these simply told tales for little readers. Miss Colquhoun knows the precise measure of the comprehension of those for whom she writes, and she does not overtax it. The illustrations, by Emily Barnard, are pretty drawings."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Full of incident, marvellous and otherwise. . . . Will be eagerly read."—Daily News.

"Four capital fairy stories, which might be read with pleasure by people of any age."—Standard.

In paper cover, price One Penny,

COMBINATIONS in RESTRAINT OF TRADE. Reprinted from Unpopular Politics; being Non-Popular Aspects, Political and Economic, of some Prominent Contemporary Questions. By GEORGE EDWARD TARNER.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

EFFINGHAM WILSON'S PUBLICATIONS.

JUST PUBLISHED, SECOND EDITION, REVISED AND ENLARGED, 689 pp. 18s.

THE LAW OF DISTRICT AND PARISH COUNCILS.

Being the Local Government Act, 1894, and the Amending Acts, with an Appendix containing the numerous Statutes referred to, in, or incorporated with the Act itself, also the Orders and Circulars of the Local Government Board. Together with Copious Notes and a Full Index.

By JOHN LITHIBY, LL.B. (Lond.)

"A trustworthy authority."—Daily News.

JUST OUT, crown 8vo, 5s. net.

BOOK OF PRACTICAL FORMS FOR USE IN SOLICITORS' OFFICES.

Containing over 400 Forms and Precedents in the Queen's Bench Division and the County Court.

By CHARLES JONES,
Author of "The Solicitor's Clerk," "County Court Guide," &c.

"Cannot fail to be of considerable service to solicitors."
Manchester Guardian.

"Providing for a long-felt want in legal offices."
Lloyds.

JUST OUT, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

SIMPLEX SYSTEM OF SOLICITORS' BOOKKEEPING.

By GEORGE SHEFFIELD.

"A most suitable and at the same time simple system of bookkeeping; and by adopting it labour will be considerably economised."—Irish Law Times.

SECOND EDITION, Revised and Enlarged, 2s. 6d. net.

HOME RAILWAYS AS INVESTMENTS, 1897.

By W. J. STEVENS.

"A book of which we wrote very favourably on its first appearance as an excellent review of the principles of railway finance in general and the position of the leading British Companies in particular."—Manchester Guardian.

THIRD EDITION, Revised, 3s. 6d. net.

OUR CLEARING SYSTEM AND CLEARING HOUSES.

By W. HOWARTH, F.R.Hist., S.F.S.S.

"A serviceable volume. It should be carefully perused by all who are interested, professionally or otherwise, in the matters dealt with."—Daily Telegraph.

Demy 8vo, 6s.

THEORY OF FOREIGN EXCHANGES.

By the Right Hon. GEO. J. GOSCHEN, M.P.

Demy 8vo, 6s.

A MONEY MARKET PRIMER AND KEY TO THE EXCHANGES.

By GEORGE CLARE.

Crown 8vo, 2s. net.

A SKETCH OF THE CURRENCY QUESTION.

By OLIVE CUTHBERTSON, B.A.

"An admirable résumé of the controversy between monometallists and bimetallicists."—Times.

PRINCIPLES OF BANKING: its Utility and Economy; with Remarks on the Working and Management of the Bank of England. By THOMAS HANKEY, Director and formerly Governor of the Bank of England. Fourth Edition. Revised as regards the Working and Management of the Bank by CLIFFORD WIGRAM, Esq., a Director of the Bank. Price 2s. 6d.

SMITH, JAMES WALTER, LL.D.

LEGAL FORMS FOR COMMON USE.

Being 300 Precedents and Notes. Twelfth Thousand.
New and Re-written Edition. Price 5s.

THE LAW OF BANKER AND CUS- TOMER. New and Revised Edition. Price 5s.

THE PUBLIC MAN: his Duties, Powers, and Privileges, and how to exercise them. By JAMES TAYLER. Price 3s. 6d. net.

EFFINGHAM WILSON, 11, Royal Exchange, E.C.

MESSRS. NELSON'S NEW BOOKS.

* * Complete List post free on application.

"It has never, we think, been done so well and thoroughly before."—Spectator.
"Extremely tasteful and serviceable."—Independent.
"A marvel of cheapness."—Churchwoman.

THE ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT.

An entirely New Edition. With 200 Illustrations of Bible
Scenes and Sites, chiefly from Photographs by BOWEN,
TAYLOR, MASON GOOP, and others. 576 pages, in Long Primer Type, cloth extra, red edges, price 2s. 6d.; or,
French morocco, gold roll, round corners, red under gold edges, 4s. 6d.

NEW TALES BY E. EVERETT-GREEN.

"Finely conceived and beautifully written."—Christian.

1. SISTER: a Chronicle of Fair Haven. By E. EVERETT-GREEN, Author of "Molly Melville," "Olive Roscoe," "Temple's Trial," &c. With 8 illustrations by J. Finnemore. Crown 8vo, bevelled boards, cloth extra, gilt edges, price 6s., or plain edges, 4s.

"Should find favour with a large circle of readers."
New Age.

2. A CLERK of OXFORD, and His Adventures in the Barons' War. By E. EVERETT- GREEN, Author of "The Young Pioneers," "In Taunton Town," "Shut In," &c. Crown 8vo, bevelled boards, cloth extra, gilt top. Price 6s.

A TALE OF THE TIME OF THE GREAT DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH.

3. TOM TUFTON'S TRAVELS. By E. EVERETT-GREEN, Author of "Dominique's Vengeance," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra. With 6 illustrations by W. S. Stacey. Price 3s. 6d.

4. FOR the QUEEN'S SAKE; or, the Story of Little Sir Caspar. By E. EVERETT-GREEN, Author of "Squib and his Friends," &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra. Illustrated. Price 2s. 6d.

NEW TALES BY HERBERT HAYENS.

"A vigorous and well-illustrated story."—Record.

1. AN EMPEROR'S DOOM; or, the Patriots of Mexico. By HERBERT HAYENS, Author of "Cleverly Sahib," "Under the Lone Star," &c. Crown 8vo, bevelled boards, cloth extra, gilt top. With 8 illustrations by A. J. B. Salmon. Price 6s.

2. THE BRITISH LEGION: a Tale of the Carlist War. By HERBERT HAYENS, Author of "An Emperor's Doom," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra. With 6 illustrations by W. H. Margetson. Price 3s. 6d.

"A delightful character-sketch."—Record.

POPPY. By Mrs. Isla Sitwell. Author of "The Golden Wool," "In Far Japan," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, illustrated, price 3s. 6d.

NEW TALE OF ADVENTURE BY DR. GORDON STABLES.

THE ISLAND of GOLD: a Sailor's Yarn. By GORDON STABLES, M.D., R.N., Author of "Every Inch a Sailor," "How Jack Mackenzie Won his Epauettes," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra. With 6 illustrations by Allan Stewart. Price 3s. 6d.

NEW TALE BY THE AUTHOR OF "SYDNEY'S CHUMS," "NELL'S SCHOOL DAYS," &c.

PARTNERS: a School Story. By H. F. GETHEN. Post 8vo, cloth extra, price 2s. 6d.

NEW HISTORICAL WORK BY M. B. SYNGE.

BRAVE MEN and BRAVE DEEDS; or, Famous Stories from European History. By M. B. SYNGE, Author of "A Child of the Mews," "A Helping Hand," &c. With 16 illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth extra, price 2s. 6d.

"Full of interest and adventure."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE VANISHED YACHT. By E. HARCOURT BURRAGE. Crown 8vo, cloth extra. With 6 illustrations. Price 2s. 6d.

"A fine story well told."—St. James's Gazette.

VANDRAD the VIKING; or, the Feud and the Spell. A Tale of the Norsemen. By J. STORER CLOUTON. With 6 illustrations by Hubert Paton. Post 8vo, cloth extra. Price 2s.

NEW BOOK OF ARCTIC TRAVEL.

BREAKING the RECORD. The Story of Three Arctic Expeditions. By M. DOUGLAS, Author of "Across Greenland's Ice-fields." Post 8vo, cloth, extra. With 17 illustrations. Price 2s.

SOLDIERS of the QUEEN; or, Jack Fenleigh's Luck. A Story of the Dash to Khartoum. By HAROLD AVERY, Author of "Making a Man of Him," &c., &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra. Price 2s.

THOMAS NELSON & SONS,
35 and 36, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.;
Parkside Edinburgh; and New York.

Mr. Elkin Mathews's Selected List.*TWO ESSAYS UPON MATTHEW

ARNOLD, with his Letters to the Author. By ARTHUR GALTON. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"It is good to be reminded of the man himself not only by the reappearance of his delightful satire ('Friendship's Garland'), but by such books as this tiny volume."—Times.

"A small book, but more in it than in many a heavier appreciation of the great critic."—Scotsman.

ADMIRALS ALL, and other Verses. By

HENRY NEWBOLT. (Shilling Garland, No. VIII.) Fcap. 8vo, 1s. net. [Third Edition in the press.]

"Genuinely inspired patriotic verse.... There are but a dozen pieces in this shillingworth, but there is no dross among them."

"All the pieces are imbued with the national English spirit. They are written in a sturdy rhythmical speech worthy of their own high themes."—Scotsman.

"... Looking back to recent achievements in the same line, and including even Mr. Kipling's, we do not know where to find anything better after its own kind than his ballad of 'Drake's Drum'."

CHRIST IN HADES, and other Poems.

By STEPHEN PHILLIPS. Fourth Edition, with Additions. 1s. net.

THE JOY OF MY YOUTH A Novel.

By CLAUD NICHOLSON. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"There is very delicate work in 'The Joy of My Youth.' There is not much story in it, but reminiscences from the history of a sensitive man, peculiarly open to impressions and influences from without. It has a Breton background, and, indeed, there is nothing at all English about it.... Its style, its sentiment, its attitude were all made in France. It has charm and subtlety, and the childhood portion, with the blithe imaginative pictures of a beautiful and irresponsible past, must captivate all readers who have time to linger in their reading."

IRELAND, with other Poems. By

LIONEL JOHNSON (Uniform with "Poems"). Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

"A high place amongst living poets must be assigned to Mr. Lionel Johnson. The best poems in the volume before us, in their strength, stateliness, and severe simplicity, resemble some of Tennyson's most finished work.... His former volume of poems, as well as this, will convince all appreciative readers that he possesses the creative faculty in a very high degree."—Irish Daily Independent.

AN ATTIC IN BOHEMIA: A Diary

Without Dates. By E. H. LACON WATSON, Author of "The Unconscious Humourist." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"Mr. Watson discourses with shrewdness and humour upon such topics as diaries, tea and muffins, golf and matrimony.... There are few writers who can treat so deftly and so entertainingly the most commonplace feelings and incidents of every-day life."—Scotsman.

"The style is always fresh and graceful; it is always easy without losing a pleasant literary flavour and without degenerating into slipshod slanginess. His humour is spontaneous (or seems to be so, because he has the art of concealing his art), and a trifle subacid at times, whereby it loses nothing in piquancy. Of the seventeen essays which make up the volume there is not one which does not contain some happy fancy, some quaint conceit, or some shrewd reflection."

London: ELKIN MATHEWS, Vigo Street, W.

Mr. Wm. Heinemann's Publications.*A HISTORY OF DANCING, From the Earliest Ages to Our Own Times.

From the French of GASTON VUILLIER. With a Sketch of Dancing in England by JOSEPH GREGO. With 20 Plates in Photogravure and about 400 Illustrations in the Text. In 1 vol., 4to, cloth, 38s. net; or vellum, gilt top, 50s. net. Also 35 copies printed on Japanese Vellum (containing Three additional Plates), with a Duplicate Set of the Plates on India Paper for Framing. Each copy numbered and signed. Twelve Guinea net.

NEW LETTERS OF NAPOLEON I.

Suppressed in the Collection published under the Auspices of Napoleon III. Translated from the French by Lady MARY LLOYD. 1 vol., demy 8vo, with frontispiece, 15s. net.

Times.—"These letters were seldom much to his credit, and they are all the more interesting. We see the cunning that habitually leavened his statecraft, and his shameless indifference to truth."

LITERATURES OF THE WORLD.—Vol. III., crown 8vo, 6s.

A HISTORY OF MODERN ENGLISH

LITERATURE. By EDMUND GOSSE, Hon. M.A. of Trinity College, Cambridge.

Times.—"It bears on every page the traces of genuine love for his subject, and of a lively critical intelligence. Moreover, it is extremely readable—more readable, in fact, than any other single volume dealing with this same vast subject that we can call to mind."

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.*THE NIGGER of the "NARCISSUS,"

A Tale of the Sea.

THE BETH BOOK. Being a Study

from the Life of Elizabeth Caldwell Maclure, a Woman of Genius. By SARAH GRAND, Author of "The Heavenly Twins."

IN the PERMANENT WAY, and

Other Stories. By FLORA ANNIE STEEL, Author of "On the Face of the Waters."

ST. IVES. By R. L. Stevenson,

Author of "The Ebb Tide," &amp;c. [Second Edition.]

THE CHRISTIAN. By Hall Caine.*MARIETTA'S MARRIAGE. By W. E.

NORRIS, Author of "The Danvers in Yellow," &amp;c.

WHAT MAISIE KNEW. By Henry

JAMES, Author of "The Spoils of Poynton." [Second Edition.]

THE GADFLY. By E. L. Voynich

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

FROM JOHN MILNE'S LIST.*VERDI: MAN and MUSICIAN.By FREDERICK J. CROWEST. Five portraits, 7s. 6d. "Most interesting, delightful book."—Weekly Sun.THE ENGLISH STAGE.

By AUGUSTIN FILON. With an Introduction by HENRY ARTHUR JONES. 7s. 6d.

"An interesting and valuable record, written with sympathy and with knowledge."—The Times.

THE EVOLUTION of a WIFE.By ELIZABETH HOLLAND. Second Edition. 6s. "A romance of quite exceptional ability."—Pall Mall Gazette.SAINT PORTH: the Wooing of DOLLY PENTREATH. By J. HENRY HARRIS, &amp;c.

"However crowded the novel market may be, there is always room for such refreshing idylls as 'Saint Porth.'"—Birmingham Gazette.

PARADISE ROW. By W. J.

WINTLE. 3s. 6d.

The Spectator says: "The volume shows throughout a large power of sympathy and great breadth of thought."

BUTTERFLY BALLADS, and

STORIES IN RHYME. By HELEN ATTERIDGE.

With Sixty-five Illustrations by GORDON BROWN and others. 3s. 6d.

"A more opportune gift-book has not yet been produced."—Irish News.

THE ROME EXPRESS. By

Major ARTHUR GRIFFITHS. Tenth Thousand.

Cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; paper, 1s.

"The best detective book of this or any recent season."—Sketch.

JOHN MILNE, 12, Norfolk Street, Strand.

SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & CO.*A VERY SUCCESSFUL NOVEL. FOR THE LIFE OF OTHERS.

By G. CARDELLA,

AUTHOR OF "A KING'S DAUGHTER." 6s.

SIXTH REVIEW.—"That [the author] has great descriptive and literary gifts is abundantly clear.... [We pay] the highest tribute to the author's purpose and very conspicuous ability."—Weekly Sun.

FIFTH REVIEW.—"The sentiment of the book is refined."—Athenaeum.

FOURTH REVIEW.—"Of absorbing interest throughout."—Glasgow Herald.

THIRD REVIEW.—"This book is the work of no mean writer, but of one possessed with genius. The author is master both of humour and pathos. The story is well told in beautiful language, and from first to last the reader's attention is held, for the book is essentially a masterpiece. We unhesitatingly stamp this book as the best novel for conception and execution that has appeared since the spring."—Book Gazette.

SECOND REVIEW.—"A crusade against the curse of hereditary madness. It is a book strong in purpose, and sets up a high ideal. There is both sincerity and refinement in it."—Manchester Guardian.

FIRST REVIEW.—"Given such a theme, it is not easy to imagine how it could be more successfully handled."—Scotsman.

NEW BOOK BY W. CUNNINGHAM, D.D., AUTHOR OF "THE GROWTH OF ENGLISH INDUSTRY," &c.*IMMIGRANT ALIENS in ENGLAND. With

Plates, Facsimile of Kemp's Patent, and Maps. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

The Norman Invasion—The Later Middle Ages—The Reformation and Religious Refugees—Intercourse with the Dutch—Later Immigrations—Conclusion—Index.

NEW BOOK BY DR. HILL, VICE-CHANCELLOR OF CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.*A RUN ROUND the EMPIRE: being the Log

of Two Young People who Circumnavigated the Globe. Written out by their Father, ALEX. HILL, M.A., M.D., Master of Downing College and Vice-Chancellor of Univ. of Cambridge. With very many Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

READY, 610 pp., small demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.*DICTIONARY of CLASSICAL QUOTATIONS.

(Texts and Translations, with Three Full Indexes.) By T. B. HARBOTTLE.

GREEK VASES, Historical and Descriptive. By

SUSAN HORNOR, Authoress of "Walks in Florence," &amp;c. With Preface by Dr. A. MURRAY, of the British Museum. Map, Plate, and 45 Cuts. 3s. 6d.

SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN &amp; CO., LIMITED, London.

Uniform in size and price with the DICTIONARY of ENGLISH QUOTATIONS, by Colonel P. H. DALBIAC, M.P., of which a Second Edition has already been called for. The two books supply a vast body of quotations with full references to places of occurrence (where more than one, chronologically arranged), and Indexes of (a) Authors, (b) Subjects, (c) Catch Words. In the CLASSICAL QUOTATIONS standard translations have, where suitable and available, been used; in other cases Mr. Harbottle has himself supplied the translations. The Texts employed have in all cases been the best standard texts.

CHRONICLES of the BANK of ENGLAND. By

B. B. TURNER, of the Bank of England. With Reproductions of Old Prints from the Bank Records, &amp;c. 7s. 6d.

THREE NEW NOVELS.*(1) ST. KEVIN, and other Irish Tales. By

R. D. ROGERS. 6s.

"The author has struck the Irish chord to the echo. About as amusing a collection of Irish yarns as we have read for a long time. They are really good, and, what is more, they happen not to be old chestnuts."—Shooting Times.

(2) FROM ENGLAND to the BACK BLOCKS.

By ROLAND GRAEME. 3s. 6d.

(3) BY STILL HARDER FATE. By Nancy

LLOYD-TAYLOR. 3s. 6d.

ETHICAL SYSTEMS. By Prof. W. Wundt.

Translated. Edited by Prof. E. B. TITCHENER. 6s.

The Second Part of WUNDT'S "ETHICS," forming an invaluable survey of the History of Ethics from the earliest to the present time. Part I. (THE FACTS OF THE MORAL LIFE) costs 7s. 6d.

MASON (Can. G. E.).—CLAUDIA, the CHRIS-

TIAN MARTYR: a Tragedy. 2s.; paper, 1s. 6d.

S. (M. H.).—OPTIMUS, and other Poems. Por- trait. 2s. 6d.

WELSH GRAMMAR: ACCIDENCE. By E.

ANWYL, M.A., late Classical Scholar of Oriel College, Oxford, Professor of Welsh in the University of Aberystwith. 2s. 6d.

MESSRS. A. D. INNES & CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY LETTERS.

Edited by R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON. Illustrated with Photogravure Portraits of the Writers. Each volume crown 8vo, half parchment, gilt top, 6s.

SWIFT, ADDISON, STEELE. With an Introduction by Stanley Lane Poole.
JOHNSON and CHESTERFIELD. With an Introduction by Dr. Blackburn Hill. Other Volumes will follow in due course.

THE LIFE OF SIR RANALD MARTIN, C.B.

By Sir JOSEPH FAYRER, Bart., K.C.S.I., M.D. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

TWELVE YEARS OF A SOLDIER'S LIFE.

From the Letters of Major W. T. JOHNSON. Edited by his Widow. Being an Account of the Experiences of a Major in the Native Irregular Cavalry in India and elsewhere. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE GOLDSTREAM GUARDS in the CRIMEA.

By Lieut-Colonel ROSS-OF-BLADESBURG, C.B. Being a Sketch of the Crimean War, treating in detail of the operations in which the Goldstream took part. With numerous Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

BOWING.

By R. C. LEHMANN. With Chapters by GUY NICKALLS and C. M. PITMAN, &c. Being Vol. IV. of the "Isthmian Library." Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.

BOXING.

By R. ALLANSON WINN. Being Vol. V. of the "Isthmian Library." Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.

NEW NOVELS.

By A. E. W. MASON, Author of "The Courtship of Morrice Buckler."

LAWRENCE OLIVERING.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"There are scenes of singular power....The whole story is conceived in the best vein of historical romance."—Literature.

By F. T. JANE.

THE LORDSHIP, the PASSEN, and WE

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"A delightful exposition....A most diverting story."—Literary World.

By C. M. CAMPBELL.

DELLIE JOCK.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"Of all scamps in recent fiction Dellie Jock is one of the most winning and lovable....Full of quaint, irresistible humour."—Westminster Gazette.

By LADY HELEN CRAVEN.

KATHERINE OROMER.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"Lively characterisation and a never-failing nerve make this story entertaining from beginning to end."—Morning Post.

London: A. D. INNES & Co., 31 & 32, Bedford Street, Strand.

CHRISTMAS NUMBER.

THE BOOKMAN

For December.

PRICE SIXPENCE. (Post Free 9d.)

CONTENTS.

A BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED SUPPLEMENT
CONTAINING REVIEWS OF THE MOST IM-PORTANT CHRISTMAS BOOKS.

New Writer.

Dr. Silas Weir Mitchell. With Portrait.

The Reader.

An Afternoon with Mr. Austin Dobson.

Illustrated
Stray Proposals. By W. Pett Ridge.

Bronte Forgeries. By C. K. Shorter. With Facsimiles of Genuine and Forged Letters.

The Harmsworths and their Publications.

The Journalist

The Staff of the "Daily Mail" and other Harmsworth Newspapers.

News of the Month.

New Books (Reviews).

Mrs. Browning's Letters.—Two Anthologies. By

R. K. Chambers.—The Authoress of the Odyssey.

By T. E. Page.—Mrs. Norton's New Poems. By

Katharine Tynan Binkson.—Mr. Crockett's

Lochinvar.—Mr. Watts-Dunton's Poems.—Vasari

Revised.—On the Threshold of Central Africa.

Illustrated.—Victorian Literature.—Thro' Lattice

Windows.—Two Foreign Statesmen. By Y. Y.—

Books for Young People Illustrated.

New Books Published between October

15th and November 15th.

Classified List, with Criticisms.

The Bookman's Table. Novel Notes.

The Bookseller. News Notes.

"A Specimen Number of THE BOOKMAN will be sent Post Free on application to the Publishers."

London:

HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, Paternoster Row.

GAY & BIRD'S

NEW PUBLICATIONS

and IMPORTATIONS.

Obtainable at any Bookseller's, or sent post free on receipt of price.

EVANGELINE. By H. W. Longfellow. With

Introduction by Miss ALICE M. LONGFELLOW. One Vol., 8vo. 10 Full-page illustrations in colour and 12 Head-and-Tail Pieces. Handsomely bound, price 10s. 6d. net.

The most beautiful edition of this popular poem ever produced.

THE PROGRESS OF ART in ENGLISH

CHURCH ARCHITECTURE. By T. S. ROBERTSON. Crown 8vo, 25 Plates and 39 Text. Illustrations by the Author, printed by Constable 35 super-calendered paper, and tastefully bound, price 5s. A LARGE PAPER EDITION (limited to 200) will be issued at 10s. 6d. net.

"This work is intended to be a help to the large and rapidly increasing number of those who desire to realise the ideal of beauty as it is expressed in Gothic architecture."

"It is illustrated by sketches from churches of all the periods of English architecture, which, beginning at the Norman Conquest, ended in the reign of Henry VIII."

Scotman:—"Its brevity and conciseness, and the appropriately architectural arrangement of its material, make the book a useful and desirable one."

"Illustrated Prospectus on application."

MISS REPLYER'S NEW VOLUME.

VARIA. Crown 8vo, art cloth gilt, gilt top, 6s.

CONTENTS:—The Eternal Feminine—The Deathless Diary—Guides: a Protest—Little Pharisees in Fiction—The Fête de Gayant—Oaks and Ale—Old Wine and New—The Royal Road of Fiction—From the Reader's Standpoint.

THIRD EDITION NOW READY.

THE WORLD BEAUTIFUL. By Lilian

WHITTING. Foolcap 8vo, tastefully bound in buckram (red or white), gilt top 2s. 6d., post free.

CONTENTS:—The Duty of Happiness—The Enlargement of Relations—Friends Discovered not Made—A Psychological Problem—The Supreme Luxury of Life—Through Scornful Noting—The Woman of the World—The Potency of Charm—Fine Souls and Fine Society—Vice and Advice—One's Own Way—Writing in sympathetic Ink—Success as a Fine Art—Through Struggle to Achievement—A Question of the Day—The Law of Overcoming—In Newness of Life—The Heavenly Vision.

"Beautiful thoughts beautifully expressed. It is a volume one can dip into repeatedly with continued pleasure."

30,000 COPIES SOLD. SHILLING EDITION NOW READY.

TIMOTHY'S QUEST. By Mrs. Wiggins. 1s.

A better Edition, price 2s. 6d., is also to be had.

A TRANSATLANTIC CHATELAINE. By H.

C. PRINCE. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt 6s.

"This novel deserves to be described as beautiful from the literary, the romantic, and the actual point of view. The style is pure and elegant: the book is, in fact, a contribution to literature, unlike a large proportion of the current fiction.... It is one of the works of fiction of the period which deserves to be isolated from the multitudinous surroundings and to be remembered."—The World.

NOW READY, Crown 8vo, art cloth, gilt top, 6s. net.

POEMS. Now First Collected. By Edmund

CLARENCE STEDMAN.

A hands me volume, containing the state's and graceful lyrics written by Mr. Stedman in the last twenty years.

JUSTIN WINSOR. The WESTWARD MOVE-

MENT. Demy 8vo, Maps and Illustrations, cloth, gilt top, 10s. net.

NATURE'S DIARY. Compiled by Francis

H. ALLEN. With 8 Full-page Illustrations. Crown 8vo illustrated and tastefully bound 6s.

This is a new and delightful kind of year-book. It comprises quotable sentences for every day in the year from the writings of Thoreau, Burroughs, Lowell, Emerson, Whittier, and many others.

THE STORY OF THE COWBOY. By E. Hough.

Illustrated by W. L. Wells and C. M. Russell. New ready, crown 8vo, art cloth, 6s.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE:—"This is not a bare record, not a summary of industrial results, but a living picture of a type often heroic and always invested with an individual interest, and it is a picture also which brings before us the sweep and majesty and splendid atmosphere of the plains."

It seems proper to add that the illustrations, like the text, are based upon actual knowledge, and in the case of Mr. Russell, whose home is in a Montana ranch, upon the daily experience of a cowboy's life.

MOROCCO: Its People and Places. By

EDMONDO DE AMICIS. 2 vols. post 8vo, 50 beautiful photogravures, richly bound in Moorish style and boxed, price 21s. net.

JEANNE d'ARC. The Days of. By Mary

HARTWELL CATHERWOOD. Crown 8vo, frontispiece, cloth gilt, 6s.

WALDEN: or, Life in the Woods. By Henry

D. THO. SAU. 3 vols. or, wn 8vo. 30 full-page photogravure illustrations, very tastefully bound in art cloth, richly gilt 15s. net.

I. ZANGWILL contributes a short story to the DECEMBER NUMBER of "THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY." Price one shilling net.

LONDON: GAY & BIRD, 27, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND.

Agency for American Books.

EYRE & SPOTTISWOODE,

Government, Legal, & General Publishers.

SCORES and ANNALS of the WEST

KENT CRICKET CLUB (1812-1896). Compiled by PHILIP NORMAN. With Woodbury-gravure and other illustrations. 21s. net.

"Full of interest for lovers of cricket, whether on its practical or its social side.... Delightful book."—The Times.

SPECIAL REPORTS on EDUCATIONAL

SUBJECTS, 1896-7. 3s. 4d.; by post, 3s. 9d.

"Full of the most interesting and valuable information on a great variety of subjects."—Secondary Education.

"Should be read by everybody who wants to know the true inwardness of foreign competition."—Daily News.

THE REFORMATORY and INDUSTRIAL

SCHOOL ACTS. With Memorandum, Appendices, and Index. By F. V. HORNBY, Barrister-at-Law, and one of Her Majesty's Assistant Inspectors of Reformatory and Industrial Schools. Cloth, 5s.

A HISTORY of NEWFOUNDLAND from

the ENGLISH, COLONIAL, and FOREIGN RECORDS. By D. W. PROWSE, Q.C., LL.D., Judge of the Central District Court of Newfoundland. With numerous illustrations and Maps. Second Edition. Revised and corrected. Cloth, 6s.

THE PRESERVATION of OPEN SPACES.

and of FOOTPATHS and OTHER RIGHTS of WAY. By Sir ROBERT HUNTER, M.A., Solicitor to the Post Office, and late Hon. Solicitor to the Commons Preservation Society. Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

WOBURN EXPERIMENTAL FRUIT

FARM: Report on the Working and Results since its Establishment. By the DUKE OF BEDFORD and SPENCER U. PICKERING, F.R.S.

The object of this Experimental Station is to investigate scientifically all matters connected with Fruit-growing, and the majority of the results will be of importance to Growers in every part of the world, and will not merely possess a local significance.

LETTERS and PAPERS of ANDREW

ROBERTSON, A.M. Born 1777, died 1845. Miniature Painter to his late Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex; also a Treatise on the Art by ARCHIBALD ROBERTSON, of New York, born 1788, died 1835. Edited by EMILY ROBERTSON. Paper, 6s.; cloth, 7s.; art canvas, 7s. 6d. net.

THE ART of SEEING. By an Artist.

Elementary and Practical Hints as to the Perception and Enjoyment of the Beautiful in Nature and in the Fine Arts. By ANDREW ROBERTSON, A.M., Miniature Painter to the late Duke of Sussex. Edited by his daughter, EMILY ROBERTSON. Cloth, 1s. net.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. By Captain

DAY (Oxfordshire Light Infantry). Besides describing the unique collection of instruments exhibited at the Royal Military Exhibition, it furnishes a complete history of each class of Military Band Instruments. Morocco back, cloth sides, gilt, 15s.

"OUR JACK." The History of the Union

Jack.

"Should be largely distributed through our schools."—Army and Navy Gazette.

"All soldiers and sailors will read with interest."—Rampant.

"The story is an interesting one, and one that ought to be thoroughly well known by all classes of Her Majesty's subjects.... A cheap booklet of this sort, therefore, is well worth investing in, as the story is clear and the coloured illustrations excellent."—Western Morning News.

S.S. "DRUMMOND CASTLE." Full Re-

port of the Inquiry into the circumstances attending the loss of; together with judgment of the Court; Report of Inspectors, and Questions and Replies in the House of Commons. 2s.

OUR WEIGHTS and MEASURES. A

Practical Treatise on the Standard Weights and Measures in use in the British Empire, with some account of the Metric System. By H. J. CHANEY. 7s. 6d. Illustrated by eleven Colotype Plates, two Lithographs showing the Representative Forms of Weighing Instruments used in Trade, and numerous Woodcuts.

CONFEDERATION LAW of CANADA.

By GERALD JOHN WHEELER. 42s.; cash with order, 36s.

THE NEW ZEALAND MINES RECORD.

Monthly, 1s.

THE MILITIA OFFICER'S EXAMINER:

from the Rank of Lieutenant to Field Officer. By Major H. S. TOMPSON. Ninth Edition. Revised and corrected to date by Captain LIONEL DORLING. 4s. 6d.

THE LAW RELATING to FACTORIES

and WORKSHOPS. By M. E. ABRAHAM (H. J. Tennant) and A. LLEWELYN DAVIES, Barrister-at-Law. Cloth, 5s. Second Edition.

THE MERCHANT SHIPPING ACTS,

1894-7. With Notes, Appendices, and a copious Index. By JAMES DUNDAS WHITE, M.A., LL.M., of Trinity College, Cambridge, and of the Inner Temple and South Wales Circuit. Barrister-at-Law. Cloth, 7s. 6d. Second Edition.

London: East Harding Street, E.C.

CATALOGUES.

CATALOGUE of the FIRST EXHIBITION of ARTISTIC BOOKBINDING by WOMEN, with Preface by CURZON EYRE. Cover on Japanese Paper, Hand-Coloured Frontispiece and 6 Facsimiles, now ready, 1s. 1d. post free.—KARLICK & Co., 41, Charing Cross Road, W.C.

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General Literature (No. 118, for DECEMBER), at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

TO BOOKBUYERS and LIBRARIANS of FREE LIBRARIES—THE DECEMBER CATALOGUES of Valuable SECOND-HAND WORKS and NEW REMAINERS, offered at prices greatly reduced, are Now Ready, and will be sent post free upon application to W. H. SMITH & SON, Library Department, 186, Strand, London, W.C.

W. THACKER & CO., PUBLISHERS,
MS. Type-written) considered for Publication. (Established 1819.
A large Clientèle in all parts of the East.
2, Creed Lane, London, E.C.; and at Calcutta and Simla.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street,
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices.
CATALOGUES on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 34, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

MR. MOSHER'S New and Complete Descriptive LIST OF BOOKS is Now Ready. It is issued in narrow 8vo, with Facsimile Titles in Red and Black, done up in French hand-made paper wrappers, with original cover design. Those who have yet to see these Editions published by Mr. Mosher should favour him with their names that the new List may be mailed them, post paid.

THOMAS B. MOSHER,
45, EXCHANGE STREET, PORTLAND, MAINE, UNITED STATES.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SEEL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation. Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

CHEAP BOOKS.—3d. in the 1s. Discount on nearly all Books; many remainders at half or quarter price. Orders by post receive prompt attention. Catalogues free.—BICKENS & SON, Leicester Square, London, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done.
10d. per 1,000 Words.
Samples and references.
Address Miss E. M., 18, Morimer Crescent, N.W.

SCHOLARLY TYPE-WRITING by a Graduate.
Greek, Latin, Foreign MSS., Poems, Plays, Translations.—E. W. LUMMIS, Beeches Road, West Bromwich.

TYPE-WRITING, with accuracy and despatch.
Authors' MSS. 9d. per 1,000 words; Circulars from 3s. 6d. per 100; Plays, Translations, Indexing, General Copying.—Miss WAR, 33, Ossian Road, Stroud Green N.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD.
(The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)
Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of WALES, ABERYSTWYTH.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the post of ASSISTANT LECTURER in the DEPARTMENT of ENGLISH LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.
Applications, together with testimonials, should be sent not later than December 15th, 1897, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

Nov., 1897.

T. MORTIMER GREEN, Registrar.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch P. W. D., and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways.

For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

TO WEALTHY PATRONS of ART and BELLES LETTRES.—A Gentleman engaged in producing a GREAT WORK, indispensable to Students of English Literature throughout the civilized world, requires FINANCING to a very moderate extent. The Work has not, so far as it has at present gone, with the highest approval of eminent experts. Guaranteed sale of small edition.—Apply by letter (Principals or Solicitors only) to X., care of Messrs. Steadman & Van Praagh, Solicitors, 23, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

WANTED.—GIRL of 17 or 18 to join Four others who are studying French, Music, Singing, Painting, in FRANCE, in charge of an unexceptional English Chaperon. Highest references given and required. Terms for Pension and French, 10 Guineas monthly.—CHAPRON, "ACADEMY" Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

BOOKS FOR SALE.

(Advertisements are inserted under this heading at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

DAVID GARRICK.—Magnificent Portraits by Sir Joshua Reynolds. With other unique Garrick items. Bargains. Retiring from business.—CHARLES LOWE, Book Exporter, New Street and Baskerville Hall, Birmingham.

Now ready, cloth 8vo, price 4s.

VARIOUS FRAGMENTS. By HERBERT SPENCER.

Also by the same Author, price 16s. Second Thousand.

PRINCIPLES OF SOCIOLOGY. VOLUME III.

London: WILLIAMS &amp; NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, W.C.

Now Ready, crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

DCC EXERCISES. Including Hints for the Solution of all the Questions in Choice and Chance. By WILLIAM ALLEN WHITWORTH, M.A. late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

CHOICE and CHANCE. An Elementary Treatise on Permutation, Combinations, and Probability, with 640 Exercises. Fourth Edition. Price 6s.

Cambridge: DEIGHTON BELL & CO.
London: GEORGE REID & SONS.

FOR SALE, the COPYRIGHT and GOODWILL of a valuable BI-WEEKLY NEWSPAPER and PRINTING OFFICE in IRELAND, established for nearly a century. To be disposed of owing to Proprietor wishing to retire on large income from investments acquired through the business.—All particulars with respect to capital required, &c., may be obtained from R. HUNSON, Newspaper Valuer, Herald Printing Works, Dudley, Worcester. A leading firm of professional auditors certify that the average profits for five years last past have been £500 per annum.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANÇOIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

INVITE ATTENTION TO THEIR

Permanent Processes of Photographic Reproduction,

Combining great range of tone effect with accurate monochrome representation and artistic expression.

THE AUTOTYPE SOLAR or CARBON PROCESS, for the reproduction in permanent pigments of Oil Paintings. Drawings in Water Colour, Pencil, Crayon, Indian Ink, &c.

AUTO-GRASURE.—The Autotype Company's Process of Photographic Engraving on Copper, yielding results resembling mezzotint engravings.

The Company has successfully reproduced several important works by this process, including Portraits by Sir J. E. Millar, P.R.A.; J. Pettie, R.A.; W. W. Oulton, R.A.; F. Hall, R.A.; the Hon. Jno. Collier; Sir G. Reid, P.R.S.A.; also examples of Gainsborough, Turner, Constable, Schmalz, Douglas, Draper, &c.

THE AUTOTYPE MECHANICAL PROCESS

(Sawyer's Collotype) for Book Illustrations of the highest class. This process is noted for its excellence in copies of Ancient MSS., Coins, Seals, Medals, and of all subjects of which a good Photograph can be taken, and is adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, many of the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers.

Amongst works lately illustrated by the Company may be mentioned the following:

FOR H.M. GOVERNMENT.—ILLUSTRATIONS to the REPORT of the ROYAL COMMISSION on TUBERCULOSIS. THE REPORTS of the MEDICAL OFFICER of the LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD, as issued to both Houses of Parliament.—INFLUENZA, TYPHOID, DIPHTHERIA, CHOLERA, VACCINATION, &c.

"ELECTRIC MOVEMENT in AIR and WATER with Theoretical Inferences." By Lord ARMSTRONG, C.B.

THE MONTAGU COLLECTION of COINS and MEDALS. All the illustrations to the Sale Catalogues of this renowned Collection recently dispersed.

"FORD MADOX BROWN: a Record of his Life and Work." By F. M. HEWSON.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY will be pleased to advise upon, and to undertake, the REPRODUCTION of WORKS of ARTISTIC, SCIENTIFIC, or ANTIQUARIAN INTEREST, of every character, for Book Illustration, for the Portfolio or Mural Decoration.

Examples of Work may be seen, and terms and prices obtained, at
THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN
AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS
from ONE GUINEA
per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS
from TWO GUINEAS per annum.
N.B.—Two or Three Friends may
UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the house of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited.

30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.;
40, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and
at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND &amp; CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL of Munich.

The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS for the PURPOSE of ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Process in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS.

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c. &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

HARPER AND BROTHERS

Begin to announce for Publication THIS WEEK the following:

BY THE AUTHOR OF "BEN-HUR."

1. THE WOOING OF MALKATOON: COMMODUS

Two Poems. By LEW. WALLACE, Author of "The Prince of India," "The Boyhood of Christ," &c. Illustrated by F. V. DU MOND and J. R. WEGUELIN. 8vo, cloth, ornamental, deckle edges, and gilt top.

FRANK R. STOCKTON'S NEW NOVEL.

2. THE GREAT STONE OF SARDIS

Illustrated by PETER NEWELL. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

3. LIN McLEAN

A volume of Stories. By OWEN WISTER, Author of "Red Men and White," &c. Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth, ornamental, 6s.

4. THE KENTUCKIANS

A Novel. By JOHN FOX, junior. Illustrated by W. T. SMEDLEY. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

5. The December Part of HARPER'S ROUND TABLE

The New Sixpenny Monthly Magazine for Young People. A handsome 16 pp. Illustrated Prospectus post-free on application.

LATEST BOOK LIST ON APPLICATION.

HARPER AND BROTHERS, London and New York.

J. W. ARROWSMITH'S NEW BOOKS.

THE SACK OF MONTE CARLO.	Arrowsmith's 3s. 6d. Series. "The story of its capture is told with a gallop." The Academy.	By WALTER FRITH.
DUST O' GLAMOUR.	Crown 8vo, cloth, 340 pp., 3s. 6d. "Mr. Warwick has stuff in him." The Academy.	By H. S. WARWICK.
LORD DULLBOROUGH	Vol. XXX. of Arrowsmith's 3s. 6d. Series. Crown 8vo, cloth, 324 pp. (Ready December.)	By HON. STUART ERSKINE.
JOTS.	Vol. LXXVI. of Arrowsmith's Bristol Library. Fcap. 8vo, 1s.	By GEORGE THORNE.
THE MILLIONAIRE OF PARKERSVILLE	Vol. LXXIV. of Arrowsmith's Bristol Library. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. "Contrived with considerable skill." Bookseller.	By M. G. WOOD.
PEPITA OF THE PAGODA.	Arrowsmith's Christmas Annual. Fcap. 8vo, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d. "Mr. Hopkins's delicious story." The Sketch.	By TIGHE HOPKINS.

BRISTOL: J. W. ARROWSMITH.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co., Limited.

DIGBY, LONG & CO'S NEW BOOKS.

- NEW DETECTIVE STORY BY FERGUS HUME.
1. CLAUDE DUVAL OF NINETY-FIVE. Cloth gilt, 3s. 6d. Fourth Edition. "This is one of the best stories that Mr. Hume has given us since 'The Mystery of a Hansom Cab,' and it is absolutely one of the cleverest modern detective stories."—Manchester Courier.
- SARAH TYTLER'S LATEST NOVEL.
2. THE AMERICAN COUSINS. By the Author of "Lily Jean's Vagaries," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. "A story full of fresh and varied interest."—Scotsman. "The author is a skilled veteran in the writing of novels, and her hand has not lost its cunning."—Aberdeen Press.
3. A FLEETING SHOW. By G. B. FITZGERALD, Author of "An Odd Career." Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. Second Edition. "Ruth is a charming figure. The story is among the most attractive of recent efforts in its particular field of fiction."—Morning Post.
- NEW NOVEL BY J. GORDON PHILLIPS.
4. FLORA MACDONALD. A Romance of the '45. By the Author of "James Macpherson." Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. [Just out.]
- NEW NOVEL BY VIOLET TWEEDALE.
5. WHAT SHALL IT PROFIT A MAN? By the Author of "And they Two," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Just out.]
- NEW NOVEL BY RUPERT ALEXANDER.
6. THE VIJAR OF ST. NICHOLAS. By the Author of "Ballyrowan." Cr. 8vo, cl., 6s. [Just out.]
- NEW NOVEL BY BELTON OTTERBUEN.
7. NURSE ADELAIDE. By the Author of "Unrelated Twins," &c. Cr. 8vo, cl. gilt, 6s. [Just out.]
8. A MATRIMONIAL FREAK. By Edith M. PAGE. Crow. 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. [Just out.]
- NEW NOVEL BY PIERRE LE CLERQ.
9. CONCERNING CHARLES ROYDANT. By the Author of "The Love Story," &c. Cr. 8vo, cloth, 6s. "Mr. Clerq has written a book which is well worth reading." Whitehall Review.
10. A MERE PUG. The Romance of a Dog. By NEMO. With illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. Second Edition. "This pretty story of the adventures of a Pug Dog....there are few books of the season that could be more heartily recommended for children."—Standard.
- DIGBY, LONG & CO, 18, Bouverie Street, London, E.C.
AUTHORS may send in their MSS., suitable for Volume Publication, with a view to immediate consideration.

CLEMENT WILSON'S PUBLICATIONS.

LEGAL EPITOMES FOR GENERAL USE.
Price 2s. 6d. Fcap. 8vo, cloth.

No. I.
LAW OF SALES OF STOCKS AND SHARES. By CHARLES FRAMPTON STALLARD, M.A. (Oxon.), of Gray's Inn, late Holt Scholar, Barrister-at-Law.

"The law is clearly and concisely given, and the book should certainly assist those who are concerned in dealings with stocks and shares."—Law Times.
"Cannot fail to be of service to many who have dealings in and shares."—Bankers' Magazine.

No. II.
LAW OF BANKS AND BANKERS. By W. DE BRACY HERBERT, M.A., LL.M., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

"A clear and readable exposition of the English law of Banker and Customer."—Scotsman.
"Clear and simple in its style . . . and appears to be absolutely accurate."—Law Times.

No. III.
LAW OF DIRECTORS AND PROMOTERS' LIABILITIES. By R. STORRY DEANS, LL.B. (London), of Gray's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, sometime Holder of Inns of Court Studentship, Arden Scholar of Gray's Inn, &c.

"A clearly written and useful book upon a subject of general interest."—Manchester Guardian.
"It is well fitted to be of assistance to directors, promoters, and shareholders."—Dundee Advertiser.

No. IV. In Preparation.
THE LAW OF FIXTURES AND REPAIRS as between LANDLORD and TENANT. By W. DE BRACY HERBERT, M.A., LL.M., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

BOOKS BY A. J. WILSON,

Editor of the "Investors' Review" and "Investment Index."

Price in cloth, 1s. 6d. net (post free, 1s. 8d.); paper cover, 1s. net (post free, 1s. 2d.).

PRACTICAL HINTS TO INVESTORS.

"The perusal of Mr. Wilson's handy book will repay those concerned in the matters treated of; and as an example in terse and incisive English it may be read by the student and admirer of style." Manchester City News.

Now Ready. New Edition. Entirely Rewritten.

PLAIN ADVICE ABOUT LIFE INSURANCE.

"Probably covers as much ground as most people who are likely to use any volume of the kind will need."—Times.

London: Norfolk House, Norfolk Street, W.C.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

THIRD EDITION, REVISED AND ENLARGED.

The DAWN of CIVILIZATION (EGYPT and CHALDÆA). By Prof. Maspero. Edited by the Rev. Prof. SAYOE. Translated by M. L. McCURE. With Map and over 470 Illustrations, including 3 Coloured Plates. Demy 4to (approximately), cloth, bevelled boards, 24s.

[The Author has brought this Third Edition up to date, embodying in the volume the recent discoveries of Mr. Flinders Petrie in Egypt and some of the results of recent researches of M. Heuzey in Mesopotamia. Notwithstanding the addition of new matter (as pp. 453, A, B, &c.) the pagination has been retained throughout and is parallel with that of the French original.]

The STRUGGLE of the NATIONS: Egypt, Syria, and Assyria. By Prof. Maspero. Edited by the Rev. Prof. SAYOE. Translated by M. L. McCURE. With Maps, 3 Coloured Plates, and over 400 Illustrations. Demy 4to (approximately), cloth, bevelled boards, 24s.; half-morocco (bound by Riviere), 50s.

This is a companion volume to "The Dawn of Civilization," and contains the History of the Ancient Peoples of the East from the Fourteenth Egyptian Dynasty to the end of the Ramesside period. This interval covers the sojourn of the Israelites in Egypt and their Exodus therefrom. The recent discovery of an Egyptian Stele mentioning the Israelites gives special interest to this volume, where the matter is discussed with his usual acumen by the Author.

"The translation by M. L. McClure is in both cases excellent. Prof. Maspero's presentation of the new learning is at once eminently popular and attractive."—Times.

"The author has throughout attempted to reproduce for us the daily life of the various peoples of whom he treats, and in this he has succeeded admirably."—Academy.

HISTORICAL CHURCH ATLAS. Illustrating the History of Eastern and Western Christendom, until the Reformation, and that of the Anglican Communion until the present day. By EDMUND McCURE, M.A. Containing 18 Coloured Maps besides some 50 Sketch-Maps in the Text. 4to, cloth boards, leather back, 18s.

This Atlas is intended to indicate some of the stages of the Church's expansion, and at the same time to show briefly the interdependence of ecclesiastical and secular history. The information given on the Maps has been necessarily limited by their size and number, but the main features of the spread of the Christian faith have been, it is hoped, broadly traced, and the allied changes in political geography sufficiently depicted.

THEODORE and WILFRITH. Lectures delivered in St. Paul's Cathedral, December, 1896, by the Right Rev. G. F. BROWNE, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop of Bristol. Small post 8vo, with several Illustrations, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

"The Bishop's polemic is sturdy in argument, but scrupulously temperate in tone, and it need hardly be said that he illustrates his thesis with great ecclesiastical and archaeological learning."—Times (September 17).

The ANCIENT HEBREW TRADITION as ILLUSTRATED by the MONUMENTS. A Protest against the Modern School of Old Testament Criticism. By Dr. FRITZ HOMMEL, Professor of the Semitic Languages in the University of Munich. Translated from the German by EDMUND McCURE, M.A., and LEONARD CROSSLE. With Map. Large post 8vo, buckram boards, 5s.

"Under the weight of Dr. Hommel's cumulative evidence the latest fortress of the 'Higher Criticism' will have to be promptly evacuated or surrendered at discretion. The book has been admirably translated by Mr. McClure and his coadjutor."—Daily Chronicle.

"As a protest against the modern school of Old Testament Criticism we cordially recommend the work as one of the most valuable yet published."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"We are profoundly grateful to Dr. Hommel for work whose results will do much to reassure many a timid and distressed believer."—Record.

"We can recommend Dr. Hommel's well-argued and deeply interesting book to the careful consideration of all Biblical students."—Oxford Review.

SIDELIGHTS on CHURCH HISTORY: the Liturgy and Ritual of the Ante-Nicene Church. By the Rev. F. E. WARREN, B.D., F.S.A. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

CHRISTIAN LIFE in SONG (Te Deum Laudamus). The Song and the Singers. By the late Mrs. RUNDLE CHARLES. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

PATRIARCHAL PALESTINE. By the Rev. Prof. A. H. Sayce, Queen's College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, with Map, buckram boards, 4s.

[This is the First to apply the Tel-el-Amarna Tablets, both published and unpublished, towards elucidating the condition of Syria at this period. It also contains a recent and important revision of the Egyptian Geographical Lists bearing on Palestine.]

The "HIGHER CRITICISM" and the VERDICT of the MONUMENTS. By the Rev. Prof. A. H. SAYOE, Queen's College, Oxford. Fifth Edition. Demy 8vo, buckram, bevelled boards, 7s. 6d.

"A really valuable and important work; perhaps the best which Prof. Sayce has yet written."—Academy.

ANCIENT HISTORY from the MONUMENTS.—The HISTORY of BABYLONIA. By the late GEORGE SMITH. Edited and brought up to date by the Rev. Prof. A. H. SAYOE. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

The BIBLE in the LIGHT of TO-DAY. By the Rev. Charles Crosleggh, D.D. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

HANDY BOOK (A) of the CHURCH of ENGLAND. By the Rev. Edward L. Cutts, D.D. New and Improved Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

The MESSAGE of PEACE, and other Christmas Sermons. By the late R. W. Church, Dean of St. Paul's. Crown 8vo, on Hand-made paper, top edges gilt, buckram boards, 2s. 6d.; imitation crushed morocco, 7s. 6d.

BIBLE PLACES; or, the Topography of the Holy Land. A Succinct Account of all the Places, Rivers, and Mountains of the Land of Israel mentioned in the Bible, so far as they have been identified; together with their Modern Names and Historical References. By the Rev. Canon H. B. TRISTRAM, D.D., LL.D., F.R.S. New Edition, brought up to date. With Map. Crown 8vo, 5s.

VERSES. By Christina G. Rossetti. Reprinted from "Called to be Saints," "Time Flies," and "The Face of the Deep." Small post 8vo, printed in red and black on Hand-made paper, buckram, top edge gilt, 3s. 6d.; limp roan, 5s.; limp morocco, 7s. 6d.

The FACE of the DEEP: a Devotional Commentary on the Apocalypse. By Christina G. Rossetti, Author of "Time Flies," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

The ROMANCE of SCIENCE.—The MACHINERY of the UNIVERSE. Mechanical Conceptions of Physical Phenomena. By A. E. DOLEBEAR, A.B., A.M., M.E., Ph.D., Professor of Physics and Astronomy, Tufts College, Mass. Small post 8vo, with several Diagrams, cloth boards, 2s.

Eleven other Volumes have already appeared in this Series.—List on application.

STAR ATLAS. Gives all the Stars from 1 to 6.5 magnitude between the North Pole and 34° South Declination, and all Nebulae and Star Clusters which are visible in telescopes of moderate powers. Translated and Adapted from the German of Dr. KLEIN, by the Rev. E. McCURE, M.A. Imperial 4to, with 18 Charts and 80 pages Illustrative Letterpress. Cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

LONDON: NORTHUMBERLAND AVENUE, W.C.; 43, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.
BRIGHTON: 129, NORTH STREET.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1336.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

CATALOGUE of the FIRST EXHIBITION of ARTISTIC BOOKBINDING by WOMEN, with Preface by CURZON EYRE. Cover on Japanese Paper, Hand-Coloured Frontispiece and 6 Facsimiles, now ready 1s. 1d. post free.—KARSLAKE & Co., 61, Charing Cross Road, W.C.

BOOKS for PRESENTS at DISCOUNT PRICES.—SPECIAL CATALOGUE of NEW and RECENT BOOKS, just ready, post free on receipt of address.—A. & F. DUNN, Discount Booksellers, 304, Strand, W.C., and 32, Charing Cross, London, S.W.

NEW BOOKS for CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.—A CATALOGUE of 140 pages of all the Best NEW BOOKS, offered at Discount Prices, sent on application to TRUSLOVE & HANSON, 142, Oxford Street, W., and 6a, Sloane Street, S.W.

NEW CATALOGUE, just ready, of Miscellaneous SECOND-HAND BOOKS, including a Girls' School Lending Library. Books on the following subjects—Americas, Architecture, Bibliography, Biography, India, Military, Navy, Shakespeare, Spain, Theology, and Travels. Also works by RUDYARD KIPLING, and other Popular Authors. Post free on application from THOMAS CANNON, 8, High Town, Hereford.

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General Literature (No. 118, for DECEMBER), at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 20, Exchange Street East Liverpool.

W. THACKER & CO., PUBLISHERS.
MSB (Type-written) considered for Publication. (Established 1812.)
A large Clientele in all parts of the East.
2, Creed Lane, London, E.C.; and at Calcutta and Simla.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS.
Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 30, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN, FOREIGN BOOKSELLER.
45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices.
CATALOGUES on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 28 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

MR. MOSHER'S New and Complete Descriptive LIST OF BOOKS is Now Ready. It is issued in narrow 8vo, with Facsimile Titles in Red and Black, done up in French hand-made paper wrappers, with original cover design. Those who have yet to see these Editions published by Mr. Mosher should favour him with their names that the new List may be mailed them, post paid.

THOMAS B. MOSHER,

45, EXCHANGE STREET, PORTLAND, MAINE, UNITED STATES.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SEEL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation. Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 66121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

CHEAP BOOKS.—3d. in the 1s. Discount on nearly all Books; many remainders at half or quarter price. Orders by post receive prompt attention. Catalogues free.—BICKERS & SON, Leicester Square, London, W.C.

UNIVERSITY of LONDON.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the Next HALF-YEARLY EXAMINATION for MATRICULATION in this University will commence on Monday, the 10th of JANUARY, 1898.—In addition to the Examination at the University, Provincial Examinations will be held at Mason College, Birmingham; The Merchant Venturers' Technical College, Bristol; Dumfries College (for University College), Cardiff; The Training College, New City Road, Glasgow; The Yorkshire College, Leeds; Rutherford College, Newcastle-on-Tyne; The High School, Nottingham; The Athenaeum, Plymouth; and The Grammar School, Portsmouth.

Every Candidate is required to apply to the Registrar (University of London, Burlington Gardens, London, W.) for a Form of Entry not less than five weeks before the commencement of the Examination.

F. V. DICKINS, M.B., B.Sc., Registrar.

December 2nd, 1897.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of WALES, ABERYSTWYTH.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the post of ASSISTANT LECTURER in the DEPARTMENT of ENGLISH LANGUAGE and LITERATURE.

Applications, together with testimonials, should be sent not later than December 12th, 1897, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

T. MORTIMER GARRER, Registrar.

Nov. 1897.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)

Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President—The Right Hon. Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 16th, at 5 p.m., at the MUSEUM of PRACTICAL GEOLOGY, Jermyn Street, S.W., the following Paper will be read—"THE NATIONAL STUDY OF NAVAL HISTORY," by Prof. J. K. LAUGHTON, M.A., and HUBERT HALL, F.R.S.

HUBERT HALL, Director and Hon. Sec.

115, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch P. W. D., and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways.

For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 4, Furnival Street, London, E.C.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY Office, 45, Chancery Lane, London.

BOOKS FOR SALE.

(Advertisements are inserted under this heading at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

DAVID GARRICK.—Magnificent Portraits by Sir Joshua Reynolds. With other unique Garrick items. Bargains. Retiring from business.—CHARLES LOWE, Book Exporter, New Street and Beakerville Hall, Birmingham.

SALES by PRIVATE CONTRACT.—Old Oak Library Table, Oak Print Cabinet, Old Oak Chests, Corner Cupboard, Old Loo Table, Old Sporting Oil Paintings, Large Iron, Silver Box, Capital English Bracket Clock; French Vols. 1 to 26, original, cloth, 22; Iron Safe, 45, cost £12; History of England, 8 Vols., £2, cost £10.—CHARLES LOWE, Book Exporter, New Street, and Beakerville Hall, Birmingham.

TYPE-WRITING work of every description done with accuracy and despatch. Author's MSB, Technical and Legal Copying, Indexing, Specifications, Tracing, Translating, Addressing, Type-written Mimeographed Copies, &c., &c.—The Misses E. & J. PUTZ, 435, Mansion House Chambers, London, E.C.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. 10d. per 1,000 Words. Samples and references. Address Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TYPE-WRITING, with accuracy and despatch. Authors' MSB, 9d. per 1,000 words; Circulars from 3s. 6d. per 100; Plays, Translations, Indexing, General Copying.—Miss WAT, 22, Ossian Road, Broad Green, N.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD. (THE LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 20, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)

Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich.

The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS for the PURPOSE of ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS.

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited.

30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

MESSRS. H. S. NICHOLS' PUBLICATIONS.

NOW READY.

*BURTON, CAPT. SIR R. F.—THE ARABIAN NIGHTS. In 12 vols., royal 8vo, illustrated by a series of 71 Photogravure Plates reproduced from the original paintings specially painted by Albert Letchford, price £10 10s. net.

A SERIES of ORIGINAL ILLUSTRATIONS to "The Arabian Nights," reproduced from the pictures in oils specially designed and painted by Albert Letchford. These exquisite Plates are suitable for illustrating either Burton's, Payne's, Lane's, or Galland's Translation of this work, and are supplied either bound in a volume (royal 8vo) or loose in a portfolio, price £3 3s. net.

*CELEBRATED CRIMES. By Alexandre Dumas. In 8 vols., large post 8vo, illustrated by 51 Photogravures, handsomely bound, price £4 4s. net. Particulars of grand and choice Editions de Luxe upon application.

THE NUDE in ART. A magnificent collection of 45 remarque proofs, reproduced by the Photogravure process, comprising the chef-d'œuvres of the most famous painters of the Nude. Complete in 1 vol., Atlas folio, price £4 4s. net. This work is also issued in 12 Parts at 7s. per Part, and the subscriber can arrange to have the Parts delivered at the rate of one per week, fortnight, or month, or in any other manner most convenient to himself. Subscriptions, however, can only be received for the complete work, in 12 Parts.

*THE VOLUMES of either of these Works can be had either complete in one parcel, or at the rate of one volume per week, fortnight, or month, as most convenient to subscriber.

CATALOGUE and Prospectuses containing full particulars of all of the above, as well as of all of the other choice and interesting Publications issued by H. S. Nichols, Ltd., will be sent post free upon application.

H. S. NICHOLS, Ltd., 39, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C.; and 62A, Piccadilly, London, W.

THE FINEST LITERARY RENDEZVOUS IN THE WORLD.

39, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.

(One Minute from Trafalgar Square).

Messrs. H. S. NICHOLS, Ltd., have the honour to announce that their splendidly appointed LITERARY RENDEZVOUS (which is without doubt the finest and the most luxurious and delightful Literary Lounge ever planned) is now OPEN DAILY (admission free) from 10 a.m. to 7.30 p.m. (Saturdays included).

NEW BIOGRAPHY BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE LIFE OF GORDON."

THE LIFE OF
SIR STAMFORD RAFFLES.

By DEMETRIUS C. BOULGER.

One Volume. Royal 8vo, gilt. With Portraits, Maps, and Full-Page Illustrations.

One Guinea net

"An excellent biography—an even better performance, by the way, than the same author's recent 'Life of Gordon.'"—The Daily News.

HORACE MARSHALL &amp; SON.

READY, 610 pp., small demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

DICTIONARY of CLASSICAL

QUOTATIONS (Texts and Translations, with Three Full Indexes). By T. B. HARBOTTLE.

DICTIONARY of ENGLISH

QUOTATIONS, by Colonel P. H. DALBIAC, M.P., of which a Second Edition has already been called for.

The two books supply a vast body of quotations, with full references to places of occurrence (where more than one, chronologically arranged), and Indexes of (a) Authors, (b) Subjects, (c) Catch Words. In the CLASSICAL QUOTATIONS standard translations have, where suitable and available, been used; in other cases Mr. Harbottle has himself supplied the translations. The Texts employed have in all cases been the best standard texts.

SWAN SONNENSCHN &amp; CO., LIMITED, London.

Now ready, cloth 8vo, price 4s.

VARIOUS FRAGMENTS. By HERBERT SPENCER.

Also by the same Author, price 1s. Second Thousand.

PRINCIPLES OF SOCIOLOGY. VOLUME III.

London: WILLIAMS &amp; NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, W.C.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY'S

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

FREDERIC SHIELDS.

Twenty-eight Autotype Copies from the series of Prophets and Apostles, painted in the Chapel of the Ascension, Hyde Park Place, London.

Each Autotype measures 17 by 5½ inches, and is mounted on Plate and India Paper with plate mark and title. The Set in strong Portfolio, including Descriptive Handbook,

TEN GUINEAS.

Prospectus on application.

J. M. BARRIE, Novelist and Playwright.

A New Portrait by LEALIE BROOKER. Autotype reproductions in two sizes, mounted on tinted boards. Price 12s. and 6s. each.

THE NORWICH SCHOOL OF PAINTING.

A Series of forty plates reproduced in Permanent Autotype after Cotman, Crome, Stark, Vincent, Leman, Lound, Bright, &c. (Now Ready.)

MODERN ENGLISH ART.

A large collection of examples of works by G. F. Watts, R.A., Sir E. Burne Jones, Dante G. Rossetti, Albert Moore, Henry Ryland, Fred Walker, Herbert Schmalz, Edwin Douglas, Holman Hunt, Frederic Shields, &c., &c.

The Autotype Fine Art Gallery is open daily from 10 to 6. Admission Free. Inspection invited.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

THE MOST NUTRITIOUS.

E P P S ' S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A

BREAKFAST AND SUPPER.

W. &amp; R. CHAMBERS'S NEW BOOKS

A New Dictionary of Universal Biography.

CHAMBERS'S BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY

Dealing with nearly Fifteen Thousand Celebrities of all Nations from the remotest times to the present day; with copious Bibliographies and Pronunciations of the Names.

Edited by DAVID PATRICK, LL.D.,
Editor of Chambers's Encyclopedia; and

FRANCIS HINDES GROOME,
Assistant-Editor of "Chambers's Encyclopedia."

One Volume, crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.; half-morocco, 15s.

NEW BOOKS FOR GIFTS AND PRIZES.

Handsomely bound in cloth, gilt, with Illustrations by
W. RAINEY, W. H. C. GROOM, J. A. SYMINGTON, LEWIS BAUMER, W. BOUCHER, &c.

At 5s.

MEG LANGHOLME. By Mrs. MOLESWORTH.
VINCE THE REBEL. By G. MANVILLE FENN.
WILD KITTY. By L. T. MEADE.

At 3s. 6d.

HUNTED THROUGH FIJI. By REGINALD HORSLEY.
HOODIE. By Mrs. MOLESWORTH.

With 17 Illustrations by Lewis Baumer.
THE ROVER'S QUEST. By HUGH ST. LEGER.
A DAUGHTER OF THE KLEPHTS.
By ISABELLA FVIE MAYO (Edward Garrett).

At 2s. 6d.

ELSIE'S MAGICIAN. By FRED WHISHAW.
"The illustrations by Lewis Baumer add much to the charm of the volume."—Scotsman.
FOUR HUNDRED ANIMAL STORIES.
Edited by ROBERT COCHRANE.

W. & R. CHAMBERS, LIMITED,
London and Edinburgh.

DIGBY, LONG &amp; CO.'S NEW BOOKS

NEW NOVEL BY GEORGE CRAMPTON.

1. EL CARMEN. A Romance of the River
Plate. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. Second edition.
"The story is of thrilling interest and captivating throughout."
—Birmingham Gazette.
"The volume is one that can be read with interest."—Athenæum.
"A vigorous romance of the River Plate."—Gentleman.

2. A FLEETING SHOW. By G. B. FITZGERALD, Author of "An Odd Career." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. Second Edition.
"The story is among the most attractive of recent efforts in particular field of fiction."—Morning Post.

NEW NOVEL BY RUPERT ALEXANDER.

3. THE VICAR OF ST. NICHOLAS. By the Author of "Ballyvaughan." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"This is a lively and entertaining book, rich in incident and skilful delineations of character. The plot is decidedly original, and the interest of the reader is sustained to the very end."—Dundee Courier.
"A very readable novel."—Scotsman.

NEW NOVEL BY MINA SANDEMAN.

4. SIR GASPARD'S AFFINITY. By the Author of "The Worship of Lucifer." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"The authoress of 'The Worship of Lucifer' has undoubtedly enhanced her reputation as a story-teller."—Dundee Courier.

NEW NOVEL BY J. GORDON PHILLIPS.

5. FLORA MACDONALD. A Romance of the '45. By the Author of "James Macpherson." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"The renaissance of the historic novel has been hailed with satisfaction in many quarters. This work by Mr. J. Gordon Phillips is a masterpiece of its kind."—Aberdeen Journal.

6. THE BLACK DISC: a Story of the Conquest of Granada. By ALBERT LEE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. With Frontispiece.
"There is no lack of excitement.... The story is to be recommended to all."—Scotsman.

7. A MATRIMONIAL FREAK. By Edith M. PAGE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"A story fairly well constructed and fairly written."—Aberdeen Press.

NEW NOVEL BY VIOLET TWEEDALE.

8. WHAT SHALL IT PROFIT A MAN? By the Author of "And they Two." &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Just out.]

NEW NOVEL BY BELTON OTTERBURN.

9. NURSE ADELAIDE. By the Author of "Unrelated Twins." &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Just out.]

NEW NOVEL BY ERIC WYNHAM.

10. REVELATION: a Romance By Eric WYNHAM. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Dec. 10.]

11. LIFE in AFRIKANDERLAND as VIEWED by an AFRIKANDER: a Story of Life in South Africa. By CLOS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

DIGBY, LONG & CO., 18, Bouverie Street, London, E.C. AUTHORS may send in their MSS., suitable for Volume Publication, with a view to immediate consideration.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.*A VERY SUCCESSFUL NOVEL.
FOR THE LIFE OF OTHERS.

By G. CARDELLA,
AUTHOR OF "A KING'S DAUGHTER." 6s.

SEVENTH REVIEW.—"Mr. Cardella shows undeniable ability both in the conception and delineation of the persons to whom the reader is introduced, and also in the management of the plot.....Of its kind, it is one of the most notable novels we have lately met with."

SIXTH REVIEW.—"That [the author] has great descriptive and literary gifts is abundantly clear.....[We pay] the highest tribute to the author's purpose and very conspicuous ability."—Weekly Sun.

FIFTH REVIEW.—"The sentiment of the book is refined."—Athenaeum.

FOURTH REVIEW.—"Of absorbing interest throughout."—Glasgow Herald.

THIRD REVIEW.—"This book is the work of no mean writer, but of one possessed with genius. The author is master both of humour and pathos. The story is well told in beautiful language, and from first to last the reader's attention is held, for the book is essentially a masterpiece. We unhesitatingly stamp this book as the best novel for conception and execution that has appeared since the spring."—Book Gazette.

SECOND REVIEW.—"A crusade against the curse of hereditary madness. It is a book strong in purpose, and sets up a high ideal. There is both sincerity and refinement in it."—Manchester Guardian.

FIRST REVIEW.—"Given such a theme, it is not easy to imagine how it could be more successfully handled."—Scotsman.

NEW BOOK BY W. CUNNINGHAM, D.D., AUTHOR OF "THE GROWTH OF ENGLISH INDUSTRY," &c.

IMMIGRANT ALIENS IN ENGLAND.

With Plates, Facsimile of Kemp's Patent, and Maps.
Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

The Norman Invasion—The Later Middle Ages—The Reformation and Religious Refugees—Intercourse with the Dutch—Later Immigrations—Conclusion—Index.

NEW BOOK BY DR. HILL, VICE-CHANCELLOR OF CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.

A RUN ROUND the EMPIRE: being the Log of Two Young People who Circumnavigated the Globe. Written out by their Father, ALEX. HILL, M.A., M.D., Master of Downing College and Vice-Chancellor of Univ. of Cambridge. With very many Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

ETHICAL SYSTEMS. By Prof. W.

WUNDT. Translated. Edited by Prof. E. B. TITCHENER. 6s.

The Second Part of WUNDT'S "ETHICS," forming an invaluable survey of the History of Ethics from the earliest to the present time. Part I. (The FACTS of the MORAL LIFE) costs 7s. 6d.

CHILDREN UNDER the POOR-LAW.

By W. CHANCE, M.A. (Camb.), Hon. Sec. Central Poor-Law Conference. 7s. 6d.

"An admirable book. The author is accurate in his facts, complete in his survey, and sound in his opinions."—Athenaeum.

THE NICENE CREED: a Manual for the Use of Candidates for Holy Orders. By the Rev. J. J. LIAS, Chancellor of Llandaff and Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Llandaff. 6s.

"May be safely described as a recast of Pearson and up-to-date."—Critical Review.

"Of the highest value to theological students."—Guardian.

"He has done an excellent service. Scholarly, open-minded, and luminous."—Speaker.

WELSH GRAMMAR: ACCIDENCE.

By E. ANWYL, M.A., late Classical Scholar of Oriel College, Oxford, Professor of Welsh in the University of Aberystwyth. 2s. 6d.

CHRONICLES of the BANK of ENGLAND. By B. B. TURNER, of the Bank of England. With Reproductions of Old Prints from the Bank Records, &c. 7s. 6d.

GREEK VASES, Historical and Descriptive.

By SUSAN HORNER, Authoress of "Walks in Florence," &c. With Preface by Dr. A. S. MURRAY, of the British Museum. Map, Plate, and 45 Cuts. 3s. 6d.

TWO NEW NOVELS.

FROM ENGLAND to the BACK BLOCKS. By ROLAND GRAEME. 3s. 6d.

BY STILL HARDER FATE. By NANCY LLOYD-TAYLOR. 3s. 6d.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., Limited, London.

MR. MACQUEEN'S LIST.*BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.*C H E R R I W I N K.

By RACHEL PENN.

With Original Illustrations by Maude F. Sambourne and M. Jardine-Thomson.

4to, gilt tops, 6s.

The Pall Mall Gazette.—"Such a delightful story has not been written this long time."

The Glasgow Herald.—"A delightful and delightfully long and full-blooded fairy story....bright and airy as becomes a fairy-tale, and it has the advantage of being most skilfully illustrated....A really beautiful book."

"A BOOK THAT BOYS WILL GLOAT OVER."

AFLOAT with NELSON. By Charles

H. EDEN, Author of "George Donnington," &c., &c. With 10 Full-page Illustrations by John Williamson. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 6s.

The St. James's Gazette.—"One of the best of the sea stories recently published....The sketch given of Nelson is a fine one."

THE COURT of KING ARTHUR:

Stories from the Land of the Round Table. By W. H. FROST. 20 Illustrations by S. R. Burleigh. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Scotsman.—"It is a cleverly written adaptation of the chief legends of the Round Table, done after Malory into simple language, and held together in a pretty framework of story of child life. The book is well illustrated by Mr. S. R. Burleigh."

READY 15th INST.

THE GORDON HIGHLANDERS.

Being the Story of these Bonnie Fighters told by JAMES MILNE. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, price 1s.; post free 1s. 2d.

HANDSOME XMAS PRESENTS.*WORKS BY J. H. CRAWFORD, F.L.S.

Illustrated by John Williamson.

Handsomely bound, large crown 8vo.

THE WILD FLOWERS of SCOTLAND.

6s. net.
Country Life.—"A book of infinite grace and charm, from every page of which breathes the pure love of beauty in nature....We commend this book without reserve to all persons, old and young, who love the fresh air, the mountain-side, and the low-lying valley. It will please them, it will not bray their minds in a mortar of science with a pestle of terrible nomenclature, and it will teach them a great deal."

SUMMER DAYS for WINTER EVEN-

INGS: Nature Idylls. 8s. 6d. net.

The Times.—"With Mr. Crawford's delightful sketches, sometimes telling alone of nature's aspects, sometimes with a thread of story to lend a touch of human interest, a reader must have little imagination if he does not speedily forget the tempest that beats against the easement and fancy himself between green earth and blue sky watching the kaleidoscope of the seasons and the changes of the year and the ways of furled and feathered creatures which are so sympathetically described."

THE WILD LIFE of SCOTLAND.

8s. 6d. net.
The Speaker.—"Very delightful as well as informing book, which, in respect of style, recalls Thoreau rather than either Jefferies or Burroughs....Altogether this book, which belongs to the rare order that can be taken up at any moment and easily read in instalments, is by far the best and most convenient hand-book to Scottish Natural History—in the most comprehensive sense of the word—that has ever been published."

NEW NOVELS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MISS TUDOR."

FAITH, HOPE, and CHARITY. By JOHN LE BRETON. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

The Christian World.—"These are three strong stories, decidedly uncommon in themselves, and told with power. They deal with the irony and tragedy of life, but without that pessimistic conclusion which is the commonplace suggestion of unoriginal and one-sided minds."

THE FATE of WOMAN. By Francis

SHORT. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Scotsman (First Review).—"Fine writing and cleverly conceived situations....The character-sketching is a very strong point in the book....without doubt a skilful writer."

A SINLESS SINNER. By Mary H.

TENNYSON, Author of "The Fool of Fate," &c.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Christian World.—"A writer with undeniable power."

A GIRL'S AWAKENING. By J. H.

CRAWFORD. Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Athenaeum.—"A pretty and idyllic study....Mr. Crawford's feeling for nature stands him in good stead, and the background of his picture in the Scottish village is as harmoniously fitted with the central figures as one of George Eliot's own drawings."

JOHN MACQUEEN, HASTINGS HOUSE,
NORFOLK STREET, STRAND.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO.*THE PRINCIPLES OF LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

By G. LAURENCE GOMME.
Demy 8vo, 12s.

OUR TROUBLES IN POONA AND

THE DECCAN. By ARTHUR TRAVERS ORAW-FORD, C.M.G., late Commissioner of Poona. Fully Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 14s.

THE PUPILS OF PETER THE

GREAT. By J. NISBET BAIN. With Portraits. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 15s. net.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF THE

LAFAYETTES. By EDITH SICHEL. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

"She has treated a mass of material with rare judgment."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Miss Sichel's introduction is one of the best and truest pieces of writing we have met for a long while."

Spectator.

A CHARMING FAIRY TALE CALLED*A HOUSEFUL OF REBELS. By

WALTER C. RHOADES. Illustrated by PATTEN WILSON. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 4s. 6d.

THE LAUGHTER OF PETERKIN.

Re-telling of Old Stories of the Celtic Wonder World By FIONA MACLEOD. Illustrated by SUNDER LAND ROLLINSON. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

"Of all the story-books for the delight and instruction of young readers this season, there is none to surpass 'The Laughter of Peterkin.'"—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Miss Macleod's latest and most excellent piece of work."—Spectator.

THE KING'S STORY-BOOK.

Illustrated by HARRISON MILLER. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Already in its Second Edition.

"Stirring tales of famous battles and fights for freedom."

The Morning Leader.

LONDON RIVERSIDE CHURCHES.

By A. E. DANIELL. Profusely Illustrated by ALEX ANSTED. Imp. 16mo, 6s.

"A book of unusual interest.....an ideal guide-book."—Westminster Budget.

CONSTABLE'S POPULAR EDITION OF

The Works of George Meredith.

Crown 8vo, 6s. each.

With Frontispiece by BERNARD PARTRIDGE, HARRISON MILLER, and others. New handsome Cover, designed by A. A. TURBAYNE.

THE ORDEAL of RICHARD FEVEREL.

RHODA FLEMING.

SANDRA BELLONI.

VITTORIA.

Now

Published.

Others to follow at short intervals.

BY FAR THE BEST EDITION OF

THE WAVERLEY NOVELS

is CONSTABLE'S Reprint of the AUTHOR'S FAVOURITE EDITION. With all the Original Plates and Vignettes (Re-engraved). In 48 vols., fcap. 8vo, cloth, paper label title, 1s. 6d. net per volume; cloth gilt, gilt top, 2s. net per volume; and half-leather, gilt, 3s. 6d. net per volume.

BOSWELL'S LIFE of JOHNSON

Edited by AUGUSTINE BIRRELL. 6 vols., fcap. 8vo, cloth, paper label, or gilt extra, 2s. net per volume. Also half-morocco, 3s. net per volume. Sold in sets only.

"Constable's edition will long remain the best both for the general reader and the scholar."—Review of Reviews.

THE SELECTED POEMS OF

GEORGE MEREDITH. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

"These selected poems are a literary treasure."

Scotsman.

NEW POEMS. By Francis Thompson.

6s. net.

"The essential poetry of essential Christianity."

Academy.

2, WHITEHALL GARDENS, WESTMINSTER.

Hodder & Stoughton's Publications.

ON THE THRESHOLD OF CENTRAL

AFRICA. A Record of Twenty Years' Pioneering in the Upper Zambesi, among the Banyai and Barotsi. By FRANÇOIS COILLARD, Paris Evangelical Mission. Translated and Edited by C. W. MACKINTOSH, with Photogravure Portrait and 40 Illustrations from Photographs by the Author. Imperial 8vo, 15s.

THE IDEAL LIFE, and Other Unpublishable Addresses. By the late HENRY DRUMMOND. With Memorial Sketches by IAN MACLAREN and W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, LL.D. Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

THE PROVIDENTIAL ORDER OF THE WORLD. The Gifford Lectures, 1897. By ALEXANDER BALMAIN BRUCE, D.D., Professor of Apologetic and New Testament Exegesis in the Free Church College, Glasgow. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.
"Deserves to be called a noble book."—Glasgow Herald.

OUTLINES OF A PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION. Based on Psychology and History. By AUGUSTE SABATIER, Dean of the Faculty of Protestant Theology, Paris. Authorised Translation by the Rev. T. A. SEED. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.
"This is a striking book."—Literature.
"It is undeniably able and suggestive, and brilliantly written. The translator has done his work with admirable skill."—Glasgow Herald.

MARY, QUEEN OF SCOTS. From her Birth to her Flight into England. A Brief Biography, with Critical Notes, a few Documents hitherto Unpublished, and an Itinerary. By DAVID HAY FLEMING. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.
"A remarkable book."—Pull Mall Gazette.
"This is the best book yet written upon Mary, Queen of Scots.... a book that will bear reading more than once, for it is full of excellent matter, well expressed."—Manchester Guardian.
"Mr. Hay Fleming has done historical and political students a signal service."—Daily News.

THRO' LATTICE WINDOWS. By W. J. DAWSON, Author of "London Idylls," "The Makers of Modern English," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"This is Mr. Dawson's very best book."—British Weekly.
"It must suffice to express gratification at the success of a bit of distinctly English literary work, that in more aspects than one is reminiscent of what Mr. J. M. Barrie has done for Scotland."—Scotsman.

FRIENDSHIP. By the Rev. Hugh Black, M.A., Free St. George's, Edinburgh. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

OTHER PEOPLE'S LIVES. By Rosa NOUCHETTE CAREY. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

EVERY-DAY LIFE IN TURKEY. By Mrs. W. M. RAMSAY. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE SILENCE OF GOD. By Robert ANDERSON, C.B., LL.D., Assistant-Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"This is an impressive book.... It is worthy of the deepest attention of all interested in the important subject of which it treats."—Aberdeen Free Press.

THE LAST THINGS. A Study of the Coming of Christ, the Eternal Punishment of Sin, and the Eternal City of God. By Rev. J. AGAR BEET, D.D. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. Second Edition.

The Right Rev. G. A. CHADWICK, D.D., Bishop of Derry and Raphoe, says: "The most sober and careful, as well as thorough and trustworthy examination known to me of the Scriptural teaching on Future Punishment."

A GUIDE TO BIBLICAL STUDY. By Professor A. S. PEAKE, M.A. With an Introduction by the Rev. Principal A. M. FAIRBAIRN, D.D. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. Third Thousand.

"The Bible student who has this book and an average amount of brains is far better equipped than hundreds who have sat under professors until grey hairs were here and there upon them.... We have nothing but admiration for this piece of work, a work that was very much needed."—The Methodist Times.

A DOCTOR OF THE OLD SCHOOL. By IAN MACLAREN. With numerous Illustrations by Frederick C. Gordon. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE IAN MACLAREN YEAR-BOOK. Daily Readings from the Works of IAN MACLAREN. Royal 32mo, in a neat small volume, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE IAN MACLAREN KALENDAR. With Illustrations, and Illustrative Border. Small folio, in neat box, 2s. 6d.

THE EXPOSITOR'S GREEK TESTAMENT Edited by the Rev. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A., LL.D., Editor of "The Expositor," "Expositor's Bible," &c.

The First Volume of 880 pages, handsomely bound in buckram cloth, consists of the GOSPEL OF ST. MATTHEW, THE GOSPEL OF ST. MARK, THE GOSPEL OF ST. LUKE, by the Rev. Professor A. B. BRUCE, D.D.; and the GOSPEL OF ST. JOHN, by the Rev. Professor MARCUS DODD, D.D.

The price of each volume will be 2s., but for those who SUBSCRIBE IN ADVANCE the price for TWO VOLUMES will be THIRTY SHILLINGS.

A full Prospectus, with Specimen Sheets of this important Work is now ready, and will be forwarded on application to the Publishers.

"The best book on the synoptics a minister could consult. It can be read through with delight, with exhilaration, with a constant wonder at its freshness, fertility, insight."—Dr. DENNY, in the British Weekly.

London: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER'S LIST.

DR. WHYTE'S NEW BOOK.

Post 8vo, art canvas, price 2s.

SANTA TERESA: AN APPRECIATION.

With some Passages of the Saint's Writings, Selected, Adapted, and Arranged by ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D.

THE RELIGION OF SHAKESPEARE.

Crown 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE, PURITAN and RECUSANT. By Rev. T. CARTER. With a Prefatory Note by Rev. Principal J. OSWALD DYKES, D.D.

Sir HENRY IRVING.—"A most interesting book, which ought to have many readers." The SPECTATOR.—"Mr. Carter has, by a clear-headed historical investigation, added definitely to our knowledge about Shakespeare himself."

REV. GEO. JACKSON'S NEW BOOK.

Now ready, cloth extra, price 2s. 6d.

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS. By the Rev. GEORGE JACKSON, B.A., of the Wesleyan Methodist Mission, Edinburgh.

YOUNG MAN (December).—"These are, in the best sense of the words, sermons for the times, and we recommend them to all who want to settle the problems and difficulties of life according to the spirit and genius of Jesus Christ."

MRS. L. T. MEADE'S NEW STORY.

Cloth extra, illustrated, price 3s. 6d.

A HANDFUL OF SILVER. By L. T. MEADE. The DUNDEE ADVERTISER says: "One of the strongest stories Mrs. L. T. Meade has written."

Post 8vo, art canvas, price 2s. 6d.

THE PLAGIARIST: a Novel. By WILLIAM MYRTLE.

The EDINBURGH ILLUSTRATED NEWS says: "Mr. Myrtle has written a story which, if we mistake not, will become popular with all classes of readers."

Second and Cheaper Edition, with 16 Illustrations, 2s. 6d. MODERN PALESTINE; or, the Need of a New Crusade. By Rev. JOHN LAMOND, B.D. LIFE and WORK.—"Mr. Lamond has given us a good account of his travels in Palestine—fresh and living, because he did not follow the beaten track. Moreover, he feels that a message has been given him.... It will be found worth while to ponder his plea for Palestine."

With 8 Full-Page Illustrations, price 5s.

THE GIST OF JAPAN: the Islands, their People, and Missions. By Rev. R. B. PEERY, A.M., Ph.D., of the Lutheran Mission, Saga, Japan.

The ATHENÆUM says: "Mr. Peery's volume portrays with admirable truth and justice the Japanese people. Mr. Peery's account of Christianity in Japan is by far the most authoritative statement on the subject that we have met with."

FAMOUS SCOTS SERIES.

Price 1s. 6d. each; with gilt top, 2s. 6d.

SIR WALTER SCOTT. By George SAINTSBURY.

THE "BLACKWOOD" GROUP. By Sir GEORGE DOUGLAS.

TOBIAS SMOLLETT. By Oliphant SMEDON.

JAMES BOSWELL. By W. Keith LEASK.

List of the FAMOUS SCOTS Series post free.

CHARMING GIFT BOOKS.

Annie S Swan's 3s. 6d. Books. In new uniform binding, cloth extra.

Shells.	St Veda's.
Maitland of Laurieston	The Guinea Stamp
The Gates of Eden.	Who Shall Serve?
With New Portrait of the Author.	A Lost Ideal.
	Briar and Palm.

Annie S. Swan's 2s. 6d. Books. In new uniform binding, illustrated, cloth extra.

A Divided House	Ursula Vivian
Aldersyde	The Ayres of Stud-
Carlisle.	leigh.
Hasell and Sons	Doris Cheyne.

Cheap Editions at 1s. 6d. and 1s.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER, 21, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C., and Edinburgh; Or of any Bookseller.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S BOOKS

SUITABLE

FOR CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

TENTH THOUSAND.

ALFRED LORD TENNYSON: a

Memoir. By HIS SON. With Photogravure Portraits of Lord Tennyson, Lady Tennyson, &c. Facsimiles of Portions of Poems; and Illustrations after Pictures by G. F. Watts, R.A., Samuel Laurence, Mrs. Allingham, Richard Doyle, Biscombe Gardner, &c. 2 vols., medium 8vo, 36s. net.

HUGH THOMSON'S NEW VOLUME.

MANSFIELD PARK. By Jane

AUSTEN. With 40 Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON and an Introduction by AUSTIN DOBSON. Crown 8vo, cloth, uncut edges, 3s. 6d. "Peacock" Edition, cloth elegant, 5s. [ILLUSTRATED STANDARD NOVELS.]

NEW BOOK BY RUDYARD KIPLING.

Sixteenth Thousand. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

"CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS."

A Story of the Grand Banks. By RUDYARD KIPLING. Illustrated by I. W. TABER.

GRAPHIC.—"There should not be a more popular book for boys this season."

DAILY NEWS.—"As we follow the narrative we are in the very middle of the scenes he describes."

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS BY JOSEPH PENNELL AND HUGH THOMSON.

HIGHWAYS and BYWAYS in

DEVON and CORNWALL. By ARTHUR H. NORWAY. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

SPEAKER.—"Mr. Pennell's exquisite drawings recreate for us our country, not indeed more beautiful than it really is, but more beautiful than ninety-nine in a hundred would ever discover without the artist's eye to help them.... Many have written books of their itineraries in the West of England, but Mr. Norway's is the most delectable."

NEW NOVEL BY F. MARION CRAWFORD.

CORLEONE: a Tale of Sicily.

In 2 vols., globe 8vo, 12s.

PUNCH.—"The reader's interest in the story, roused at the commencement, grows in intensity as the plot is artistically developed to its climax. Mr. Crawford's pictures of Italian scenery are perfect, and his characters belonging to the Roman Society with which he has familiarised us in so many of his books are living beings before our eyes."

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

ADAM JOHNSTONE'S SON.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD, Author of "Sant' Ilario," "Don Orsino," &c.

SPEAKER.—"A book to be enjoyed by everybody."

ALICE'S ADVENTURES in

WONDERLAND. By LEWIS CARROLL. With 43 Illustrations by JOHN TENNIEL. Eighty-sixth Thousand. Extra crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THROUGH the LOOKING-

GLASS, and WHAT ALICE FOUND THERE. By LEWIS CARROLL. With 60 Illustrations by JOHN TENNIEL. Sixty-first Thousand. Extra crown 8vo, 6s. net.

These Editions of ALICE and LOOKING-GLASS are printed from entirely New Type, and New Electros from the Original Woodblocks.

MRS MOLESWORTH'S NEW VOLUME.

MISS MOUSE and her BOYS.

By Mrs. MOLESWORTH. With Illustrations by LESLIE BROOKE. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 4s. 6d.

SPECTATOR.—"Our readers know how Mrs. Molesworth deals with a subject of this kind. It suits her powers exactly. No one can describe child-life better..... A very pleasant little story."

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS	PAGE
The Arnolds and their Influence ... ..	517
Miss Alma Tadema's Poems ... ..	518
Wild Traits in Tame Animals ... ..	519
"More Tramps Abroad" ... ..	519
An Abortive Translation ... ..	520
The Tragic Mary ... ..	521
Science of the Stars ... ..	522
GIFT BOOKS ... ..	523
BRIEFER MENTION ... ..	524
NOTES AND NEWS ... ..	525
SOME YOUNGER REPUTATIONS ... ..	527
PARIS LETTER ... ..	528
BOOKSELLING AND BOOKBUYING ... ..	528
A FAMOUS SATIRE ... ..	529
JUBILATION ... ..	530
THE BOOK MARKET ... ..	530
THE WEEK ... ..	531
NEW BOOKS RECEIVED ... ..	532
DRAMA ... ..	532
CORRESPONDENCE ... ..	533
BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..	534
FICTION SUPPLEMENT ... ..	121-124

REVIEWS.

THE ARNOLDS AND THEIR INFLUENCE.

Thomas and Matthew Arnold, and their Influence on English Education. By Sir Joshua Fitch. (Heinemann.)

SIR JOSHUA FITCH was well qualified by official position and long experience to write an excellent book upon these famous educationalists, father and son, and he has done so: his study is amply appreciative and impartially critical. The only positive error occurs in his brief eulogy of Winchester, where Thomas Arnold passed the whole, and Matthew a part, of his public school life. He numbers among great Wykehamical ecclesiastics Waynflete, founder of Magdalen College, Oxford, and the famous preacher South. Not Winchester, but Westminster, boasts of South: and there is no evidence, beyond late and inconclusive tradition, for Waynflete's Wykehamical education. He was Headmaster of Winchester and first Headmaster of Eton, as also Provost: he died Bishop of Winchester. But he is not upon the roll of Winchester Scholars. And Sir Joshua uses an unnecessary meiosis when he assigns to Winchester an age of "more than four centuries": the oldest of the great public schools celebrated its five hundredth anniversary in 1893. But a Wykehamist reviewer may be allowed to thank the writer for his cordial eulogy of the venerable and illustrious College, so dear to both the Arnolds, and so proud of both.

Both have had an influence wide and profound; and yet the influence of either has not been so greatly felt in matters immediately educational as in matters incidental to education. Neither was a theorist in pedagogy of the German type; neither has bequeathed us treatises upon methods of teaching, nor so much as wished to revolutionise the systems which they found prevailing. But both were men of ideals, who valued education less for the sake of "useful knowledge" than for its work in the formation of character, its spiritual relations with life. When critics wished to describe unfavourably a disciple of Dr. Arnold they described an "earnest" youth, precociously alive to his "responsibilities," and prematurely absorbed in the "problems of life." When they wished to do the same by a follower of Matthew Arnold, they spoke of "supercilious culture," and "dilettante trifling," and a sense of superiority to the mass of men. The caricatures are not so extravagant as to defeat their own object: and they bear testimony to the truth, that both father and son, in their various works and ways, did aim at influencing the character, at training the disposition, at opening the mind's eye, rather than at cramming the mind. But such work as that is of necessity indirect, and has little connexion with scholastic method. As educationalists, in the narrower sense of the term, the Arnolds were largely Conservative. Liberals as they were, neither had a particle of sympathy with Benthamism and Broughamism and the "common sense" of the "practical man." They were idealists, even Utopians at times. Consider their views of Church and State. Dr. Arnold advocated an Established Church embracing all Christian sects, with their distinctive beliefs and rituals. His son dreamed of an undogmatic Anglican Church, enriched with the "poetry," the imaginative appeal of Catholicism. And who shall say which of these fancies be the wilder, the more impossible, the more unthinkable? Both men were reformers by nature: the one enthusiastic and ardent, the other contemplative and ironical; and so the father was something of a Savonarola, the son much of an Erasmus—natures foredoomed to a certain beautiful failure, despite their plentiful success. They cared for the things of the spirit, and such men are never quite victorious.

Hawkins, the great Provost of Oriel, prophesied that Dr. Arnold, if elected to Rugby, "would change the face of education all through the public schools of England." If that be taken to mean that he would raise the standard of scholarship, as Butler of Shrewsbury raised it, or make large innovations in the quantity and quality of subjects taught, the prophecy was unfulfilled. Dr. Arnold was a good, but not a great, scholar, nor was he a fervent advocate of "the modern side." But if it means that he brought a new spirit and a quickening life into the work of the public schools, the Provost was a true prophet. Arnold, with his historical imagination and sympathies, his vital sense of citizenship and social life, his vivid apprehension of moral law revealed in past and present, made school work educative rather than, as heretofore, almost wholly instructive. His conception was that of Milton, of Coleridge, of his friend and foe, Newman: a large and, in the classical sense, a generous training, which should awaken the faculties, and fit them for a due and right discharge of life's duties and obligations, by contact with the best thought, the best beauty, the best experience of mankind. He had a thoroughly Greek sense of education as a preparation for citizenship, first and foremost: and for citizenship, as he understood it in the light of Christianity. To him Christianity had no other aspect or meaning than the social; and to work for the well-being of society in the Christian spirit was the whole duty of man. For such boys as those who came under his charge at Rugby he believed that a classical training, liberally and livingly given, was the best possible, in view of their future positions in the body politic, the English Christian commonwealth. So, while far from neglecting the more technical and ornamental side of classical education, he cared supremely for its awakening influence, its appeal to the imagination and the mind. He was well aware of the truth of Coleridge's saying against the utilitarian school of Brougham: "One constant blunder of these New Broomers, these Penny Magazine sages and philanthropists, in reference to our public schools, is to confine their views to what schoolmasters teach the boys, with entire oversight of all that the boys are excited to learn from each other and of themselves—with more geniality even because it is not a part of their compelled school knowledge." Arnold welcomed and encouraged all such self-education and self-culture not merely for its own sake, but for the zest and interest which it adds to the school work proper. In all this he was a pioneer, though schoolmasters before him had not entirely kept to the dryas dust track; and if, as is the case, there is to-day no public school in which lessons are divorced from life, and the various branches of learning are kept apart from each other in watertight compartments, the credit is Dr. Arnold's. Rugby was his kingdom, and he strove to bring all parts of it to perfection and into harmony; his letters, essays, and sermons are full of that ideal.

His great son's educational labours of a direct kind lay among the children of the poor, as inspector of elementary schools. Not the least valuable aspect of them is bound to fade away with time—we mean the singular charm, consideration, and encouraging kindness of manner, to which all teachers and managers who met him bear ready witness. His most abiding legacy is his series of reports upon the states and systems of primary and secondary education at home and abroad—reports full of a wise lucidity and persuasiveness. He was all for the humanising, liberalising, spiritualising side of education, a hater of pedantry and formality, a champion of the imaginative and the suggestive, as opposed to the mechanical and the lifeless or unvitalised. But the work was not congenial to him, and his sense, critical and poetical, of our national shortcomings was too personal and keen to be entirely appreciated by those to whom he appealed. Sir Joshua Fitch praises very highly, but no whit too highly, his poems and his purely literary essays: but he sees clearly that such a man was not an ideal man for his post, or rather, may be, that he was too ideal. Matthew Arnold, with cruel truth and wit, describes Maurice as "beating the bush with profound emotion, but never starting the hare." And yet, mutato nomine de te; Arnold, at least, beat many bushes, but the public took no notice of the hares. That huge lower middle class, the Philistines, are absolutely unchanged by his pleadings and protests and exposures. They still delight in licensed victuallers' schools, still prefer Eliza Cook to Milton, still clamour for their deceased wives' sisters, still cling to an unlovely Puritanism. Matthew Arnold's Olympian irony and smiling melancholy have delighted those of his own social standing, but have not so much as begun to influence the masses of parents, whose children go—which is admirable—to the public primary schools, or—which is detestable—to “commercial academies.” In so far as there is any popular demand for an improved and organised secondary education, its strength lies in the industrial need of improved and developed technical education, not in any adoption of Arnold's own reiterated pleas: not for the sake of a great national system of organised teaching, broadly and finely conceived, but under the pressure of commercial competition from without. Perhaps he was too unwilling to recognise how much of what he respected in the average English life rests, and must long continue to rest, upon much of what he most abhorred—upon distrust of State interference, upon attachment to narrow forms of religion, upon a self-sufficient, dogged Puritanism. His sense of humour, happily incurable, forbade him to tolerate national qualities of so absurd an unamiableness, and his delicate laughter was not quite conciliatory; many people felt that no man could always be so exquisitely right, as Mr. Arnold believed himself to be. They felt with Charlotte Brontë, at the first meeting: “Striking and prepossessing in appearance, his manner displeases from its seeming foppery. I own it caused me at first to regard him with regretful surprise; the shade of Dr. Arnold seemed to me to frown on his young representative.” Not everyone could discover, as Charlotte Brontë could, that there was a sincere and simple nature beneath the surface; and Arnold's chances of influencing those whom he chiefly wished to influence were hurt by misunderstandings and resentments. As poet and literary critic his fame will grow: his social writings will long be enjoyable, but are not likely to be efficacious. “How many fools does it take to make a public?” asks Chamfort. In England, Carlyle put the estimate at several millions—a terrible public to conquer by “sweetness and light”; by selections from Wordsworth and readings in Isaiah. Unlike his father, Matthew Arnold had no kingdom of his own, no microcosm to fashion as he would: his educational labours were general and dispersive—a visit here, a report there; now an article, and now a lecture. Yet his name is a force, his convictions carry weight—at least, in the world of experts and idealists in education: his writings remain to impress upon us the intensity of his beliefs. He is himself an example of what “culture” in its noblest sense can do: his often perfect poetry, his choice and pellucid criticism, are, indeed, the work of one who sought to acquaint himself with “the best that is thought and known.”

And, despite all mannerism, he, like his father, was upon the side of sober reason and the straight path—no fantastical theorist or dreamer: both were men of strong affections, of unsparing toil, of undaunted energy. They had a right, as Wykehamists, to the Wykehamical motto, “Manners Makyth Man” (manners there means character), and few men of modern times have been of truer make than this father and this son. Sir Joshua Fitch has raised a worthy memorial to names and fames not soon to be forgotten.

MISS ALMA TADEMA'S POEMS.

Realms of Unknown Kings. By Laurence Alma Tadema. (Grant Richards.)

MANY and obvious are the limitations to Miss Laurence Alma Tadema's talent, as revealed in this little book: her range is narrow, her note monotonous, and in the creation of sheer verbal beauty, in the chasing and jewelling of her lines, she does not excel. But she has gifts which more than compensate for these limitations: the gift of passionate sincerity, a true, though scarcely an unerring, sense of rhythm, and that dramatic faculty which is almost as valuable to the lyric poet as to the dramatist himself. However deep may be the personal feeling expressed in a song, its artistic worth is enhanced, in nine cases out of ten, by a touch of dramatisation. In the purely contemplative, Wordsworthian lyric this is unnecessary. It is unnecessary in the wide-winged impersonal rhapsody, such as Shelley's “Cloud” or Keats's “Nightingale.” We do not look for it in the simple amatory lyric, in “O' a' the airts,” or “My luve is like a red, red rose.” But the moment a complex personal emotion has to be expressed, it is almost essential to place it in a given situation, real or imaginary, to indicate some shred of story, to dramatise, or (putting the thing in its lowest terms) to ventriloquise a little. The most masterly examples we remember of the dramatic lyric—the song merging in the ballad, yet remaining unmistakably a song—are to be found in “The Bard of the Dimbovitza,” translated from the Roumanian by Miss Alma Strettell. Miss Tadema has evidently been influenced by these poems, and in two cases—in “The Unbeloved” and “A Ballad of the Heart's Bounty”—she has rather too patently imitated them. As a rule, however, she has shown originality, as well as tact, in so translating and amplifying the language of her own nature that it gives typical expression to the soul-states of thousands of her sister women. That this has been her conscious design we see from her Dedication, which opens thus:

“Sisters! for you this humble gift of song,
New gathered in the region where my soul
Is one with yours, knowing what bliss and dole
To womanhood belong.”

She sings always as a woman, never as a New Woman. She is conscious and unashamed of the destinies of her sex; she sympathises with its aspirations; but she does not seek to redress the uneven balance by aping or vituperating the other sex. She promises some day to sing for the “Warrior Women” whose “feet are free,” who are “released from the bower's gloom, where once they lived for love.” In the meantime, however, she sings

“The Ancient Lay, of those that smile and wait
For Love, or whom dead Joy leaves desolate.”
“I love you all,” she says,
“the stricken and the blest;
And if your tears too much bedew my lay,
'Tis that your hearts more often on Grief's day
Have beat against my breast.”

Certainly there is more of the “dole” than of the “bliss” of womanhood in these pages; yet there is nothing hysterical, no shrill or undignified wailing. Even in the less successful pieces we are conscious of artistic impulse and form, and generally, as we have said, of dramatic invention, restraining and ennobling the most passionate utterance. Note the ingenuity of presentation which at once heightens and refines the poignancy of these three quatrains:

“THE EMPTY HEARTH.”

“As I sit beside the empty hearth, there's silence all around,
But I hear the rocking measure of a cradle on the ground:
My little baby sleeping draws her breath with gentle sigh,
And my son, of play now weary, nestles close with drooping eye.
His hand is warm within my hand, his head upon my breast
Is sweet with the scent of childhood, of the young bird in the nest;
His face is hidden from me, but his eyes are strange and bright,
And he whose eyes are like them walks towards me thro' the night.
I soon shall hear his footstep—oh! his footstep!—on the stair,
The door will open, he will come and stand behind my chair . . .
—God! save me from these dreams! The hearth is empty, far is he:
And his little children lie asleep on another woman's knee.”

Even here the influence of the Roumanian Folk-Songs is tolerably apparent. Another influence, that of Heine, is paramount in other pieces—usually, it must be confessed, in the more commonplace strains. This is perhaps the best of the Heine group:

“Lost Music.”

“I hear a sound of music,
But cold are the hands that play,
And changed the tones they trembling stirred
On a far and wondrous day.
The sound of music rises,
But strikes on my hungered ear
Like a passing bell, untimely heard,
For something that was dear.
The music rises to my heart,
But falls at the bolted door,
Like a dead enchanter's stolen word,
Whose magic works no more.”

The longest pieces in the book are “Three Visions,” or, as we should rather call them, Fables, which are full of poetic feeling, but not altogether happy, either in invention or workmanship. Even in these days of rebellion against strict metrical form, we cannot conceive how "The other woman, who was waiting there humbly," is to pass as a blank-verse line. In the main, Miss Tadema's measures, though not pedantically correct, show a true ear for rhythm; and, so far as we have noted, she has only one altogether inadmissible rhyme—to wit, "morn" and "gone." She more than once uses "to ignore" in the sense of "to be ignorant," which is French, not English. These trifles we hold worth remark, for we are sure Miss Tadema would be the last to claim inaccuracy of form and style as a feminine privilege. Among the most delightful things in her book, by the way, is a sequence of three short poems, entitled "Little Girls." Here is the first of them:

"If no one ever marries me—
And I don't see why they should,
For nurse says I'm not pretty,
And I'm seldom very good—

If no one ever marries me,
I sha'n't mind very much;
I shall buy a squirrel in a cage,
And a little rabbit-hutch;

I shall have a cottage near a wood,
And a pony all my own,
And a little lamb quite clean and tame,
That I can take to town.

And when I'm getting really old—
At twenty-eight or nine—
I shall buy a little orphan girl,
And bring her up as mine."

If Miss Tadema can interpret the "Warrior Woman" as well as the "Little Girl" we trust she will keep her promise, and give us a second book of songs

DOMESTIC ZOOLOGY.

Wild Traits in Tame Animals. By Louis Robinson, M.D. (Blackwood.)

WE took up this book with a certain vague prejudice against it; we have read it through with interest and admiration. It is easy nowadays to write a particular sort of evolutionary essay—the essay which requires no novelty of thought, no individual observation. "Take equal parts of Darwin and of milk-and-water" is the usual recipe; we feared that we were approaching that familiar and mawkish mixture. But Dr. Robinson is a naturalist of quite another sort. He has watched animals under domestication closely, and he has a keen eye for their habits, their fancies, their curious generic and specific tricks. Above all, he is a psychologist with a rare power of throwing himself sympathetically into the mental attitude of the dog, the cat, the goat, the human savage. It is the marked psychological note, indeed, and the clear conception of what our author well calls animal politics—the mutual relations necessitated in each gregarious species by the common wants of the herd—that give their special value to these excellent studies in horse and dog nature. There is no clap-trap; all is first-hand observation, well interpreted with scientific precision. Even the author's boldest suggestions, such as the hint of protective mimicry by a coiled cat of a coiled serpent, are supported by good and striking evidence.

Dr. Robinson's central idea seems to be that for the origin of almost every trait we observe in domesticated animals we must go back to their wild ancestry. He minimises the influence of human selection and human training; allowing them, indeed, full credit for whatever they have actually performed, but showing sufficient grounds for his general belief that, on the whole, each species remains pretty much what it was before man began to take it into his unequal partnership. Thus he acutely suggests that the dog could never have been taught what man has taught him had he been originally a solitary hunter; he was a member of a pack which co-operated for common purposes—nay, which subordinated some individuals to others; which had division of labour and specialised functions—and in virtue of this fact, when man took the dog into his company as partner, the dog continued to play his accustomed rôle in the new community. As watch-dog, he guards the lair of the pack, so to speak; he barks because he is a gregarious creature, habituated to act in concert with others. His loyalty to his master, his readiness to defend him when attacked, is an echo of his loyalty to his four-footed comrades. His work as pointer or setter is the result of the habit of hunting in company, and is most ingeniously explained by a good train of reasoning. In short, Dr. Robinson shows that to dogs man is just a very superior dog, a capable leader in the pack to which both belong. Even the wagging of the dog's tail is a signal to his fellows: everything about him bears reference to his gregarious nature.

Equally admirable are the accounts of the horse and the donkey. Many of us have sometimes suspected that the habit of shying in horses was due to superstitious terrors—the dread of something equivalent to a ghost. Dr. Robinson gives an explanation far better and more natural: horses descend from ancestors accustomed to roam over close-cropped pastures, where any tuft of long grass might conceal a snake or other venomous animal; hence, timidity about such objects—transferred now to pieces of loose paper or cabbage leaves in the road—was really in the beginning a preservative trait. He notes that the donkey, whose progenitors were mountain beasts living among desert rocks (whence their sure-footedness), do not shy; but he omits to observe, we imagine, that the sideways movement of alarm in shying, which is useful on a broad plain, would be wholly disadvantageous, or even fatal, among ledges and gulleys. Better run the risk of a bite than be flung over a precipice. The acute observations upon the carriage of the head, low or high, in forest and mountain animals respectively are exceedingly valuable. Indeed, the book abounds with just such admirable aperçus. Pigs fatten easily, because their ancestors had to eat mast in autumn against the winter fast; and when frost lasted long, the fattest wild boar, in other words, the largest eater and best layer-on of adipose tissue, would alone survive to carry on the species to future generations. Cows give us milk and wait to be milked because the ancestral cow left her calf in hiding, and went far afield for pasture; her chewing the cud depends equally upon her habit in early days of eating hastily where exposed to the attacks of wild beasts, and then digesting at leisure in her lair with comparative safety. How good, too, is the remark that while the gregarious dog looks upon men as members of the pack, the solitary cat regards us "rather as part of the furniture than as comrades."

Like most neo-Darwinians, Dr. Robinson attributes almost everything to natural selection, and is sceptical about the inheritance of acquired characters. Certainly, his explanations smooth over some difficulties; but he does not entirely give himself away to Weismann. On one point we venture to differ from him. He more than once sets down the beginnings of domestication to the supposed savage habit of bringing home young animals as pets in the family. It is more probable, however, as Sir Martin Conway has suggested in the case of the cat, that animals were at first domesticated as totems—that is to say, as Mr. Frazer points out, were regarded as the home of the separable soul of their captors. If domestication took its rise in this way—if each tame cow or sheep or camel was at first carefully tended as containing the soul of a friend or brother, we can better understand that curious belief in the brotherhood of the herd with man which is common among Zulus, ancient Arabs, and most other pastoral races, and on which Prof. Robertson Smith founded his well-known theory of Kinship. This is a curious instance of the way in which one science may cast light upon another. In order fully to complete these interesting studies, Dr. Robinson should certainly pay some attention to this abstruse subject of totemism and the separable soul, as elucidated by Robertson Smith, Frazer, and Sidney Hartland. It would then probably become clear why certain animals were first domesticated; while the value for food of the cow, for draught of the camel, for clothing of the sheep, might further show why certain tribes, having selected these species for their sacred beasts, had an advantage in the struggle for life of tribe against tribe over those who had chosen as totems, say, the crocodile or the marmot. This is a study quite in Dr. Robinson's own line. We recommend it to his notice.

FACTS VERSUS FUN.

More Tramps Abroad. By Mark Twain. (Chatto & Windus.)

WE lay aside this extensive book (it has 486 pages of small type) with the reflection that Mark Twain is wiser and wittier than ever, but less funny. His power of seeing straight and setting down his opinions in unmistakable sentences is still with him; his asides on men and their ways show, if anything, an increase of shrewdness and a new flavour of cynicism, gained probably in a hard school; his interest in what is interesting is as quick; but the quality for which nine out of every ten persons buy his books—his fun—is not what it was. As a sequel to A Tramp Abroad—as the title More Tramps Abroad implies it is intended to be—this book is a failure. As a rambling, disordered account of travels in Australasia, India, and South Africa, interspersed with dissertations on government and Thuggism and social problems and life generally, it is a work unusually able and picturesque; for although Mark Twain grows less amusing, he is not to thinking persons, therefore, less attractive. His good sense is so dominant. At the same time, the majority of English readers do not greatly care for the political and serious opinions of an American author to whom they once confidently resorted for laughter. When they wish to be instructed concerning Greater Britain, they prefer that it should be done by an Englishman. Hence Mark Twain's new book is likely to be far more popular in America than in this country.

We do not wish to suggest that there is no fun in its pages. There is a good leavening, but the proportion of fun to hard sense and hard facts is smaller than usual and the quality less high. There is nothing, for example, to bear comparison with the Blue Jays or the Gambetta-Four-tou duel in A Tramp Abroad. Mark Twain seems to have lost the inclination to elaborate a joke. The funny passages in More Tramps Abroad are hurried, and for the most part are retrospective. But now and then there is an old touch, as in this description of the Australian bell-bird:

"The naturalist spoke of the bell-bird, the creature that at short intervals all day rings out its mellow and exquisite peal from the deeps of the forest. It is the favourite and best friend of the weary and thirsty sundowner; for he knows that wherever the bell-bird is there is water, and he goes somewhere else."

Again, an Indian servant with a limited stock of English words led to the following memorable passage:

"How did you get your English; is it an acquirement, or just a gift of God?"

After some hesitation—piously:

"Yes, He is very good. Christian God very good, Hindoo god very good too. Two million Hindoo god, one Christian God—make two million and one. All mine; two million and one God. I got a plenty. Sometime I pray all time at those, keep it up, go all time every day, give something at shrine; all good for me, make me better man; good for me, good for my family, dam good."

India also yields the following:

"After a while we stopped at a little wooden coop of a station just within the curtain of the sombre jungle—a place with a deep and dense forest of great trees and scrub and vines all about it. The royal Bengal tiger is in great force there, and is very bold and unconventional. From this lonely little station a message once went to the railway manager in Calcutta: 'Tiger eating stationmaster in front porch; telegraph instructions.'"

A book with such good absurdities is not wholly futile. But their infrequency causes sadness that, since he wrote A Tramp Abroad, Mark Twain has undergone changes. We regret that he has studied the history of Joan of Arc and dabbled in occult arts; that he has tried his hand at business and failed and grown quite lamentably fond of facts and figures and politics: because the result is that fun has passed into the background of his brain. The loss is ours. Of the stories told in the new book, the following is among the best. It refers to a discussion at table d'hôte as to whether the Scotch peasantry pronounced the word "three"—"three" or "thraw":

"The solitary Scot was having a sultry time of it, so I thought I would enrich him with my help. In my position I was necessarily quite impartial, and was equally as well and as ill-equipped to fight on the one side as the other. So I spoke up, and said the peasantry pronounced it three not thraw. It was an error of judgment. There was a moment of astonished and ominous silence, then weather ensued. The storm rose and spread in a surprising way, and I was snowed under in a very few minutes. It was a bad defeat for me; a kind of Waterloo. It promised to remain so, and I wish I had had better sense than to enter upon such a forlorn enterprise. But just then I had a saving thought, at least a thought that offered a chance. While the storm was still raging I made up a Scotch couplet, and then spoke up and said:

'Very well, don't say any more, I confess defeat. I thought I knew, but I see my mistake. I was deceived by one of your Scotch poets.'

'A Scotch poet! Oh, come! Name him.'

'Robert Burns.'

It is wonderful the power of that name. These men looked doubtful—but paralysed all the same. They were quite silent for a moment; then one of them said—with the reverence in his voice which is always present in a Scotchman's tone when he utters the name—

'Does Robbie Burns say—what does he say?'

'This is what he says:

'There were nae bairns but only three—
One at the breast, twa at the knee.'

It ended the discussion. There was no man there profane enough, disloyal enough, to say any word against a thing which Robert Burns had settled. I shall always honour that great name for the salvation it brought me in this time of my sore need.

It is my belief that nearly any invented quotation, played with confidence, stands a good chance to deceive. There are people who think that honesty is always the best policy. This is a superstition; there are times when the appearance of it is worth six of it."

After the South African chapters (in the reading of which we do not envy Dr. Jameson) many persons will value most the maxims from Pudd'nhead Wilson's New Calendar. In his early work Mark Twain did not display much epigrammatic ability. He "spread himself." Nor does he tend to compactness in the body of this, his latest, book. But at the head of each chapter he has put a little crisp aphorism, usually cynical, almost always true, and often witty. Some are excellent, and are likely to pass into our proverbial wisdom. With the quotation of a few, we take leave of a good-humoured, instructive, entertaining, careless, ill-considered, and rather disappointing book.

"Noise proves nothing. Often a hen who has merely laid an egg cackles as if she had laid an asteroid.

There is a Moral Sense, and there is an Immoral Sense. History shows us that the Moral Sense enables us to perceive morality, and how to avoid it; and that the Immoral Sense enables us to perceive immorality, and how to enjoy it.

There are people who can do all fine and heroic things but one: keep from telling their happinesses to the unhappy.

Let us be thankful for the fools. But for them the rest of us could not succeed.

There are several good protections against temptation; but the surest is cowardice.

Each person is born with one possession which outvalues all his others—his last breath.

If the desire to kill and the opportunity to kill came always together—who would escape hanging?

There are two times in a man's life when he should not speculate: when he can't afford it, and when he can.

Don't part with your illusions. When they are gone you may still exist, but you have ceased to live.

Satan (impatiently) to New-Comer: 'The trouble with you Chicago people is that you think you are the best people down here; whereas you are merely the most numerous.'

The principal difference between a cat and a lie is, that a cat has only nine lives.

First catch your Boer, then kick him."

A BAD TRANSLATION.

Sonnets of José-Maria de Heredia. Done into English by Edward Robeson Taylor. (San Francisco: William Doxey, At the Sign of the Lark.)

If this be not the worst translation in the world, it ought to be: but never, surely, has a more impeccable poet been more scandalously traduced than is M. de Heredia by Mr. Taylor of San Francisco. His book gives us the impression that he learned French and translated M. de Heredia pari passu, and, consequently, that Les Trophées is the first book of French verse that he has read. This would account for the interesting statement that the poet

"follows the privilege of his Italian model in rhyming words which have the same articulate sound but different meanings—and, in fact, we have in one sonnet the rhyme of the octet (sic) thus: catalpas, pétale, fatale, pas, trépas, occidentale, s'étale, pas; and, in fact, such rhymes occur frequently in his work."

Sancta simplicitas! of course they do. Has Mr. Taylor never heard of the rime riche or the consonne d'appui, those elementary features of French prosody? Again, he tells us that he has preserved the original form of the sonnets: why, then, does he write his versions in lines of varying length, alexandrines and octosyllabics mingling with the normal decasyllabic? Of all forms of verse, the sonnet can least allow itself to be played with and corrupted. But if Mr. Taylor must introduce alexandrines into decasyllabic sonnets, let him write them decently. "Though Can's, Galeas, Hercules', or Ezzelin's name he own": there is sweetness long drawn out for you! And such cacophonies abound. Further, we have hitherto believed that translation was not the same as transcription; but Mr. Taylor, his dictionary failing him, or his poverty of rhymes compelling him, transcribes literally such words as poulaines, fermail, chaton, maîtrise, quillons, paillon, pompons, pampre, crinière, percale, pulverin. The most amusing and audacious instance of this labour-saving contrivance is in the line "The unicorn, leopard, allurion or guivré": the last word rhyming to "free." M. de Heredia has alérion ou guivre, the last word rhyming to suivre. Our compliments to Mr. Taylor upon "allurion" and his accented "guivré": he has enriched the Californian language. In a similar spirit, he has added to Latin the impossible word "Eumolpidus": but scholarship of any kind is not his strong point. He mistranslates amazingly. Take the last line of the first lovely sonnet, "L'Oubli": "La Mer qui se lamente en pleurant les Sirènes" (the sea making moan for her lost Sirens), Mr. Taylor translates: "The ocean moaning as the Sirens weep." Here is both impossible grammar and a blank insensibility to the emotion and meaning of the original, which is a lament over the vanished glory and beauty of the ancient world. M. de Heredia's line is almost parallel with Fitz-Gerald's—

"The seas that mourn
In flowing purple, of their Lord forlorn."

Another instance. An old image of the Garden God, Priapus, bewails the neglect that has befallen him; if it last he will grow worm-eaten: "J'ai peur d'être piqué des vers." Will it be believed that Mr. Taylor translates: "I dread of heartless verses the sting"? In a sonnet of the same series Priapus threatens the pillaging children—"le colon vous épie"—and he will avenge the god:

"Vos reins sauront alors tout ce que pèse un
Dieu
De bois dur emmanché d'un bras d'homme qui frappe."

This becomes:

"With hard wood handled by his arm he'll make
Your loins well smoke, whatever God may care."

When he can go wrong Mr. Taylor goes wrong: filles d'Ausonie becomes "Ausonius' daughters"; there is no such person as Ausonius, except to the inventor of "Eumolpidus." He thinks that "mit à sang la Romagne" means "to kindred gives Romagna." But the chief, the mortal sin of this traditore is his ruining of M. de Heredia's austere and fine imaginings. If Mr. Taylor can make a beautiful conception commonplace or meaningless, he does so:

"La Terre maternelle et douce aux anciens dieux
Fait à chaque printemps, vainement éloquente,
Au chapiteau brisé verdier une autre acanthe."

Beautiful, and surely of a simple beauty, yet it suffers this violence:

"Sweet mother Earth, all vainly eloquent,
Each springtime to the gods acanthus green Gives for the capitals that once have been."

Mr. Taylor does not see that it is to the ancient gods that Earth is a sweet mother, bearing them a mother's love in their downfall and dethronement: he does not see, that there is no mere meaningless substitution of acanthus "for the capitals," but that Earth, vainly eloquent, makes the acanthus grow around the broken capitals, as if to replace the carven acanthus that blossomed there, when the marble columns were upright and the gods honoured in their temples. One almost blushes to explain a thing so simple. Or take a phrase from "Le Cocher" (the Charioteer):

"Dans le cirque ébloui, vers le but et la palme, Sept fois, triomphateur vertigineux et calme,
Il a tourné."

Would not a child fix upon the phrase vertigineux et calme as the salient and most imaginative phrase? The victor, his brain and senses whirling with the whirling chariot, giddy with the drunkenness of triumph and swift motion, yet "calm" through it all, his own master, lord of himself. Absolutely ignoring vertigineux, Mr. Taylor gives us "The Victor—cool and calm." In the same sonnet the victor is described as "issu d'un père illustre et plus illustre encor." What right has Mr. Taylor to foist upon us, and still more upon M. de Heredia, the stupid "Famous his sire, himself on honour's roll"? If M. de Heredia had meant that he would have said that. Take the first line of "La Trebbia"—"L'aube d'un jour sinistre a blanché les hauteurs." Here is a precise statement, concrete, pictorial; we decline to accept in lieu of it "this direful daydawn comes with fatal speed." Mr. Taylor might just as well have said, "Alas! too soon," or "With rapid tread," or "Dawn comes—a way dawn has." If we try to view the translations as English verse, apart from their fidelity to the original phrase and thought, we are still unable to welcome them. They abound in maddening inversions and omissions of the article, reminding us of Dr. Johnson's famous parody, "Hermit hoar in hollow cell"; they are awkward, stilted, harsh. Impossible, with all the will in the world, to take pleasure in such lines as:

"No! Let the sapphire-sparkling orb reveal
From Ophir's warrior race some proud profile,
Thalestris, Auda, Bradamant, Penthesilea;
And that her beauty may be still more fell,
Casque her blonde locks with winged beast,
and be a
Gorgon of gold on bosom's lovely swell."

Or in such as

"Beneath my brushes are born, live, run, and soar,
The monstrous people of mythology:
Pan, Centaurs, Sphinx, Chimæra, the Orgy,
And race of Gorgo, Pegasus, and Chrysaor.
Shall I now paint Achilles weeping near Penthesilea? Orpheus, with arms toward banished dear
For whom the infernal gate shall ne'er relent?"

This is chokepear poetry; but let us, in justice to Mr. Taylor, quote one fairly happy rendering from the Michael Angelo sonnet. Keats tells of "the music yearning like a god in pain." M. de Heredia speaks of the marble images themselves "yearning" with a shudder and thrill of wrath, the god within them longing to burst his bonds and cast off the constraint of matter. "La colère d'un Dieu vaincu par la matière!" Mr. Taylor writes, and his line has good qualities: "The passion of a god imprisoned there!" But that is by far his high-water mark of achievement.

M. de Heredia is among the aristocrats of poetry—austere, refined to the utmost enamoured of perfection, in love with law and limitation. Spanish and French, he has the haughtiness of the one nation, the politeness of the other. His nobler sonnets are trumpet peals, challenges brief and proud; but there is no rude ruggedness of sound, all is exquisitely attuned and modulated; it is so that he speaks of the Conquistadors and the golden glory of old Spain. Then, he can write things worthy of the Greek anthologists and of the Latin epigrammatists; or produce pieces like the chased work of Cellini; or emulate the illuminators of missals; or rival Du Bellay in the sentiment of lost antiquity, and vanished beauty, and ruined splendour, gone at "the unimaginable touch of time." He is not a great poet; he lacks humanity for that. But within his chosen and deliberate ground he is great with the greatness of one perfect in the accomplishment of his own ends. It is precisely such scrupulous perfection, such loyal labour, that the French Academy should honour, and in him has honoured. And it is this essential artist that Mr. Taylor has elected to deface and to deform. We rejoice, for the fair fame of American scholarship and culture, to learn that only four hundred copies of his lamentable bungle are on sale.

THE TRAGIC MARY.

Mary, Queen of Scots: From her Birth to her Flight into England. By David Hay Fleming. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

OF rhetoric with regard to Mary, Queen of Scots, the rhetoric of attack and the rhetoric of defence, we have perhaps had enough. And for the most part it has been an a priori rhetoric, whose wings a more exhaustive and painstaking study of the evidence might not improbably have cut. But the evidence is voluminous and complicated, and in many important points inconclusive. Wherefore rhetoric has always been the easier as well as the more effective thing. Mr. Fleming, however, has chosen the better part. He has eschewed rhetoric and devoted himself to facts. For years he has pounded away at the chronicles and the letters and the depositions, with the result that he is now able to produce the first instalment of a work of the very highest value to all historical students. The volume now before us carries the story down to Mary's flight into England on May 16, 1568. A second volume will deal with her English life, and to this Mr. Fleming defers an index and a treatment of that central and vexed question of the Casket Letters. The method adopted is, briefly, as follows. Two hundred pages contain a succinct narrative, almost colourless in its detachment from emotion, and in wording as far as possible drawn from contemporary documents, of the facts of Mary's career as Mr. Fleming sees them at the close of his investigations. Where the facts appear to be hopelessly clouded in doubt, there Mr. Fleming is content briefly to put the dilemma as it presents itself, and to leave it so, without rhetoric or the dangerous exercise of his historical imagination. Here is what he says as to that tilting-ground of the advocates, Mary's complicity in Darnley's murder:

"Mary's behaviour before and after Darnley's murder is, in the opinion of many, quite sufficient to establish her guilt. It is not easy to get over the incontrovertible outstanding facts that she was on bad terms with him until the suspicious reconciliation, which was so quickly followed by his tragic death, that the favour which she had been showing to Bothwell continued to increase, although he was commonly and justly regarded as the chief murderer: and that, in spite of the remonstrances of her outspoken friends, she married him so soon after the murder. Around these central facts are grouped multitudes of details, almost every one of which has been the subject of keen controversy. To one set of writers, the general drift of these details only shows more clearly Mary's infatuated love for Bothwell, and her determination to have him in spite of all obstacles. To another set, they furnish convincing proof that she was the unfortunate, if not helpless, victim of a huge conspiracy to hurl her from her throne. One of her most recent and most brilliant apologists is certainly not too severe on her in holding that she was not entirely unaware of the measures of the nobles to secure Darnley's removal; and 'that, if she did not expressly sanction the enterprise, she failed, firmly and promptly, to forbid its execution.' The Book of Articles and the Detection, however, represent her part of the play as far from passive. According to them, she was not only passionately enamoured of Bothwell, but bent on being rid of Darnley, whom she treacherously lured to his doom."

These pages of narrative are followed by about twice their number devoted to notes, in which Mr. Fleming goes elaborately into the detailed evidence for almost every statement that he has made in the text; enumerating references, correcting errors, and setting authority against authority. With the formal arrangement we are not well pleased. Foot notes, and not terminal ones, are almost necessary for practical convenience in using a book of this sort, and the further disfigurement of a page, which already has a dozen or so of reference-numbers hung up in it, must be put up with. But of the subject-matter, with a single exception, to which we shall refer immediately, we cannot speak too highly. As a critical history and a magazine of facts, the book is an invaluable one; its study the essential preliminary to the first steps towards an historical judgment of Mary. It will secure Mr. Fleming an honourable reputation for fine scholarship and patient industry. The itinerary alone, which he puts into an appendix, must represent months of tedious work; and the critical sagacity displayed in the sifting of the immense mass of material to be dealt with is of a very high order.

Mr. Fleming's purpose, as has been said, is to collect facts rather than to pass judgment. He is unable, however, to conceal that his bias is not on the side of those who pose as Mary's extremer champions. Our own view is as his in this matter, yet the one fault we have to find in the book is in regard to the attitude he has chosen to adopt towards the writers of Apologiae. The preface opens with a statement that in recent years the Marian controversy has become less acrimonious. Turning the page, we come on the following remarks with respect to two earlier biographers—Father Stevenson and the late Sir John Skelton:

"The former has dimmed his great reputation as an historical student by prejudice, partiality, and perversion; and the latter not only rivals him in these faults, but is so reckless in matters of fact, and so careless in quotation, that no reliance can be placed on his statements, no weight on his opinions."

This is only a sample of the temper in which these writers, and Sir John Skelton in particular, are assailed throughout Mr. Fleming's notes. "Characteristic perversity" and "a disordered imagination" are among the least of the failings imputed to Sir John. In one place he is accused of giving extracts "in his usual mangled fashion" from Knox's History; in another, of printing, not, as his language implies, actual documents, "but merely a summary—an imperfect, a misleading, a dishonest summary!" In a third, we learn that "in his apparent desire to blacken Murray he runs the risk of being deemed as unscrupulous as the English Queen whom he so heartily despises." Nor is our opinion of these controversial amenities affected by the fact that they happen to be published after Sir John Skelton's death. They were evidently intended to appear during his lifetime in the ordinary course of polemic; but even so, directed at the living and not the dead, we hold them for inexcusable. Mr. Fleming is happier in the ironic tolerance with which he treats certain enthusiastic feminine biographers of Mary. These ladies, in their ignorance and their sentimentalism, are fair, if not very difficult, game.

SCIENCE OF THE STARS.

"THE CONCISE KNOWLEDGE LIBRARY."—Astronomy. By Agnes M. Clerke, A. Fowler, and J. Ellard Gore. (Hutchinson & Co.)

In the latest Report of the United States Bureau of Ethnology there is a paper on the ceremonial dances of the peculiarly cultivated Pueblo Indians of the far southwest, from which we learn that these representatives of an aboriginal race regulate their festivals by observations of the sun. When the sun rises at a particular point on the horizon, as shown by reference to fixed marks on the landscape, they begin their ceremonies, just as the Egyptians did in their temples three or four thousand years ago. In observations of this kind, when the "lights in the firmament of the heaven" were watched "for signs and for seasons, and for days and years," we have the first stage of astronomical knowledge. The next stage in the history of the science was marked by the construction of theories to account for the observed celestial aspects; and it was not until the invention of the telescope and spectroscope that it became possible to inquire what the heavenly bodies are in themselves.

These three stages of growth are so clearly marked that they suggest the historical method as the best to follow in presenting the facts of astronomy. We should, therefore, be inclined to make Mr. Fowler's remarkably clear account of the motions of celestial bodies precede Miss Clerke's outline of astronomical history from Hipparchus to the present time, instead of follow it. Before the significance of the work of Copernicus or of Kepler can be appreciated, or such expressions as the "aberration of light" and the "nutations of the earth's axis" can be understood, it is necessary to know something about the earth and its place in the universe. Therefore, though the view of astronomical progress presented by Miss Clerke reads pleasantly enough to an astronomer, to the lay reader it would be of greater service if placed at the end rather than at the beginning of the book.

The marvellous results obtained since the spectroscope and photographic camera were requisitioned for the service of astronomy appeal to everyone's admiration. A beam of sunlight or of starlight is sifted through a wedge or prism of glass, and the skein of colour is thereby unravelled into its component threads, which the astronomer is able to identify as the light-badges of various elements. The spectroscopic prism is thus able to tell us that the sun and stars are made of materials like those which build up the earth, but at a transcendental temperature. It also shows that they are in various stages of development; or in analogy with the belief of the Micmac Indians, that the stars are camp-fires, the brighter ones being the fires of the chiefs, we may say that among the unnumbered lights which paint the sky there are some that have not long been lit—if time is reckoned in æons—and others which are on the way to extinction.

Much more might have been made of this fascinating branch of astronomy than has been done. Mr. Fowler gives a good description of the spectroscope in his section on "Geometrical Astronomy and Astronomical Instruments," but spectrum analysis applied to the stars is dismissed by Miss Clerke in a couple of pages, and though items of information as to the spectra of particular stars are scattered through Mr. Gore's section on "The Sidereal Heavens," no connected view is given of the light which the spectroscope has thrown upon the constitutions and relationships of celestial bodies.

The general objection to books of composite authorship—that the various contributions overlap one another—applies to this one. The absence of editorial powers or performances (we have not overlooked Mr. Alfred H. Miles's name as nominal editor) does not, however, seriously affect the merit of the work, which is certainly a suggestive, though not exhaustive, account of the present state of celestial science. If future volumes of the "Concise Knowledge Library" are as good as this one the publication of them will certainly assist in teaching the revelations of nature.

GIFT BOOKS.

Thomas Gainsborough: A Record of His Life and Works. By Mrs. Arthur Bell. (Bell & Sons.)

THIS volume has been produced on a scale similar to that of the study of the work of Sir E. Burne-Jones which proceeded from the same firm. It has spacious pages set in honest type and varied by a number of plates, photographically produced, of Gainsborough's pictures and sketches. Such a work gravitates to the drawing-room table as surely as a cat seeks the hearth-rug. Mrs. Bell's History of Art proves her fitness to have undertaken this monograph. Except that colour is wanting, her book supplies an adequate Gainsborough Gallery in miniature. All the favourites are here, and it is pleasant to meet with less familiar the pictures, such as some of the child subjects at the end.

People of Dickens. Drawn by C. D. Gibson. (John Lane.)

FROM this portfolio, whose superficies is midway between that of the Globe and the Daily Telegraph, we extricated six plates which, when spread out with their attendant fly-leaves, obliterated our office and everyone in it. A careful scrutiny of the pictures supports our belief that Mr. Gibson is a brilliant draughtsman; but he is a poor illustrator of English comic novels. His Scrooge is more like the Pope than Dickens' miser; Caleb Plummer's daughter is the ordinary American artist's conception of the Virgin; Mr. Micawber is a poor echo of the late Fred. Barnard; Mr. Pickwick has been sacrificed to a daring scheme of light and shade. The least unsatisfactory figures from the point of view of one that loves Dickens are Dick Swiveller and the Marchioness. None the less we can recommend the portfolio to those drawing-room tables which are extensive enough to give it harbourage, for it is certain to lead to discussions which may end in sending the disputants to Dickens again.

The Quarto. Vol. III. (Virtue & Co.)

The Quarto is visible and tangible evidence that the Slade School is not without artistic and literary aspirations. As a proof of artistic and literary capacity it is less satisfactory. Between its covers is some good, quiet, original work; we cannot say more. We miss courage, spirit, high ambition. Traces of youthfulness—and consequent crudity—one expects: they are no disgrace; but tameness is never admirable. The work of students is supplemented by reproductions after Rossetti, Sir E. J. Poynter, Sir E. Burne-Jones, Mr. George Clausen, and Mr. A. J. Gaskin. Stories, essays, music, and poems complete a mediocre volume. We regret that we have no higher praise than this.

The Art of Painting in the Queen's Reign. By A. G. Temple. (Chapman & Hall.)

THE title of this imposing work (which weighs all but five pounds avoirdupois) is almost criticism enough. One deduces the book in an instant—the reproductions from Turner and Landseer, from Millais and Rossetti, from Mr. Watts and the late Lord Leighton, from Mr. Leader and Mr. Alma Tadema, from Fred Walker and Sir E. Burne-Jones. A man who chooses such a title practically has his work done for him. Fortunately Mr. Temple has found publishers who were ready to support him nobly, and his volume of seventy-seven plates and accompanying text makes a very handsome portfolio. The text takes the form mainly of short biographical notices of the painters. Among the surprises are Mr. Whistler's "Miss Alexander," Mr. Sargent's "Mrs. Hammersley," Mr. Greiffenhagen's "Judgment of Paris" (not by any means his best work), and Mr. Lavery's "Ariadne." These are surprises because we are not yet accustomed to them in this form, but doubtless we are destined soon to be so. We think it a pity that Mr. Temple omits Mr. Clausen.

London as Seen by Charles Dana Gibson. (John Lane.)

IN this work, which is of more reasonable dimensions than the Dickens portfolio, Mr. Gibson is on surer ground. "Society" scenes are more to his taste than the characters of Pickwick: he is not truly himself except among swallow-tailed coats and low necks. The book before us contains some scores of drawings of fashionable London life, interspersed with recognisable character-studies. We like the wash drawings best, especially a crowd at a pit door in the rain. In his line drawings Mr. Gibson is unduly scratchy and harsh. They seem to need a minifying process; reduced to half they might be quite agreeable. One of the most satisfying represents "Sunday Morning near Stanhope Gate." Mr. Gibson here and there offers a written comment on the subject which he chooses for illustration.

Aquitaine: A Traveller's Tales. By Wickham Flower. Illustrated by Joseph Pennell. (Chapman & Hall.)

IN Mr. Flower's tales we are offered réchauffés of old French history. All are concerned with Poitiers, its battles, its buildings, and its saints. They are pleasantly done, but the author is unfortunate in having been preceded in this genre by the hand that wrote of "Apollo in Picardy" and "Denys L'Auxerrois." Mr. Pennell's illustrations are unequal—a few are excellent, others show signs of haste or are over mechanical. "Le Pont Joubert-Poitiers" (p. 53) is the best of all. It is firmly drawn; the composition is masterly; and it has light.

A Country Garland of Ten Songs gathered from the Hesperides of Robert Herrick. Set to Music by J. S. Moorat, with a Cover and Drawings by Paul Woodroffe. (George Allen.)

OF the music in this volume we are not prepared to speak; but we must say that if it were Mr. Woodroffe's intention to offer Mr. Walter Crane the sincerest form of flattery he could not have done it better than by putting forth these echoes from Flora's Feast. And Mr. Woodroffe is a clever and graceful draughtsman, not in the least in need of resorting for ideas to other men's work.

Lullaby Land. By Eugene Field. Illustrated by Charles Robinson. (John Lane.)

EUGENE FIELD was the author of "Wynken, Blynken and Nod," of "Little Boy Blue," "The Sugar-Plum Tree," and many other pieces which young America knows better than young England. A true lover of children, most, if not all, of his verses were composed for the delight of his own little people, and we may be sure that their purpose was fulfilled. A few verses for children which have been thus tested are worth volumes that have not. In this slender little book everything intended by Mr. Field for children is printed, together with a large number of drawings by Mr. Charles Robinson. We do not consider Mr. Robinson to be the artist that once he was. His Child's Garden of Verses had a grace and winsomeness which he now rarely reproduces; but his line is exquisite, and his invention nimble, although often over complicated. At no time, however, was he an illustrator for children, but for their elders: the audience, in short, at whom Mr. Kenneth Grahame aims his preface. Perhaps, considering that books have to reach the young vid the old, it is as well.

Other volumes of verses for children lie before us, the best of which is Singing Verses for Children, a collection of songs, pictures, and music, of American origin (Macmillan & Co.). The author is Lydia Avery Coonley, and the artist Alice Kellogg Tyler; the composers are four in number. For anyone needing simple lays for young voices these seem to be excellent. It is hard to find no encouragement for the author and artists of the other works before us; but we have no positive praise either for Baby Lays, by A. Stow and E. Calvert (Elkin Mathews), Butterfly Ballads, by Helen Atteridge and Gordon Browne (John Milne), or Songs for the Children, by Sidney Heath (Chapman & Hall). Much kindly intention must have gone to the making of these books. It is possible, too, that the critic's despair may be the child's delight. Let us leave the subject with that aspiration.

The Fairy Stepmother. By Esca Gray. (James Clarke & Co.)

A BRIGHT little story of three children who learn from their nurse, in not too gentle a fashion, that their father is about to bring home what she describes as a new "missus." The tale of their dismay, and of the expedients which they propose for averting the calamity, is cleverly told. Happily, their fears are not realised, and in place of the Gorgon of their imagination they find a "fairy stepmother." The story is very short, and leaves the reader asking for more.

Olga, by Vin Vincent (Griffith, Farran & Co.), is the story of a high-spirited, passionate boy, of an unsympathetic father, and a little girl friend. The gradual transformation of the father and the boy's self-conquest are well told. Scarlet Feathers: a Story of Adventure Among the Indians of Arizona, by Henry J. Barker (Griffith, Farran & Co.), is sufficiently full of blood-curdling adventure to delight the heart of the most exacting boy. The story is of blood-thirsty Navago and friendly Pueblo Indians. There are hair-breadth escapes from rattlesnakes and from dangers of every kind. Ida from India: a Tale for Girls, by Mrs. Herbert Martin (Griffith, Farran & Co.). A wholesome and interesting tale of the development of a spoilt child into a strong and loving character. There is a slip on page 182 that it would be well to correct. Gubbins Minor, and Some other Fellows, by Fred. Wishaw (Griffith, Farran & Co.). A lively story of school life. The incident of the stolen money is summed up too lightly. Theft is not the best opening for a career leading to the Victoria Cross. The Adventures of a Stowaway, by Fred. Wishaw (Griffith, Farran & Co.). Earth and sea conspire to give adventure to the runaway schoolboy, who is the central figure in this exciting story. It is to be hoped the perusal will not inspire many small boys to make their escape from school bedrooms by the aid of sheets, and conceal themselves on board P. & O. steamers bound for India. Miss Bobbie, by Ethel S. Turner (Ward, Lock & Co.). A capital book. The characters are as bright and sparkling as the ruddy hair of the heroine, to which she traces her hasty temper, and whose destruction she compasses with a view to improving her moral character.

BRIEFER MENTION.

London Riverside Churches. By A. E. Daniell. (Constable & Co.)

THIS is a conscientious catalogue of churches, facts, and epitaphs; but a charming subject has been treated without charm. Surely the time has come to abate books of facts about London in favour of books in which feeling and fancy have play. Mr. Daniell's industry is unimpeachable; but he can write about Chelsea Old Church with a blind eye to its place in the river landscape, with serene forgetfulness of its old character as a village church remote from London. His description of St. Mary's, Rotherhithe, would please Mr. Gradgrind, but those readers who have approached it by water, or through alleys of wharves and warehouses, and have found the light of other days brooding over the old God's-acre of the mariners, will be impatient of a chapter which does not lure one to Rotherhithe, but only makes an old church seem like other old churches.

Poems of Thomas Hood. Edited by Alfred Ainger. 2 vols. (Macmillan & Co.)

THE number of Hood's poems which people want grows less every year. To the younger generation he is probably hardly more than a name. We do not think that this ought to be the case, but there can be little doubt that it is so. Punning ballads, even the cleverest in the language, are out of fashion, and when Hood was serious he was not pre-eminent, except in very rare instances. Two volumes of Hood's poems are, therefore, extremely good measure, and must be considered a concession to old-fashioned readers who wish to be reminded of their youth. For modern taste one tiny tome would have sufficed. Speaking for ourselves, we are glad to have Canon Ainger's selection and kindly and judicious introduction. Therein he tells, with much graceful literary skill, the story of Hood's life, its struggles and melancholy, and offers a welcome eulogy of the fun of what was at once one of the gentlest and most sportive fancies that ever expressed itself on paper. This new edition is excellently published. The print is clear, the paper white and durable, the binding a wholesome red. There, also, are two portraits of the poet.

Selections from the British Satirists. With an Introductory Essay by Cecil Headlam. (F. E. Robinson.)

WITH the best will in the world to find good in this book, we are afraid we can award it only qualified praise. Mr. Headlam has certainly read up his subject conscientiously; indeed, we are inclined to think that he has read too many books. His Introduction fills seventy-two pages, and is overburdened with critical and biographical details, which had better have formed a set of notes at the end of the volume. Neither from Mr. Headlam's introduction nor from the extracts themselves can we gather that he has formed a clear conception of what manner of writer a satirist is. We find Goldsmith represented by passages from "The Traveller," "The Deserted Village," and "The Retaliation." These poems are not satires, and they contain very few satirical touches; yet Mr. Headlam prints Goldsmith's character-sketch of the schoolmaster in "The Deserted Village" as a specimen of the art! As for "The Retaliation," it is simply good-natured chaff. From Goldsmith's masterpiece of genial satire, The Citizen of the World, there is but one short extract, and that not well chosen.

Mr. Headlam does not seem to distinguish between satires and compositions containing satire; between writers who are occasionally satirical (as most writers are) and writers who have produced satires in the true sense of the term—i.e., compositions in which the satirical intention dominates and is relentlessly fulfilled. We do not mean that he omits the true satirists; on the contrary, from Dunbar to Dryden, and from Arbuthnot to Thackeray, they are represented in this volume; but the reader must bring some judgment to bear upon the book if he would gain from it a clear view of our satirical literature as a whole.

Twelve Years of a Soldier's Life. From the Letters of Major W. T. Johnson. Edited by his Widow. (A. D. Innes & Co.)

WHEN Major William T. Johnson was not fighting he was hunting; and this book tells with what zest he did both. The son of a country rector, Major Johnson was born in 1827. Rugby gave him his book-learning, and Dr. Arnold implanted in him the principles and simple faith of a soldier. At nineteen he was sworn in at the India House, and was soon sending home letters about his new life. In the years 1849-51, young Johnson seems to have had all the sport that he wanted, and he wanted a great deal. He tells in his letters of the hunting of black buck with cheetahs, but he shoots cheetahs in their turn; and glad stories of the deaths of tigers run like a refrain through this book of wars and rebellions. And, somehow, whenever he is looking for pig, Major Johnson finds a panther, or when beating for tigers he describes bears; the variety of his luck is extraordinary.

Young Johnson volunteered for service in the Crimea, and by Lord Raglan was attached to the 20th. He greatly distinguished himself at Inkermann. Mrs. Johnson, with pardonable, but needless, particularity, gives us the official correspondence by which her husband's gallantry was emphasised. His own modest account of the matter would have been enough. Returning to India, there followed him thither the first Crimean medals that entered that country. Outram now asked Johnson to come to him at Calcutta, to look after irregular cavalry. Of course, he went; Outram's invitations were not declined by men of his stamp; besides, in Oude "tigers and pigs were said to be 'walking about like cats.'" But Johnson could not rest in one place. He is soon debating this and that new activity, and he throws in a Persian campaign as if it were a holiday. Then the Mutiny. He sails from Bombay with Wilson and Havelock, and they are shipwrecked off Colombo. These men who court death on the battlefield are nearly drowned like rats. But Johnson sees all the Mutiny fighting he wants, enough to impair even his constitution. His account of Havelock and Outram's first relief of Lucknow is as stirring a bit of soldier's letter-writing as we wish to read. Illness at Alumbagh prevented him being present at the second relief and taking of Lucknow. From this illness Major Johnson recovered sufficiently to enjoy thirty-three years of happy married life in England, but not to renew his adventurous career. Yet adventures follow such men like dogs, and it is no surprise to read that "on his wedding tour, during the great struggle of Italy, he and his wife witnessed the siege of Gaeta." A book that could be made only in England.

Historical Church Atlas. By Edmund McClure, M.A. (Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.)

A GREAT deal of labour and sound scholarship has gone to the making of this atlas. The present distribution of Christian communities presided over by the Church of England throughout the world is clearly indicated. The maps of home dioceses are both interesting and useful. The historical maps will be helpful to every student of Church history and theology, from the first century downwards. They show the relations between secular and ecclesiastical history, and the geographical areas over which the great heresies moved and had sway. A full and informing text accompanies the maps.

THE ACADEMY FICTION SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1897.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

FANTASIAS.

BY GEORGE EGERTON.

The fantasias are six in number, and they are dedicated to Mr. Le Gallienne. The titles are: "The Star Worshipper," "The Elusive Melody," "The Mandrake Venus," "The Futile Quest," "The Kingdom of Dreams," and "The Well of Truth." George Egerton's fantasias do not appreciably differ from the allegories of other writers, except that her satire is more bitter. (John Lane. 156 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE MILLS OF GOD.

BY FRANCIS H. HARDY.

Mr. Hardy possesses both humour and pathos, and has them under command. His story is of New Englanders, with special reference to Jim, a simple-hearted, devoted, lovable country lad, the victim of rogues. Jim conquers in the end, but he has a very bad time en route, and the reader is well harrowed. The earlier part of the book is the racier, though all is good. Here is a scrap of Jim's philosophy: "Durn this church business! What's the good of it? Dad says I ain't, he's positive, one of the 'lect, and so I'm dead certain to git damned. Can't, fur's I see, be much more'n damned! So what's the good of all this bowing and scraping Sundays." (Smith & Elder. 310 pp. 6s.)

STRONG MEN AND TRUE.

BY MORLEY ROBERTS.

Mr. Roberts is well known as a vigorous story-teller, with a taste for hard-bitten heroes and rough life. This book is a collection of sixteen short stories, or, to use a better expression, yarns. Some of the titles: "A Dead Tramp," "In a Wind-jammer," "On a Taut Bowline," "The Affair at Big Springs," "The Gold Mine of Kertch Bar." (Downey & Co. 228 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE MARCHIONESS AGAINST THE COUNTY.

BY EDWARD H. COOPER.

A clever, well-written story by the author of Mr. Blake of Newmarket. The "Marchioness" is at first only Yvonne Renault, the seventeen-year old daughter of Lord Tunstall's French trainer. Later she is the bright particular star of the Paris music halls. Last, she is Lady Draycott with an imputed "past," and a number of county dames to reckon with. Things come to a head at a bazaar at Portsmouth, where the suspicions, hesitations, and mutual misgivings of the dames are hit off; none daring to take the initiative in snubbing or caressing Yvonne on her entrance:

"Mrs. Raleigh made a slight inclination of her head, with a piteous look on her face and tears in her eyes, as who would say: 'If you win, forgive me for not having bowed deeper; if the other people win, may I be forgiven for having done it all.'"

(Chapman & Hall. 357 pp. 6s.)

THE STATUE IN THE AIR.

BY CAROLINE EATON LE CONTE.

This little book, which is of American extraction, may be allegory or it may be pure fantasy. We know not. But if no American critic applies the native term "high falutin'" to it we shall be surprised. The personages of the story (if it be a story) have Greek names. Sometimes we are reminded of Theocritus badly translated, sometimes of Pater badly imitated, sometimes of The Shaving of Shagpat denuded of humour, and continually we have a headache. (Macmillan & Co. 120 pp. 3s. 6d.)

NURSE ADELAIDE.

BY BELTON OTTERBURN.

If Mr. Belton Otterburn would keep to the point and eschew present participles, he might some day produce a business-like story. Already, we observe, one of his books, Unrelated Twins, has reached a second edition. The story before us is of Devonshire, and an old oak bedstead and the money hidden therein, and of the man that stole it. It is interesting, but it might be so much better. By the way, an author wishing to convince his readers ought not to call a public-house "The Bull and Syphon." (Digby & Long. 350 pp. 6s.)

JOHN LEIGHTON, JUN.

BY KATRINA TRASK.

An American novel, and a fairly good one. John Leighton, jun., was an earnest sceptic, a strong, solitary man, a lawyer and a good fellow. In his childhood he had a playmate named Madelaine, whom he loved. Later, when she had become Mrs. Howland Gray, they met again and loved again. But Madelaine was like Werther's Charlotte, and John was honourable too. And then Howland Gray, who was an artist, took to drink; and Madelaine and John had a poignant interview and parted—she to reclaim Howland, and he the world. The book is really more a study of Madelaine's nature than John's. The early chapters, which deal with the children, are excellent; and it is interesting throughout. (Harper & Brothers. 252 pp.)

MY SISTER BARBARA.

BY LADY POORE.

The sub-title of this story is "Passages from the Diary of Diana Russell, kept for the benefit of her Husband, Captain Geoffrey Russell, R.E., during his absence with a Special Commission in Central Asia." Diana and her sister Barbara join their grandmother for the summer at her cottage on Sandbury Common, and begin to make the acquaintance of the country gentry and their families. These do not promise well. The Hodsons and the Durants "did so nearly the same things on Tuesday and Wednesday as on Monday, that unless they were placed under a microscope no difference could be detected." But Diana is a witty observer, and Barbara falls in love; and the reader may expect to enjoy this story of small happenings and small talk. (Downey & Co. 163 pp. 1s.)

THE DEVIL IN A DOMINO.

BY "CHAS. L'EPINE."

The hero of this story is introduced as the son of a scoundre father and a drunken mother. The author seems to have set himself to devise a career for their son which should exemplify the most awful workings of heredity. In this he has succeeded; but only by means too crude for art, and too horrible for enjoyment. Of course he calls it "a realistic study." (Laurence Greening & Co. 128 pp. 1s.)

GIRLS WILL BE GIRLS.

BY FLORENCE WARDEN.

Miss Warden made her name with The House on the Marsh, that gruesome fantasy; but the reader will find no traces of that book in her new story, Girls will be Girls, which is sprightly: not tragedy, but comedy. Indeed, it suggests the stage continually. It tells of love and theft and cross purposes and still more love, and at the end Berkeley marries Tabby. (F. V. White & Co. 296 pp. 6s.)

A FAIR IMPOSTOR.

BY ALAN ST. AUBYN.

A story, by the author of A Proctor's Wooing, laid in Exmoor:

"Next came the moor-land,
The moor-land, the moor-land—
Next came the moor-land,
It stretched for many a mile."

The heroine is a wild, free spirit, yet pure and gentle—Celia Carmichael, the daughter of a withered and disappointed rector who had married his housekeeper, a woman of the common folk. Celia combines the native strength of the rural race with the refinement of a higher one. A Princess Bordonne who arrives at Stoke

Edith in her steam-yacht and rents Gallantry Bower (what a capital name for a romantic old house!) plays an important negative part in the story, which abounds in pleasant descriptions of scenery and is commendably free from dialect. (F. V. White & Co. 288 pp. 6s.)

By FAR EUPHRATES.

By D. ALCOCK.

We hesitate to call this a "novel"; the author calls it a tale. It is a tale of the Armenian massacres built up carefully on ascertained facts, and written "to strengthen our own faith and quicken our own love." (Hodder & Stoughton. 376 pp.)

WHAT SHALL IT PROFIT A MAN?

By VIOLET TWEEDALE.

It will not profit him much to read this novel, for it is wordy and unreal. If vulgarity was the end striven for the authoress has succeeded well. We are introduced to good society at once—the Squire who can say nothing without "damn," and who at Cambridge "kept the harriers and skipped the chapels"; his wife, the daughter of the Duke of St. Austin's and Lady Augusta Mount-royal; and so on. (Digby & Long. 344 pp. 6s.)

THE MANSLAUGHTER OF DELISHYA!

By MERRICK O'RELLI.

A skit on Miss Corelli's The Murder of Delicia. Belated, vulgar, and wholly superfluous. (The Roxburghe Press. 84 pp. 1s.)

THE ADVENTURES OF A SIBERIAN CUB.

We know not who wrote this book, but the present English translation is by M. Léon Golschmann. The original is Russian. The Siberian cub is a bear named Mishook, a most engaging creature, and the story is of its adventures. Mr. Bret Harte's "Baby Sylvester" was not more charming. There are pictures. (Jarrold & Sons. 194 pp. 3s. 6d.)

REVIEWS.

Poor Little Bella. By F. C. Philips.
(Downey & Co.)

Ethel Newcome found it trying to be ticketed "Sold" in the matrimonial market. What would she have said to being hawked about from town to town, like a trinket in a pedlar's bag? That is the plight of Poor Little Bella. Her mamma is one of those formidable ladies whom we hear of chiefly as mothers-in-law. She is an "Honourable," and lives up to it as well as she can on a slender income in shabby lodgings in Hampstead. That is to say,

"she breakfasted in bed, rose at ten o'clock, and then took a disdainful stroll to order the day's comestibles and inspect the shelves of the circulating library from which she borrowed her books. The assumption of superiority with which she invariably insulted the tradespeople, who would rather have been spared her petty custom, and the air with which she always repeated 'The Honourable Mrs. Dyce,' though they knew her perfectly, was a sight for the gods. I discovered that once a month or so she informed the landlady she had come to Hampstead to look for a house, and temporarily resigned herself to lodgings because there was not an hotel in the neighbourhood. To corroborate the falsehood, she made a practice, when the woman was in the room, of gazing at the objects that met her view with a faint and wondering smile, as if they were phenomena of nature. 'Any one in my position is bound to be so careful,' she explained to me; 'people think it so strange of me to be here.'"

It is a sore grievance with this lady that her daughter remains unmarried; and there is more scolding, more recrimination, more washing of dirty linen, more violence done to the Fifth Commandment in this book than can easily be found in any other 300 pages of fiction. There is a gleam of hope in the maternal breast when Bella makes the acquaintance of a Mr. Ogilvie during a visit, and he promises to call. But he does not.

"I shall never, if I live to be a hundred, forget my mother's furious reproaches when she realised that Mr. Ogilvie would never come. . . . I was a failure, a bitter failure. I had had plenty of opportunities to make a brilliant marriage. I had stayed in the best houses: she had crippled her income to provide good outfits: I had evidently determined to be a burden upon her all my life, to live in absolute idleness, and develop into a wretched old maid."

So, hearing of a wealthy, middle-aged, and unmarried rector in the country, the Honourable Mrs. Dyce carries off Bella with the intention of capturing the good man by force. She would have succeeded had she not made her plans so badly that the rector overheard them. Then they go to Brighton on a similar quest, where the reappearance of Mr. Ogilvie, in company with his sister-in-law, affords fine opportunity for the dowager's strategy.

"Before I could decide whether to tell my mother or not, Mr. Ogilvie and I were face to face.

He looked conscious, hesitated; and I bowed.

'Oh, how do you do, Miss Dyce?'

'Oh, how are you? Let me introduce you. Mr. Ogilvie—my mother.'

'I am delighted to meet you, Mr. Ogilvie,' she exclaimed. 'I have heard of you from Bella so often.'

'You are very kind,' he murmured; 'at Lady Parminter's I had the pleasure—er. Are you staying down here?'

'Bella has been very ill,' she answered, the gush of her greeting subsiding into sadness. 'She was ordered away. I feared at one time I was going to lose her, Mr. Ogilvie.'

'I am very sorry. There has been a deal of sickness this winter, has there not? Really terrible.'

My mother sighed. 'Bella's illness was inexplicable,' she said. 'It was nothing that was about. The doctors were puzzled to account for it.'

Mr. Ogilvie shuffled; and I wished the Parade would yawn and swallow me."

So they dog the poor man, entangle him in discussions on the ideal wife, and generally behave in a way which, while it would be diverting on the stage, is rather too pronounced to be good form even at Brighton—or Hastings, whither the Honourable lady pursues her quarry. Mr. Philips cannot, we think, be held guiltless of straining his situations beyond the tension proper for a novel. We have match-making mammas in plenty, but surely their manoeuvring is more delicate, their hints are less outspoken, their methods savour less of intimidation than those of the Honourable Mrs. Dyce? Of course she fails. As a matter of fact, the desirable Ogilvie turns out in the end to be a married man—so far as the term applies to a man who has married his sister-in-law in Australia—and Poor Little Bella finds an affinity on her own responsibility. The mechanism of the story is clever, though the characters do not entirely convince; and the narrowness of its scope—for the book is, after all, mostly occupied with sordid squabbles between mother and daughter—is something of a handicap. We have had libraries of novels founded on breaches of the Sixth and Seventh Commandments. Mr. Philips seems to have aimed at rescuing the Fifth from the neglect with which writers of fiction have treated it.

* * * *

His Grace of Osmonde. By Frances Hodgson Burnett.
(Warne & Co.)

"There are more forces in this universe than man has so far discovered, and so, not dreaming of them, can neither protect himself against, nor aid them in their workings if he would."

'Tis, as Mrs. Hodgson Burnett might say in her archaic fashion, a clumsy sentence, and begins the twelfth chapter in her new book. Unhappily, it is typical of many that disfigure the volume, but when you have struggled to its meaning you will find in it an explanation of the book's failings and of its worth.

For the author's idealism that created this story has escaped her control: she has been unable to protect herself against its faults, or to aid its workings by her art. The subject of A Lady of Quality so fascinated her as to impel her to treat it once again, using the very same persons and plot, and sometimes even the same conversations, as before. Certainly it was a fine subject, and its beauty and interest are enhanced by this addition; yet the author's enthusiasm for it is more likely to increase our esteem for her as a woman than our belief in her as an artist, for it has betrayed her into a multitude of errors. She has forgotten the existence of Realism; her characters all talk alike; she bombards us with accounts of her hero's virtues; will allow him no vices or even human weaknesses; and so overloads him with sentiment that we are inclined to toss her book aside and call for the daily paper.

And then her idealism is for ever trying to sing, so that each page and almost every paragraph bursts into unsuspected blank verse, until the reader can do nothing but listen for the beat of it. This is worse than the clumsiness already quoted; for that, at least, can be understood, but this mesmerises one's judgment, and leaves the reader as unprotected as was the writer against the force of her ideal.

On the other hand, the unaided workings of enthusiasm have produced in his Grace of Osmonde a figure of undeniable beauty. We have so much conscious art now-a-days, so much realistic prying and anatomising, that the sight of something purely ideal and warm from the heart is moving and delightful. All Mrs. Burnett's literary sins may be all but forgiven, for the really fine conception which accompanies them. And yet the pity of it that her ideal man and woman are not more lifelike! His Grace, as we see him, is a kind of shadowy King Arthur: and even at that he is so pleasing a figure that it is a shame to find fault. His picture should certainly be acquired by readers, to be placed side by side with that of his wife, a lady of quality.

* * *
A Prince of Mischance. By Tom Gallon.
(Hutchinson & Co.)

The Joy of My Youth. By Claud Nicholson.
(Elkin Mathews.)

We liked Mr. Gallon's Tatterley and we like this new story better. A boy and two girls are brought up together in a little West-country village; and to this remote place comes a young foreign prince—washed up in a wreck on the shore. Years afterwards they separate—the two girls, Lucy and Evelyn to marry strangers, and the boy to live a lonely life in London on a bare income. Then the tragic possibility begins to manifest itself. Both the young wives are unhappy in marriage—the one from mere frivolity of nature, the other from a real and abiding sorrow. To the life of the second the Greek prince enters, still bearing the memory of his boyish friendship. But the woman has no love to give, her nature is stripped bare of all but a clinging tenderness for the other boy and the sister who had been her companions in childhood. As soon as she is freed from the blackguard she had married, she flies to her sister's arms, only to find that the prince has followed her, and made her submission to him the price of her sister's salvation. She pays the price and obeys him, but he has put the way of escape into her hands and she kills herself. Some years afterwards he is wrecked a second time on the same shore, and buried by her side in the lonely churchyard.

The plot sounds strange in the telling, but in reality the materials are not new in fiction. The same scenes have been used a thousand times with varying success. It is just this feeling of an imperfect detachment from the common material which we call lack of distinction that forms the one unsatisfactory thing in Mr. Gallon's work. One may object, too, that all the people are conceived in a slightly rhetorical vein, raised, if we may put it so, a power too high to produce the complete effect of reality. The author makes certain of his characters talk in a sort of sentimental blank-verse and scatters the epithets of affection too freely. Evelyn in particular is a "lady who protests too much." But he has the primary fictional qualities, a feeling for the broad aspects of character, and a conception of close narrative ending in the dramatic. The book has interest and power; the work is good, and might easily become very good as the author learns the tricks of his craft. For he has a kindly, shrewd knowledge of life, a real gift for striking incident, and a certain simplicity and directness which gives high promise.

To turn to Mr. Nicholson is to be induced to wildly over-estimate the other's work. To struggle through The Joy of My Youth is to set a premium straightway on simple narrative. The book seems—we dare not be dogmatic—to be the record of the doings of an unhealthy freakish child, who grows into a nervous wreck of a man, cuts a few silly antics, and then commits the inevitable suicide. A Greek chorus is supplied by a plaster Virgin and a Siamese Idol, who keep up a running commentary on events. The hero, we are told, "lacked the virile sexuality of a strong man; if he performed, he did so for his own amusement and gave himself pennies, as to a street monkey." He gave lectures where "he bounced to his feet with a frown, added a few unintelligible words, and disappeared with a final shake of his mane of hair." He was also a journalist using M.S. books: "red ones (passionate), blue (melancholy), and black ones (lugubrious)." The whole book is flabby and pretentious, the outlines blurred, the style inconsiderable. A certain easy prettiness in descriptive writing seems the author's one endowment. The thing is a type of much flatulent work which is turned out to-day with desperate facility, where meaningless interjections are made to supply deficiencies, and eccentricity fills the place of merit.

* * *
A Crawl of Irish Stories. By Jane Barlow.
(Methuen & Co.)

The name of Jane Barlow appended to a collection of Irish stories commands a welcome from all who know her strong and graphic handling of the incidents of Irish peasant life. The longest tale in the book, The Key of the Chest, has charm, but it is sad. Indeed, the stories are almost all pathetic. There is very little of the light-hearted gaiety generally associated with the Celtic character. Even when the narrative is cheerful one is conscious of a background of grey skies and boggy pastures through which stalks the figure of Famine. The key-note of the Irish character as interpreted by Miss Barlow would seem to be strong affection: shown first in the love of kith and kin, and then in a passionate devotion to the "Ould Country." The heroine of the first story, The Key of the Chest, belongs to the "quality," but her fate is little happier than that of her peasant neighbours. A little child living in reduced circumstances, her imagination is fired by the old butler's descriptions of the silver that had adorned her old home, where, according to him, "the full moon on a dark night was a joke to the big salvers." Eileen could not question her aunt or her mother on these wonders, for she soon found that any such allusion "was a grave misdemeanour, which made her invalid mother cry, and her melancholy aunt scold." She wanted to know what had become of all those most beautiful silver things that Timothy talked about—the great shining salvers, the claret-jugs, the tankards and flagons, the piles "as high as your head, Miss Eileen," of plates with a polish on them "the stars in the sky might be the better of gettin'," and the grand potato-rings, and the frosted cake-basket, and the tall up-urny, which seemed to be a marvellous composition of lights and flowers." The child believes that these splendours have been hidden away for safety, and that they are ultimately to be hers. The story tells of the dream she dreams and of its tragic ending.

* * *
For Prince and People. By E. K. Sanders.
(Macmillan & Co.)

Mr. Sanders makes his début under good auspices, but we are not impressed by the performance. He writes about men as a lady carefully nurtured in the traditions of Miss Yonge might write, but there is no feminine observation in his brief sketches of women. The book, in short, is a prettily told story of Fieschi and Dorias, very suitable to be bestowed on an intelligent school girl, in whom it might quicken enthusiasm for the romance of Italian history; but the adult reader will find it difficult to be interested in the adventures of Oberto, the nameless youth who goes out to seek his fortune, and finds himself enlisted in the following of Giau Luigi Fiesco. All the series of events which culminates in Oberto's discovery that he is no other than the legitimate heir of Andrea Doria, and his heroic renunciation of all that this implies, is conceived in the spirit of well-worn convention. The last scenes in the book have plainly been written first as a verse drama, and nothing in the world is more exasperating than mutilated blank verse masquerading as prose. Instance:

"Verrina seized him by the shoulder and pulled him forward, forcing him upon his knees beside the body. 'See,' he said, 'I did not stab him; such a death were too honourable. | Mark the cord round his neck, and, see, his hands are tied; surely I am | a proper hangman marred by circumstance! | I was not hasty; no, I was bound to do | my office delicately or not at all. | We met just by the postern, | and in the fervour of my embrace he fell. | The rest was easy; [but] when his hands were bound | and the noose [lightly] pressing on his neck we had | a moment's conversation, he and I.'"

This sort of thing will not do; it is utterly false in key. If Mr. Sanders means to go on with romance of the dagger and phial order, he should go to school to Mr. Stanley Weyman; at present he is not within measurable distance of Mr. Weyman's half-a-dozen imitators.

NURSES OF GREAT BRITAIN

AND

Merit, and Merit alone, has made the Food Beverage, Dr. Tibbles' Vi-Cocoa, a Proved Success, and the remarkable unsolicited evidence from Nurses in all parts of the country, herewith published, supports our statement that its merits have been recognised to an extent hitherto unknown in the history of any preparation. One thing is certain Nothing has ever been discovered that can approach it in giving lightness of heart, joy of life, fleetness of foot, and that general feeling of comfort which only comes from a full capacity to enjoy every pleasure, moral, intellectual, and physical.

THE MOST REMARKABLE TESTIMONY EVER PUBLISHED. NURSES AND DR. TIBBLES' VI-COCOA.

A REAL PICK-ME-UP.

Nurse F. GEORGE, Devonport Hill, Congleton :
"I have tried Dr. Tibbles' Vi-Cocoa, and think it is a real 'pick-me-up,' and intend to use no other."

GIVES GREAT SATISFACTION.

Nurse WILKINSON, 30, Russell Street, Clitheroe :
"Dr. Tibbles' Vi-Cocoa gives every satisfaction, and I shall not fail to recommend it to my friends and patients."

BOTH MEAT AND DRINK.

Nurse WEAVER, The Parsonage, Rickmansworth, Herts :
"My brother has tried Dr. Tibbles' Vi-Cocoa, and thinks it is both meat and drink."

GREAT BENEFIT TO INVALIDS.

Nurse VILLAGE, Linton, near Maidstone :
"I have proved Dr. Tibbles' Vi-Cocoa to be of great benefit to invalids, as it is so easily digested."

REFRESHING, STIMULATING, PLEASANT.

Nurse SUNDERLAND, Shewview Villa, Cheam-road, Sutton, Surrey :
"I have tried Dr. Tibbles' Vi-Cocoa, and find it a refreshing, stimulating, and pleasant beverage. I shall have pleasure in recommending it to my friends and relations."

FOR EXCELLENCE.

Nurse GILKES, 11, St. Paul's-square, Southsea :
"I think Dr. Tibbles' Vi-Cocoa is excellent, and very good for those who suffer from indigestion. This I know practically."

NO PRAISE TOO HIGH.

Nurse SAFFREY, The Cottage, Hoddesden-road, Belvedere, Kent :
"I am pleased to say I think more of the merits of Dr. Tibbles' than even the praise already bestowed upon it."

FOR PHYSICAL AND MENTAL SUFFERING.

Nurse CLARE, "The Laurels," Langley :
"I have much pleasure in bearing testimony to the value of Dr. Tibbles' Vi-Cocoa, as I find it most beneficial to persons suffering physically and mentally. It is most nutritive and extremely pleasant to take, and I shall strongly recommend it to my patients."

NOURISHING AND STIMULATING.

Nurse HARRINGTON, Coxhoe, Durham :
"Dr. Tibbles' Vi-Cocoa possesses good nourishing and stimulating qualities. I shall certainly recommend it to my patients and friends."

INVALUABLE FOR NIGHT DUTY.

Nurse WILCOX, Bradford-street, Birmingham :
"I always take a cup of Dr. Tibbles' Vi-Cocoa when on night duty."

HIGHLY PLEASED WITH IT.

Nurse ROBERTS, Ryecroft Villa, 20, St. James's Street Southport :
"We are highly pleased with Dr. Tibbles' Vi-Cocoa. I think it possesses good nourishing and stimulating qualities. I shall recommend it to all my patients and friends."

THE BEST EVER TASTED.

Nurse E. BOWEN, 8, Evershot Road, Tollington Park, N. :
"I consider Dr. Tibbles' Vi-Cocoa the very best cocoa that I have tasted. I find it more refreshing and invigorating than any other. I have been giving it to my patients, and shall certainly recommend it both to my patients and personal friends."

FINDS IT EXCELLENT.

Nurse SCHOFIELD, Rathgar, Dublin :
"I have tested Dr. Tibbles' Vi-Cocoa and find it excellent, and will recommend it to my patients and friends."

FOR SICK ROOM AND BREAKFAST TABLE.

Nurse E. BEASLEY, 31, Blenheim Gardens, Reading :
"I wish to say that I have found Dr. Tibbles' Vi-Cocoa of great value both in the sick room and on the breakfast table. I use it myself, and can honestly say that it is the most genuine and superior cocoa that can be obtained. I always advise my patients to try it, and when they do they find that it is better and suits their digestion better than any cocoa they have ever tried. I shall always have great pleasure in recommending Dr. Tibbles' Vi-Cocoa, as I am sure it has no equal."

LIKES IT VERY MUCH.

Nurse SESSIONS, Cotteswold House, Cirencester :
"I have tested Dr. Tibbles' Vi-Cocoa, and like it very much. I shall have pleasure in recommending it to all my patients and friends."

REFRESHING AND NUTRITIOUS.

Nurse GUTHRIE, 37, Broadhinton-road, Clapham, S.W. :
"I like Dr. Tibbles' Vi-Cocoa very much, and must say that it is most refreshing and nutritious, and I shall certainly recommend it with great pleasure to any patients and friends."

WILL ALWAYS USE IT.

Nurse A. STEWART, Atkinson Morley's Hospital, Wimbledon, S.W. :
"It is excellent. I will always use it, and will recommend it whenever possible."

USES WHEN ON NIGHT DUTY.

Nurse READ, 16, Parkhill Road, Hampstead, N.W. :
"I shall continue to take Dr. Tibbles' Vi-Cocoa, as I find it most sustaining, especially when on night duty. I will not fail to recommend it to all my patients and friends."

IS APPRECIATED BY MILLIONS

AND

AS A WINTER BEVERAGE IS UNEQUALLED.

IT CAN BE TESTED FREE, AND THOSE WHO TRY IT BUY IT.

Address (a Postcard will do), but mention THE ACADEMY,

DR. TIBBLES' VI-COCOA, Ltd., 60, 61, 62, BUNHILL ROW, LONDON, E.C.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1897.

No. 1336, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . .	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE following is a fairly close translation of some verses published in the Paris Gaulois on the proposal to found an English Academy of Letters. In the spelling of the Swan of Avon's name the translator has followed the French writer:

The dear John Bull we love so well
Would have, he vowed, his Immortels,
The same as France,—why shouldn't he?—
No matter what the cost might be.

Our neighbours hunted everywhere
For Forty who deserved a Chair:
And one found Dickens, Byron one,
And still another, Avon's Swan.

So then, to make the Forty even,
Were wanted merely thirty-seven;
Yet, after Byron, Shakespeare was,
They knew, alone the peer of 'Boz.'

A million pounds would John have paid
To see his Forty on parade:

'There's Dickens—1,' reflected he,
'And Byron—2, and Shakespeare—3,
'But they're the best'—he scratched his head—
'And they, confound it all! are dead.

Such is French satire!

HEINE's centenary has prompted four contributions to Cosmopolis: a critical retrospect by Prof. Dowden, a fragment of imaginary biography by Mr. I. Zangwill, and estimates of the poet by M. Edouard Rod and Herr Karl Frenzel. Mr. Zangwill's daring experiment (which appears also in the Atlantic Monthly) is the most interesting. After steeping himself in Heine's life, works, and letters, and Heine literature generally, the novelist has constructed, under the title "From a Mattress Grave," a scene which we are easily persuaded might actually have happened. Many of Heine's famous sayings are incorporated. It is a brilliant tour de force.

FICTION is continually giving Nature hints, of which she avails herself. No sooner is Mr. Wells's Martian story, The War of the Worlds, finished, than the report reaches us from America of an aerolite which has been found at Binghamton, New York. According to the story, Prof. Jeremiah McDonald was returning home at an early hour, when there was a blinding flash of light, and an object buried itself in the ground a short distance from his premises. Later it was dug up, and proved to be a mass of whitish metal that had been fused by heat. It was still hot. When cooled and broken open, inside it was found a piece of metal on which were a number of curious marks like written characters.

THE theory is, that the written characters form a message addressed to us from another world, probably Mars. We regret that the projectile fell in a land so prodigal of tall stories as America, but we congratulate Mr. Wells.

INCIDENTALLY we might quote a letter which has some bearing on the question of aerolites, and is also useful in showing what kind of requests sometimes find their way to this office. It is from a gentleman at Haarlem, and runs as follows: "In my possession I have a great meteorolite of a weight of 4 Kilogram and 3 Hectogram, and long about 20 Centimeter heigh about 20 c M and broad about 10 c M, which should be found in Egypte about 1860, and brought with to here by a dokter of the marine. The stone has the utter appearance quite like that wich is found in the renowned Musee of Teyler van der Hulst at Haarlem, only it is about tence (=10) as tall. Because I mean that generally you can say that as a rule meteorolites are not greater than a man's fist, so this stone can have a great value. Therefore I hope to may ask you to tell me if this stone can have a great value and how much, and where I could find a buyer fore that. If you will be so kind to answer in your book so I thank you very much previously." We know not what say in reply.

IN this, the last number of the New Review in its present form, its departing editor, Mr. Henley, prints one of his infrequent poems. The form is the quatorzain, with which of late he has been experimenting; the subject, his friend and first school-master, the late T. E. Brown. It is such a tribute as Mr. Brown himself would have liked best:

"IN MEMORIAM.

T. E. B.

(Ob. October 30, 1897).

He looked half-parson and half-skipper: a quaint,
Beautiful blend, with blue eyes good to see
And old-world whiskers. You found him cynic, saint,
Salt, humorist, Christian, poet; with a free
Far-glancing, luminous utterance; and a heart
Large as St. Francis's: withal a brain
Stored with experience, letters, fancy, art,
And scored with runes of human joy and pain.

Till six-and-sixty years he used his gift,
His gift unparalleled, of laughter and tears,
And left the world a high-piled golden drift
Of verse: to grow more golden with the years,
Till the Great Silence fallen upon his ways Breaks into song, and he that had Love hath Praise."

The poem reminds us a little of Mr. Henley's description of R. L. Stevenson in the sonnet entitled "Apparition." In such portraiture he excels; and we should like more of it.

IN the same number of the New Review an anonymous critic writes well of Mr. Brown, from the point of view of a Manxman. It is a good article. To the ordinary reader it will seem to have been suggested by Mr. Brown's death; but as a matter of fact the first draft was completed before that unhappy event occurred.

THE Oxford Union has been debating the question, whether or not the Kailyard School of Fiction is to be condemned. After a brisk engagement, it was decided that the Kailyard School of Fiction is not condemnable. But the Northerners had a very narrow escape; for the majority in their favour was only 2—58 to 56. The leader of the attack was Mr. Buchan, of Brazenose, who began by welcoming Mr. Crockett's recent assertion that golf is the serious business of life; and he ended, says the Isis, by making a very striking exposition of the nature of the real Scotland, the romance and the pity of its history, which he placed in strong contrast with the narrow, parochial view of Scottish character spread by these writers. Mr. Ensor, of Balliol, was the principal champion of the Kailyard; but it was the merits of Mr. J. M. Barrie that saved the school.

MR. HENRY NEWBOLT, whose small volume of patriotic verse, Admirals All, has been received with so much enthusiasm, is a young barrister. A characteristic piece, "Drake's Drum," is quoted in our "Book Reviews Reviewed" column. Mr. Newbolt has also written plays, one of which will be published by Mr. Lane next year.

COLONEL HIGGINSON, continuing his reminiscences in the Atlantic Monthly, writes this month of "Literary London Twenty Years Ago." Some of his stories are good reading. This of Darwin it is pleasant to meet with:

"I remember that at my first visit, in 1872, I was telling him of an address before the Philological Society by Dr. Andrew J. Ellis, in which he had quoted from Alice in the Looking Glass the description of what were called portmanteau words, into which various meanings were crammed. As I spoke, Mrs. Darwin glided quietly away, got the book, and looked up the passage. 'Read it out, my dear,' said her husband; and as she read the amusing page, he laid his head back and laughed heartily. Here was the man who had revolutionised the science of the world, giving himself wholly to the enjoyment of Alice and her pretty nonsense. Akin to this was his hearty enjoyment of Mark Twain, who then had hardly begun to be regarded as above the Josh Billings grade of humorist; but Darwin was amazed that I had not read The Jumping Frog, and said that he always kept it by his bedside for midnight amusement."

One may share the naturalist's enthusiasm, yet shrink from the task of reading The Jumping Frog continually.

MATTHEW ARNOLD, who it may be remembered, in his last essay—on "Civilisation in the United States"—poked some gentle fun at Colonel Higginson, did not much please our visitor. "Arnold seemed to me," Colonel Higginson writes, "personally, as he had always seemed in literature, a keen, but by no means judicial critic, and in no proper sense a poet. That he is held to be such is due, in my judgment, only to the fact that he has represented the passing attitude of mind in many cultivated persons."

WITH Carlyle Colonel Higginson walked from Chelsea to Hyde Park. He gives the following incident:

"At one point on our way some poor children were playing on a bit of rough ground lately included in a park, and they timidly stopped their frolic as we drew near. The oldest boy, looking from one to another of us, selected Carlyle as the least formidable, and said, 'I say, mister, may we roll on this here grass?' Carlyle stopped, leaning on his staff, and said in his homeliest accents, 'Yes, my little fellow, ye may r-r-roll at discraytion'; upon which the children resumed their play, one little girl repeating his answer audibly, as if in a vain effort to take in the whole meaning of the long word."

Colonel Higginson remarks also that it was noticeable that in Chelsea the passers-by regarded Carlyle with a sort of familiar interest, farther off with undisguised curiosity (such was his attire), and at Hyde Park again with recognition.

THE following story of the late George du Maurier is well found:

"I ventured," says Colonel Higginson, "to put to him the bold question how he could justify himself in representing the English people as so much handsomer than they or any other modern race—as I considerably added—really are. This roused him, as was intended; he took my remark very good-humouredly, and pleaded guilty at once, but said that he pursued this course because it was much pleasanter to draw beauty than ugliness, and, moreover, because it paid better. 'There is Keene,' said he, 'who is one of the greatest artists now living, but people do not like his pictures as well as mine, because he paints people as they really are.'"

THE following stanzas, entitled "A Song of Grief: for William Morris," appear in the Quarterly Latin, the organ of the American and English art students in Paris. They are signed Gertrude Bartlett:

"He was our best beloved; the dear friend
Who gave his hand in aid with love to each:
Our wisest teacher, who with patient speech
Taught the long road through which our feet should wend.

He was our chief: and with undaunted breast

He led our march along its darkened way;
And when about the bivouac lights we lay
His golden lyre beguiled our souls to rest."

THE editor of one of the leading American magazines has handed to the editor of the New York Critic the following letter from a would-be contributor:

"GENTLEMEN, DEAR SIRs:

"I have enclosed a beautiful peace of poetry, which I would like to sell for what ever you think it worth. It was wrote and composed by myself. I have quite a number of beautiful poetry, this being the first I attempted to send out I hope I may be successful with it. If you don't find it of any value at all Please be so kind and return it to me again you will find enclosed a stamp.

"I am very truly yours. Please address
"Miss _____."

The "peace of poetry," says the Critic, was a beautiful one, and has been so esteemed for many years; for it was nothing more nor less than Burns's "To Mary in Heaven," copied in an illiterate handwriting, rechristened "My Darling in Heaven," and otherwise marred by two or three errors in transcription! The editor wrote to the young lady who claimed to have "wrote and composed" it, to ask if she knew that in offering to sell as her own a published poem by someone else she laid herself open to the charge of seeking to obtain money under false pretences. Her answer, if there was one, is not given.

THE Literary Year Book, which Mr. George Allen publishes, is in future to be edited by Mr. Joseph Jacobs. The change was necessary, as our review of the first issue made clear. Mr. Jacobs is a capable literary man, qualified to make the annual really representative and useful.

THE New York Times has recently begun to publish every Saturday a supplement, consisting of sixteen pages of reviews of literature and art, somewhat on the lines of the weekly literary number of the Paris Figaro. The result is bright and readable, but not, we think, quite deserving of the praise contained in the following letter to the editor, printed in the copy which has just reached us. Even an editor who liked flattery, as Colonel Higginson (quoting the late Lord Houghton) says Tennyson did—"unmixed"—would blink at these raptures: "Your last issue, November 20, is the best piece of newspaper work I ever saw. It is the Saturday Review, the Athenaeum, the Temple Bar, and the London World all in one. It is perfectly wonderful."

THE editor of the Quarterly has addressed to our contemporary, Literature, a letter upon which we cannot congratulate him. The reference is to the review of minor poets in the current number of his periodical, upon which we have already commented. In that review Mr. Alfred Austin is placed last on a list of seventeen. In criticising the article, our young contemporary described this choice of position as "a somewhat contemptible mode of attack" distinctly "unworthy of a sportsman."

THE editor's letter, which is some seven hundred words in length, does little to mend matters. The last place, he says, is often a place of distinction, and no insult was intended. True; but see what the Quarterly reviewer wrote of the gentleman chosen to fill this distinguished place:

"But what, finally, are we to 'say of the Poet Laureate.' We are reminded of a story about Cherubini at a first rehearsal of his pupil's opera. 'Mais, maestro, vous ne dites rien,' was Halévy's exclamation at the master's silence. 'Ni vous aussi,' was the dry rejoinder. The fact is, that Mr. Austin has said nothing, though he has said it nicely."

And elsewhere the Quarterly's compliment to Mr. Austin is qualified by such a phrase as "constantly insignificant."

AT the meeting of the Omar Khayyam Club on Wednesday, Colonel John Hay, the American Ambassador, made some eloquent and interesting remarks on the Persian poet. We extract a few sentences:

"Could it be possible that in the eleventh century, so far away as Khorassan, so accomplished a man of letters lived, with such distinction, such breadth, such insight, such calm disillusion, such cheerful and jocund despair? Was this Weltschmerz, which we thought a malady of our day, endemic in Persia in 1100? My doubt lasted only till I came upon a literal translation of the Rubaiyat, and I saw that not the least remarkable quality of Fitz-Gerald's poem was its fidelity to the original. Omar sang to a half barbarous province; Fitz-Gerald to the world. Wherever the English speech is spoken or read, the Rubaiyat have taken their place as a classic. There is not a hill-post in India, nor a village in England, where there is not a coterie to whom Omar Khayyam is a familiar friend and a bond of union. I heard him quoted once in one of the most lonely and desolate spots of the high Rockies. We had been camping on the Great Divide, our 'roof of the world,' where in the space of a few feet you may see two springs, one sending its waters to the Polar solitudes, the other to the eternal Carib summer. One morning at sunrise as we were breaking camp, I was startled to hear one of our party, a frontiersman born, intoning these words of sombre majesty:

"Tis but a tent where takes his one day's rest
A Sultan to the realm of death addressed.

The Sultan rises and the dark Ferrash

Strikes, and prepares it for another guest."

I thought that sublime setting of primeval forest and pouring cañon was worthy of the lines; I am sure the dewless, crystalline air never vibrated to strains of more solemn music. Certainly, our poet can never be numbered among the great popular writers of all time. He has told no story; he has never unpacked his heart in public; he has never thrown the reins on the neck of the winged horse, and let his imagination carry him where it listed. But he will hold a place for ever among that limited number who, like Lucretius and Epicurus—without rage or defiance, even without unbecoming mirth—look deep into the tangled mysteries of things; refuse credence to the absurd, and allegiance to arrogant authority; sufficiently conscious of fallibility to be tolerant of all opinions; with a faith too wide for doctrine and a benevolence untrammelled by creed; too wise to be wholly poets, and yet too surely poets to be implacably wise."

SOME YOUNGER REPUTATIONS.

MRS. HINKSON.

LOVE is her note, earthly and divine. She is all the more tender, all the more certain, in her handling of human affection, since she believes that it has its abiding place on the far side of the grave. The "kindred points of heaven and home" are hers; but they become more than kindred in her heart—they are one. It is this note that she has managed to convey to readers in language singularly expressive of it, and with mastery of a variety of metres. An Irish poet, Katharine Tynan (to call Mrs. Hinkson by her maiden name) began to write at an early age. Her first "note-book" was kept while she was at school, in the North of Ireland, and at seventeen she wrote such verses as those published in 1885 in her first book, Louise de la Valière. Succeeding volumes—Shamrocks, Cuckoo Songs, and A Lover's Breast-knot, not to name her contributions to the "Occ Verse" of the Pall Mall Gazette—show that Mrs. Hinkson has not forgotten her first love and her high calling, despite temptations to prose authorship. But the Muses are jealous mistresses; men at least find them so; and it has yet to be proved that to their own sex they are less exacting in their demands for an exclusive devotion.

One of Mrs. Hinkson's books is dedicated to Christina Rossetti, to whom, in her religious poetry, she is a close sister. The verses beginning—

"All in the April evening
April airs were abroad;
I saw the sheep on the mountains,
And I thought of the Lamb of God," come to mind. So does the poem called "God's Bird":

"Nay, not Thine eagle, Lord,—
No golden eagle I,
That creep half fainting on the sward,
And have no wings to fly.

Nor yet Thy tender dove,
Meek as Thyself, Thou Lamb!
I would I were the dove, Thy love,
And not the thing I am.

But take me in Thy hand,
To be Thy sparrow, then;
Were two sparrows in Holy Land,
One farthing bought the twain."

Mrs. Hinkson has sung of married love with quiet fervour. She has also, in no trivially sentimental mood, written in verses headed "A Woman," about the unmarried of her own sex. Such a woman

"sees across
The world with a sick sense of loss
A house that none hath builded well,
A heaven wherein she may not dwell."

She hears in fancy—

"Voices of children calling her Mother, to make her heart-string stir."

And there is a memorable mention of

"that music most forlorn,
Voices of children never born."

About the future of any verse it is vain to prophesy; we can but say of Mrs. Hinkson's that it gives contemporaries a pleasure which they are paternal enough to hope that posterity will share.

MR. RICHARD LE GALLIENNE.

MR. LE GALLIENNE has made it a hard task to "place" him accurately. He offers so many extremes that in the endeavour to find their mean we are lost. In his intense wish to be catholic, to leave no experience unplumbed, he has looked at everything—except facts. Facts he will not face. No man of quick sensibilities has such a gift for remaining stationary. His work shows no single sign of progress: sometimes it is better than at others; but the basis is always the same. His poetry is monotonously saccharine; but now and again he has achieved a fine phrase, and often a very happy one. "Autumn," in English Poems, is a rich piece of decorative verse, and the elegy on Mr. Stevenson is good and unusually strong. In the paraphrase of Omar Khayyam are many felicitous lines. Indeed, if Mr. Le Gallienne would take time and thought, and be honestly himself, and exercise his critical faculty with severity, he might write more than one poem of beauty. But neither FitzGerald's patience nor individualism is his: he is wholly derivative, and his attitude to poetry is wrong-headed. He cannot comprehend that a man may be both a poet and a sage. The word poet to him connotes licence, not wisdom; suggests not Goethe, not Shakespeare, but Verlaine. Hence he can write thus "On the Morals of Poets" in order to protect his position:

"One says he is immoral, and points out
Warm sin in ruddy specks upon his soul:
Bigot, one folly of the man you flout
Is more to God than thy lean life is whole."

It is almost impossible to criticise seriously a man who holds this view. He compels one to make allowances. And this has been Mr. Gallienne's fortune as a literary man: his readers always have made allowances. To persons who wish to take their authors seriously he has become impossible. But for others of less rigid a view, Mr. Le Gallienne can still be good company. He is the gladdest of the glad. When he likes a thing he likes it with his whole force. His best strength lies in tasting, and he is one of the best tasters that we have—the lineal descendant of Leigh Hunt. By his notes in the Star he has done much to revolutionise literary journalism. He has done as much as any one towards the substitution of personal predilection for old-fashioned criticism—no bad exchange from the reader's point of view. He can sip honey from a flower as prettily as a bee, and when engaged in such a task, or in embroidering another man's cloth, he is the pleasantest fellow. In his essays, or Prose Fancies, as he calls them, he can turn a phrase charmingly.

His similes often imply a shining fancy, sometimes real imagination. Now and then his spirits are infectionally gay. But he is pursued by a demon of bizzarerie, and you are always in danger of being tripped up by a luckless fault of taste in the next line. No man is so beset, and no man is so tardy in profiting by experience. Mr. Le Gallienne seems to have started on his career with the conviction that he had nothing to learn, and ever since to have been preserved miraculously from changing his mind. Had he dropped tasting for a while and entered upon a spell of study, he might have qualified himself for sound critical work. But, no; he has persistently played the butterfly, and a butterfly he must, we fear, remain. He is intensely literary: a Tomlinson with the addition of wit and, probably, no desire to enter heaven.

MR. PETT RIDGE.

COMPARISONS are invidious, and we dislike them; but Mr. Pett Ridge has made it impossible to avoid one in any estimate of his talents. It cannot be denied that we owe him to the limitations of Mr. Anstey. The author of Voces Populi prefers to find his subjects rather among the middle and upper classes than the masses. Whenever he goes to the masses for them he is excellent, as in the sketches describing a fête night at the Crystal Palace, a drawing-room crush in the Mall, and the row in the pit concerning a hat (one of Mr. Anstey's masterpieces); but his sympathies belong, in the main, to higher strata of society. This circumstance gave Mr. Ridge his opportunity: he has made waggish White-chapel his own, wherever it is found, and it remains his own to this day. As a comic reporter Mr. Ridge is not excelled. He is continually alert for a comic incident—a lover's tiff on Hampstead Heath on Bank Holiday, a contest in sarcasm between errand-boys, a Socialist orator in the Park,—and once the subject is found he is prompt to transfer its saliences to paper. He has none of Mr. Anstey's skill in scenic directions; but in the dialogue proper he keeps as close to life. We should not call Mr. Ridge a humorist: humour is a subtler quality than he can command. Rather is he a disciplined funny man. He has studied writing, and has learned how best to present his material. He has a nice artistic sense, which gives his dialogues their compactness and neatness of form. He knows where to begin and where to end. His comic invention is inexhaustible, and he observes closely. Dickens has no apter pupil, as readers of Mr. Ridge's sketches know. He might write a volume of descriptions of London in 1898: its police courts and law courts; its civic feasts and festivals; its mass meetings and processions; its music halls and theatres; its streets and its vernacular—that some day would be valuable as a piece of social history. Mr. Ridge's eye is photographic. His brain is a storehouse of cockney idiom. He knows exactly what the ordinary East End wag would say in any given situation. He is a treasury of street gibes and sarcasms. No exclamation used by a Bryant & May's match-girl is unknown to this quiet and amused observer and listener. Hence his dialogues are as accurate as the records of a phonograph, with the advantage of order and selection. Of Mr. Ridge's novels and stories we can only say that they are readable and entertaining. He has the gift of vivacity, and is vigilant never to permit his admirers to be bored. But he is not a novelist. His imagination is too much dominated by the comic for him ever to be a novelist in the full sense of the word. We wish him to continue writing stories and novels, because they are good fun; not because we think some day to find in them a master touch. More still do we want him to continue his dialogues and sketches. As a comic reporter he is most himself. Mr. Ridge seems to prefer a literary vehicle for the presentation of his fun, otherwise we should expect a good farce from his pen. Even better could he write a burlesque of a serious drama. No mind is more prompt than his to transmute an incident to parody.

PARIS LETTER.

(From our French Correspondent.)

M. AUGUSTE VACQUERIE, in his Profil et Grimaces, has produced a sparkling and amusing volume—a little long, with repetitions and unnecessary dissertations and violence, but, in the main, witty and very French. Inimitable little phrases are scattered here and there that recall the old bright day of French letters, and remind us that M. Vacquerie knew Gautier and Mérimée. He tilts against tragedy in some extremely funny pages. "Tragic verse is not excellent for what it is, but for what it is not."

M. Vacquerie's sprightly charge against Scribe and Augier—the bourgeois school of sense—recalls forgotten triumphs. Here, as elsewhere, sympathy is on the side of the amiable lunatics. It is good to encourage an ideal; however false it may be, it is certain to be better than beef and pudding. Besides, it is impossible to love the bourgeois, and the theatre of Scribe and Augier is that of the lovers of shabby order, selfishness, and platitudes. Its success, M. Vacquerie insists, proves nothing. He has even seen masterpieces applauded—but this is rarer. Shakespeare, Molière, Victor Hugo are his serious pre-occupations, and all subjects serve to introduce his gods upon the scene. His gossip about them is always interesting; but the most notable study, which is half profile, half grimace, is that of Alfred de Musset. A little ruthless, but how true! A Musset shorn of his bright and deceptive plumage, in all his poverty of mind and spirit, a feeble, exclamatory, unintellectual Musset, with nothing but his gift of delicate and smiling song to win pardon for his unmanliness and his cheap and boastful airs of reprobate. "He could not even follow his century," says M. Vacquerie, concluding his formidable charge against this poor "child of the century," this feeble French Byron, who cannot even decently sin without at once apostrophising the shade of Voltaire as responsible for his damnation. To write of Musset commands mention of George Sand, and nobody could do so in more delicate a way than M. Vacquerie. "Let not pity for him (referring to the mournful and lovely Nuit de Décembre) prove blame for her. Should she need defence, should her character, visible in all her work, and the immense kindness of her intelligence, not sufficiently demonstrate that she is not one of those whose caprices forge the miseries of man, she has on her side the testimony of this Nuit, which accuses her of not being able to 'pardon.'"

His great attacks are against Rachel and the Institute. Rachel lacked initiative and generosity. She only played known works. She was useful to those who did not want her. She dared, after two hundred years, to interpret Corneille, and was excellent only in rôles that other actresses had created. When an author brought her a new play she told him to get Mlle. Judith to play it first. Then she would see. "She helped death against life, and was loved by those who could not love, was the adoration of all hatreds, the admiration of the envious, the religion of Atheists." In all things the reverse of Mme. Dorval, whom M. Vacquerie himself adored. But his attack on the Institute is more deserved. He is stupefied, and not without reason, by the choice of Academicians. Ducal nonentities, after the deaths of Chateaubriand and Vatout, like Noailles and De Saint Priest, whom nobody now remembers, were elected, while Dumas, Balzac, Gautier, George Sand, Lammenais, Michelet, Alphonse Karr, and Beranger lived. The excuse for ignoring Balzac, it appears, was that he was travelling in Russia, and could not pay the prescribed visit to the different Immortals. "When the future will say, 'He has written Splendeur et Misère des Courtisanes, Père Goriot, and Parents pauvres,' the Academy will reply: 'Yes, but he was travelling.' The visits that Balzac did not pay his books paid for him." No form of state institutions finds this amiable knight-errant in the service of liberty respectful. The Théâtre Français he describes as a cemetery, where the dead are at home and resent all noise. It is the inconsolable widow of the past, still weeping over the ashes of the late Racine in an alabaster urn. He concludes with a fine and generous paper on Les Femmes Savantes.

"Every form of material art is allowed to women but thought. The pen flies too high for their little hands. Through Chrysale, women are forbidden to write and think, after Mme. de Sévigné, Mme. de Staël, Mme. de Girardin, and George Sand. And Molière, who is made the accomplice of this brutal prejudice, weeps for it above among the stars, and cannot be consoled for this masterpiece."

Analysing Philamète's "folly," he discovers it to be the greatest of modern ideas—the Institute. Man and woman, he says, are equally chained to earth, with an equal right to look up to the stars, and an equal right to exercise such intelligence as either may possess.

M. Jean Psichari is the son-in-law of Ernest Renan, which is perhaps the reason some people take his impertinence, his silly and intolerable fatuity, his literary affectations seriously, and salute him poet and writer. That he himself takes himself as one of the literary figures of the age is incontestable. He much resembles Mr. Oscar Wilde in the day of his triumph, without Mr. Oscar Wilde's undeniable gifts, without his art and his wit. Le Rêve de Yanniri is a work of weak and insufferable affectation, discursive, pretentious, and impertinent. One of its annoying mannerisms is the constant repetition of words, ideas, similes, and apostrophes. O sancta simplicitas! What a leap from these would-be classical scribblers, who assure us solemnly on every page, as M. Psichari does, that they are great men, men of genius, in explanation of their exasperating literary vices, who so fatuously strut through their own absolutely unimportant and insignificant pages, what a leap to genius itself, or even first-rate talent.

One grows to understand why the French write no stories for the unhappy young girl; any attempt to do so is sure to be a dismal failure. L'Inutile Amour, by Georges Hery, is innocuous matter, guaranteed for the schoolroom, but, alas! not calculated to inspire maiden readers with enthusiasm or gratitude. It is exceedingly dull stuff, without even a spark of modern vulgarity to enliven it. Such books can hardly be described as a grateful change from pornography.

H. L.

BOOKSELLING AND BOOKBUYING.

MR. HERBERT SPENCER'S VIEW.

MR. HERBERT SPENCER once had a plan by which he thought the distribution of books from publisher to public might be simplified. This plan requires the co-operation of the Post Office, and hence Mr. Spencer broached it, in the first instance, to Mr. Fawcett, as Postmaster-General. His letter to Mr. Fawcett was dated June 5, 1852; and now, after the lapse of forty-five years, it is republished as one of the items forming a slim volume of Mr. Spencer's shorter writings, entitled Various Fragments (Williams & Norgate). Mr. Spencer's plan of book-selling thus revived has an obvious and, we may add, an amusing, timeliness.

Briefly stated, the Spencerian bookselling is this. You want a book. To obtain it you drop into a convenient post-office, and write on the face of a postcard the address of the publisher who advertises the work. On the back of the card you write your order, leaving as much blank space as possible. You then purchase stamps to the amount of the price of the book. If the book costs 8s. 6d., you buy eight shilling stamps and a sixpenny one, and you affix these stamps to your card. Then you post your card. The developments will be these. Your postcard, freighted with eight and sixpence, will duly arrive at the publisher's, with, say, a hundred others, similarly coated with stamps. The publisher will count your stamps and forward your book. (Mr. Spencer sees piles of your books wrapped, ready for instant despatch.) The other people's postcards will be dealt with in the same way; and then a junior clerk will stamp each card with the official signature of the firm (to show it has reached its proper destination), and forthwith will take the batch of postcards to the nearest post-office and cash them. You comprehend? That is the Spencerian bookselling.

You see what it means. The earth-born beetle is not more silently smothered under the casual foot than is the bookseller (a family man) under Mr. Spencer's rain of postcards. Compare this with the report of the Committee of the Society of Authors, who have just put forward seven suggestions for helping lame booksellers over stiles! Under what "principle of sociology" Mr. Spencer devised the annihilation of the bookseller we do not know; but it was thus, in part, that he justified his plan to Mr. Fawcett:

"The present system of distribution through wholesale houses and retail booksellers is an absurd anachronism. . . . Fully forty per cent. of the published price of every book now goes to cover the cost of portage—the cost of transferring the book from the publisher to the reader. This 40 per cent. by no means represents the entire enhancement of the published price of the book. Prices of books would be lowered by much more than 40 per cent. if this existing system could be replaced in the way I have described. As you know better than I do, it is a familiar truth, especially to economists, that any tax on a commodity raises its price by more than the amount of the tax; and this holds very obviously in the present case. Let the 40 per cent. be deducted from the advertised prices of books, and immediately the demand for them becomes immensely greater, probably double. The demand being doubled makes it possible to obtain an adequate return with a smaller profit on each copy to author and publisher, and, therefore, prompts a still further reduction in the price, and this again a still further distribution, acting and reacting. So that I do not doubt that the prices of books would, by the adoption of this system, be lowered by one half."

You see that much would be achieved by Mr. Spencer's plan; yet are you surprised that Mr. Fawcett declined to put it into operation? It simplified book-buying certainly, but it imperilled the State. It may come, but not yet.

A FAMOUS SATIRE.

MESSRS. SMITH, ELDER & Co. were most happily inspired when they decided to reprint Matthew Arnold's delightfully amusing series of letters to the Pall Mall Gazette, which he afterwards collected and reprinted under the title of Friendship's Garland. Time passes so rapidly, and generations succeed one another so fast in the world of letters, that there will probably be not a few people in the present day who have never even heard of these letters, or made acquaintance with the delightful Arminius, Baron von Thunder-Ten-Tronckh, and Adolescents Leo, Esq., of the Daily Telegraph. The letters appeared in the Pall Mall between the years 1866 and 1870, and in them Matthew Arnold, under the pretence of defending his Philistine and barbarian countrymen from the scoffs and sneers of an imaginary Teutonic critic, contrives to poke fun at our national foibles and vices in a highly entertaining manner.

"India," said a certain Viceroy, "is a cloud with a depreciated silver lining." The Philistine cloud has its silver lining too, and the silver, such as it is, may well be taken thankfully. At the same time it is amusing to note the passages in these letters of a quarter of a century ago which so aptly apply to our present failings. In some cases the very same measures which were being debated in 1866-1870 are being debated still. "The great sexual insurrection of the Anglo-Teutonic race" of those days has found an echo in these later times. Here is Adolescents Leo, Esq. (of the Daily Telegraph), on the subject of another vexed question which survives to this day—the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill:

"We have established, I hope, that no man may presume to call Bottles profligate for marrying either his sister-in-law Hannah or his niece Mary Jane. But this is not enough. A complication, like the complications of Greek tragedy, suggests itself to my mind. You noticed Mr. Job Bottles. You must have seen his gaze resting on Mary Jane. But what with his cigars, his claret, his camellias, and the state of the money-market, Mr. Job Bottles is not a marrying man just at this moment. His brother is; but his brother cannot last for ever. Job, on the other hand, is full of vigour and vitality. We have heard of the patience of Job; how natural, if his brother marries Mary Jane now, that Job, with his habits tempered, his view of life calmed, and the state of the money-market different, may wish, when she is a widow some five years hence, to marry her himself. And we have arrangements which make this illegal! . . . For my part my resolve is formed. This great question shall henceforth be seriously taken up in Fleet-street. As a sop to those toothless old Cerberuses, the Bishops, who impotently exhibit still the passions, as Nick's French friends say, of another age, we will accord the continuance of the prohibition which forbids a man to marry his grandmother."

Poor Nick, also of the Daily Telegraph, is pulled up short by the suggestion that there is a want of "Delicacy" about such promiscuities. "Delicacy," he murmurs,

"delicacy—surely I have heard that word before! Yes, in other days, in my fresh enthusiastic youth; before I knew Sala, before I wrote for that infernal paper, before I called (Hepworth) Dixon's style 'lithe and sinewy.'"

But the irony of Leo's whole letter is admirable. There is a very interesting letter of Arminius in which the effect of our parliamentary system in weakening our foreign policy is derisively pointed out, which might well be taken to heart by the Englishmen of to-day. What foreign statesman, he asks, can deal seriously and respectfully with England

"when he finds that he is not dealing mind to mind with an intelligent equal, but that he is dealing with a tumult of likes and dislikes, hopes, panics, intrigues, stock jobbing, quidnuncs, newspapers—dealing with ignorance, in short, for that word contains it all—behind his intelligent equal? Whatever he says to a British minister, however convincing he may be, a foreign statesman knows that he has only half his hearer's attention, that only one of the minister's eyes is turned his way; the other eye is turned anxiously back on the home Philistines and the home press, and according as these finally go the British minister must go too. This sort of thing demoralises your ministers themselves in the end, even your able and honest ones, and makes them impossible to deal with. . . . Your Philistines had a passion for that old acrobat Lord Palmerston, who, clever as he was, had an aristocrat's inaptitude for ideas, and believed in upholding and renovating the Grand Turk; Lord Aberdeen knew better, but his eye was nervously fixed on the British Philistine and the British press."

One wonders what Arminius would have thought of Crete and the Concert of Europe and how he would have stigmatised the "Hundred Members" and their relations with Greece.

The letters are full of passages of admirable irony. Here is one:

"Sala, like us his disciples, has studied in the book of the world even more than in the world of books. But his career and genius have given him somehow the secret of a literary mixture novel and fascinating in the last degree; he blends the airy epicureanism of the salons of Augustus with the full-bodied gaiety of our English Cider-cellar. With our people and country, mon cher, this mixture, you may rely on it, is now the very thing to go down; there arises every day a larger public for it; and we, Sala's disciples, may be trusted not willingly to let it die."

Arminius' mot about the Atlantic cable is worth quoting, if only as an epigram—"that great rope, with a Philistine at each end of it talking inutilities!"

Here is a criticism of Our Noble Selves in regard to Foreign Policy.

"The faults with which foreigners reproach us in the matters named—rash engagement, intemperate threatening, undignified retreat, ill-timed cordiality—are not the faults of an aristocracy, by nature in such concerns prudent, reticent, dignified, sensitive on the point of honour; they are rather the faults of a rich middle class—testy, absolute, ill-acquainted with foreign matters, a little ignoble, very dull to perceive when it is making itself ridiculous."

We have no space to quote further from a book which all lovers of good sense and good literature will read for themselves.

JUBILATION.*

THIS reprint of articles in which the Daily Chronicle sang its psalm to the longest reign is useful in its matter, hideous as to appearance. Mr. Heinemann, the publisher of Sixty Years of Empire, informs us that he found one or two of the original illustrations so unsatisfactory that he replaced them with others, and the process ought to have been carried further. Nearly all the portraits of statesmen and writers, and several of those of actors, are mere disfigurements. On the other hand, Mr. Pennell's review of art is enriched with several excellently chosen and most interesting portraits. The diagrams, too, are all that could be desired—clever, ingenious, and vivid; but the mixture of good and bad combines into a disagreeable and grotesque book.

* Sixty Years of Empire, 1837-1897. (Heinemann.)

Nor can we say more for the text. Some of the contributions could scarcely have been improved upon—notably Mr. Pennell's article already alluded to, Mr. Macnamara's on Education, Mr. Johnson's on Literature, and Sir Charles Dilke's on Greater Britain; but they want that unity of aim which can only be worked into a bundle of independent essays by very vigorous editorship. And some of the writers fail to do themselves justice. In thirty pages it was not possible for Mr. Russell to review satisfactorily all the strange and contrasting great men who have served the Queen as Prime Ministers—Lord Melbourne and Sir Robert Peel, Lord John Russell, Lord Derby, Lord Aberdeen, Palmerston, Gladstone, Disraeli, Rosebery, Salisbury: a Plutarch could not have rendered these rich and diverse characters in an average of three pages each. More lightly still does Mr. Harold Spender skim the parliamentary history of the time. These papers were well enough in their original place, but they will not stand leisurely reading in a book. Mr. A. B. Walkley's article on the stage falls into an opposite fault—it suffers from over-conscientiousness, and from a tendency to accent the trivial and non-essential: a lack of breadth. To do that sort of work a certain detachment and feeling of distance, the disinterested onlooker's point of view, are necessary. A soldier who has been fighting all the time could not describe a battle, and Mr. Walkley often cannot see wood for trees. Mr. John Burns suffers from a similar disadvantage. He writes "Labour's Retrospect" like a general reviewing a campaign; but surely labour has more to look back upon than a sixty years' war. It has a wide extension of its field; it has emerged from the idle enchantment described by Carlyle into fuller activity; it has made progress in the way of becoming better fed, better housed, and better clothed; it has even found a little time to cultivate taste. Mr. Burns ought to have realised for us a picture of, say, Lancashire in 1837 and in 1897. He not only lacks breadth of view, but his stilted and affected written style is in marked contrast to the manly, Saxon vigour of his speech—a curious proof that to excel on the platform is a different matter from writing well.

The "wholesome mediocrity" of most of the papers invites no comment; but Mr. Lionel Johnson's contribution deserves a word. His is not a scrappy collection of facts, but a real essay, a series of observations strung together on a vein of thought. The keynote may be found in the following passage:

"Macaulay's glitter is not a glory, but he lives by it, and deserves to live; yet of the old Victorian writers there is none who more completely exemplifies the spirit which the last thirty years have exorcised and banished. A sea has burst these orderly Dutch dykes, bringing with it mystery, romance, music, a sense of awe, thrills of anticipation felt upon every ride of life and thought; its surges roll through the later chaunts of Tennyson. Our philosophy and poetry, our methods and ideals in fiction, our critical and historical manners 'have suffered a sea-change.'"

He works out the idea in a most interesting manner, but is not quite so happy in his judgment of individuals. Such hard, cut-and-dry, inelastic expressions as make up our next quotation are rather in the style of a University Extensionist, who would go all wrong but for his labels: "Carlyle wrote the most imaginative prose, Ruskin the most eloquent, Newman the most pure; and each could strike at will with absolute success any note in the scale of emotion."

No doubt Mr. Johnson lost himself in his thesis, and concentrating himself on a highly suggestive general view, half forgot about the details. We cannot help thinking, however, that his argument would have gained in strength by a more frugal use of superlatives, and a nicer discrimination between the writers. Were they all as great and splendid as he describes them, then the Victorian age would be more illustrious than the Periclean, Augustan, Elizabethan, or any other. We know that it is not. Much that excites his admiration is dead or moribund already; much else is kept in life only by the survivors of an elder generation, and it is obvious that time is fast reducing the bulk of what promised to be imperishable. Mr. Johnson slightly reminds us of a sanguine merchant who, on taking stock, ranks his bad debts with his good, and rejoices over a sum-total that in reality is fictitious.

THE BOOK MARKET.

THREE TALKS ON THE DISCOUNT QUESTION.

AN AUTHOR IMPRESSES ME.

EVERYONE who has read the report of the Committee of the Society of Authors on the Book Discount question must have been struck by its fulness, and by the evidence it gives of long and patient inquiry. A more curious thing is that it lays hardly any stress on the author's own interests. It is not, as it might have been, an expansion of—"This will suit our pockets, and this won't." It is a comprehensive survey of the whole subject. I could not help remarking this to Mr. Henry Norman, upon whom I called with a view to gaining a little more light on the Report. Mr. Norman sat upon the Committee, and he has all the issues at his finger ends. "You don't appear," I said, "to have approached the matter from the point of view of the author's self-interest. Why have you been so needlessly unselfish?"

Mr. Norman smiled, and said: "I can understand your question, and I can also answer it very easily. The Authors' Society exists to inquire into all the relations and circumstances of authorship. You are surprised to find us entering so deeply into the relations between publishers and booksellers, into the differences between town and country booksellers, into remedial measures for bad trade, and so forth. But these are relations and circumstances of authorship, and we are dealing with them pretty much all the year round. Moreover, we hold that the authors have nothing to desire except a healthy state of the book-trade. Their interests are there, and nowhere else; and therefore, in approaching this subject of discount we have taken the entire subject into our consideration and reported accordingly. We have held a great many meetings, some of them three hours long; and I do not remember that a question of the author's pocket interest was ever directly raised."

"You even encourage booksellers to print non-copyright books themselves, and so increase the volume and the profits on old books. Is not that rather rash? Must there not always be a certain competition between dead and living authors; and if so, why do you encourage these resurrections to your own hurt?"

"There can be no hurt. The more people read old books the more will they read new ones. It is with book-buying as with book-selling. Only let us have plenty of both, and we authors can have nothing to complain about."

"On the same principle you advise country booksellers to take up with second-hand books?"

"Certainly; it will help them and us."

"Well, now, Mr. Norman, do you think you have killed Cock Robin by your Report?"

"That I cannot say. You are aware, however, that the publishers declared that the consent of the Authors' Society would be necessary before the change from a 3d. to a 2d. discount could be enforced. That consent, as you know, has been withheld—nay, the change has been condemned. We think it impossible of realisation, and undesirable if realised."

"I see that in one clause of the Report you do express the belief that 'the independence of the author would be seriously compromised by the existence of a close ring of publishers and booksellers, who might as easily dictate to him a royalty of 5 per cent. as to the bookseller a 2d. discount.' You think there is ground to fear the one coercion if the other were allowed?"

"Certainly. Coercion in one place would mean coercion all round." Here I left Mr. Norman. There was no more to be said; the Authors have made up their minds.

A BOOKSELLER SURPRISES ME.

"WHAT of the discount question?" I said to Mr. —. "Unburden your mind."

"Can't."

"Why?"

"Busiest moment: I'm banking money."

"I suppose you are tired of this discount wrangle?"

"Tired, no; not yet. But there's nothing to tell you."

"Oh, come!"

"I tell you there is nothing. The Publishers are now sitting in council, and they will write us a letter. We shall do no more than acknowledge it before Christmas."

"Meanwhile, you will go on banking money?"

"Precisely. But look here: shall I tell you the whole truth?"

"You might as well."

"Well, it will have to come out. The fact is, it is all a delusion to suppose that the real demand of the agitating book-sellers is for a 2d. discount. Their first demand was for better terms from the publishers on expensive books—in fact, we want the high-class trade to be made more profitable as compared with the rough-and-tumble-3d.-in-the-shilling-all-round-box-at-the-door trade. Do you see?"

"Then why don't you say so?"

"Well, we did say so; and the publishers said 'No; you had better go on the tack of restoring the 2d. discount'; and so we went on that tack, and here we are."

"Mr.—, you are a large and responsible bookseller, and you have identified yourself with the agitation for a 2d. discount. Do you now mean to tell me that you would waive a 2d. discount to-morrow if instead of it you could have better terms on the higher class books from publishers?"

"Yes, I mean that."

"Then good morning. You have enlightened me; I will not further interrupt your banking operations, which I am glad are arduous."

W. W.

A PUBLISHER Baffles Mr.

He was very nice about it; but, leaning his elbow on his desk, he said: "I am going to a meeting of the Council of the Publishers' Association to-night, and, of course, I can give you no official statement until that meeting has rendered it possible."

"Would you say, however, in your private capacity, that the Authors' report is about as strong as it could be, and is, for the time being, a serious set-back to the proposed reduction of discount from 3d. to 2d. Would you say that?"

"In my private capacity I will say this: I think the authors have taken on themselves a great responsibility, and I sincerely hope that they may not have to repent it."

"Their report struck me as unexpectedly general in its scope."

"Yes. They entered into questions which I venture to think they do not fully understand."

A FAULTY AGREEMENT.

THE Author is great at figures and loves to marshal them in illustration of "hard cases." In its December issue (which gained first-class importance by its exclusive article for the Report of the Committee of the Society of Authors on the discount question) the following publisher's offer is analysed. We do not quite gather whether the offer is a real one; but it is certainly not wildly improbable; and transactions of the kind are still so common that we recommend any author who contemplates paying for the publishing of a book to study the figures of this offer step by step.

"A young writer has a MS. which he thinks likely to attract attention. He offers it to a certain firm; he receives the following proposal:

1. He is to pay down in advance £110.
2. The publishers will produce an edition of 1,500 copies free of cost to the author.
3. After 100 copies have been sold they will pay the author 2s. 6d. a copy royalty.

Let us see how this works out.

- (1) On the sale of 500:

	£	s.	£	s.
Cost of production, say	100	0
Royalty on 400 at 2s. 6d.	50	0
Profit to publisher....	47	0

By the author .....	110	0
Sale of 500 at 3s. 6d....	87	10
			197	10

- (2) On the sale of 1,000:

Cost of production.....	100	0
Royalty on 900 at 2s. 6d.	112	10
Profit to publisher .....	72	10

By the author.....	110	0
By sales, 1,000 at 3s. 6d.	175	0
			285	0

- (3) On the sale of 1,500 copies:

Cost of production.....	100	0
Royalty to author on 1,400 copies.....	175	10
Profit to publisher.....	97	0

By author .....	110	0
Sale of 1,500 at 3s. 6d....	262	10
			372	10

	£	s.		£	s.
So that the author by 500 copies loses	60	0
" " 1,000 " gains	2	10
" " 1,500 " "	65	10
The publisher by 500 " "	47	10
" " 1,000 " "	72	10
" " 1,500 " "	97	0

Very likely the new writer accepted the proposal because he wanted his work to appear. Yet, you see, the publisher, who is completely covered from risk, gains £72 10s. on a thousand copies, and the author £2 10s!

The fault of the agreement is that the royalty is paid by the publisher to the author instead of by the author to the publisher."

THE WEEK.

A RECENTLY published selection from the poetical works of James Clarence Mangan did much to revive interest in that unhappy Dublin poet. An attempt is now made by Mr. D. J. O'Donoghue to deal exhaustively with The Life and Writings of James Clarence Mangan. Mangan seems already to have slipped greatly out of sight. Few people live who knew him, and, says Mr. O'Donoghue, "strictly speaking, there is no authentic likeness of Mangan. Various sketches are in existence, but they are all deductions—distant enough, for the most part—of Burton's fine drawing of the poet as he lay in death." Nor were Mangan's letters many. Such as there are have been made to strictly serve the narrative, Mr. O'Donoghue having adopted the plan of weaving extracts from them into his own text. Mr. O'Donoghue adds:

"In the case of Mangan, the absence or non-existence of many letters is less to be regretted, in view of the most interesting personal touches so constantly introduced into his published, but generally unknown, articles and other writings—charming confidences, which have been fully availed of here. If it should be thought that too free a use has been made of that part of Mangan's work which is personally illustrative, it may be urged that in reality, when the enormous fertility of Mangan is concerned, only an infinitesimal portion has been laid under contribution."

It will be seen that the book promises to be a medley of text quotations and letters; and this, in fact, is its aspect.

In a preface to The Life and Times of Cardinal Wiseman, Mr. Wilfrid Ward gives the history of this belated work:

"The Life of Cardinal Wiseman had been twice in preparation before the present work was written. Cardinal Manning collected materials for it in 1865, immediately after Wiseman's death. The Biography, however, was never actually begun until the late Father Morris, S.J., undertook it in 1893.

After Father Morris's death, Cardinal Vaughan asked me to write the Life, placing at my disposal the correspondence and other documents collected by Cardinal Manning and Father Morris. Cardinal Vaughan has, however, left me quite free in regard to the views incidentally expressed in the Biography, and has given me equal freedom in selecting from the documents for the purpose of publication."

Mr. Ward's work is contained in two very thick octavo volumes, numbering more than 1,200 pages. Each volume has a portrait of Wiseman as its frontispiece.

Shakespeare's moral teaching, and such indications of his religious feelings as his works can be supposed to afford, are collected in a little book, entitled The Light of Shakespeare, by Clare Langton. Some people object strongly to books of extracts, but when they are compiled, as this one is, with intelligence, they have their uses. Many a stabbing thought may be brought for the first time to the mind by Miss Langton's book. Such an exclamation as this:

"Even through the hollow eyes of death
I spy life peering," is justifiably wrested from its context if it can by this means be brought to the more general knowledge.

An interesting arrival of the week is Chambers's Biographical Dictionary, a half-guinea work of reference that is likely to be popular. The preface seems to break the traditions of formality which we associate with such works; it is, for want of a better word, quite chirpy, not to say flippant. Thus:

"The world's Upper Ten Thousand, these mainly; still, the lower, even the lowest, have not been wholly neglected. For we include assassins like Abd-ul-Hamid and Ravachol, knaves like Arthur Orton and Jabez Balfour, madmen like Herostatus and Nietzsche, impostors like Joseph Smith and Madame Blavatsky, traitors like Pickle the Spy and Benedict Arnold, tagrag and bobtail—every other page offers examples."

Whether these inclusions, these epithets, and this tone are happy, we do not now decide; but, obviously this is a new kind of preface to a biographical dictionary.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

- THE DEVOTIONS OF BISHOP ANDREWES. By Rev. Henry Veale. Elliot Stock.
- THE NOCTURNAL CHRIST. By S. H. Playfair. W. H. White & Co.
- CHEED AND LIFE. By Rev. C. E. Beeby, B.D. John Wright & Co. (Beverley).
- VOICES OF THE DAY; OR, THOUGHTS ON THE MESSAGE OF GOD IN NATURE. By C. S. Wardle. Elliot Stock.
- VILLAGE SERMONS. By the late R. W. Church. Third series. Macmillan & Co. 6s.
- THE ANGELICAN ORDINAL. By Blomfield Jackson, M.A. S.P.C.K.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

- THE STORY OF THE CHURCH OF EGYPT. By E. L. Butcher. 2 vols. Smith, Elder & Co.
- BUILDERS OF GREAT BRITAIN: SIR THOMAS MAITLAND. By Walter Frowen Lord. T. Fisher Unwin. 5s.
- THE PUPILS OF PETER THE GREAT. By R. Nisbet Bain. A Constable & Co. 15s.
- THE HONOURABLE JAMES THOMASON, LIEUT.-GOVERNOR N.-W.P. INDIA. By Sir William Muir. T. & T. Clark. 2s.
- THE LIFE OF JOHN NICHOLSON. By Captain Lionel J. Trotter. John Murray.
- LIFE AND LETTERS OF DEAN BUTLER. Macmillan & Co. 12s. 6d.
- CHAMBERS'S BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY. Edited by David Patrick and Francis Hindes Groome. W. & R. Chambers. 10s. 6d.
- BORDER RAIDS AND RIVERS. By Robert Borland. Thomas Fraser (Dalbeattie).
- SOME CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN NEW ENGLAND COLONY AND THE NEW ENGLAND COMPANY IN LONDON, 1657-1713, &c. Elliot Stock.
- A CHILD'S HISTORY OF IRELAND. By P. W. Joyce, LL.D. Longmans, Green & Co. 3s. 6d.
- WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE: THE STORY OF HIS LIFE AND TIMES. By Evan J. Cuthbertson. W. & R. Chambers. 1s.
- STORIES OF THE NATIONS: MODERN FRANCE, 1789-1895. By André Lebon. T. Fisher Unwin. 5s.
- OLD VIRGINIA AND HER NEIGHBOURS. By John Fiske. Macmillan & Co. 10s.
- INDIAN FRONTIER POLICY: AN HISTORICAL SKETCH. By General Sir John Adye. Smith, Elder & Co. 3s. 6d.
- THE TRIAL OF LORD COCHRANE BEFORE LORD ELLENBOROUGH. By J. B. Atlay, M.A. Smith, Elder & Co. 18s.

SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- VARIOUS FRAGMENTS. By Herbert Spencer. Williams & Norgate. 4s.
- THE LEPIDOPTERA OF THE BRITISH ISLANDS. By Charles G. Barrett. Vol. IV. L. Reeve & Co.
- POETRY, CRITICISM, BELLES LETTRES.
- J. F. MILLET AND RUSTIC ART. By Henry Nalgely. Elliot Stock.
- PICKWICKIAN MANNERS AND CUSTOMS. By Percy Fitzgerald.
- THE HOUSES OF SIN. By Vincent O'Sullivan. Leonard Smithers.
- PAN: A COLLECTION OF LYRICAL POEMS. By Rose Haig Thomas. Bliss, Sands & Co.
- POEMS OF A COUNTRY GENTLEMAN. By Sir George Douglas, Bart. Longmans, Green & Co. 3s. 6d.
- THE LIGHT OF SHAKESPEARE. By Clare Langton. Elliot Stock.

NEW EDITIONS OF NOVELS.

- THE HOROSCOPE, and THE BRIGAND. By Alexander Dumas. J. M. Dent & Co.

JUVENILE BOOKS.

- UNTOLD TALES OF THE PAST. By Beatrice Harraden. W. Blackwood & Sons. 6s.
- ALL THE WAY TO FAIRYLAND. By Evelyn Sharp. John Lane. GOLDEN SUNBEAMS, 1897. S.P.C.K. GLADYS IN GRAMMARLAND. By Audrey Mahew Allen. Roxburghe Press. 3s. 6d.
- THE BLACKBERRIES AND THEIR ADVENTURES. By Edward Kemble. R. H. Russell. 6s.

MISCELLANEOUS.

- CATALOGUE GÉNÉRAL DES LIVRES IMPRIMÉS DE LA BIBLIOTHÈQUE NATIONALE. Auteurs. Tome I.: AACHS—ALBYVILLE. Imprimerie Nationale. Paris.
- GAMBLING IN VARIOUS ASPECTS. By Dr. Joseph Parker. James Bowden. 3d.
- THE ART OF ELOCUTION AND PUBLIC SPEAKING. By Rose Ferguson. Lawrence Greening & Co.

D R A M A.

UNQUESTIONABLY our small band of practical playwrights has found a recruit of great promise in Mr. L. N. Parker, one who probably carries the marshal's baton in his knapsack. Mr. Parker has been working at plays for some years past in collaboration, but his recent achievements single-handed—"The Vagabond King" and "The Happy Life"—reveal him as a born dramatist of marked originality and resource who, unlike the new school, recognises that a play must be something more shapely and artistic than a crude slice of real life. The stage has been suffering of late years from an attack of realism in a more or less veiled form. Mr. Henry Arthur Jones and Mr. Pinero have been holding up the mirror to nature as it exists around them, but their mirror has reflected chiefly the turpitudes and the meannesses of society. It has not caught the glow of romance or the bit of blue sky which occasionally relieves even the drab of Fig Tree Court where Mr. Parker has laid the scene of his latest story. With the prose of life Mr. Parker has evidently no great sympathy, though he recognises that it is the language of the masses. We get that too in "The Happy Life"; but there is also a welcome infusion of poetry, not the highest, not the poetry of Shakespeare or Goethe, but, let us say, that of Dickens. The author with whom Mr. Parker chiefly courts comparison is Mr. R. C. Carton. They are not alike, but they have much in common these two, and with the efforts of both to call attention to the flower by the wayside in preference to the weed I confess myself much in sympathy.

"THE HAPPY LIFE" has for its basis a saying which I do not remember to have met with before, but which Mr. Parker puts into the mouth of a Polish count as representing a superstition of his countrymen—namely, that whenever a man is too happy there comes to his door a Figure bringing the unexpected gift: "To the merry, sorrow; to the idle, toil; to the unambitious, a great task." It is to the door of Cyril Charteris, a young American of easy means, living in the Temple with his books and his bric-à-brac, secluded from all female society, that the Figure of the legend comes. A more unlikely visitor there could hardly be, especially in the circumstances in which Cyril is discovered; for he is dining his father and a few friends in his cosy chambers on Christmas Eve, and hugging more closely than ever his plan of life, which is to lie in his boat in the backwater watching with a pitying smile the misguided mortals who are wearing themselves out in an effort to paddle up-stream. The "creepy" Polish legend has sent a temporary shudder through the company, but they laugh it off, and the general opinion is that if the Figure should be ill-advised enough to come with its unexpected gift, Cyril Charteris would politely bow it out. Presently the company disperse, though not until their conversation has placed us au courant of the situation. Among Cyril's friends are the Polish count (que diable fait-il dans cette galère?), "Jimmy," a young stockbroker, living in a shabby-genteel lodging-house, with "musical society" in the shape of two young ladies, with one of whom the young City man supposes himself in love, while to the other the Prince, we learn, pays his addresses, apparently with what M. Paileron calls l'autre motif. As a neighbour in the Temple Cyril has a young fellow named Vivian Pettigrew-Smith. With only such indications of the story as we are supplied when the company retire, leaving Cyril to his books and his self-satisfaction. It is a snowy night, and, it being Christmas Eve, the Temple is empty. What about the Figure?

HARDLY has Cyril settled down in his armchair with his book and his reading-lamp when a woman's cry of distress is heard on the dark stairs outside, and, opening the door in alarm, our sybaritic hero discovers, lying unconscious on the landing, a beautiful girl in evening dress. The Figure at last! With what gift? As a believer in the "made" play Mr. Parker is scrupulous, perhaps too scrupulous, to bring down his curtain upon a tableau. The arrival of the Figure is the end of the first act. For a knowledge of its purpose we have to wait. Cyril is merry enough, idle enough, and unambitious enough. The Figure might bring him the remedy for any one of the three moods. In point of fact it brings him sorrow, toil, and a great task all combined, albeit more through his own fault than that of circumstances. The young lady is Vivian's sister, who had made an appointment with her brother to meet him at his chambers and go to the theatre—an appointment which this precious cad has neglected to keep, with the result that after vainly waiting she has fallen down the stairs in the dark, and been rescued by Cyril Charteris in the manner described. On Christmas morning, after spending the night unconscious in the armchair in Cyril's rooms, Evelyn is brought home by her faithful cavalier to her squalidly respectable home, the genteel lodging-house.

WHAT then? In real life we know what would happen. A few words of explanation would set matters right. Cyril Charteris would be thanked for his courtesy, and if he took an interest in his protégée, as he probably would, and cared to rescue her once more from her depressing surroundings, he would ask her to be his wife. This is not Mr. Parker's way of doing things. He remembers that he is writing a play, and he forces the note, needlessly and, indeed, inartistically. Cyril has behaved like a gentleman, for so we are given to understand; but when he brings the foundling home he is constrained to offer her marriage on the spot, in order to shield her good name. The couple do not love each other; they can hardly be said to be acquainted. It is a quixotic proceeding, both that he should offer the girl marriage and that she should accept it. I cannot help feeling that the author's intuition as a dramatist has deserted him here. There is a gratuitously disagreeable suggestion in this offer of marriage under the circumstances. It seems to justify the worst construction that Mrs. Grundy herself could place upon a perfectly innocent episode. And what follows is hardly more acceptable. For the marriage having taken place, the young couple come back from a three weeks' honeymoon still strangers to each other, each still believing that the other is merely frigidly polite, whereas they are really passionately in love with each other. Is this a conceivable state of things? Mr. Parker does well to avoid a close adherence to realism, but this is surely rushing to the opposite extreme. One feels that the happy ending, which is de rigueur, ought to have been brought about by some less violent means.

YET there is a great deal to admire in this play. Its ingenuity is obvious—almost too much so. Its dialogue is marked by literary grace and suppleness; its characters stand out clearly. There is dramatic force in that conception of the Figure at the door bearing its unwelcome gift; and there is a rare tenderness and sympathy in the author's handling of the pitiable life of poverty and sham led in the genteel lodging-house, with its "paying guest" and its "musical society." The old literary hack reducing masterpieces of fiction to the compass of a penny series, at thirty shillings a piece, is a pathetic figure. Is it true? It is permissible to doubt it, as one doubts the beautiful sunsets which Mr. Parker would have us believe to be an accessory of life in Fig Tree Court. I prefer to think that the penny masterpiece is the handiwork of a bold young man armed with a pair of scissors, a paste-pot, and a blue pencil. But Pettigrew-Smith, in his greasy skull-cap and tattered dressing-gown, bullied by his illiterate wife and his aggressive "cook-general," broken and subdued in manner until a fictitious success inflates his petty spirit, is a striking personality all the same; he might have walked straight out of the pages of Dickens. The romance and the sordid detail of life bound up together, with a sprinkling of episode derived from conventional melodrama! Such is "The Happy Life." Needless to say, the moral of the piece is that there is no happy life, or that if there is it is other than Cyril Charteris had pictured it. Mr. Parker is fortunate in his actors—Mr. Fred. Kerr as Cyril, Miss Dorothea Baird as Evelyn, Mr. Elwood as a cynical and scoundrelly Polish prince, Miss Carlota Nilsson as a pronounced American girl, Mr. Beauchamp as a Chicago "hustler," Mr. Hermann Vezin as the literary hack, Mr. Scott Buiat as a golden-bearded popular author, Mr. Sydney Brough as a budding stockbroker, Miss Frances Ivor as the lodging-house keeper, Miss Henrietta Watson as the landlady's daughter, Mr. Aubrey Fitzgerald as a cad of the purest—or the dirtiest—water, and others. As the curtain falls one feels that Mr. Parker has narrowly missed achieving a signal success, and that for this result his abounding cleverness is in part responsible.

J. F. N.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A NEGLECTED POET—RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

To the Editor of the ACADEMY.

Ashburton, Devon: Dec. 2.

Emerson is a poet quoted, not read. Certain couplets or quatrains of his are so familiar to our English ears that they have become as it were household words, but in many instances we do not even attribute them to their author. Take, for example, the well-known lines from the "Voluntaries" (originally intended, some years before 1873, to rouse a more lively protest against the slave trade):

"So nigh is grandeur to our dust,
So near is God to man,
When duty whispers low, 'Thou must,'
The youth replies, 'I can.'"

And again, the fine stanza from the "Sphinx," of which Wendell Holmes wrote so humorously, "C'est magnifique, mais ce n'est pas l'amour":

"Have I a lover
Who is noble and free?
I would he were nobler
Than to love me."

And once more, the oft misquoted lines which conclude the "Dirge":

"The silent organ loudest chants
The master's requiem."

Such lines as these are incorporated into our language—but how few of us have studied the poet à la source. We are well acquainted with Emerson as an essayist; but we know little or nothing of him in his favourite character. His verse is undoubtedly somewhat rugged and unmaturing. Too literally has he carried out the injunction he gives in his lines on the poetic mission. "The bard," he says, "shall not his brain encumber with the coil of rhythm and number." His poems make us out of breath as it were. We are perplexed by the sudden transition from one idea to another without any "flowing speech" to carry us across. This is not poetical—Poeta non facit saltum. But so rich and varied are the thoughts he gives us that we are able often to forget, or at least forgive, the medium through which they are expressed. More especially is this the case with regard to his many poems on natural subjects. It is, above all, as a poet of nature that Emerson excels. To him nature was everything—even the Deity itself. He reversed, as it were, Goethe's famous saying: "Nature conceals God, man reveals Him. What need I," he writes:

"What need I of book or Priest
Or Sibyl from the mummied East,
When every star is Bethlehem star?"

And more fully:

"This vault which glows immense with light,
Is the Inn where He lodges for a night,
What reck's such traveller if the bowers
Which bloom and fade like meadow flowers
A bunch of fragrant lilies be
On the stars of eternity."

Very delicate indeed are some of his fancies:

"Grass with green flag half-mast high";

or—

"Twilight parks of beech and pine";

or, again, that line which Pater himself could not disparage—

"Through scented banks of lilies white and gold."

There is little in all his scenery pieces to remind us we are in America, unless it be the constant mention of the pine-tree. Every poet has his favourite tree or flower, from Wordsworth's "Celandine" downwards. With Emerson, as probably with his antipodes Heine, it was the rugged, solitary pine. No one glancing through his poems could fail to be struck by the constant reference to it. They occur on almost every page—in "Woodnotes," "Monadnock," and "May-day." They are so characteristic of the writer that we are tempted to quote a few of them:

"Who leaves the pine-tree leaves his friend";
and in winter—

"Frost had piled
Swift cathedrals in the wild;
The piny hosts were sheeted ghosts,
In the star-lit minster aisled."

Or take the noble description of the fall of the patriarch:

"At intervals,
With sudden roar the aged pine-tree falls;
One crash—the death-hymn of the perfect tree."

Space forbids me to do more than mention his more ambitious poems—such as "The Sphinx," "Compensation," "Merlin," and the "Initial Dæmonic and Celestial Love." I do not recommend these to the novice; indeed, I must confess that some parts of the last-named poem are absolutely incomprehensible. But "Threnody" and "Terminus" want no initiation to be understood and appreciated. Though we may not place Emerson in the front rank of the singers, surely he can claim an honourable place among minor poets. Not inaptly from him comes the injunction:

"Life is too short to spend
In critic peep or cynic bark,
Quarrel or reprimand;
'Twill soon be dark.
Up: mind thine own aim, and God-speed the mark!"

E. FORSTER.

"THE QUEEN'S ENGLISH."

To the Editor of the ACADEMY.

Pinner: Dec. 5.

SIR,—It is a pity that Mr. Hodgson, at the end of his interesting article, should fall foul of Shakespeare to console Dr. Molloy. He quotes from a speech of Lady Macbeth, uttered, no doubt, in haste, to excuse her husband's conduct at the banquet:

"If you note him,
You shall offend him and extend his passion."

But, really, haste need not be pleaded in excuse; for Lady Macbeth used the words quite correctly according to the usage—not of her own, perhaps, but of Shakespeare's time. And, moreover, the usage of that day was much more philosophical than ours; for "will" means wish, and "shall" means only destiny, or natural effect. If Lady Macbeth had said "You will offend him," as a modern lady would, critical grammarians of that day might have said she was imputing to the company a desire to be offensive. Shakespeare was no more Irish in his idiom than any of his contemporaries. Let me give an earlier example. The Duke of Norfolk, who was certainly not an Irishman, wrote to Cardinal Wolsey on April 28, 1525, that Lord Marney was dying, "and Mr. Butts determined he should not live after five hours." The "should" here coupled with the still more awful "determined" might give us rather a painful opinion of Dr. Butts as a physician; but both words were quite correctly used. As regards "shall" and "should" it is really the modern usage which requires justification—or would do so if usage did not justify itself. It is easy to see how "will" and "would" came to be substituted in many cases for "shall" and "should." The expression "you shall" was unpleasantly suggestive of the meaning "I will compel you." So the auxiliary was changed, and now we even make use of such preposterous expressions as "you will be compelled" without even seeing their intrinsic absurdity.

While on the subject of the Queen's English, may I raise my own humble protest against a phrase which I find now of perpetual recurrence: "He made use of this," it is said, "for the time being"; or, "It was all very well for the time being." What is the use of "being" in such expressions? I understand what is meant by "the Lord Mayor for the time being," or "the Prime Minister for the time being." It means simply the Lord Mayor or the Prime Minister pro tempore existens—who is (or holds office) for the time. But what is "the time being" taken by itself—or, at least, what is the use of the "being"? Perhaps I am hypercritical; I fear, in any case, my poor word will have very little effect; but still (as men used to write in prefaces) if these words of mine may save even one "being" from a vain and frivolous existence they will not have been written in vain.

JAMES GAIRDNER.

PRIZES FOR AUTHORS.

To the Editor of the ACADEMY.

London: Dec. 3, 1897.

SIR,—May I hope that the concluding sentences of your article on "1897: a Retrospect," is an augury of the scheme you intend to adopt in crowning with awards of one hundred guineas and fifty guineas two books published during this year? I observe that you divide modern literature into three branches—(a) the literature of commerce, (b) the literature of knowledge, (c) the literature of art. The first two branches, as you say, already have their reward, the one in the cheques of the agent, the other in the distant beckoning of a professorship. The artist alone works for nothing but the satisfaction of his own conscience and the silent esteem of those who respect art. It is his claim I, in common with many others, hope you will carefully consider in bestowing your awards.

The importance of your generous intention has been well expressed by Sir Walter Besant "The knowledge that such a prize is in the market may stimulate young writers to more careful attention to style and artistic treatment. At any rate, the person who takes the prize will have his fortune made so far as that book is concerned, and his future as well if he is strong enough." Far be it from me to intrude upon your plans; but perhaps you will permit me to mention a few of this year's publications that may be worthy your consideration when you sit in council.

The Essay on Burns, by W. E. Henley.
Style, by Walter Raleigh.
Essays in Two Literatures, by Arthur Symonds.
Captains Courageous, by Rudyard Kipling.
Admirals All, by H. Newbolt.
The Earth-Breath, by "A. E."
The Skipper's Wooing, by W. W. Jacobs.
The King with Two Faces, by M. E. Coleridge.
The Silver Fox, by Martin Ross and E. GE. Somerville.

A VETERAN CRITIC.

MR. PHILLIPS'S NEW POEMS.

To the Editor of the ACADEMY.

Ashford: Dec. 6, 1897.

SIR,—May I correct a slight mistake in your very kind announcement of my new book? You say that the volume will contain all my work to the present time. This is not so, as neither my contributions to "Primavera" nor the long poem "Eremus" will be included. In "Some Younger Reputations" I also notice a slight misprint. The line printed:

"She is not happy! It was morn," should read:

"She is not happy! It was noon."
STEPHEN PHILLIPS.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

A CHORUS of praise has greeted "Admirals All, and Other Verses," by Henry Newbolt. Mr. Newbolt's booklet of patriotic verses. Here is "Drake's Drum," of which the Chronicle says: "This poem strikes the key-note of all the rest."

"DRAKE'S DRUM."

"Drake he was a Devon man, an' ruled the Devon seas,
(Capt'n, art tha sleepin' there below?),
Rovin' tho' his death fell, he went wi' heart at ease,
An' dreamin' arl the time o' Plymouth Hoe.
'Take my drum to England, hang et by the shore,
Strike et when your powder's runnin' low;
If the Dons sight Devon, I'll quit the port o' Heaven,
An' drum them up the Channel as we drummed them long ago.'
Drake he's in his hammock an' a thousand mile away,
(Capt'n, art tha sleepin' there below?)
Slung atween the round shot in Nombre Dios Bay,
An' dreamin' arl the time o' Plymouth Hoe.

Yarnder lumes the island, yarnder lie the ships.

Wi' sailor lads a-dancin' heel-an'-toe,
An' the shore-lights flashin', an' the night-tide dashin',
He sees et arl so plainly as he saw et long ago.

Drake lies in his hammock till the great Armadas come,
(Capt'n, art tha sleepin' there below?)
Slung atween the round shot, listenin' for the drum,
An' dreamin' arl the time o' Plymouth Hoe.
Call him on the deep sea, call him up the Sound,
Call him when ye sail to meet the foe;
Where the old trade's plyin' an' the old flag flyin',
They shall find him ware an' wakin', as they found him long ago."

On this stirring ballad the Chronicle makes the following comments:

"In the opening line the theme is quietly, simply announced: 'Drake he was a Devon man, an' ruled the Devon seas'; and then the legend which inspires the singer is rapidly indicated, with the racy and half-comic, yet thrilling, close:

'If the Dons sight Devon, I'll quit the port o' Heaven,
An' drum them up the Channel as we drummed them long ago.'

The second stanza heightens the emotion, and fixes the local colour. What admirable lines, both in sound and suggestion, are: 'Slung atween the round shot, in Nombre Dios Bay, and 'Wi' sailor lads a-dancin' heel-an'-toe!' How finely the resonant Spanish words ring out in the former! And how perfect is the effect, at once rhythmical and pictorial, of the latter! But the chief merit of this stanza lies in its relation to the next, in which its opening lines, with an art that partakes of inspiration, are half-repeated, half-transfigured:

'Drake lies in his hammock—till the great Armadas come . . .
Slung atween the round shot—listenin' for the drum.'

Truly, we owe a candle to Saint James of Compostella for the gift of the word 'Armada,' as glorious in sound as in associations; and no poet has made finer use of it than Mr. Newbolt in this verse. If we should fall beneath our former selves 'when the great Armadas come,' it will not be for want of a singer to pipe us to quarters."

The Westminster Gazette says of the piece:

"In no form of verse, on a hasty glance, is it easier to be deceived by counterfeit than in the ballad. It may have the form and the swing, be perfect in every trick of its external, and yet lack the heart, without which it is as a tinkling cymbal. Here we have excellent form and genuine feeling, and none of the violence by which some modern ballad-mongers attempt to impose themselves on the public."

It was in the St. James's Gazette that "Drake's Drum" first appeared, and the St. James's reviewer now describes it as "one of the most genuinely inspired pieces of contemporary patriotic verse."

The Spectator, always a keen critic of verse, welcomes Mr. Newbolt's songs as evidence that ballad-writing is not dead among us—for "there is no surer sign of a tendency towards ossification in literature than the inability of the poets to produce a good ballad."

"Byeways." MR. ROBERT HICHENS's book of short stories has interested the critics and secured their qualified praise. The Saturday Review's critic has some remarks on Mr. Hichens's stories generally which he thinks are never satisfactory reading because "the striving to be clever is always too painfully evident . . . and the worst of it is that he is never quite successful." Referring particularly to Byeways, this critic says:

"In the first story of this collection of short stories, for instance, he strives in vain to give us a new version of the serpent-woman fable, brought up to date. But he fails utterly to convince us that the three snakes the charmer in the Sahara carries on his person are three women transformed. Through many pages of the seventy-seven which the story occupies he attempts to explain to us the serpentine nature of Claire Duvigues, the great actress, but he never succeeds in striking quite the right note or quite the right phrase. She remains a woman to the end, and we utterly refuse to believe that she is turned into a snake. There is no need to compare her even with the Lamia of Keats; the simply told mediæval fable of Melusine is infinitely more convincing."

The Saturday Review is best pleased with Mr. Hichens when he is evolving Society comedy, and selects "The Boudoir Boy," in which a decadent youth is portrayed, as the best of these stories.

The Daily Telegraph also likes Mr. Hichens best when he is writing with a straightforward intention to draw character:

"His own preference is evidently for motifs of the supernatural, or at least the fantastic, kind, but he is not content to be thoroughly mediæval or thoroughly modern, and his attempt to mix the two—to translate, for instance, the old superstition of effigy-burning into the terms of modern psychology—produces a result which is neither consistent nor convincing. . . . We like Mr. Hichens much better when he descends from his high horse and talks like an ordinary mortal. The story called A Boudoir Boy evinces a refreshing sense of humour."

The Scotsman says vaguely that these stories are "characteristic of the better side of Mr. Hichens's work." The Manchester Guardian's critic compares Mr. Hichens's talent for dealing with the supernatural unfavourably with Hawthorne's, and concludes with another comparison which may surprise Mr. Hichens:

"Mr. Hichens reminds us in some respects of Miss Corelli. His imagination is not so extensive, but it is of the same order, and he exhibits the same want of restraint, the same exaggeration of fancy and language that distinguishes that writer. He should learn that effects which are only suggested are the most effective, and that exaggeration of description or language drives the reader into revolt."

THREE CENTURIES OF NONCONFORMITY.

Large cr. 8vo, nearly 800 pp., cloth, 6s., postfree.

HISTORY

OF THE

FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKELTON.

WITH A CONTINUATION TO 1891,

By CHARLES S. MIALL.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, FURNIVAL STREET.

THE ART ANNUAL FOR 1897.

Price 2s. 6d., or cloth gilt, gilt edges, 5s.
W. Q. ORCHARDSON, R.A. His Life and Work. By JAMES STANLEY LITTLE. Being the ART ANNUAL for 1897, or CHRISTMAS NUMBER of the ART JOURNAL. With 4 Full-Page Plates, separately printed, "Trouble," "Napoleon on Board the 'Bellérophon,'" "A Social Eddy," "Hard Hit," and 59 other Illustrations of his principal works, &c.
Edition de Luxe, printed on Japan paper, and limited to 250 numbered copies, handsomely bound in watered silk cloth, price 12s. 6d. net.

SUITABLE FOR A CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

Cloth gilt, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 31s.

THE ART JOURNAL VOLUME for

1897. With Full-Page Etchings, Photographures, &c., after the following eminent artists: Sir J. E. Millais, R.A., Briton Riviere, R.A., Henry Woods, R.A., Peter Graham, R.A., W. P. Frith, R.A., J. W. Waterhouse, R.A., E. J. Gregory, A.R.A., R. W. Macbeth, A.R.A., J. McNeill Whistler, J. Henry Henshall, John A. Lomax, Miss Margaret Dicksee, J. B. C. Corot, and P. A. Dagnan-Bouveret, and nearly 600 Illustrations.

PREMIUM PLATE FOR 1897.

AN IDYLL of 1745. After Sir J. E.

MILLAIS, Bart., P.R.A. Each purchaser of the ART JOURNAL VOLUME for 1897 is entitled to a large Etching (about double the size of a page of "The Graphic"), by William Hole, R.S.A., of the above subject, on receipt by the publishers of 2s., together with voucher inserted in volume. Voucher and remittance to be sent to publishers before June 30, 1898. Remarque artist's proofs of above Plate, signed by etcher and stamped by the Printers' Association, price 25 5s.

Demy 4to, cloth, 5s.

THE QUARTO: No. 3.—An Artistic,

Literary, and Musical Volume, with Photogravure Frontispiece of "The Salvation of Beatrice," after Rossetti; Original Etching "Our Dign," by F. Vango Burridge, R.E.; Lithograph, "From Northern Heights," by Max Balfour, 15 Full-Page Illustrations, and numerous Literary and Musical Contributions.

THE BEST PRESENT FOR GOLFERS.

Super royal 8vo, cloth gilt, 21s. net.

BRITISH GOLF LINKS. With nearly

500 Illustrations, comprising views of about 50 of the most important Links, Portraits of well-known Golfers, &c.

Imperial 16mo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d. each.

FAMOUS FRIGATE ACTIONS. By

Lieut. CHARLES RATHBONE LOW (late Indian Navy), Author of "Her Majesty's Navy," "England's Sea Victories." With 8 Full-Page Illustrations by Herbert K. Roake.

MAUDE CHATTERTON. By C. H.

COCHRAN PATRICK, Author of "The Romance of Mary Sain." With 8 Full-Page Illustrations by E. Shute. London: J. S. VIRTUE & CO., LIMITED, 26, Ivy Lane, Paternoster Row, E.C.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

TO

"THE ACADEMY."

The following have already appeared this year:—

SAMUEL RICHARDSON	January	2
THOMAS DE QUINCEY	"	9
LEIGH HUNT	"	16
LORD MACAULAY	"	23
ROBERT SOUTHY	"	30
S. T. COLERIDGE	February	6
CHARLES LAMB	"	13
MICHAEL DRAYTON	"	20
WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR	"	27
SAMUEL PEPYS	March	6
EDMUND WALLER	"	13
WILKIE COLLINS	"	20
JOHN MILTON	"	27
WILLIAM COWPER	April	3
CHARLES DARWIN	"	10
ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON	"	17
HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW	"	24
ANDREW MARVELL	May	1
ROBERT BROWNING	"	8
THOMAS CARLYLE	"	15
PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY	"	22
CHARLES DICKENS	"	29
JONATHAN SWIFT	June	5
WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY	"	12
WILLIAM BLAKE	"	19
SIR RICHARD STEELE	"	26
ALEXANDER POPE	July	3
DOUGLAS JERROLD	"	10
FRANCIS BACON	"	17

THE ## PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR

AND

BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

A HIGH-CLASS PAPER FOR PUBLISHERS, BOOKSELLERS, LITERARY MEN, BOOK COLLECTORS, LIBRARIANS, AND ALL WHO TAKE AN INTEREST IN THE WORLD OF LETTERS.

Published every Saturday, price 1½d.

Amongst the General Contents of the Paper are—ARTICLES ON CURRENT LITERARY SUBJECTS—NOTES AND NEWS REGARDING BOOKS—CONTINENTAL NOTES—AMERICAN NOTES—JOTTINGS ABOUT LIBRARY SALES—REVIEWS OF NEW BOOKS AND MAGAZINES—REGULAR LISTS OF BOOKS PUBLISHED IN GREAT BRITAIN AND AMERICA—LEADING FOREIGN PUBLICATIONS—BUSINESSES FOR SALE—SITUATIONS WANTED, AND SITUATIONS VACANT—BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE, AND BOOKS FOR SALE—TRADE CHANGES.

The characteristics of the Literary matter, and of the Advertisements, make the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record a most comprehensive record of current literature.

Subscription Terms and Advantages to Annual Subscribers.

	s.	d.
FOR FIFTY-TWO WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	8	6
FOR TWENTY-SIX WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	4	6
FOR THIRTEEN WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	2	6

* The Annual Subscription to America and Foreign Countries included in the Postal Union is Eleven Shillings.

N.B.—The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION INCLUDES the large EXPORT and EDUCATIONAL NUMBERS, the SPECIAL ILLUSTRATED CHRISTMAS NUMBER, and also the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in the out-of-print Books Wanted column.

NOW READY.

BOOKS of the YEAR 1896.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 230, cloth limp, 5s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

THE ANNUAL VOLUME

OF THE

English Catalogue for 1896

differs from its predecessor in this respect, that it gives the

FULL TITLE

With Duplicate, and in many cases Triplicate, Classification under one general alphabet, of every book, instead of as hitherto abbreviated Titles, consequently

The Bulk of the Catalogue is increased by over 80 pages, whilst the price (5s. net) remains the same.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

"The English Catalogue" is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications."—Daily News.

"Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day."—Athenæum.

"We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume."—Daily Telegraph.

"The English Catalogue of Books" is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome."—Scotsman.

"To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records. The entire work is, indeed, a precious record."—Notes and Queries.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD., St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S SELECTED LIST OF BOOKS SUITABLE FOR CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

THE FINE ART BOOK OF THE SEASON.

THE WORK of CHARLES KEENE With Introduction and Comments by JOSEPH PENNELL, and a Bibliography of Selected Works by W. H. CHESSON. Contains over 130 Illustrations, many of which have never before been printed. In Imperial 4to, buckram binding, £3 13s. 6d. net. Also a Fine Edition, limited to 15 copies, in superior binding, containing an Original Drawing by Charles Keene, and a duplicate set of the Pictures on India Paper, in a portfolio, price £15 15s. net.

EDITED BY GEORGE BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L.

LETTERS of DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI to WILLIAM ALLINGHAM, 1864-1870. Illustrated with Photogravures and other Pictures. Cloth, 12s.

OTHER WORKS BY DR. BIRKBECK HILL.

TALKS ABOUT AUTOGRAPHS. With WRITERS and READERS: Educational Portraits and Facsimiles. Cloth, 12s.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "LIFE IN THE TUILERIES."

THE STORY of MARIE ANTOINETTE. By Anna L. BICKNELL. Illustrated, cloth, 12s.

THE PRIVATE PAPERS of WILLIAM WILBERFORCE. Collected and Edited, with a Preface, by Mrs. WILBERFORCE, of Lavington. Photogravure and other Illustrations, cloth, 12s.

THE LIFE and LETTERS of MR. ENDYMION PORTER, sometime Gentleman of the Bedchamber to King Charles the First. By DOROTHEA TOWNSHEND. Photogravure and other Illustrations, cloth gilt, 12s.

GREECE in the NINETEENTH CENTURY: a Record of Hellenic Emancipation and Progress, 1821-1897. By LEWIS SERGEANT, Author of "New Greece," &c. Map, and 24 Illustrations, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE GREAT MEN OF ITALY.

LIVES of GREAT ITALIANS. By Frank Horridge. 8 Illustrations, cloth, 7s. 6d.

MASTERS of MEDICINE. Edited by Ernest Hart, D.C.L.

A Series of Popular Studies of the Lives of Eminent Medical Men for professional and general readers. Each with Photogravure Frontispiece, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

Vol. 1. JOHN HUNTER, Surgeon. Vol. 3. SIR JAMES Y. SIMPSON and the Chloroform (Shortly).

Vol. 2. WILLIAM HARVEY, and the Circulation of the Blood.

Other volumes in preparation. Prospectus of the series post free.

BUILDERS of GREATER BRITAIN. Edited by H. F. WILSON. A set of 10 volumes, each with Photogravure Frontispiece and Maps. Cloth, 5s. each.

Now ready.

1. SIR WALTER RALEGH. By MARTIN A. S. HUME.

2. SIR THOMAS MAITLAND. By WALTER FRYER LORD.

IN PREPARATION.—John Cabot and his Sons; Lord Clive; Edward Gibbon Wakefield; Rajah Brooke; Admiral Philip; Sir Stamford Raffles. Prospectus post free to any address on application.

THE CHILDREN'S STUDY. Cloth, gilt top, with Photogravure Frontispiece, 2s. 6d. each.

Seven Volumes now ready;—

ROME. By MARY FORD.

IRELAND. Edited by BARRY O'BRIEN.

ENGLAND. By FRANCIS E. COOKE.

GERMANY. By KATE FRILLIGRANT KROEKER.

OLD TALES from GREECE. By ALICE ZIMMERMAN.

FRANCE. By MARY BOWEN.

SCOTLAND. By Mrs. OLIPHANT.

MY LONG LIFE. By Mary Cowden-Clarke. 4 Photogravure Engravings and 4 Colotypes. Cheap Edition. Cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

BY REV. CANON JESSOPP, D.D. In uniform binding, limp cloth, silk sewn, 3s. 6d.

ARCADY: For Better, for Worse. Fourth Edition. THE COMING of the FRIARS. Sixth Edition.

RANDOM ROAMING. With Portrait. STUDIES by a RECLUSE. Second Edition.

THE TRIALS of a COUNTRY PARSON. Third Edition. Also, SIMON RYAN, the PETERITE. Paper, 1s.; cloth, 2s.

BY MARTIN A. S. HUME.

THE COURTSHIPS of QUEEN ELIZABETH. Portrait. Fourth Edition. THE YEAR AFTER the ARMADA. Second Edition. Illustrated. Each demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 12s.

BY J. J. JUSSERAND.

A LITERARY HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE, to the Renaissance. Front. 12s. 6d. net. ENGLISH ESSAYS from a FRENCH PEN. Illust. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

PIERS PLOWMAN. Illustrated. Cloth, 12s. ENGLISH WAYFARING LIFE in the MIDDLE AGES. Illust. Fifth Edition. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE ROMANCE of a KING'S LIFE. Illust. Cloth, 6s. THE ENGLISH NOVEL in the TIME of SHAKESPEARE. Second Edition. Illust. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

A List of Mr. T. Fisher Unwin's Recent Publications will be sent post free to any address on receipt of card.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonedale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published for the Proprietor by PETER GEORGE ANDREWS, 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

A NEW NOVEL.

THE SCHOOL FOR SAINTS.

By JOHN OLIVER HOBBS.

In green cloth, gilt top, 6s.

FIRST REVIEWS.

W. L. COURTNEY in the DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"The School for Saints" leaves all earlier sketches and skeletons behind. There is no longer the facile capacity for imitation, but the work of an artist assured of her powers.....The maturer thought, the better construction, the rounded perfection of the new volume."

T. P. O'CONNOR in the WEEKLY SUN.—"In vigour, truthfulness, and picturesqueness the book is far and away beyond anything John Oliver Hobbes has yet done. It is a new departure that advances to a higher rank one of the truly original writers of our times."

The DAILY NEWS.—"In her new book the author strikes a higher note than she has yet touched.....The story, by its sadness, its romance, its analytical and yet emotional treatment of character, its abounding wit, captivates the reader's attention and holds it to the end."

The STANDARD.—"When all is said we.....have a serious and masterly piece of work to be grateful for—the elaborate portrait of a very noble soul undergoing the discipline of its 'blank misgivings' in the stress of the world's hard knocks. 'The School for Saints' is an impressive performance."

The SPEAKER.—"Since 'Lothair' there has been no such vivid reminder of the personality of Disraeli in literature as the story which Mrs. Craigie calls 'The School for Saints'.....We can cordially congratulate the author on the use she has made of a personality so easily misunderstood and caricatured as Disraeli's."

The WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"It is greatly daring, and in detail it is undeniably well written. It introduces Disraeli.....Here the author succeeds, and her success is, in a sense, a criticism of the book.....His portrait is credible and extremely skilful. It is no small feat to have caught the idea of him in a manner which is artistic and interesting."

The WORLD.—"The long episode of the Carlist campaign, in which a finely conceived portrait of General Prim is perhaps the most noticeable feature, is treated with a freshness that is all her own. The character of her hero.....is an interesting and attractive study of conflicting tendencies."

The WEEKLY REGISTER.—"It is now more than ever the novelist who holds hearts, and that is why we congratulate Mrs. Craigie.....not on her brilliant talent only, but on the purpose to which it has been put."

The SCOTSMAN.—"There is in the story much which shows the author at her best, and brings out her wide culture and her skill in dissecting the emotions."

The GLOBE.—"Among her minor sketches are some which show an alluring keenness of perception translated into piquant phraseology."

The MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"It is rich in characters, of which all are carefully drawn, and some are the creations of genius. Bright.....is a girl with all the charm of a woman, added to the spirit and pluck of a man; and Lady Fitz-Bewes and the Countess des Escas are clever studies of two very different types of womanhood."

The GRAPHIC.—"One of the most daring acts of the authoress has been to introduce Disraeli as a prominent character, but the manner in which this is done fully justifies the act, and the conversation between the great statesman and his young political protégé are among the most notable parts of a very striking book.....'The School for Saints' takes its author from among the mere women writers and places her among the masters of fiction."

T. FISHER UNWIN'S GREEN CLOTH LIBRARY.

Price 6s. each.

John Oliver Hobbes.

Lord Ernest Hamilton.

Dr. Weir Mitchell.

Benjamin Swift.

George Bartram.

Amelia E. Barr.

S. R. Crockett.

Robert Buchanan.

Joseph Conrad.

Joseph Conrad.

Louis Becke and W. Jeffery.

Louis Becke.

John Oliver Hobbes.

S. R. Crockett.

S. R. Crockett.

Benjamin Swift.

S. R. Crockett.

J. T. Bealby.

John Oliver Hobbes.

Olive Schreiner.

Mrs. W. K. Clifford.

The School for Saints.

Outlaws of the Marches.

Hugh Wynne.

The Tormentor.

The People of Clopton.

Prisoners of Conscience.

The Gray Man.

Effie Hetherington.

An Outcast of the Islands.

Almayer's Folly.

A First Fleet Family.

The Ebbing of the Tide.

Tales of J. O. Hobbes.

The Stickit Minister.

The Raiders.

Nancy Noon.

The Lilac Sunbonnet.

A Daughter of the Fen.

The Herb Moon.

Trooper Peter Halket.

Mrs. Keith's Crime.

THOSE DREADFUL TWINS: Middy and Bosun. By THEMSELVES. Second Edition. Illustrated. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

LIZA of LAMBETH. A Tale of London Slum Life By W. SOMERSET MAUGHAM. Second Edition. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

AN ALTRUIST. By Ouida. Cloth, gilt, 2s. 6d.

WILD LIFE in SOUTHERN SEAS. By Louis Becke. Second Edition. Cloth gilt, 5s.

THIRD YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

GOOD READING: being Extracts, complete in themselves, selected by their authors, from many works. This book is embellished with about 40 Portraits and Autographs of the Authors represented in the work. In long 8vo paper covers, price 1s.; or in cloth, price 2s.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1337.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

SOTHERAN'S PRICE CURRENT OF LITERATURE.

No. 570, just published, for DECEMBER, contains the usual selection of Good Books and important Sets.
Post free from HENRY SOTHERAN & Co., Booksellers, 140, Strand, W.C.; or 37, Piccadilly, W.

CATALOGUE of the FIRST EXHIBITION of ARTISTIC BOOKBINDING by WOMEN, with Preface by CURZON EYRE. Cover on Japanese Paper, Hand-Coloured Frontispiece and 6 Facsimiles, now ready 1s. 1d. post free.—KANSLE & Co., 61, Charing Cross Road, W.C.

BOOKS for PRESENTS at DISCOUNT PRICES.—SPECIAL CATALOGUE of NEW and RECENT BOOKS, just ready, post free on receipt of address.—A. & F. DENT, Discount Booksellers, 304, Strand, W.C., and 32, Charing Cross, London, S.W.

NEW BOOKS for CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.—A CATALOGUE of 140 pages of all the Best NEW BOOKS, offered at Discount Prices, sent on application to Tauslovs & Hanson, 143, Oxford Street, W., and 6a, Sloane Street, S.W.

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General Literature (No. 118, for DECEMBER), at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street East Liverpool.

W. THACKER & CO., PUBLISHERS.
MSB. (Type-written) considered for Publication. (Established 1819.)
A large Clientèle in all parts of the East.
2, Creed Lane, London, E.C.; and at Calcutta and Simla.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS of FOREIGN BOOKS.
Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 30, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN, FOREIGN BOOKSELLER.
45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices.
CATALOGUES on application.

AGENCY for AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

MR. MOSHER'S New and Complete Descriptive LIST of BOOKS is Now Ready. It is issued in narrow 8vo, with Facsimile Titles in Red and Black, done up in French hand-made paper wrappers, with original cover design. Those who have yet to see these Editions published by Mr. Mosher should favour him with their names that the new List may be mailed them, post paid.

THOMAS B. MOSHER,
45, EXCHANGE STREET, PORTLAND, MAINE, UNITED STATES.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING and PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD.
(The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)
Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen. ruled or plain.

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT BRITAIN, Albemarle Street, Piccadilly, W.

LECTURE ARRANGEMENTS BEFORE EASTER, 1898.
LECTURE HOUR, 3 O'CLOCK P.M.

CHRISTMAS LECTURES.

Professor OLIVER LODGE, D.Sc., LL.D., F.R.S., Professor of Physics in University College, Liverpool.—SIX LECTURES (adapted to a Juvenile Audience) on "THE PRINCIPLES of the ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH." On Dec. 23 (TUESDAY), Dec. 29, 1897; Jan. 1, 4, 6, 8, 1898. One Guinea the Course; Children under 16, Half-a-Guinea.

Professor E. RAY LANKESTER, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S.—ELEVEN LECTURES on "THE SIMPLEST LIVING THINGS." On TUESDAY, Jan. 18, 25, Feb. 1, 8, 15, 22, March 1, 8, 15, 22, 29. One Guinea the Course.

Professor DEWAR, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S., M.R.I., Fullerton Professor of Chemistry, R.I.—THREE LECTURES on "THE HALOGEN GROUP of ELEMENTS." On THURSDAY, Jan. 20, 27, Feb. 3. Half-a-Guinea.

JEAN PAUL RICHTER, Esq., Ph.D., M.R.I.—THREE LECTURES on "SOME ITALIAN PICTURES at the NATIONAL GALLERY." On THURSDAY, Feb. 10, 17, 24. Half-a-Guinea.

Professor J. A. FLEMING, M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S., M.R.I., Professor of Electrical Engineering in University College, London.—FIVE LECTURES on "RECENT RESEARCHES in MAGNETISM and DIAMAGNETISM." On THURSDAY, March 3, 10, 17, 24, 31. One Guinea.

Professor PATRICK GEDDES, F.R.S.E., Professor of Botany, University College, Dundee.—THREE LECTURES on "CYPRUS." On SATURDAY, Jan. 22, 29, Feb. 5. Half-a-Guinea.

WILLIAM HENRY HADOW, Esq., M.A., B.Mus., Fellow of Worcester College, Oxford.—THREE LECTURES on "THE STRUCTURE of INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC" (with Musical Illustrations). On SATURDAY, Feb. 12, 19, 26. Half-a-Guinea.

THREE LECTURES on SATURDAYS, March 5, 12, 19. Half-a-Guinea.

LIONEL CUST, Esq., M.A., F.S.A., Director of the National Portrait Gallery.—TWO LECTURES on "PORTRAITS as HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS"; "PORTRAITS as MONUMENTS." On SATURDAYS, March 26, April 2. Half-a-Guinea.

Subscription (to Non-Members) to all Courses of Lectures (extending from Christmas to Midsummer), Two Guineas. Tickets issued daily at the Institution, or sent by post on receipt of Cheque or Post-Office Order.

Members may purchase not less than Three Single Lecture Tickets, available for any Afternoon Lecture, for Half-a-Guinea.

The FRIDAY EVENING MEETINGS will begin on JANUARY 21st, at 8 P.M., when the Right Hon. JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., will give a Discourse on "BUGS and STIPULES." Succeding Discourses will probably be given by Professor C. LLOYD MORGAN, Mr. ALAN A. CAMPBELL SWINTON, Dr. JOHN HALL GLADSTONE, Professor L. C. MIALL, Captain ASNEY, Professor T. E. THORPE, Mr. JAMES MANSENGH, the very Rev. The DEAN of CANTERBURY, Professor DEWAR, and other gentlemen. To these meetings Members and their Friends only are admitted. The Right Hon. LORD RAYLEIGH will deliver Lectures after Easter.

Persons desirous of becoming Members are requested to apply to the Secretary. When proposed they are immediately admitted to all the Lectures, to the Friday Evening Meetings, and to the Library and Reading Rooms; and their families are admitted to the Lectures at a reduced charge. First Year, Ten Guineas; afterwards, Five Guineas a year; or a composition of Sixty Guineas.

UNIVERSITY of WALES.

MATRICULATION EXAMINATION, 1898.

The UNIVERSITY COURT will shortly APPOINT MATRICULATION EXAMINERS as follows:—

In the subjects of English Language and the History of England and Wales (Two Examiners), Latin (Two Examiners),
Mathematics (Two Examiners),
Greek (One Examiner),
Dynamics (One Examiner),
Welsh (One Examiner),
French (One Examiner),
German (One Examiner),
Chemistry (One Examiner),
Botany (One Examiner).

Particulars will be given by the REGISTRAR of the University, Town Hall Chambers, Newport, Mon., to whom Applications must be sent on or before JANUARY 19th, 1898.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

QUAIN PROFESSORSHIP of PHYSICS.

This CHAIR will be vacant by the resignation of Professor CAREY FORTER at the close of the present Session. Applications, accompanied by such Testimonials as Candidates may wish to submit, should reach the SECRETARY by TUESDAY, MARCH 1st, 1898. Further information will be sent on application.
The new Professor will enter on his duties in the October following.
J. M. HORSBURGH, M.A., Secretary.

UNIVERSITY of EDINBURGH.

CHAIR of MORAL PHILOSOPHY.

The Curators of Patronage of the University of Edinburgh request that each Candidate for the above CHAIR should lodge with the undersigned, not later than 31st MARCH, 1898, eight copies of his Application and Eight copies of any Testimonials which he may desire to submit. One copy of the Application should be signed.

R. HERBERT JOHNSTON, W.S., Secretary.
65, Frederick Street, Edinburgh,
14th December, 1897.

THE COUNCIL of the PRINTERS' PENSION CORPORATION beg to inform the Subscribers and Friends of the above Institution that they have duly appointed Mr. J. SEPH MORTIMER to the position of SECRETARY.
Gray's Inn Chambers, F. J. E. YOUNG, Chairman.
20, High Holborn, W.C.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch F. W. D. and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways.

For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

TO WEALTHY PATRONS of ART and BELLES LETTRES.—A Gentleman engaged in producing a GREAT WORK, indispensable to Students of English Literature throughout the civilised world, requires FINANCING to a very moderate extent. The Work has met, so far as it has at present gone, with the highest approval of eminent experts. Guaranteed sale of small edition.—Apply by letter (Principals or Solicitors only) to X., care of Messrs. Steadman & Van Praagh, Solicitors, 22, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done.
10d. per 1,000 Words.
Samples and references.
Address Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

BOOKS WANTED to PURCHASE.
(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (pd. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY Office, 45, Chancery Lane, London.

BOOKS for SALE.
Advertisements are inserted under this heading at 4d. per line, prepaid.

DAVID GARRICK.—Magnificent Portraits by Sir Joshua Reynolds. With other unique Garrick items. Bargains. Retiring from business.—CHARLES LOWE, Book Exporter, New Street and Baskerville Hall, Birmingham.

AUTOGRAPH LETTERS.—FOR SALE, SOME HUNDREDS, dating from 1835 to 1871, relating to the Ritual Movement in the English Church, in one lot or selection.—Apply to Wm. VINCENT, Belle Vue Rise, Norwich.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

FREDERIC SHIELDS.

Twenty-eight Autotype Copies from the series of Prophets and Apostles, painted in the Chapel of the Ascension, Hyde Park Place, London.

Each Autotype measures 17 by 5½ inches, and is mounted on Plate and India Paper with plate mark and title. The Set in strong Portfolio, including Descriptive Handbook,

TEN GUINEAS.

Prospectus on application.

J. M. BARRIE, Novelist and Playwright.

A New Portrait by LESLIE BROOKS. Autotype reproductions in two sizes, mounted on tinted boards. Price 12s. and 5s. each.

THE NORWICH SCHOOL of PAINTING.

A Series of forty plates reproduced in Permanent Autotype after Cotman, Crome, Stark, Vincent, Lomax, Lound, Bright, &c. (Now Ready.)

MODERN ENGLISH ART.

A large collection of examples of works by G. F. Watts, R.A., Sir E. Burne Jones, Dante G. Rossetti, Albert Moore, Henry Ryland, Fred Walker, Herbert Schmalz, Edwin Douglas, Holman Hunt, Frederic Shields, &c., &c.

The Autotype Fine Art Gallery is open daily from 10 to 5. Admission Free. Inspection invited.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

FOR SALE, the COPYRIGHT and GOODWILL of a valuable BI-WEEKLY NEWSPAPER and PRINTING OFFICE in IRELAND, established for nearly a century. To be disposed of owing to Proprietor wishing to retire on large income from investments acquired through the Business.—All particulars with respect to capital required, &c., may be obtained from R. HUNSON, Newspaper Valuer, Herald Printing Works, Dudley, Worcestershire. A leading firm of professional auditors certify that the average profits for five years last past have been £600 per annum.

DIGBY, LONG &amp; CO.'S NEW BOOKS

NEW NOVEL BY GEORGE CRAMPTON.
1. EL CARMEN. A Romance of the River Plate. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. Second Edition.
"The story is of thrilling interest and captivating throughout."
Birmingham Gazette.
"The volume is one that can be read with interest. The details are carefully studied."—Athenaeum.
"A vigorous romance of the River Plate."—Gentleman.

NEW NOVEL BY RUPERT ALEXANDER.
2. THE VICAR OF ST. NICHOLAS. By the Author of "Ballycowan." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"This is a lively and entertaining book, rich in incident and skilful delineations of character. The plot is decidedly original, and the interest of the reader is sustained to the very end."—Dundee Courier.

NEW NOVEL BY MINA SANDEMAN.
3. SIR GASPARD'S AFFINITY. By the Author of "The Worship of Lucifer." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"The author of 'The Worship of Lucifer' has undoubtedly enhanced her reputation as a story-teller."—Dundee Courier.

NEW NOVEL BY J. GORDON PHILLIPS.
4. FLOA MACDONALD. A Romance of the '45. By the Author of "James Macpherson." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"The renaissance of the historic novel has been hailed with satisfaction in many quarters. This work by Mr. J. Gordon Phillips is a masterpiece of its kind."—Aberdeen Journal.

NEW NOVEL BY VIOLET TWEEDALE.
5. WHAT SHALL IT PROFIT A MAN? By the Author of "And they Two." &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

6. UNRELATED TWINS. By Belton Otterburn. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"An amusing and highly exciting story, well worth reading."—Aberdeen Press.

NEW NOVEL BY BELTON OTTERBURN.
7. NURSE ADELAIDE. By the Author of "Unrelated Twins." &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"The plot has the merit of being unusual in some of its details."—Manchester Guardian.

NEW NOVEL BY ERIC WYNDHAM.
8. REVELATION: a Romance By Eric Wyndham. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

9. NORMA: a School Tale. By Emily N. Bryant. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, pictorial cloth, 3s. 6d.

10. MANOUPA. By L. J. Rose-Soley. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Just out.]

11. LIFE IN AFRIKANDERLAND as VIEWED BY AN AFRIKANDER: a Story of Life in South Africa. By CLOS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

NEW BOOK BY MRS. CHARLES E. TERROT.
12. OUR PAYING GUESTS, and Other Stories. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"The tales are written in a simple and straightforward fashion."—Dundee Advertiser.

DIGBY, LONG & CO., 18, Bouverie Street, London, E.C.
AUTHORS may send in their MSS., suitable for Volume Publication, with a view to immediate consideration.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND &amp; CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.,
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HEER HANFSTAENGL, of Munich.

The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAVURE now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS.

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.

Office: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

DCC EXERCISES. Including Hints for the Solution of all the Questions in Choice and Chance. By WILLIAM ALLEN WHITWORTH, M.A., late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

CHOICE AND CHANCE. An Elementary Treatise on Permutations, Combination, and Probability, with 640 Exercises. Fourth Edition. Price 6s.

Cambridge: DEIGHTON BELL & CO.
London: GEORGE BELL & SONS.

EPPS'S COCOA.

EXTRACTS FROM A LECTURE ON 'FOODS AND THEIR VALUES,' by Dr. ANDREW WILSON, F.R.S.E., &c.—"If any motives—first, of due regard for health, and second, of getting full food-value for money expended—can be said to weigh with us in choosing our foods, then I say that Cocoa (Epps's being the most nutritious) should be made to replace tea and coffee without hesitation. Cocoa is a food; tea and coffee are not foods. This is the whole science of the matter in a nutshell, and he who runs may read the obvious moral of the story."

NEW BIOGRAPHY BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE LIFE OF GORDON."

THE LIFE OF SIR STAMFORD RAFFLES.

By DEMETRIUS C. BOULGER.

One Volume. Royal 8vo, gilt. With Portraits, Maps, and Full-Page Illustrations.

One Guinea net

"An excellent biography—an even better performance, by the way, than the same author's recent 'Life of Gordon.'"—The Daily News.

HORACE MARSHALL &amp; SON.

Now ready, 8vo, price 10s.

THE SECRET OF HEGEL.

Being the Hegelian System in Origin, Principle, Form, and Matter.

By JAS. HUTCHISON STIRLING, LL.D. Edin.

New Edition, Unabridged, but carefully Revised.

EDINBURGH: OLIVER &amp; BOYD.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON &amp; Co., Ltd.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN
AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS
from ONE GUINEA
per annum.

COUNTRY
SUBSCRIPTIONS from
TWO GUINEAS per annum.
N.B.—Two or Three Friends may
UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION
and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS IN TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited

30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.; LONDON; and at BANTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

WALTER SCOTT'S NEW BOOKS.

A NEW WORK BY MR. HAVELOCK ELLIS.

NOW READY.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

AFFIRMATIONS. By Havelock

ELLIS, Author of "Man and Woman," "The Criminal,"
"The New Spirit," &c.

The series of Essays contained in this volume ("Nietsche," "Casanova," "Zola," "Huysmans," "St. Francis," and others) is not so much a series of literary studies as a discussion of questions of the day (religion, morals, sex, literature and morals, "decadence," &c.), with as much freedom as it is desirable to exercise. It will be found that the volume is not a mere haphazard collection of unrelated papers, but one informed with a distinct and interesting unity of object.

THE CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.

Edited by HAVELOCK ELLIS.

FOUR IMPORTANT NEW VOLUMES.

Just issued, and First Large Edition nearly exhausted.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d., with Diagrams.

SLEEP: its Physiology, Pathology,

Hygiene, and Psychology. By Dr. MARIE DE

MANACEINE (St. Petersburg).

The LANCET says: "Written in a truly scientific spirit."
The DAILY CHRONICLE says: "It is full of most interesting hints concerning the cure of insomnia, and sufferers therefrom would do well to try the simple expedients there suggested before resorting to the use of any of the so-called hypnotics."

The SPECTATOR says: "A most interesting study of the phenomena of sleep."

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

HALLUCINATIONS and ILLU-

SIONS: a Study of the Fallacies of Perception. By EDMUND PARISH.

"This remarkable little volume."—Daily News.

Crown 8vo cloth, price 6s.

THE PSYCHOLOGY of the EMO-

TIONS. By Prof. T. H. RIBOT.

"Prof. Ribot's treatment is careful, modern, and adequate."
Academy.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. 124 Illustrations.

THE NEW PSYCHOLOGY. By E.

W. SCRIPFUR, Ph.D. (Leipzig).

"We have at present no work in English which gives in so compact a form so comprehensive a view of the subject."—Liverpool Post.

A NEW BOOK OF INDIAN TRAVEL.

READY IN A FEW DAYS.

Demy 8vo, gilt top, art linen, with 14 Full-Page Illustrations,
price 6s.

SUNNY MEMORIES of an INDIAN

WINTER. By Mrs. ARCHIBALD DUNN, Author of
"The World's Highway."

THE SCOTT LIBRARY.

Crown 8vo, gilt top, cloth elegant, price 1s. 6d.

NEW VOLUMES NOW READY.

RENAN'S LIFE OF JESUS. Trans-

lated, with an Introduction, by WILLIAM G.
HUTCHISON.

This is an entirely new translation of Renan's work, by the translator of "The Poetry of the Celtic Races, and other Studies by Ernest Renan."

CRITICISMS, REFLECTIONS, and

MAXIMS of GOETHE. Translated, with an Introduction and Biographical Note, by W. B. BONNFELDT.

Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, gilt top, price 1s. 6d.

[Now ready.]
"Any competent critic or editor, therefore, who aims at imparting to us a better understanding of one of the greatest of moderns is a genuine benefactor; and this is what Mr. Bonnfeldt has accomplished, not without success, in the present little volume."—Daily Chronicle.

ESSAYS of SCHOPENHAUER.

Translated by Mrs. RUDOLF DIRCKS. With an Introduction.

This is a collection of Schopenhauer's most representative Essays, including Authorship and Style—Education—Reading and Books—Women—Thinking for Oneself—Immortality—Religion—Metaphysics of Love—On Physiognomy—
On Suicide—On the Emptiness of Existence, &c.

THE WORLD'S GREAT NOVELS.

Large crown 8vo, illustrated, price 3s. 6d. per Volume.

IMPORTANT NEW ADDITION.

LES MISERABLES. By Victor

HUGO. 1,384 pages, 12 Full-Page Illustrations, including Frontispiece.

London:

WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED, Paternoster Square.

JOHN LANE'S LIST.

MR. WILLIAM WATSON'S NEW BOOK.

THE HOPE of the WORLD, and other Poems. Feap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. Also a Limited Large Paper Edition, 12s. 6d. net.

"We may almost call him the one upholder of classical tradition. The critics to whom poetry means a whirlwind of words are put out by the calm dignity of Mr. Watson's style. Time will show whether the exquisitely-graven cameo or the fragrant phantasmagoria be the more enduring thing of beauty."—Daily Chronicle.

THE COMING of LOVE, and other Poems. By THEODORE WATTS-DUNTON. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

Superb writing; it has its chances for all time. Marked by the poet's strongest characteristics, his rare art of describing by successive images of strength and beauty."—Daily News.

THE FAIRY CHANGELING, and other Poems. By DORA SIGERSON (Mrs. Clement Shorter). Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

POEMS. With which is incorporated "CHRIST IN HADES." By STEPHEN PHILLIPS. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net. [Immediately.]

POEMS. By Alice Meynell. Feap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

POEMS. By Francis Thompson. Pott 4to, 5s. net. Fourth Edition.

Dedicated by permission to H.R.H. the Duchess of York.

KING LONGBEARD. By BARRINGTON MACGREGOR. With over 100 Illustrations by Charles Robinson. Small 4to, 6s.

ALL THE WAY to FAIRYLAND. By Evelyn SHARP. With Eight Coloured Illustrations and Cover by Mrs. Percy Dearmer. 6s. [Uniform with "Wympe."]

THE MAKING of MATTHIAS. By J. S. FLETCHER. With over 40 Illustrations and decorations, chiefly animals, by Lucy Kemp-Welch, the painter of the famous Academy picture "Cott Hunting in the New Forest." Crown 8vo, 6s.

LULLABY LAND: Songs of Childhood. By EUGENE FIELD. Edited, with Introduction, by Kenneth Grahame. With 200 Illustrations by Charles Robinson. Uncut, or gilt edges. Crown 8vo, 6s.

CINDERELLA'S PICTURE BOOK. By Walter ORRANCE. Containing: I. Cinderella; II. Puss in Boots; III. Valentine and Orson. The three bound in one volume with a decorative cloth cover, end papers and a newly written and designed Preface and Title-page. 4s. 6d.; separately, 1s. each. Uniform with—

MOTHER HUBBARD'S PICTURE BOOK and THIS LITTLE PIG'S PICTURE BOOK.

LONDON: As Seen by C. D. GIBSON. Written and Illustrated by CHARLES DANA GIBSON. Scenes from London Streets, London Audiences, London Parks, London Drawing Rooms, London Salons.

Uniform with "Pictures of People and Drawings" by the same artist, and "In Vanity Fair," by A. B. Wenzell. Handsomely bound, with a characteristic cover. Large folio, 12 by 18 in., 20s.

THE PEOPLE of DICKENS. Six large Photographures from Drawings by C. D. GIBSON. Proof Impressions from Plates in a portfolio. 20s.

1—Scrooge; 2—Dick Swiveller and the Marchioness; 3—Tom Pinch and his Sister; 4—Mr. and Mrs. Micawber, David Copperfield, and Traddles; 5—Caleb Plummer and his Daughter; 6—Mr. Pickwick.

IN the GARDEN of PEACE. By Helen MILMAN. With 24 Illustrations by Edmund H. New. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

THE HAPPY EXILE. By H. D. Lowry. Author of "Make Believe" and "Women's Tragedies." With 6 Etchings by E. Philip Pimlott. Crown 8vo, 6s.

RECENT FICTION.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

FANTASIAS. By GEORGE EGERTON.

WHEN ALL MEN STARVE By CHARLES GLEIG.

A CHILD in the TEMPLE. By FRANK MATHEW.

DEATH, the KNIGHT, and the LADY. By H. DE VERE STACPOOLE.

Crown 8vo, 5s.

OECILIA. By STANLEY V. MAKOWER.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

DERELICTS. By W. J. LOCKE. [Second Edition.]

THE TREE of LIFE. By NETTIE SYRETT.

THE MAKING of a PRIG. By EVELYN SHARP.

MAX. By JULIA CROSEY.

MIDDLE GREYNES. By A. J. DAWSON.

SYMPHONIES. By GEORGE EGERTON.

THE QUEST of the GOLDEN GIRL. By RICHARD LE GALLIENNE. [Fifth Edition.]

PATIENCE SPARHAWK and HER TIMES. By GERTRUDE AHERTON. [Fifth Edition.]

KING NOANETT. By F. J. STIMSON.

Illustrated Catalogues, post-free, on application.

THE BODLEY HEAD, VIGO STREET LONDON, W.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S NEW BOOKS.

NOTICE.—The Second Edition of THE KING WITH TWO FACES, by M. E. COLERIDGE, having been entirely exhausted, a THIRD EDITION will be ready on TUESDAY NEXT at all Libraries and Booksellers', price 6s.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "STEPHEN REMARK." PAUL MERCER. By the Rev. the Hon. JAMES ADDERLEY. Third Edition. Cloth, 3s. 6d. DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Will be welcomed by all the large number of readers who enjoyed the same author's 'Stephen Remark.'"

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MISTHER O'RYAN." THE SON of A PEASANT. By EDWARD McNULTY. Cloth, 6s. STANDARD.—"An excellent Irish story."

SEVENTH THOUSAND. MORE BEASTS (For Worse Children). The new Nonsense Book by H. B. and B. T. B., Authors of "The Bad Child's Book of Beasts." 4to, 3s. 6d.

A MEMOIR of ANNE J. CLOUGH, Principal of Newnham College, Cambridge. By her Niece, BLANCHE CLOUGH. With 2 Portraits, 8vo, 12s. 6d.

SPECTATOR.—"Miss B. Clough has unfolded with singular discretion, clearness, and sympathy the early history of an important institution, and the personality of a great pioneer."

SECOND EDITION NOW READY. RECOLLECTIONS of AUBREY DE VERE. 1 vol., with Portrait, demy 8vo, 16s.

TRUTH.—"The most genial, charming, and amusing volume of reminiscences of the year."

MORNING POST.—"These 'Recollections' will appeal to many sympathies, personal, political, social, literary, and religious."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"A remarkable book."

BENIN, THE CITY of BLOOD:

An Account of the Benin Expedition. By R. H. BACON, D.S.O., Commander R.N. Illustrated by W. H. Overend. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

DAILY MAIL.—"As fascinating as it evidently is complete and accurate."

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY AND

LETTERS OF THE RIGHT HON. JOHN ARTHUR ROEBUCK, Q.C., M.P. Edited by ROBERT EADON LEADER. With 3 Portraits, demy 8vo, 16s.

GLOBE.—"This book is welcome. Mr. Leader has done his work well, and Roebuck the man, as well as Roebuck the Parliamentarian, is made to stand clearly before the mind's eye."

SECOND EDITION.

STYLE. By Walter Raleigh, Professor of English Literature at University College, Liverpool, Author of "The English Novel," "Robert Louis Stevenson," &c. Crown 8vo, 5s.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"A model treatise on a most difficult and important theme."

ELEVENTH THOUSAND.

FIRE and SWORD in the SUDAN.

By SLATIN PASHA, C.B. Translated by Lieut.-Col. WINGATE, D.S.O. New and Popular Edition, 6s.

SUMPTUOUS VOLUMES FOR GIFT-BOOKS.

THE CHIPPENDALE PERIOD in ENGLISH FURNITURE. By K. WARREN CLOUSTON. With 200 Illustrations by the Author. Demy 4to, handsomely bound, 31s. net. (In conjunction with Messrs. Debenham & Freebody.)

DEDICATED BY SPECIAL PERMISSION TO HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

OLD ENGLISH GLASSES. An

Account of Glass Drinking Vessels in England from Early Times to the End of the Eighteenth Century. By ALBERT HARTSHORNE, F.S.A. Illustrated by about 70 Tinted Plates and several Hundred Illustrations in the Text. Super-royal 4to, £3 3s. net.

EXPLORATION of the CAUCASUS.

By DOUGLAS W. FRESHFIELD, lately President of the Alpine Club and Hon. Sec. of the Royal Geographical Society. Illustrated by 74 Photogravure Plates, about 140 Illustrations in Text, and 4 Original Maps. 2 vols., large 4to, £3 3s. net.

* Large-Paper Edition entirely exhausted.

EDWARD ARNOLD, London and New York.

WM. BLACKWOOD &amp; SONS' CHRISTMAS LIST.

THIRD EDITION. NOW READY.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD and HIS SONS: their Magazine and Friends. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. Vols. I. and II., with 4 Portraits, demy 8vo, £2 2s.

THE BOYS' CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

PRINCE RANJITSINGH'S

JUBILEE BOOK of CRICKET. With 107 Full-Page Illustrations.

* Particulars of the different Editions may be had from the Booksellers.

CHRISTMAS BOOK FOR CHILDREN.

UNTOLD TALES of the PAST. By BEATRICE HARRADEN. With 40 Drawings by H. R. Millar. In handsome binding, square 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

BY THE MARQUESS OF BUTE, K.T.

THE ARMS of the ROYAL and PARLIAMENTARY BURGHS of SCOTLAND. By JOHN, MARQUESS of BUTE, K.T., J. R. N. MACPHAIL, and H. W. LONSDALE. With 131 Engravings on Wood, and 11 other Illustrations. Crown 4to, £2 2s. net.

* Only a few copies are offered for sale.

DARIEL: a Romance of Surrey. By R. D. BLACKMORE, Author of "Lorna Doone," "The Maid of Sker." Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

ON SOME of SHAKESPEARE'S

FEMALE CHARACTERS. By HELENA FAUCIT (Lady MARTIN). Dedicated by permission to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen. Fifth Edition. With Portrait by Lehmann. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

STORMONTE'S ENGLISH DICTION-

ARY. Pronouncing, Etymological, and Explanatory. New Edition. With Supplement by WILLIAM BAYNE. Library Edition, half-morocco, 18s. net.

GEORGE ELIOT.

POCKET EDITION. TASTEFULLY BOUND.

AMOS BARTON. Pott 8vo, 1s. net.

MR GILFIL'S LOVE STORY. Pott 8vo, 1s. net.

JANET'S REPENTANCE. Pott 8vo,

1s. net.

Also in leather binding, 1s. 6d. net each.

STANDARD WORKS FOR PRESENTATION.

KINGLAKE'S INVASION of the CRIMEA. 9 vols., crown 8vo. With an Index to the Complete Work. Illustrated with Maps and Plans. Each volume price 6s.

BURTON'S HISTORY of SCOTLAND. New and Cheaper Edition. In 8 vols., crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

GEORGE ELIOT'S WORKS. Standard

Edition. In 21 vols., handsomely bound in cloth, gilt top, £3 12s. 6d. Also to be obtained in the following leather bindings: Half brown calf, gilt top; half blue and green polished morocco, gilt top; half brown polished morocco, panelled back.

GEORGE ELIOT'S NOVELS and

LIFE. 9 volumes in 8. Crown 8vo, tastefully bound in art linen cloth, paper label title, and in straight-grained cloth, with panelled title, 42s. Sold in Sets only.

GEORGE ELIOT'S NOVELS. Cheap

Uniform Edition, Illustrated. The Set (8 vols. in 7), handsomely bound in half-calf, marbled edges; half-calf, gilt top; half-morocco, gilt top.

* The prices of the leather bindings may be had on application to the Booksellers.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

Mr. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW BOOKS.

THE FINE ART BOOK OF THE SEASON.
THE WORK OF CHARLES KEENE. Introduction and Comments by JOSEPH PENNELL, and a Bibliography of Selected Works. Contains over 150 illustrations, many of which have never before been printed. Imp. 4to, buckram and binding, £3 12s. 6d. net; also a fine edition, limited to 15 copies, with original drawing by Charles Keene, £15 15s. net.
The Daily News.—"Mr. Pennell is the fullest appreciation of Keene we have yet had."

LETTERS OF DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI to WILLIAM ALLINGHAM, 1854-1870. Edited by G. BIRKBECK HILL, D.O.L. Illustrated with Photogravures, and other Pictures. Cloth, 12s.
The book abounds in amusing anecdotes of the early pre-Raphaelite days.—Pall Mall Gazette.

By the Author of "Life in the Tuilleries."
THE STORY OF MARIE ANTOINETTE
 By ANNA L. BICKNELL. Illustrated. Cloth, 12s.
Schoolman.—"Specially entertaining.... The book is sumptuously bound, and contains about 30 portraits and scenes about Versailles in the highest style of book illustration."

New Volume of the "Builders of Greater Britain."
 Edited by H. F. WILSON.
SIR THOMAS MAITLAND: The Mastery
 of the Mediterranean. By WALTER FREWEN LORD.
Pall Mall Gazette.—"Mr. Lord has brought out the contrasts and eccentricities of his hero's character with admirable clearness and with considerable humour. Written in a bright and spirited style, this study of Sir Thomas Maitland furnishes a fascinating chapter in the history of the making of the Empire."

Recently issued, in same Series.
SIR WALTER RALEIGH. By Martin A. S. HUME. With Photogravure Frontispiece and Map, cloth, 5s. each.
 New Volume of "The Story of the Nations."

MODERN FRANCE, 1789-1895. By Andre LEBON, Memb. House of Deputies, late Minister for Trade and Industry. Many Illustrations, and Index; cloth, 5s.
Journal des Debats (translation): "M. Lebon has accomplished his difficult task with unusual success. His book is not a dry classification of events; it is a complete narrative, in which nothing is wanting, nothing is superfluous."—P. VILLARS.

JOHN OLIVER HOBBS'S NEW NOVEL.
THE SCHOOL FOR SAINTS. By John Oliver HOBBS. Green cloth, gilt tops, 6s.
"The School for Saints" is spiritually and intellectually a remarkable book.... The book is packed with intellectual matter, with acute observations of human follies, and arresting reflections of life.—Literature.

GOOD READING: Extracts from many books by the Authors. 2nd year. Paper, 1s.; cloth, 2s.

A LIST of Mr. T. FISHER UNWIN'S RECENT PUBLICATIONS will be sent post free to any address on receipt of card.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

THIRD YEAR.

COSMOPOLIS:

A Tri-Lingual and International Review.

Edited by F. ORTMANS.

Price 2s. 6d.

*.* Contains upwards of 300 Pages in each Part.

It is not possible to give a detailed programme for the coming year, but our readers already know that all important events arising from politics, literature, art, or science will receive immediate attention in COSMOPOLIS. No efforts will be spared to procure interesting unpublished papers, especially letters. In this respect we are glad to announce a second series of Letters of JOHN STUART MILL, some Notes of S. T. COLERIDGE on a German History of Comic Literature; in French the Letters of EMILE OLLIVIER to RICHARD WAGNER, the Correspondence of Marshal MAIGNAN, the Memoirs of INGERS; in German the Correspondence of TOUBERTEFF. We have not forgotten the success obtained by the simultaneous discussion in three sections of the Review of one question.

As it is our intention to continue these discussions, we have much pleasure in announcing for January, 1898, a symposium on "Society of the Future." The English Article will be by Mr. HYNDMAN, the French by M. JAURES, the German by Mr. LIEBKNECHT. The February number will contain answers by the most eminent authorities on the Conservative side; while in the March number some noted personalities in the three countries will contribute letters containing their opinion and judgment of the two social doctrines as exposed in these articles. Many other important questions will be treated in the same way—the Colonial Expansion of European Nations, the question of Women's Rights, &c.

Lastly, the Editor is glad to inform the readers of COSMOPOLIS of the considerable extension the Review will take in 1898 by means of Supplements. A Russian Supplement has already had one year's existence; it is added (gratuitously) to the ordinary edition of COSMOPOLIS in Russia, and may be had separately in all other countries. This development met with such success that next year will see the establishment of Scandinavian, Dutch, Italian, Spanish, and even Greek Supplements. Thus, in Italy, for instance, COSMOPOLIS will contain, at the same price, four sections—namely, English, French, German, and Italian; out of Italy, the latter can only be obtained separately. In this way COSMOPOLIS will really deserve its title of an "International" Review.

Yearly Subscription, 33s., post free; Half-Yearly, 16s. 6d., post free.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

FRAGMENTS of the BOOKS of KINGS

ACCORDING to the TRANSLATION of AQUILA. From a MS. formerly in the Geniza at Cairo, now in the possession of O. Taylor, D.D., Master of St. John's College, and F. Schechter, M.A., University Reader in Talmudic Literature. Edited by F. O. BURKITT, M.A., with a Preface by O. TAYLOR, D.D. Imp. 4to, with 6 Facsimiles, 10s. 6d. net.
[Immediately.]

A CATALOGUE of the GREEK VASES

in the FITZWILLIAM MUSEUM, CAMBRIDGE. By E. A. GARDNER, M.A., late Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, Yates Professor of Archaeology at University College, London. Royal 8vo, with 4 Plates, 12s. 6d. net.
[Immediately.]

ONOMASTICON ANGLO-SAXONICUM

A List of Anglo-Saxon Proper Names from the time of Bede to that of King John. By W. G. SEARLE, M.A., late Fellow of Queen's College, Cambridge. Royal 8vo, 20s. net.

TEXTS and STUDIES: Contributions to Biblical and Patristic Literature. Edited by J. ARMITAGE ROBINSON, D.D., Norrisian Professor of Divinity.

Vol. V. No. 2. Clement of Alexandria: Quis Dives Salvetur. Re-edited, together with an Introduction on the MSS. of Clement's Works, by P. MORDAUNT BARNARD, M.A., Christ's College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 3s. net.

Vol. 5. No. 3. The Hymn of the Soul, contained in the Syriac Acts of St. Thomas, re-edited, with an English translation, by A. A. BEVAN, M.A., Lord Almoner's Reader in Arabic. Demy 8vo, 2s. net.

THE PARALLEL HISTORY of the JEWISH MONARCHY, Printed in the Text of the Revised Version, 1885. Part I. The Reigns of David and Solomon, 1 Samuel 31 to 1 Kings 11. 1 Chronicles 10 to 2 Chronicles 9. Arranged by R. SOMERVILLE, M.A., Assistant Master and Bursar of Harrow School. With an Introduction by S. R. DRIVER, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. Demy 8vo, 2s.

THE STEAM ENGINE and other

HEAT ENGINES. By J. A. EWING, M.A., F.R.S., M.Inst.C.E., Professor of Mechanism and Applied Mechanics in the University of Cambridge. Demy 8vo. With Illustrations. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 16s.

ELEMENTS of the MATHEMATICAL

THEORY of ELECTRICITY and MAGNETISM. By J. J. THOMSON, M.A., Cavendish Professor of Experimental Physics. Crown 8vo Second Edition. 10s. 6d.

SAYINGS of the JEWISH FATHERS:

comprising Pirke Aboth in Hebrew and English, with Notes and Excursions. Edited by O. TAYLOR, D.D., Master of St. John's College. Second Edition. With Additional Notes and a Cairo fragment of Aquila's version of the Old Testament. Demy 8vo, 10s.
[Immediately.]

PITT PRESS SHAKESPEARE FOR SCHOOLS

NEW VOLUME.

Subject for the Cambridge Local Examinations, 1898.

SHAKESPEARE.—MERCHANT of VENICE. With Introduction, Notes, and Glossary. By A. W. VERRITY, M.A. 1s. 6d.

[Immediately.]

PITT PRESS SERIES.

NEW VOLUMES.

EARLE, MICROCOSMOGRAPHY.

Edited by A. S. WEST, M.A. 3s.

MACAULAY.—PITT and CHATHAM.

Edited by A. D. INNES, M.A., Oriel College, Oxford. 2s. 6d.

Subject for the Cambridge Local Examinations.—Junior and Preliminary, 1898.

MALOT. REMI ET SES AMIS.

Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Vocabulary, by MARGARET DE G. VERALL, of Newnham College, Cambridge. 2s.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS,

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO.'S BOOKS

SUITABLE

FOR CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

TENTH THOUSAND.

ALFRED LORD TENNYSON: a

Memoir. By HIS SON. With Photogravure Portraits of Lord Tennyson, Lady Tennyson, &c. Facsimiles of Portions of Poems; and Illustrations after Pictures by G. F. Watts, R.A., Samuel Laurence, Mrs. Allingham, Richard Doyle, Biscoombe Gardner, &c. 2 vols., medium 8vo, 36s. net.

NEW BOOK BY RUDYARD KIPLING.

Sixteenth Thousand. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

"CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS."

A Story of the Grand Banks. By RUDYARD KIPLING. Illustrated by I. W. TABER.

WORLD.—"A fine wholesome story."

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"A rattling good book."

GRAPHIC.—"There should not be a more popular book for boys this season."

GUARDIAN.—"It appeals to all lovers of fresh air and salt water, and brave deeds of simple men."

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS BY JOSEPH PENNELL AND HUGH THOMSON.

HIGHWAYS and BYWAYS in

DEVON and CORNWALL. By ARTHUR H. NORWAY. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"So delightful that we would gladly fill columns with extracts were space as elastic as imagination.... The text is excellent; the illustrations of it are even better."

HUGH THOMSON'S NEW CHRISTMAS BOOKS.

NORTHANGER ABBEY and

PERSUASION. By JANE AUSTEN. With 40 Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON, and an Introduction by AUSTIN DOBSON. Crown 8vo, cloth, uncut edges, 3s. 6d. "Peacock" Edition, cloth, elegant, 5s.

MANSFIELD PARK. By Jane

AUSTEN. With 40 Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON, and an Introduction by AUSTIN DOBSON. Crown 8vo, cloth, uncut edges, 3s. 6d. "Peacock" Edition, cloth elegant, 5s.

DAILY GRAPHIC.—"Charmingly illustrated by Hugh Thomson, who is never happier than when dealing with Miss Austen's demure, high-waisted maidens."

BY ALFRED AUSTIN, POET LAUREATE.

THE GARDEN THAT I LOVE.

With Illustrations. Seventh Thousand. Extra crown 8vo, 9s.

IN VERONICA'S GARDEN.

With Illustrations. Fifth Thousand. Extra crown 8vo, 9s.

JANE AUSTEN'S NOVELS.

In 5 vols.

Pride and Prejudice—Sense and Sensibility—Emma—Mansfield Park—Northanger Abbey and Persuasion. Illustrated by HUGH THOMSON and CHARLES BROCK. In cloth box, 25s.

THOMAS LOVE PEACOCK'S

WORKS. In 5 vols.

Maid Marian and Crotchet Castle—Headlong Hall and Nightmare Abbey—Gryll Grange—Melincourt—Misfortunes of Elfin and Rhododaphne. Illustrated by H. R. MILLAR and F. H. TOWNSEND. In cloth box, 25s.

MARIA EDGEWORTH'S

NOVELS. In 6 vols.

Castle Rackrent and the Absentee—Ormond—Popular Tales—Helen—Belinda—Parent's Assistant. Illustrated by CHRIS HAMMOND and CARL SCHLOESSER. In cloth box, 30s.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS	PAGE
Mr. Watson's Poetry ... ..	541
The Invention of Fairyland ... ..	542
Rossetti ... ..	543
Two American Books ... ..	543
Mr. Lionel Johnson's Poems ... ..	544
Voices Academicæ ... ..	545
The English Dialect Dictionary ... ..	545
C. K. ... ..	546
Armchair Books ... ..	546
BRIEFER MENTION ... ..	517
NOTES AND NEWS ... ..	540
REPUTATIONS RECONSIDERED ... ..	551
SOME YOUNGER REPUTATIONS ... ..	552
THE CENTENARY OF THE BIRTH OF HEINE.—L. ... ..	553
THE FRENCH ACADEMY ... ..	554
THE BOOK MARKET ... ..	555
THE WEEK ... ..	557
NEW BOOKS RECEIVED ... ..	557
CORRESPONDENCE ... ..	557
FICTION SUPPLEMENT ... ..	125-128

REVIEWS.

MR. WATSON'S POETRY.

The Hope of the World, and Other Poems.
By William Watson. (John Lane.)

ABOUT 1880 Mr. Watson published The Prince's Quest, a pretty poem, in sensuous couplets caught from Keats. It was boyish poetry, but it took the fancy of Rossetti who was generous in his praise. Then Mr. Watson came under the influence of Wordsworth, and his literary ideals changed. He vowed himself to the service of no loose-vestured muse, but to one of chastened, dignified, austere beauty. He would recall a laxly-singing world to classic serenity and classic stateliness. The firstfruits of the new ambition are visible in the Epigrams of 1884, long neglected and now scarcely obtainable. Of the quatrain, terse, polished, pregnant with meaning, Mr. Watson proved himself a master. Here is a specimen :

" 'Tis human fortune's happiest height, to be
A spirit melodious, lucid, poised, and whole :
Second in order of felicity
I hold it, to have walk'd with such a soul."

And, again :

" Think not thy wisdom can illumine away
The ancient tanglement of night and day.
Enough, to acknowledge both, and both revere :
They see not clearliest who see all things clear."

It was Wordsworth's Grave that first, though not at once, found Mr. Watson an audience. In 1892—those were palmy days for new poets—his fresh and undeniable poetic voice was recognised, and received a warm welcome. Since then, in spite of injudicious friends, his reputation has increased, and is increasing. Classic he is still in manner and temperament, with the characteristic qualities and defects of classicism. At his best he can be extraordinarily felicitous, and can move with a liberal gait that approaches sublimity. But the step from the sublime to the commonplace is one easily covered by the classic attitude; and Mr. Watson often takes it. Then he can be tame, frigid, tedious. Perhaps his finest single poem is Lachrymæ Musarum, an elegy upon Lord Tennyson, from which we quote a few lines :

" For lo ! creation's self is one great choir,
And what is nature's order but the rhyme
Whereto the worlds keep time,
And all things move with all things from their prime ?
Who shall expound the mystery of the lyre ?
In far retreats of elemental mind
Obscurely comes and goes
The imperative breath of song, that as the wind
Is trackless, and oblivious whence it blows.
Demand of lilies wherefore they are white,
Extort her crimson secret from the rose,
But ask not of the Muse that she disclose
The meaning of the riddle of her might :
Somewhat of all things sealed and recondite,
Save the enigma of herself, she knows."

It is a pity that Mr. Watson does not recognise his own limitations. His bent is essentially thoughtful, meditative, elegiac; he has not the lyric cry. Yet from time to time he would write lyrics, and, of all singers most deliberate, will call himself "a tarrying minstrel, who finds, not fashions, his numbers." At heart he is philosopher rather than bard : it is a sane, a manly, a wholesome philosophy.

In his latest volume, The Hope of the World, both his qualities and the defects of his qualities are well represented. The book is slight, but the three longer poems with which it opens may well take their place with Mr. Watson's finest work. All three may roughly be classed as elegiac, by which we mean that, though emotion is expressed in them, it is an intellectualised emotion, dominated and over-ruled by speculative thought. Profoundly sceptical in temper, they draw their inspiration from a remarkable fervour and chastity of moral purpose. The higher, the ethical agnosticism, has found no such setting of poetry since the too brief days of Matthew Arnold's song. The number which gives its title to the volume is a repudiation of facile optimism. The poet finds Law in heaven; Love he finds only on earth. Of an ethical intention in Law there is no proof, nor any sign that man was the goal of creation; his existence may be due but to a chance throw of Nature's die :

" In cave and bosky dene
Of old there crept and ran
The gibbering form obscene
That was and was not man.
With fairer covering clad
The desert beasts went by ;
The couchant lion had
More speculative eye,
And goodlier speech the birds, than we when we began."

If, then, man is not necessarily the culmination of an ascent on earth, how dare we infer an ascent in some distant life? Hope will have it so, but this is the hardihood of hope. And as for virtue, is not the virtue which disregards such hope the truer? The poem closes with two stanzas of a noble stoicism, a fine climax to a finely handled theme.

" Carry thy largesse hence,
Light Giver ! Let me learn
To abjure the opulence
I have done nought to earn ;

And on this world no more
To cast ignoble slight,
Counting it but the door
Of other worlds more bright.

Here, where I fail or conquer, here is my concern :

Here, where perhaps alone
I conquer or I fail.
Here, o'er the dark Deep blown,
I ask no perfumed gale ;
I ask the unpampering breath
That fits me to endure
Chance and victorious Death,
Life, and my doom obscure,

Who know not whence I am sped, nor to what port I sail."

Equally fine and closely akin to this in its thought is "The Unknown God." It would seem to owe its origin to a remarkable passage in the recently discovered Logia of Jesus, which countenances the Greek conception of a deity immanent in nature, rather than the Hebrew conception, which met and overcame this in the early centuries of Christianity, of a deity external to and set over against nature. It has a stately opening :

" When, overarched by gorgeous night,
I wave my trivial self away ;
When all I was to all men's sight
Shares the erasure of the day ;
Then do I cast my cumbering load,
Then do I gain a sense of God."

The God of Judæa, made in the image of a Jew, an anthropomorphic God, a tribal divinity, Mr. Watson unhesitatingly rejects :

" A God whose ghost, in arch and aisle,
Yet haunts his temple—and his tomb ;
But follows in a little while
Odin and Zeus to equal doom ;
A God of kindred seed and line ;
Man's giant shadow, hailed divine.
O streaming worlds, O crowded sky,
O life, and mine own soul's abyss,
Myself am scarce so small that I
Should bow to Deity like this !
This my Begetter ? This was what Man in his violent youth begot."

Then he strives to express his sense of a divine power which, in some unintelligible but none the less real sense, is in all things, a power unapproachable by prayer, and not to be thought of as over-ruling human actions.

" Raise thou the stone, and find me there, Cleave thou the wood, and there am I."

Man has thoughts and ideals that are divine, but the law of the world is in no obvious or direct harmony with these. On the contrary, success in life, for nation or individual, is most often reached by flagrant disregard of the higher promptings. And so Mr. Watson counters Mr. Kipling :

" Best by remembering God, say some,
We keep our high imperial lot.
Fortune, I fear, hath oftenest come
When we forgot—when we forgot !
A lovelier faith their happier crown,
But history laughs and weeps it down !"

In dealing with these two poems we have been content to expound Mr. Watson, and not to comment upon him, because we are here concerned not with the essential justice of his thinking, but with the magnificent poetic form in which he voices it. The third important poem in the book is an Ode in May, a hymn of exultation to our father the Sun, who begat us on our mother the Earth. This is perhaps Mr. Watson's high-water mark as a lyricist. The half-dozen lines that we quote seem to us, for once in a way, really to breathe "the imperative breath of song":

"What is so sweet and dear
As a prosperous morn in May,
The confident prime of the day,
And the dauntless youth of the year,
When nothing that asks for bliss,
Asking aright, is denied,
And half of the world a bridegroom is,
And half of the world a bride?"

This has the real impetus: here the oestrus of song has stung. The score of poems which make up the rest of the book contain only one thing of first-rate importance. This is a sonnet on "Estrangement," which we do not hesitate to class with such masterpieces upon similar themes as Drayton's sonnet, "Since there's no help, come, let us kiss and part"; and that by a modern poetess which is called "Renouncement," and begins, "I must not think of thee; and tired, yet strong." There is real imaginative insight here:

"So, without overt breach, we fall apart,
Tacitly sunder—neither you nor I
Conscious of one intelligible why,
And both, from severance, winning equal smart.
So, with resigned and acquiescent heart,
Whene'er your name on some chance lip may lie,
I seem to see an alien shade pass by,
A spirit wherein I have no lot or part.
Thus may a captive, in some fortress grim,
From casual speech betwixt his warders, learn
That June on her triumphal progress goes Through arched and bannered woodlands;
while for him
She is a legend emptied of concern,
And idle is the rumour of the rose."

Two or three of Mr. Watson's slighter numbers are echoes of his Eastern campaign. Ethical fervour and enlightened patriotism drove him into politics; he aspired to play Tyrtæus to the Anglo-Saxon against the Moslem. From the point of view of poetry it was not entirely a success; the trumpet-note is hard to catch, and Mr. Watson never quite caught it. But we prefer Mr. Watson bellicose to Mr. Watson sentimental or Mr. Watson facetious. He has a heavy hand at gallantry or humour; and when he combines the two he is intolerable. Thus he flutes it "To S. W. in the Forest":

"Does the Forest need you? No!
Any hidden hollow there
Sweet enough without you were.
You are palpably de trop
In the glades of Fontainebleau."

This is poor fooling. We take our leave of Mr. Watson with a sense that, in spite of the manifest inequalities of his inspiration, he has yet deserved well of us, in that he has set before him a high poetic ideal, and has followed it unflinchingly. He, if anyone, has a right to say, as he does say, of his muse:

"At least she prompts no vulgar strain;
At least are noble themes her choice."

And, again:

"It was her vow that she would dwell
With greatest things, or dwell alone."

THE INVENTION OF FAIRYLAND.

All the Way to Fairyland. By Evelyn Sharp.
(John Lane.)

THERE are two theories in the matter. A very long time ago (according to the elder one) somebody sat down and invented Fairyland. Or perhaps it was a joint effort, and a committee of somebodies sat round a green-baize-covered table. Anyhow, whether dating from a plural they or a singular he, the result seems to have been exactly right and unalterable and satisfactory. The rules were framed once and for all; the laws were codified; the population (with a certain range and liberty) fixed; and the manners (within a large margin of license) prescribed. From that far-away time till now, the conditions have remained immovable, and both deliberate attempts at subversion and spirits of red revolution have alike fizzled out and faded away, powerless against the splendidly massive conservatism of a tradition that has its suckers on the unwritten side of history.

Perhaps it is on this very account that the later pioneers in fairy scholarship, recognising in this very fixity something more than natural, have advanced the daring theory that as it cannot possibly be we who invented Fairyland, Fairyland must have invented us. According to this thesis of theirs, we only exist by favour of fairies. Having pleased, in a whimsical moment, to invent us (Lord only knows why), they have us at their mercy, and, as soon as they are tired of thinking about us, or want a new amusement—puff! we shall go out, and that story will be over. Fortunately fairies, as all records agree, are loving, irrational, and not easily wearied; and, after all, humanity must possess many humorous points for the outsider that escape the encaged observer within. So we may, perhaps, count upon another month or so yet in which to read a fairy book or two, and even to criticise them.

Everybody knows how a fairy-story should be made; but the inflexibility of the conditions has galled the withers of many radicals, who have kicked accordingly and essayed to fling their burden—with the satisfying result of failure, complete and dead. The up-to-date fairy-story, with its jibes and sly hits at the topics of the day and the modern attitude of thought, raised its revolutionary head for a very brief while; Mr. Dash, if we recollect aright, did some neat and pretty things in that way; so did Miss Blank. Even the Water-Babies, delightful as it is, has the same taint—the taint, that is, of a fairyism which is the vehicle only, not the whole aim and end.

Miss Evelyn Sharp falls into no such error. The conditions, after all, are not hard, once one recognises them clearly and fully, as she does. Of these the principal, undoubtedly, are, that you should have the right accent and adopt the right point of view. I say nothing of wit, wisdom, and imagination. No one who has not all three would ever dream of venturing upon a fairy-story—perhaps I may go a step farther and say that no one who has all three, in full endowment, would ever dream of writing anything else. At any rate, Miss Sharp has wit, wisdom, and imagination for her initial equipment, but she possesses also what is rarer far—the accent and the point of view; with entire recognition, too, of the limitations these impose. For instance, she would never introduce her bicycle—supposing her to possess one—into this old-fashioned country. She knows perfectly well that if there should be any occasion for hurry—which is rarely the case in Fairyland—naturally you take a rocking-horse.

It is a minor test, in these cases, but an interesting one, to see how far the handling of bird-and-beast life is right and natural—natural, that is, from the fairy point of view, for fairy animals, like heraldic animals, have their own severe laws, quite independent of zoological codes. The beasts in this book fully answer the test. They are clever and sweet and tender, of course, or they would not be here; but they never strain after "scoring" or being "smart" by their modernity—a practice akin to gagging in an actor. The same may be said of the toys, who behave as honest toys should, and not at all like young people with views. There is one doll in particular, of whom I dare to say that she behaves in the most varied and trying circumstances exactly as a gentle-doll should; and I have known some very well-bred ones. But every story bubbles with wit, tenderness, and fancy, and even their humanity (a rare achievement) is as kissable as their beasts and their toy-folk.

"And there they built a very small house in a very big garden, and they planted it with rows of chocolate-trees, and rows of acid-drop-bushes, and lots of almond-rockerries; and the fairies came and filled it with flowers from Fairyland that had no names at all, but were the most beautiful flowers that any one has ever seen, for they never faded nor died, but just changed into something else when they were tired of being the same flower."

The right accent seems to be there, as in the chime of hare-bells at the hour for evening step-dancing on mushroom-tops. And who will dare question the point of view?

Mrs. Percy Dearmer's delightful illustrations might well serve as pegs from which to dangle much highly coloured talk on modern tendencies of art, and so on. But I prefer to go straight to my individual impression, and to thank her for summoning up so dear and so early a recollection as that of my very first paint-box. Surely the "manner" of this artist was my own "early manner"—those broad simple spaces, that large handling of primary colours? My tongue begins to protrude again as I look at them (this was a part of the early manner). Again the obstinate lid of that paint-box jams and slides a little, and jams again in its old way—again the crimson lake sticks to the Prussian blue, and the gamboge persists in "rucking up" when the lid has to be pushed back—and the potent old smell asserts itself once more. Mrs. Dearmer ought to be very happy painting such pictures, and one wonders she ever does anything else. But, perhaps, she never does do anything else.

KENNETH GRAHAME.

ROSSETTI.

Letters of Dante Gabriel Rossetti to William Allingham, 1854-1870. By George Birkbeck Hill, D.C.L. (Fisher Unwin.)

Of these letters the most important have already appeared in an American magazine; but, together with the informing, and as a rule very satisfactory, notes of Dr. Hill, they are thoroughly welcome in their new and extended form. It would be affectation to say that the letters have any literary value of their own; they are interesting because they are Rossetti's, and that is enough. There is nothing romantic, and there is nothing morbid about them from beginning to end. They are practical, sane, and even shrewd throughout; and they show the poet in a particularly amiable light, deferential to the opinions of an inferior mind while holding fast to his own, eager to make the most of merit in others, and unsparing of trouble in the services of friendship. Rossetti has been much written about, but chiefly in the later years of his life, when drugs had done their worst for him. These letters deal with days before that interior darkness had set in. Their chief melancholy is only that which the reader borrows from his own knowledge of the after life of Rossetti, who, meanwhile, was a schoolboy in his simplicity, in his modesty, in his attitude towards his ambitions, and in his slang.

All the same, things went with the poet very much awry. He was constantly writing to friends to "inflict his MS. verses upon them"—so little was his real power as a poet at first appreciated by himself or by them. It will be news to many that the father of Dante Rossetti expostulated with him for wasting time on verse when he might have been at his easel. In 1860 he sent the MSS. to Mr. Ruskin, and then to Allingham. He had asked Mr. Ruskin to send "Jenny" to the Cornhill, but Mr. Ruskin had refused, offering instead to send one of the mystical poems which Rossetti did not care to isolate.

"I wish you'd specially tell me," says Rossetti to Allingham, "of any you don't think worth including. You will find that your advice has been followed often (if you remember what you gave), and so it is not time wasted to advise me. When I think how old most of these things are, it seems like a sort of mania to keep thinking of them still; but I suppose one's leaning still to them depends mainly on their having no trade associations, and being still a sort of thing of one's own."

What the poet personally loses of the poetry he gives to others is here suggested; and the same sentiment may have had something to do with Rossetti's later dislike of exhibiting his pictures. Of the poems in MS., meanwhile he adds: "I have no definite ideas as to doing anything with them, but should like, even if they lie at rest, to make them as good as I can." Are there such poems hidden in portfolios now? one can but ask. The sharpened appetite of readers and of editors seems to negative the possibility. Yet Rossetti was in communication with Allingham, an editor and the friend of editors, a fair critic and a fair poet, whose own verses were always negotiable; and "Jenny," and many another poem that is now the world's possession, lay for years in a neglected MS., which ran risks in the post—"I have no other copies," he writes to Allingham—and made at last a veritable descent into the tomb.

On Rossetti's preferences in literature and life, the Allingham Letters throw new light. First, as regards his own poems, one learns that he had "no prejudice himself in favour of 'Ave,' when Allingham suggested its omission from his volume; but happily he knew "he should be smothered by certain friends it has if it did not go in." Writing to a maiden aunt, after his poems were published, Rossetti tells her he has heard, with remorse, that she has ordered a copy. "To speak frankly," he says, "I was deterred from sending it to you by one poem, 'Jenny,' of which I felt uncertain whether you would be pleased with it. I am not ashamed of having written it (indeed, I assure you that I would never have written it if I thought it unfit to be read with good results). My mother likes it, on the whole, the best in the volume after some consideration." That was as it should be; but we do not think any worse of Miss Christina Rossetti, with her severe reserves and denials, for having confessed to a friend late in her life that she had never read it. Rossetti "loathed Once a Week, illustrations and all. Meredith's novel, however," he adds, "has very great merit of a wonderfully queer kind." The allusion is, of course, to Evan Harrington. Of another friend of those days, Swinburne, he says: "As for his plays, I don't think they will be to your liking. For my own part, I think he is much better suited to ballad writing and such like; but there are real beauties in the plays too." Of The Ring and the Book he thought "there was perversity in the choice of the subject, though, of course, redeemed by perverse treatment." Stories of Carlyle's brusquenesses grow a little tiring, but yet another is told here. Meeting Browning, and "meaning to say something to please," he found himself saying of The Ring and the Book: "It is a wonderful book. I read it all through, all made out of an Old Bailey story that might have been told in ten lines, and only wants forgetting." Walt Whitman he regarded as "sublimated Tupper." The literary and personal friendship between Mr. Ruskin and Rossetti is shown at its strongest in this book. Mr. Ruskin may, indeed, be called the fairy-godfather of the piece. He it was whose purse enabled Miss Siddal, a consumptive from the first, to go abroad to sunshine before her marriage with Rossetti. The records of that union as they appear in these Letters are happy records, despite poverty and despite the birth of a child, like Tennyson's first-born, already dead. The starting of the firm of Morris & Co. is alluded to, the "real shop," as Rossetti calls it with excited elation, belonging at first, not to Morris only (the "Topsy" of these Letters), but also to Rossetti, to "Ned" (Sir Edward Burne Jones), and to others. The friendship between the Burne Jones's and the Dante Rossettis was so close that, shortly after their marriage, they talked of making a common home together.

The editing of the Letters leaves little to be desired. A serious accusation of "vanity" against a poet who said in a private letter that he preferred one of his own poems to fifty "Mauds," shows a slight defect of humour on Dr. Hill's part: he was a poet who said and wrote many things with a twinkle in his eye. On another page, "Victories of Love" is misprinted "Victims"; and Dr. Hill, in saying that Mr. Aubrey de Vere cannot have carried out his intention of editing an anthology that was to contain specimens of Dante and Christina Rossetti's verse, does not speak by the book. Dr. Hill has seen only the 1893 edition of the Household Poetry Book; but it was issued years earlier with a fuller representation of contemporary verse.

TWO AMERICAN BOOKS.

The Literary History of the American Revolution. By Moses Coit Tyler. (Putnam.)

"Not in jest or playfulness, but in uttermost sincerity of scorn, in the ruthlessness of unforgiving hate was this poet of alienated America (Philip Freneau) to say his last word to the unfortunate monarch whose blundering conscientiousness in kingcraft, whose well-intentioned and prayerful obstinacy in baleful leadership had at last brought to England the loss of her most valuable dependency, and to the English-speaking race a disruption that should bear for unborn millions on both sides of the Atlantic a legacy, perhaps an endless legacy, of mutual ill-will."

This passage is sufficiently typical of the spirit in which Mr. Tyler has approached his task. The ordinary Englishman, conscious of nothing but kindly feeling towards Americans and of pride in their achievements, is naturally a little puzzled about this talk of "an endless legacy of ill-will." Lord Rosebery, at the recent celebration of the Battle of Bannockburn, happily observed that England could well afford to forget to remember the triumphs of Flodden and Dunbar. In the same way the modern Englishman looks round, and can think without emotion of Saratoga and Yorktown, while to the victors such impartiality is still impossible. At any rate, we can assure Mr. Tyler that the ill-will between the two peoples, if it still survive, is at least no longer "mutual." And reading over this collection of the literature of the Revolution one is struck by the little difference which a hundred years have made. It is as though the clockwork of American national life in this particular matter had stood suddenly still. Mr. Tyler's attitude towards England is still that of the Rev. Nathaniel Whitaker, and might easily find expression in the preacher's words:

"See yonder spacious fields, subdued to fruitfulness by the sweat and toil of our fathers or ourselves, yielding their increase to clothe, pamper and enrich the tyrant's favourites, who are base enough to assist him in his cursed plots to enslave us. Does this rouse your resentment? Stop a moment, and I'll show you spectacle more shocking than this! What meagre visages do I see in yonder field, toiling and covered with sweat to cultivate the soil? Who are those in rags, bearing burdens and drawing water for these haughty lords, and then cringing to them for a morsel of bread? They are (O gracious God! support my spirits)—they are my sons and my daughters loaded with irons and dragging after them wherever they go the heavy, galling, ignominious chains of slavery."

This appalling picture is based upon the fact that the British Parliament had passed a Stamp Act which in its main features was modelled upon an Act passed by the Massachusetts Legislature ten years before, and which was designed to raise money, not for exportation to England, but for purely American purposes. In his allusions, however, to the question of the employment of Hessians by the British Government, Mr. Tyler has allowed himself to be swayed by more modern sentiment. To the employers of those Hessians their hire seemed a very ordinary piece of business. King George was a German prince as well as a British monarch, and was accustomed to make such use of Germans. The colonists were well aware of the pretty German custom, and that the father of the Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, whose mercenaries were smashed by Washington at Trenton, had, in Europe, on one occasion hired out six thousand of his soldiers to either side.

Except for occasional excesses of language, with which his quaint anti-English feeling consciously betrays him, Mr. Tyler has done his work of selection excellently well. It is interesting to note that the American tendency to make bigness the test of greatness is not modern: thus Freneau, the most genuinely inspired of the poets of the Revolution, after speaking of Britons as henceforth confined to their "insect isle," pictures Jove putting Great Britain into the scales and at first finding difficulty in handling a thing so small:

"Then searching about with his fingers for Britain Thought he, 'This same island I cannot well hit on;
The Devil take him who first called her Great!
If she was—she is vastly diminished of late.'
Like a man that is searching his thigh for a flea,
He peeped, and he fumbled, but nothing could see;
At last he exclaimed—'I'm surely upon it—
I think I have hold of a Highlander's bonnet.'"

The great services rendered to the American cause by Thomas Paine are here warmly acknowledged. Even at this day it is impossible to read his vigorous invective without wondering a little at the dauntless courage with which the man worked on without the slightest circumstance of personal encouragement.

Ulysses S. Grant. By William Conant Church. (Putnam.)

THE design of the "Heroes of the Nations" series required the inclusion of a biography of General Grant, and that in turn required the telling of the twice-told tale of the American Civil War. Grant's early career, his share in the Mexican War, and the circumstances attending his retirement from the army in 1854, are told by Colonel Church with a creditable attempt at impartiality. Perhaps, in the light of subsequent events, it is only natural that Major Buchanan's reprimand, for excessive drinking, which led to the break in Grant's military career, should not be considered "unnecessarily harsh." The episode is of importance only because of the difficulties which it made for Grant in the first years of his service against the Confederates. Happily for the cause of the Union, the dearth of officers who could even drill their men secured employment for Grant at the outbreak of hostilities, and his own force of character did the rest.

Perhaps the most characteristic words he ever used in his life were those with which he concluded a despatch describing one of the first of the series of the murderous assaults to which he sent the army of the Potomac in May, 1864: "I propose to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer." There is something chilling, and yet great, about the moral courage needed to write down that sentence. And he was true to his word. His men might die in heaps, but he knew that the North could repair the waste, and that his opponents could not. To wear the Confederates out, to keep them always on the move, to fight every fight to the finish, was his stern and simple policy, and he carried it out ruthlessly to the end. The great victories on the side of the North—Antietam and Gettysburg—for all the killing loss they inflicted on the South, had been defensive battles and gained by armies in retreat. With the coming of Grant the rôles of the two armies were changed, and the Confederates were driven to fighting only behind entrenchments. The Northern leader knew that all the while Sheridan was clearing the Shenandoah Valley, and that Sherman was cutting Lee off from the field of supply and that victory was sure. The great merit of Colonel Church's sketch is that it places Grant's work before us plainly with all its limitations, and enables us to understand at what a cost he set himself to win.

MR. LIONEL JOHNSON'S POEMS.

Ireland, with Other Poems. By Lionel Johnson. (Elkin Mathews.)

IT is some while since the publication of Mr. Lionel Johnson's first poetic volume, for he is not of those who emulate a popular novelist's annual output. Among our younger poets he is in every sense conspicuously solitary. He follows no literary fashion, he makes no clamant attempt to catch the popular ear; on all he writes is the stamp of a recluse. He is, we might say, manifoldly recluse. He is fastidious and academic (in the better sense of the word "academic"). He loves forgotten or unpopular causes, things past rather than things present; anything which the crowd neglects and passes by seems for him to have a haunting attraction; therefore he takes to his bosom all "old, unhappy, far-off things." The very title of his book indicates this. Ireland is pre-eminently the type of forlorn causes and a derelict past. But Ireland just now is fashionable among poets of "the Celtic movement," and accordingly Mr. Johnson does not stop here, but extends his sympathy to the land of the Cymry, to ancient Wales—a land truly appealing to poetic sympathies, if one could manage to ignore its gross modern utilitarianism. Yet another recluse and condemned thing is mysticism, and Mr. Johnson clings to mysticism. The most neglected kind of mysticism is Catholic mysticism; and to Catholic mysticism Mr. Johnson is specially wedded; but nothing repels him provided it be remote enough; and he writes with sympathy of paganism, provided it be mystical paganism; nay, he finds food for poetry even in magic. A curious, a seemingly heterogeneous course of verse he sets before us: but the hidden connexion lies in that thread of remoteness, of recluseness, running through it all. That the aristocratic selection which should belong (in style) to such a temperament is not lacking in Mr. Johnson is shown by the recognition which his former volume obtained at the hands of the press, and even in those young and advanced Parisian periodicals which take notice of English literature. The Revue de France, for example, which recently did itself the honour of translating Mr. Meredith's splendid Essay on Comedy, reviewed appreciatively Mr. Johnson's former volume of Poems.

With all his meditative and unhurried incubation of his work, we could have wished that Mr. Johnson had somewhat thinned his present volume. On the whole, it does not seem to us that he is happiest in his longer, more diffuse, and arduous poems. His, essentially, is the genius of architectural verse, cunning in dignified syllabic melody: resembling at its best the best work of Mr. Robert Bridges. Many of the critics of his former volume assured him that he was best when most impulsive. We by no means agree with this, unless by impulse is meant feeling. A restrained and politic feeling, confined within austere and unsuperfluous limits, is his finest note. The three divisions of the poem called Magic represent him, we think, at his most excellent:

"Because by leaps I scale the secret sky,
Upon the motion of a cunning star:
Because I hold the winds oracular,
And think on airy warnings, when men die,
Because I tread the ground where shadows are:
Therefore my name is grown a popular scorn,
And I a children's terror!"

It is in such calm and stately structure as this that Mr. Johnson shows his characteristic and individual gift. Even finer is the music of the second section:

"They wrong with ignorance a royal choice,
Who cavil at my loneliness and labour:
For them, the luring wonder of a voice,
The viol's cry for them, the harp and tabour:
For me divine austerity,
And voices of philosophy."

Ah! light imaginations, that discern
No passion in the citadel of passion:
Their fancies lie on flowers; but my thoughts turn
To thoughts and things of an eternal fashion:
The majesty and dignity
Of everlasting verity."

Under guise of a magician defending his art against the multitude, this (whether or not Mr. Johnson was conscious of it) puts, in majestic melody and chosen diction, the case for the austere poetry of truth against the voluptuous poetry of emotion and external beauty, which to the majority appears the only poetry worth a thought. It is curious, yet characteristic, that in a volume mainly devoted to Catholic mysticism, another fine poem should be "Julian at Eleusis." Here is a passage from the description of the Mysteries:

"The dark, that once brooded upon the deep,
Ere any light was, heavy hung: and death,
Mystical death hung in the vasty air,
And in that world was silence; save each heart
Trembled, each labouring heart and fearful soul.
Then from the ends of earth, sweeping the seas,
Fields, footless mountain-tops, and lonely
moors,
Wave upon wave of sound gathered: a moan,
Dreary as the thin voice of a forlorn wind
Through Daphne drifting down, fitful and slow;
Soon swelling to the full voice of a sea
Roaring beneath wild winds; till on their fear,
With apparition of the Sacred Corn
And awfulness of imaged history,
Smote the great storm of sound from vault to floor,
Smote: and resigned again to silent gloom
The air of adoration: mighty deep
Shuddered to deep of darkness, under God.
Then on their eyes fast sealed, their dreading ears,
Thunder with flame broke through the sanctuary:
And through the thunder, voices; through the flame,
Visions: and in the vision and the voice,
God's light, and the whole melody of God."

We could cite also from these diversified poems passages which are admirable vignettes of Nature, as in the second section of "Christmas." We could cite such intimate devotional poems as "The Darkness." And it seems strange that we have happened to quote from poems pagan. But, as Stephen Heller wrote to Sir Charles Hallé, "All the great artists are un peu païens," and this must explain the enigma.

HUMOURS OF OXFORD.

Voces Academicæ. By C. Grant Robertson.
(Methuen.)

ARISTOPHANES once came to Oxford, also Lucian, if we remember aright; both in the transient sheets which enliven Eights Week. And now we have so distinguished a scholar as Mr. C. G. Robertson giving us a compound of Mr. Anstey and Mr. Anthony Hope. He thinks no shame to leave his models obvious, and perhaps he is right. When a convention has once been established it is as well to keep faithfully to its original plan, instead of straining it by putting too much upon it. Indeed, the only fault we have to the thing concerns not the form but the matter. The old Voces Populi had for its field a very rich, varied, and curious life. But Oxford, after all, is a very little world, and its interests fall so inevitably into a very few lines, that somehow they seem comparatively flat, stale, and unattractive. You have a provincial society in the Parks like any watering-place, circles of academic people, the world of undergraduates, athletic and smug, and the stereotyped summer visitor. After all, the types are not many, and as this genre is essentially of types, it is no fault of Mr. Robertson's if the thing palls a little and we loathe the word "Commem."

The author—experto crede—has a very thorough knowledge of Oxford slang, and an extensive acquaintance with the habits of the Undergraduate. We like him least when he strives after smart society dialogue, as in the sketches which conclude the book. He does not do it badly, but somehow it just misses its proper effect, and strikes one as laboured and rather painfully superior. Also, there is far too much of the Young Don. In these pages he figures as a gay Lothario, a man of the world, the fine flower of youth, exactly as he figures in certain ladies' novels. We have no objection to the type personally, but it is one which figures little in the place, and at best has small interest. Finally, there is an atrocious frontispiece to the book—and with this our grumbings cease.

There is no doubt that Mr. Robertson has a very pretty wit, a shrewd eye for extravagance, and a neat, if laborious, style. Of all his people we like best the Foolish Undergraduate, as he appears putting his amiable foot in it at garden-parties, academic dinner-parties, and college concerts. We find him sojourning of an evening at the "Nelson Club," which is presumably Vincent's, and going through the toils of Hercules at picnics at Nuneham. The "Cricket Match," where he disports himself at large, is perhaps the funniest part of the book. The "Football Match" is less good only because of the sameness which oppresses the dialogue. Mr. Robertson is just a little less fortunate when he portrays the purely academic side of the little world. But this from the "Schools on Black Monday" is excellent:

"CHEERY SCHOLAR (anxiously): 'I say, did Aristotle say mind and matter were the same, or was it Hume?'

SECOND C. S. (airily): 'Oh, ask another! Aristotle, for choice. It doesn't really matter a twopenny curse. My tutor says all you have got to do is to be consistent. Try Herbert Spencer, when in doubt—call him a Materialist with a big "M," and hint at Evolution and Kant all through, only don't commit yourself. Philosophy up here is all allusion, as well as illusion. That's the best of it. You can always hedge with those philosophical Johnnies.'

C. S. (with a metaphysical air): 'I shall toss—heads, Aristotle; tails, H. S.' (He tosses accordingly.) 'Tails it is. Then I go for Herbert Spencer.'

SECOND C. S. (consolingly): 'You're quite safe. In Oxford you can always play to the examiners by driving a coach and eight through these uneducated men of science.'

The "Field Night at the Union" is also very funny, but its humour is so highly technical and local that we fear it must be unintelligible to the ordinary lay mind. "The Greater Universities," which deals with the Inter-Varsity Cricket Match, is tiresome from the posturing of everybody concerned. More natural, and therefore more amusing, is the "Morning with the Philistines," where the various casual visitors to a college quad make high comedy of a summer morning. The East Enders are very life-like; so, too, are the farcical Americans:

"AMERICAN MAN (airily): 'I guess this is St. Philip's?'

PORTER (haughtily): 'No, it ain't; it's St. Theresa's.'

A. M. (not in the least impressed): 'Oh! really now?'

AMERICAN WOMAN (replying to her fiancé): 'I calc'late we've barked up the wrong tree.' (Sharply.) 'That comes of hazing round without a guide.'

A. M. (taking a general view): 'Anything to see here?'

P. (superciliously): 'That depends on 'ow you look at it. I dessay you wouldn't find nothing here.'

Mr. Robertson has a real gift of fun, which is a thing to be thankful for; did he but refrain from standing on tip-toe and emulating the smart satirist, he should have nothing but praise. As it is, he has applied an established form to new material; and if the subject be now and then too weak for the form, this has not hindered him from showing much wit and skill, and giving the reader a pleasant hour.

THE ENGLISH DIALECT DICTIONARY.

The English Dialect Dictionary. Part IV. 'Caddle' to 'Chuck.' Edited by Joseph Wright, M.A., Ph.D. (Henry Frowde.)

THE appearance of the fourth instalment of Prof. Wright's Dictionary a full month before the announced date may be taken as a sign of the earnestness and enthusiasm with which the work is being conducted. When we consider that the tendency manifest at the outset of all dictionary-making is for the difficulties to increase rather than to diminish—a fact which has been especially emphasised in Prof. Wright's case this year—we can only seek an explanation of this promptness in the personality of the director himself. To his untiring vigilance and North-country grit the whole plan and execution of the Dialect Dictionary is due, for though material had been collected for many years by the Dialect Society, it was not until Prof. Wright's appearance in the field of philology that the master hand was recognised, and this is said in full acknowledgment of the invaluable labours of Dr. Ellis and Prof. Skeat.

The present Dictionary may be taken as a basis upon which much requires to be built. Its chief merit now lies in the fact that it incorporates all the original work hitherto done in connexion with English dialects, and takes notice of every instance of the use of such dialects in literature. Indeed, one of its most useful services will be the elucidation of many mysteries in our daily reading, and full reference is here made to the works of Ramsay, Burns, Scott, Galt, Croker, the Brontës, and their successors.

Part IV., which takes us from the insignificant caddle to the prolific chuck, is especially rich in words of literary form possessing the most widely different meanings. Such are call, can, cap, car, carve, cat, cave, chat, chime, chip, and chop. Thus cap, in addition to ordinary meanings, has in different parts of the British Isles those of 'a sum of money collected after a run for the benefit of the huntsman,' 'the combs of wild bees,' 'toad-stools,' 'a wooden cup or bowl,' all of which are at first sight easier of explanation than the occurrence of carve in the sense of 'to curdle,' or of chip, meaning 'to stumble.'

Several interesting cases of words of Celtic and Scandinavian origin, which have a wider area than might be expected, are to be found in this part. Thus cader, deriving from, or, at least, akin to Welsh cadair, 'a chair,' is reported from Lancashire, Yorkshire, Stafford, Devon, and Cornwall, in various meanings. Car, meaning 'a pool . . . low-lying land apt to be flooded,' is evidently in frequent use throughout the northern counties and part of the midlands, its over-sea equivalents being Swedish kärr, Danish kær, &c.

The abundant examples of the use of casualty from Dorset to Northumberland is as surprising as the dozen applications in which it is found. Its share of the Dictionary amounts to a whole column. Capernoited forms a possibly useful variant on 'crabbed,' 'peevish'; chart in Kent signifies 'a rough common, overrun with gorse, broom,' &c.; and Cornwall furnishes the only instance of chilth, a formation analogous to warmth.

It only remains to be noted that Part IV. contains 2,484 simple and compound words and 350 phrases, illustrated by no fewer than 11,769 references. That most entertaining of grammarians, John Palsgrave, is frequently called upon, and there are also numerous citations from early literature. Prof. Wright hopes to have the whole of letter 'C' well in hand by the end of the year, wherein we may see every likelihood of the Dictionary being completed within the eight years originally assigned.

C. K.

The Work of Charles Keene. With an Introduction by Joseph Pennell and a Bibliography by W. H. Chesson. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

SOME of Keene's unpublished drawings are included in this handsome volume, notably two charcoal sketches, which, Mr. Pennell tells us in his Introduction, are equal to Menzel at his best. That is Mr. Pennell's way. He has his way, just as Pew and pretty Fanny had. His earnestness is commendable; but we wish he would keep both eyes on his subject, instead of one on his subject and the other on the enemy. Mr. Pennell's government is always in power, and Mr. Pennell holds all the offices.

Charles Keene was a great artist, and part of his greatness consisted in knowing what he could not do. He drew the everyday life he saw about him with precision and gaiety, because it appealed to him. He did not draw ladies and gentlemen: he was not particularly interested in ladies and gentlemen; odd as it may seem, he preferred men and women. He also liked bagpipes and clays, and to cook his own dinner. That was C. K.—not another. Mr. Pennell is angry because the world, in the world's wise way, took Keene for what he was—just C. K., the famous Punch artist, indifferent to things outside his own cunning. Had he ever any notion of intruding upon du Maurier's province? We think not. But hear Mr. Pennell (does Mr. Pennell never smile in print?) on the subject:

"Had Charles Keene chosen Mr. Ponsonby de Tomkyns or Sir Georgius Midas as his subject the result would have been too cruel. He respected the feelings of such people too much to expose their follies."

O ye Gods and little fishes! Alas, that George du Maurier is not still alive: he could laugh! And cannot you imagine Keene's smile (he, too, could smile—the modest old fellow—it began at the corners of his eyes and spread downwards) if he could see the last sentence of Mr. Pennell's introduction—"He was just C. K., the greatest English artist since Hogarth."

This noble volume is obviously a book which all serious black-and-white artists should possess. They know Mr. Pennell's way, and make allowances, but we could have wished it had been possible to produce the volume at a price within the reach of slender purses. It makes no bid for popularity. The pictures have not been chosen for the humour of the drawing, nor for the legends which the convention of Punch ordained should be placed beneath them, but to illustrate the range of Keene's genius. The method Mr. Pennell has adopted of placing in many instances the studies and the finished drawings side by side gives to the book an educative value that would have been wanting in a mere pictorial display of Keene's achievement.

ARMCHAIR BOOKS.

BY AN UNPROFESSIONAL CRITIC.

I.—SOME LITERARY SETTLERS.*

New books of the serious kind may be divided with some justice into two classes: table books and armchair books. A table book is a book that must be read seriously, pencil in hand, and not too soon after dinner. But an armchair book may be read at one's ease; nay, it confers ease by making the armchair doubly easy. Such a book I have found in Mr. Mitchell's American Lands and Letters. Mr. Mitchell does not go about to instruct me, he just handles his books in my sight, displaying his lore as if by accident, and finding the terse phrase for the hitting off of man or book.

* American Lands and Letters. By Donald G. Mitchell. (J. M. Dent & Co.)

"I cannot forbear giving a taste of the valorous Captain's manner of writing," he exclaims, and in a moment he is reading from old Captain John Smith's Description of New England, and I am content to hear this:

"What pleasure can be more than (being tired with any occasion ashore) in planting Vines, Fruits, or Hearbs, in contriving their own Grounds, to the pleasure of their own mindes, their Fields, Gardens, Orchards, &c., to recreate themselves before their owne Doors, in their owne Boates upon the Sea, where man, woman, and childe, with a small hooke and line, by angling, may take diverse sorts of excellent fish, at their pleasures? And is it not pretty sport to pull up two pence, six pence, or twelve pence, as fast as you can hale and veare a line? . . . If a man worke but three dayes in seaven, he may get more than hee can spend, unless he will be excessive. . . . And what sport doth yeeld a more pleasing content, and less hurt or charge than angling with a hooke, and crossing the sweet ayre from Ile to Ile over the silent streames of a Calme Sea?"

Alas! that is what men long for in Cheapside, and faintly dream of in their London beds—a thoughtless, unstratified life, where the air is clean and wide, and a man's bargains are with Nature. One marvels that pens, and ink-stains, were found in New England so soon. Mr. Mitchell tells us that one George Sandys, an Englishman, made a most musical translation of Ovid on the James River, in his intervals of hunting and fighting Indians. Indeed, the New Englanders soon began to cut their goose-quills and worry their printers. But neither their intentions nor their performances were exactly literary. On this point Mr. Mitchell has a pleasant passage, introducing Milton:

"There were no literary ambitions there, cropping out untimely; no brooding over books for the books' sake; there were plenty of men indeed among the new-comers who had been bred at Oxford or Cambridge; but whose delightful University visions of prowess and fame, which hover before all young minds, were broken up among the soughing of the great pines that clouded the hills, and were striving through wastes of snow.

The need to do things seemed, under their new and rare Western light, so much larger than the need to write about them. There are those who tell us John Milton might have come with his friend Winthrop, and then there might have been a Paradise Lost dating from Higganum or Pawtucket: it seems to me very doubtful. The multitudinous and pressing wants here would have laid other hold upon the large mind of the poet, and the great Spring floods would have drowned Castalia. Even the Sampson Agonistes would, I think, have had his classic locks shorn at Naumkeag: plenty of thunders there would have been, with perhaps added flame and wrath in his speech for the Liberty of Unlicensed Printing; and still larger and weightier declamation against the Eikon Basilike—but no murmurous diapason of sweet sounds about 'Russet lawns and fallows gray.'"

You perceive that Mr. Mitchell writes with unction. Indeed, he hugs and blesses his subject, and can never do enough for it. After such a passage, one is quite willing to follow him through a chapter on the recondite annalists of New England. And what a gallery of quaint portraits they are—beginning with old Governor Bradford, whose History of Plymouth Plantation “was lost and found again in these latter days, and is still of excellent repute among those who delve among the foundations of colonial history.” After him came Governor Winslow, who gave sound, and curiously modern advice to emigrants. There was Anthony Thacher, who has left us a heartrending account of his ship-wrecking betwixt Boston and Marblehead. There was that difficult fellow, Thomas Morton, of Merry-Mount, who was too much a man of the world to please the New Englanders, “loving his gun and his dinner and his pipe; a university man withal; keen, sharp—good at a bargain with beaver skins; contriving to secure a small retinue of servitors about him, who loved junketings as well as he.” And, not content with this engaging picture of Morton, Mr. Mitchell must needs conjecture that he had known Ben Jonson; “may have sung at the Mermaid.” How impossible he must have been in New England! There, indeed, his heresies and dissipations were not long endured—“more than once Miles Standish was on his track with a platoon of musqueteers”—and Morton of Merry-Mount was shipped back to England.

There were other annalists. There was Roger Williams, friend of Milton and Cromwell, “possessed of rare literary skill, writing with gusto”—a man “to excuse, to love, to honour, rather than a man to govern and to trim the ship of State.” There was the Rev. Nathaniel Ward, the “cobbler of Agawam,” a dangerous satirist, “a veritable Calvinistic hustler,” Mr. Mitchell calls him, “whose wit must have won more than his graces.” He girded at women, their fads and fashions; but could the sweet New England women have deserved one word of this?

“I truly confess it is beyond the ken of my understanding how these women should have any true grace . . . that have so little wit as to disfigure themselves with such exotic garbes, as not only dismantles their native lovely lustre, but transclouts them into gant-bar geese, ill-shapen shell-fish, Egyptian hieroglyphics, French flurts of the pastery, which a proper English woman should scorn with her heels.”

Verily, the return to Nature may be a harder and a longer journey than we who pine in Cheapside, or dream in our London beds, wot of. Sandys translating Ovid, the New England damsels matching silks, and the printers sending proof-sheets to intolerant parsons—these were kisses waved back to civilisation. But to continue the list of the early penmen. There was Governor Winthrop, “sedate and judicious,” whose ruffed portrait by Vandyke may be seen to-day in the Athenæum at Boston—a grave, capable face, stamped with the age. Winthrop was married four times, and he left proof of his love for each of his wives, especially the third. A strong man, and the father of strong men! A “warm writer” was Mr. Michael Wigglesworth, who came to New England in 1638, and “put such a fiery scald of Calvinism into his pages that I must show you,” says Mr. Mitchell gloatingly, “some of the extraordinary blisters of it.” And Mr. Mitchell gives us a facsimile of the title-page to Wigglesworth’s poem, “The Day of Doom.” Wigglesworth meted out hell fire as remorselessly and with as much routine as Mrs. Squeers ladled brimstone and treacle. Even to infants Wigglesworth awarded “the easiest room in hell.” As for adult humanity:

“They wring their hands, their caitiff hands,
And gnash their teeth for terror;
They cry, they roar, for anguish sore
And gnaw their tongues for horror;
But get away, without delay,
Christ pities not your cry;
Depart to Hell; there may you yell
And roar eternally.”

From Master Wigglesworth it is an easy transition to “Some Preachers.” Cotton, and Shepherd, and Thomas Hooker are names of little fame in England; but Cotton Mather, the curious author of Magnalia Christi Americana, has loving students in England who make much of “his ponderous sentences—lopsided with Latin.” It is a very queer jumble, that Magnalia of Cotton Mather,” says Mr. Mitchell; “tough, roundabout, scattery reading; flaming with fine crudenesses; enamelled with curious, outlandish citations; bristling with epithet and epigram; never graceful; rarely dignified; but bumptious—learned at times—explosive and loaded in good places—with heavy, spluttering, and holy orthodox fire-works.” Then there was Jonathan Edwards, of whom Mr. Mitchell tells us that “his inexorable Calvinism was—with all its harshness—high-savoured; so that even the coals on which malefactors in Adam were put to the broil, had the cool purities of heaven blowing over them.” Mr. Mitchell can write. Many such etched portraits, some executed with the most delicate swallow-flight of the needle, others dug impatiently with the burin, are enclosed in these pages—preachers, presidents, poets! But enough: I have shown, I hope, that this is an arm-chair book.

BRIEFER MENTION.

Aucassin and Nicolette. Edited and Translated by F. W. Bourdillon. Second Edition. (Macmillan & Co.)

MR. PATER has made Aucassin and Nicolette, for English readers at least, by far the best known fragment of Old-French literature. In 1887, when Mr. Bourdillon’s edition was first published, no fewer than two other translations saw the light. One was Mr. Andrew Lang’s, the other a privately printed version by Mr. E. J. W. Gibb. In the last decade the literature of the subject has considerably grown, and Mr. Bourdillon’s second edition is no mere reprint, but embodies the results of much fresh research. The text is now based upon the original MS. instead of upon Suchier’s recension, and is a good deal more conservative than that of Suchier. A body of critical and explanatory notes has been added, the introduction has been rewritten, and the translation carefully revised. A specimen taken from one of the two most famous passages of the Cantefable, will show the spirit of the revision. This is the 1887 rendering:

“Her hair was golden and in little curls, and her eyes blue-grey and laughing, and her face oval, and her nose high and well-set, and her lips vermeil, so as is no cherry nor rose in summer-time, and her teeth white and small; and her bosom was firm, and heaved her dress as if it had been two walnuts, and atween the sides she was so slender that you could have clasped her in your two hands; and the daisy blossoms which she broke off with the toes of her feet, which lay fallen over on the bend of her foot, were right black against her feet and her legs, so very white was the maiden.”

And this, that of 1897:

“Her hair was yellow and crisped small; and her eyes grey and laughing; and her face shapely; and her nose high and well-set; and her lips vermeil, more than cherry or rose in summer-time; and her teeth white and small; and her breasts were firm, and heaved her dress as it had been two walnuts; and she was slender between the flanks that in your two hands you could have clasped her; and the blossoms of the daisies which she broke off with the toes of her feet, which lay on the narrow of her foot above, were right black against her feet and her legs, so very white was the maiden.”

In every case the slight change goes to bring the English nearer to the order and rhythm of the original; and this is a commendable fidelity. It is a small matter in comparison, but the French and English are now, for the first time, pleasantly arranged on opposite pages throughout.

The Lesbia of Catullus. By F. H. A. Tremenheere. (Fisher Unwin.)

MR. TREMENHEERE has set himself to translate into English verse every poem or fragment of a poem by Catullus which can be reasonably or unreasonably brought into connexion with the poet’s passion for Clodia, his disillusion, his resulting invective. The task is a hopeless one, but Mr. Tremenheere acquits himself honourably, rarely dropping to the depths of baldness, but as rarely rising to the heights of felicity. We believe there are few now, except the translators, who seriously hold that verse translations from the classics are feasible, but we suppose that the experiment will be made to the end of time, and it is always interesting. Here is a brief specimen of Mr. Tremenheere’s skill:

CARMEN, XCVI.

“Si quidquam mutis gratum acceptumque sepulcris
Accidere a nostro, Calve, dolore potest,
Quo desiderio veterer renovamus amores,
Atque olim amissas flemus amicitias:
Certe non tanto mors immatura dolori est
Quintiliae, quantum gaudet amore tuo.”

“If aught begotten of our sorrow’s womb,
Calvus, can soothe and cheer the silent tomb,
What time our yearning hearts bring back anew,
Old love and weep for friends long lost to view,
Quintilia mourns untimely dying less
Than is she raptured in thy lovingness.”

We venture to offer the following, as a variant:

"If aught of pleasure, Calvus, from our pain
The voiceless dwellings of the dead may know,
When our lost loves we call to light again,
And wake the iterance of a buried woe.
Surely Quintilia scarce doth feel death's smart,
For joy she hath in lordship of thy heart."

Specimens of the Pre-Shakesperean Drama.
By John Matthews Manly. Vol. I.
(Athenæum Press Series: Ginn & Co.)

PROF. MANLY, of the Brown University in the United States, is one of the most brilliant pupils of the late Prof. Child. He has made a special study of the pre-Shakesperean drama, and the work now commenced should be of signal service to students. At present, of course, though there is a wealth of material, there is no treatise on the subject at once comprehensive and adequate. The present volume is devoted to texts. It contains, firstly, such fragments of the English liturgical drama as have been preserved; secondly, representative plays from the various cycles of mysteries, so arranged as themselves to form a brief cycle; thirdly, two miracle-plays; fourthly, a group of Robin Hood and St. George plays; fifthly, five moralities; sixthly, Heywood's Four P.P., and Bale's Kynge Johan. The second volume will continue the selection from the sixteenth-century drama thus begun. The third will be the most interesting of all, for it will contain full notes, and an introduction dealing with the history of the drama from the tenth to the end of the sixteenth century. Appendices will give a bibliography and a sketch of the distribution of miracle-plays in England. So far as the work goes it is admirably executed. The text of the plays printed is established in most scholarly fashion, and the plays themselves are well chosen. We rather grudge the space to be devoted in the second volume to Lyly, Greene, Peele, and Kyd, who have been, or are being, admirably edited. It would surely have been better spent on making the selections from earlier work even more comprehensive. But we are grateful to Prof. Manly for including among his earlier sections several plays at present not conveniently to be obtained. Such are the Norwich plays privately printed in 1856 by Mr. Fitch, the "Brome" play of Abraham and Isaac and the "Croxtton" play of The Sacrament, published in learned periodicals, and the "Macro" morality of Mankind, never hitherto printed at all.

Servia, the Poor Man's Paradise. By Herbert Vivian. (Longmans.)

It is certain that the average Englishman knows very little about Servia. His excuse was that there was no literature on the subject in his native tongue. Of this excuse Mr. Vivian has deprived him. Now he must know, and if he does not know quite everything he will at least know enough to follow the Servian telegrams in the newspapers. And this is probably what he wants. Mr. Vivian tells the tale of the liberation of Servia from the Turks by Kara George and Milosh Obrenovic, and that other tale, newer and less inspiring, of the sordid and indecent intrigues which have made the country, or, at least, its rulers, a by-word in the mouth of Europe. He holds a brief for Queen Nathalie, and waxes sentimental in her praises. But the bulk of the book is descriptive of the natural characteristics, the Church and State, the eating and drinking, the book and the shops, of this promising little Balkan State. Mr. Vivian has studied his subject with an eye for the picturesque, as well as a thirst for information. He writes freshly, not to say jauntily, and would instruct by entertainment.

"EX-LIBRIS SERIES."—Decorative Heraldry: a Practical Handbook of its Artistic Treatment. By G. W. Eve. (Geo. Bell & Sons.)

A PRACTICAL handbook of real value. The illustrations are happily chosen and well reproduced. The letterpress is adequate. After presenting us with a new primer of heraldry, Mr. Eve has occupied himself chiefly with a sketch of the salient features of the armorial art of England, pointing out the changes of style which it has evolved, and giving the reader examples, original and derivative, drawn from every period. It is to be regretted that heraldic tiles and stained glass—the latter, at least, of great decorative importance—are without a single representative specimen in these pages. One of the chief causes of the artistic degradation of heraldry has been the effort to represent animate charges in a realistic manner. The true practice of heraldic draughtsmanship is directed to a balanced combination of nature and convention. We agree with Mr. Eve when he instances the work of Dom. Anselm as highly admirable in this kind. But it is to be hoped that the fluent spirit, rather than the more mannered style of that artist, may continue to influence us, for, with all his striking merits, he is surely often extravagant and fantastic to the verge of absurdity. Still, to justly appraise him and all labourers in the same field, one cannot do better than bear in mind Mr. Eve's own notion of the freedom that should be allowed to the draughtsman. He says:

"So long as the essentials of armory are accurately given, the method of their setting forth may well be trusted to the taste of the artist, to worthily handle the subjects in accordance with the dictates of his own personality. He should be free, within the necessary forms of order, in every respect, and none should say, 'This is wrong because its style is not my style,' or 'That is right because I like it.' Heraldry, in short, should be subject to the same sane methods of criticism as ought to be applied to other forms of design. Even when we, rightly or wrongly, fail to approve of a given work, it is still permissible to gratefully welcome a sincere attempt to grapple with difficulties by any reasonable means that make for a consistent result."

By what unlucky accident are three of the coloured plates, together with a bright copper-plate by C. W. Sherborne, inserted upside down in the volume before us?

Meditations in the Tea-Room. By "M.P." (Pickering & Co. 1879.)

AFTER eighteen years this little book is sent forth again. The excuse for its republication is that its author has recently been elevated to the Bench. Thus his "meditations" return bewigged and judicial. They run upon statecraft, foreign policy, the ballot, and the political conscience, or want of it. Here are a few of "M.P.'s" pithy sentences:

"To sacrifice one's honour to one's party is so unselfish an act that our most generous statesmen have not hesitated to do it."

"Public wrongs are but popular rights in embryo."

"What most recommends party government is, that it enables us to slander our rulers without sedition, and overthrow them without treason."

"If, as seems not unlikely, we feel more kindly towards other nations than they do towards us, is not this what we should expect from our partaking of their champagne, caviare, and macaroni, their olives, oranges, and bananas, while we send them in return only coal, cotton-cloth, and bars of iron?"

We may add that the slightly archaic style and old-time cadences which distinguish "M.P.'s" booklet are not its least charm.

Wellington, his Comrades and Contemporaries. By Major Arthur Griffiths. (George Allen.)

THERE is not much to be said about this newly compiled biography of Wellington, except that the author's design is to combat the view, which has certainly grown into some prominence, that the Duke was harsh, ungrateful, had few bowels and mercies, and was ungenerous in according credit where it was due. A good feature of the book is its concluding section of notices of Wellington's officers. We have Sir Stapleton Cotton, the brave, the dandified; General Rowland Hill, a country gentleman, "who, to those soldiers who came from the rural districts of England, represented home"; Beresford, who did so badly at Albuera, but of whose all-round ability Wellington had the highest opinion; and Crawford, the inexorable disciplinarian, who flogged his soldiers when they lagged in the retreat upon Corunna, and imparted courage to others with his eye. The book is handsomely produced, and is a good gift-book of the more serious sort.

Life and Letters of the Rev. John Bacchus Dykes. Edited by the Rev. J. T. Fowler. (Murray.)

DR. DYKES was a popular composer of hymn-tunes. He contributed largely to "Hymns Ancient and Modern" and other hymnals, and is responsible for Lux Benigna, the tune to which the finest hymn of the century, Newman's "Lead, Kindly Light," is commonly sung. This biography gives a readable account of his musical career, and also of a not very edifying squabble with the Bishop of Durham about the licensing of a curate, which was an episode in the ritualist controversies of some twenty years back.

THE ACADEMY FICTION SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1897.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

THE KENTUCKIANS.

By JOHN FOX, JUN.

We still await the "great American novel," but the remarkable excellence of some American novels that come to these shores is not to be denied—The Kentuckians, for example. It is by a Kentuckian, it is about Kentucky, and it is good—very good. We shall notice it at length, later. The volume also contains pictures—capital pictures. We do not know much about feminine fashions, but the clothes and millinery of Anne, the Governor's daughter, seem the sort of things that are called smart this winter; from which we gather that the period of the story is present day. We may be wrong. We are rather stupid about fashions. The editor of the Lady's Pictorial would know. (Harper & Brothers. 228 pp. 6s.)

THE GREAT STONE OF SARDIS.

By FRANK R. STOCKTON.

A sly attempt to reap the harvest sown by Nansen. Mr. Stockton, in his gravest, most plausible manner, tells of the discovery of the North Pole by the crew of the Dipsey, a submarine boat. "To guard thoroughly against the most dreaded obstacle they feared to meet—down-reaching masses of ice—a hydraulic thermometer, mounted on a little submarine vessel connected with the Dipsey by wires, preceded her a long distance ahead" and signalled tidings of changes of temperature caused by the proximity of ice! There is the customary resourceful old lady of the Mrs. Aleshine type—this time Sarah Block, and the fun is continuous. (Harper & Brothers. 341 pp. 6s.)

WAYSIDE COURTSHIPS.

By HAMLIN GARLAND.

Short stories, by the author of Rose of Dutcher's Coolly. Mr. Garland is an American realist, with strong human sympathies, and this book sets forth relentlessly, but not cruelly, the course of love among certain of his countrymen, humble and the reverse. It is not gay reading, but truth shines between most of the lines. This is the motto:

"The meeting of true lovers' eyes
Seems wrought of chance; and yet
Perhaps the same grim law abides
Therein as when the dead one lies
Low in the grave, and memory chides,
And with hot tears love's lids are wet."

(Neville Beeman. 320 pp. 6s.)

ROSE.

By KAY JAY.

Another novel in rhyme, and before the memory of Mr. Upward's couplets is effaced! Kay Jay's story is of a lover and his lass. The lass is Rose. They were staying in a country house near a river, when the house caught fire. Rose was put in a boat for safety, and when they went to find her she had gone. Then the lover had a bad time. He became a mesmeric subject, and during a trance saw Rose in Teneriffe. So he journeyed thither, and met with a witch, and interviewed purgatorial spirits and the ghost of a prime minister. And once "saw" rhymes to "bore." (J. W. Arrowsmith. 126 pp. 2s.)

LIN McLEAN.

By OWEN WISTER.

Owen Wister is the new American novelist of the cattle ranch, and Lin McLean is his hero. Lin is a cow-puncher, independent, fearless, humorous, resourceful, truthful, and, like most other persons in this virile, gusty book, utterly lawless and richly idiomatic in his talk. The episodes are stirring and wild and sometimes luridly powerful. Pistol shots are not much less frequent than commas. (Harper & Brothers. 278 pp. 6s.)

FAME THE FIDDLER.

By S. J. ADAIR FITZ-GERALD.

A story of London Bohemian life and "jolly good fellows." The author quotes Sir Henry Irving by way of motto: "If a man could not be a Bohemian under the Piazza, then the most enchanting state of human bliss was not for him. Those were the days when we cultivated Literature and the Drama on a chop and a tankard, and came out of Covent Garden at the witching hour when the vegetables were coming in." The story rollicks along, the love element gradually increasing. It is full of Bohemian chatter and Bohemian preaching, and Bohemian ignorance of the "suburban mind." (Lawrence Greening & Co. 272 pp. 6s.)

SELF AND COMRADES.

By C. STEIN.

A book of military sketches and stories reprinted from Baily's Magazine. Some are laid in Ireland, others in India; some are concerned with sport, and some with fighting. One tells how Bill Thorburn was picked up as a tramp by his own old regiment, and conveyed out of the reach of the police, who were pursuing him for his first theft. (Vinton & Co. 185 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE COMEDIANS' CHRISTMAS DINNER.

By BURFORD DELANNOY.

A shilling book of short stories of theatrical life, with a flavour of the sea and boats thrown in. Love, pathos, and tragedy are blended in the usual proportions; and the titles of the six stories range from "The Morgue Slab" to "A Wingless Angel." (Simpkin, Marshall. 159 pp. 1s.)

TONY.

By FLORENCE MONTGOMERY.

"A sketch," says the sub-title, "being the account of a little incident on a short railway journey." In other words, a tract, the teaching of which is intended to produce in us more kindness and thoughtfulness for others. The author of Misunderstood has invented a half pathetic schoolboy as the means of turning Lady Jane Morton from callousness and superciliousness to sympathy and helpfulness. A pretty story prettily told, published for the pocket. (Bentley & Son. 105 pp.)

REVIEWS.

Human Odds and Ends. By George Gissing.
(Lawrence & Bullen.)

THIS is, we believe, Mr. Gissing's first essay in a new art. He has been responsible, first and last, for over a dozen novels of the orthodox length; here he makes his appearance as a writer of short stories. Truth to say, some of the contents of this volume are not stories at all, they are the raw material of fiction, sketches, and studies, mere scraps and suggestions, without the unity and finish that in its way the conte, no less than the roman, demands. These should have been omitted; the débris of the workshop, they swell the bulk of the volume and blur the effect of the score of really fine contes with which they are associated. As a conteur Mr. Gissing has developed certain qualities which have not been so noticeable in his more elaborate work, and will probably react upon that for good. He has learnt to trim away the unessential, to be immediate, vivid, to aim at the centre. He begins to show a feeling for style which hitherto has rather lain dormant. The material of his tragedies is sordid enough, but in the impersonal reticence of the telling they find an expression which is very far removed from the sordid. Such keenly observed, straightly put narrative as Mr. Gissing gives us in The Day of Silence is art of a very fine order.

This little sketch of a Surrey-side ragamuffin may serve to illustrate the subtlety and sympathy of his vision:

"Among the children playing in a court deep down by Southwark Bridge was one boy, of about seven years old, who looked healthier and sweeter than most of his companions. The shirt he wore had been washed a week ago, and rents in it had obeyed the needle. His mother-made braces supported a pair of trousers cut short between the knee and ankle, evidently shaped out of a man's garment. Stockings he dispensed with, but his boots were new and strong. Though he amused himself vigorously he seemed to keep cool; his curly hair was not matted with perspiration, like that of the other youngsters; the open shirt—in this time of holiday coat and waistcoat were put away to be in good condition when school began again—showed a body not ill-nourished, and his legs were of sturdy growth. A shouting, laughing, altogether noisy little chap. When his shrill voice rang out, it gave his playmates the word of command; he was ready, too, with his fists when occasion offered. You should have seen him standing with arms akimbo, legs apart, his round little head thrown back, and the brown eyes glistening in merriment."

It need hardly be said that in these short stories Mr. Gissing's interests remain the same as in his longer work. His themes belong to his habitual order of ideas, and his treatment of them is familiar. The dreariness and squalor of London middle-class life, or, more rarely, as in the story just quoted, of London slum life; the pressure, upon all but the coarsely fibred, of grinding social conditions; the pity of trivial broken ideals and peddling ambitions unsatisfied: these are the burdens of every story. Mr. Gissing is as remorseless, as deliberate, as logical a pessimist as ever; his indictment of things is as grave and as comprehensive. Some relaxation, however, he permits himself, to handle the matter, by way of a change, in irony, or even in the levity of a grim humour. You find a smile in The Justice and the Vagabond, when Mr. Richard Rutland, after twenty-two years of respectable affluence, makes up his mind to travel with a disreputable old crony, and hurries his preparations to anticipate his wife's return; and you find it in Two Collectors, when the bookseller's porter, Alfred Wormald, hears an order given after forty years for the poems he had himself published in youth. With beating heart he ventures to call upon the appreciative collector.

"Mr. Freshwater stood by his writing-table; he was a smooth-shaven shrewd-faced man of middle-age, tending to corpulency, and he regarded the visitor with a polite surprise.

"Sir—I am Alfred Wormald."

"Oh! ah!—I'm afraid I don't recall your name."

The old man tottered slightly; his eyes wandered.

"You have received from your booksellers, sir, a copy of Songs of Youth—"

His tongue failed; he had so strange a look that Mr. Freshwater began to look uneasy.

"Song of Youth—have I? I suppose my librarian ordered it. A volume of poems, I suppose? How—what do you wish to see me about?"

The other, commanding himself, fixed upon Mr. Freshwater a look not without dignity.

"You collect poetical works, sir?"

"Why, yes, I do. But I must refer you to my librarian about that. Not all poetical works. I am at present getting together those published in the Victorian time by houses which have ceased to exist. Presumably, you are in the trade? Have you a catalogue? By all means send it. I shall next be turning my attention to early Victorian periodicals. But by all means send in your catalogue. You had no other business with me?"

"Thank you, sir, that was all."

And Wormald withdrew."

Yes, there is humour; but in both stories the humour is inextricably mingled with tragedy or pathos, the momentary gleam of light dies away into gloom.

* * * *

The King with Two Faces. By M. E. Coleridge. (Arnold.)

THE key-note of this thoughtful and finely written story is struck firmly in the first chapter, and it is—action. Hardly a page passes without its momentous event or its deed of derring-do. The "king" is Gustav III. of Sweden, the "two faces" the opposing tendencies towards democracy and absolutism that existed together in this strange, inconsistent, lovable man. From this inner conflict spring the outer conflicts that fill the book; to this its pathos of despairing ideals and loyal infidelities is due.

The climax of the narrative is in the last two years of Gustav's reign, 1788-9, when he who had faithfully accepted the popular constitution of 1772 came to bid it defiance, and, as a result, ended his life by assassination. Gustav overshadows the book, but the immediate hero is Count Adolf Ridding, a courtier, devoted heart and soul to the twofold service of king and country. No service or feat of daring is too hard for Adolf, if called upon by Gustav, for Sweden, and the ruin of his faith in his master is the more tragic. When Gothenburg was besieged by the Danes and on the point of surrender it was Adolf who volunteered, at the risk of his life, to blow up the bridge, and so keep out the imminent danger. He wins the king's gratitude: nevertheless, his sweetheart, Tala, is coveted by Baron Essen, and as the price of Essen's support to the royal cause Adolf is sent to practical banishment at Paris. Here he comes under the influence of Mme. de Stael, and Tala, hearing slanderous reports of his relations with that lady, marries the rival suitor. After the ignominious flight of Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette to Versailles, Adolf returns to Sweden. He finds Gustav on the path of despotism, and the people ripe for revolt. Sick and sore at heart, he becomes implicated in a plot to kill the king at a masquerade, and in this attempt the interest of the novel culminates. The king is wounded: and Adolf, who still loves him, hides in the sick-chamber to behold him once more. Here he is witness of an interview between Gustav and his brother, the Duke of Sudermania, in which the king demands pardon for the rebels. The scene is effectively told, and we quote it as a favourable example of Miss Coleridge's manner:

"'I could promise,' he said at last, low and unwillingly, 'for all but one. You would not have the murderer set free to slay the son as he has slain the father?'"

The King seemed to reflect a moment. It was the thin, strange voice that spoke again now, in utter weariness and exhaustion.

"For all the rest you promise—before God?"

"For all the rest I promise," repeated the Duke, as if the words were dragged out of him.

"Before God?"

"Before God!"

Adolf was fiercely torn in two. Had he stood in the Duke's place, he must have yielded—he knew that: yet he despised him. His brother—his own brother—and he could let him go thus lightly! Must he, Adolf Ridding, accept his life from such a fellow as this?

"You have talked more than you ought. Good night, brother!"

"I am better. The cough is gone. I shall sleep now. Good night!"

The Duke stole out with hushed footsteps. The wind had fallen suddenly, as it does sometimes before dawn, and the circles and patches of light upon the ceiling did not waver. To Adolf's fancy, their steadiness made the quiet room quieter still. It seemed to him that long hours ebbed away. If sleep depended upon silence, surely the King must sleep. The painful sound of his had ceased altogether. A chill struck home to Adolf's heart. Was he dead?

He could not stay there. He must look.

He rose, and peered cautiously round the screen. By the subdued light of a little silver lamp, covered with a paper shade, he saw the great bed, smooth and white, and the shrunk face on the pillow. The bed-clothes were in perfect order. The hand that lay half open on the coverlet looked scarcely like a human thing. Ah, what a ruin of a man was this!

Adolf came a step forward.

His youth rushed back upon him. He remembered only that this man, of all men that he had ever seen, was the bravest. He would have fallen on his knees and kissed those waxen fingers.

At that moment the King's eyes opened. He raised himself upon his arm, with a look of indescribable terror—then fell back, putting his hand to his heart. Tala had spent herself in vain. It was not Adolf's hand that had fired the shot, but it was none the less Adolf who killed him.

"I am not afraid of you now," he whispered. "Come nearer! Have you forgiven? Will you let me sleep?"

He looked up. There was no fear in his eyes. Adolf saw this—and he could see no more for tears."

For the historical accuracy of Miss Coleridge's work, she makes her appeal to Mr. Nisbet Bain's Life of Gustav III. Its thorough workmanship and fine presentation of character speak for themselves. Miss Coleridge should hold a high place among the rising school of romance-writers. She has undeniable dramatic power, and keeps her story throughout tense—perhaps even too tense—with emotion. It is honest, solid work, with nothing flimsy about it, and with here and there a touch of inspiration. Long as the book is, the attention of the reader does not flag until the close. And this being so, the length is only an added attraction.

The Forge in the Forest. By Charles G. D. Roberts.
(Kegan Paul & Co.)

HERE is a story of the time when the French held part of Canada, and when the provincials were in revolt against the English. The best of the book is the "Foreword," which is a good piece of descriptive writing. The story itself reads more like the end of a longer story than a tale complete in itself. So little is the reader prepared for the appearance of the Black Abbé in the first chapter, that the kidnapping exploit of that pernicious priest cannot but leave him comparatively unmoved. And of Grûl, the wandering madman, we have hopes which come to very scant fulfilment; for we are left in absolute ignorance of the cause of his madness and of his blood-feud with the Abbé aforesaid, the villain of the piece. Hence one feels but a languid interest in the accomplishment of Grûl's vengeance upon the "frocked hound." He has a taking way with him, has the Seigneur de Briart, who tells the story. He begins by "shaking in his impotent rage and fear"; then he "curbs himself as best he can"; he "mocks" and "pants," and "laughs softly"; he often "smiles"; he is ever prompt upon emergency to talk "carelessly," or "lightly," or "sternly," or "quietly," or "impatiently"; and when he unaccountably falls in love with an alluring person having a "white face chiselled like a Madonna's [a Madonna's!], with lips curved passionately, and great sea-coloured eyes, which gazed upon me from dark circles of pain"—after this, we really cannot away with his tricks and his manners any more. And all these things are perfectly gratuitous and unnecessary, did he only know it. We vastly prefer the son of the effusive Seigneur de Briart, who, because he had a "Penobscoot grandmother," rarely permitted himself to smile.

* * * *

Lawrence Clavering. By A. E. W. Mason. (A. D. Innes & Co.)

THE picturesque circumstances attending the Rebellion of 1715, which stood Sir Walter Besant in such good stead as a setting for the story of Dorothy Forster, do Mr. Mason a similar service in his recent romance, Lawrence Clavering. In the latter case, however, the historical background is considerably fainter, since the story is little concerned with the leaders of the rising but rather with imaginary personages implicated therein. The hero is a relative of Lord Bolingbroke, and is studying for the Roman Catholic priesthood at a Jesuit college in Paris, when he unexpectedly succeeds to an estate in Cumberland. This piece of apparent good fortune he owes to the fact that his cousin, Jervas Rookley, son of the late owner, has been disinherited by his father for dishonest behaviour. Clavering sees in the new position to which he is called a glorious opportunity for helping on the Jacobite cause. Rookley, on the other hand, sees in his young cousin's Jacobite leanings a fine possibility for recovering his own inheritance. He accordingly personates his late father's steward and does his best to encourage these leanings. Before setting sail for England Clavering visits the Pretender, and receives a commission to collect information as to the state of political sympathy in Cumberland. Once established at Blackladies, a prey not only to the cunning of Rookley, but also to his own ardour and inexperience, the young man is beguiled into such indiscretions, private and public, that he comes within an ace of causing an innocent man to be hanged for treason, and only saves his own neck by escaping from Newgate and fleeing across Channel, where, in his old age, he relates the adventures of his youth. The tale is told with a pleasing grace of style, in which the pretty love passages with coquettish Dorothy Curwen, and the skilful touches which bring the lovely lakeland hills and valleys before the reader's eye, are by no means the only points of merit, though they are points deserving of special praise. Unfortunately, like all writers who use the first person singular as their medium of narrative, Mr. Mason has limited the dramatic possibilities of his work, and this is the more noticeable, as its chief failing is a certain vagueness and hesitation of outline. One feels that the story is being concocted as it goes along, rather than that each incident is inevitably followed by the next in the chain. Despite this drawback, Lawrence Clavering is a most readable novel, and will fully sustain the reputation of Mr. Mason's previous work.

The Dorrington Deed Box. By Arthur Morrison.
(Ward, Lock & Co.)

THERE are two Mr. Morrisons, both clever, and one distinguished. It is not Mr. Morrison the artist with whom we have to deal in the Dorrington memoirs, but with the Mr. Morrison who has conscientiously acquired a good working method of constructing the detective story. The astute Dorrington is differentiated from the aristocratic Sherlock in that he is a scoundrel on his own account. His adventures, recounted in good, plain English, are sufficiently ingenious to hold the attention throughout their perusal; the characterisation, so far as it goes, is adequate; and there is nothing strained nor melodramatic in the action. The author's acquaintance with the by-ways of scoundrelism is extensive and peculiar; and the reader feels an assurance that the game is being fairly played, and that he is not being recklessly misled on points of technical detail. Without being supreme examples of the police novel, the yarns are good enough in their way.

* * * *

By Right of Sword. By Arthur W. Marchmont.
(Hutchinson & Co.)

OF course, in real life it would be impossible for one man to step into the place of another whom he resembles, and fight his battles and carry on his intrigues for two months without detection. Yet we would willingly pardon Mr. Marchmont more than that extravagance for the sake of so stirring and full-blooded a tale. It is somewhat in the robustious manner of Mr. Stanley Weyman. We have the inevitable duel at the outset. Alexis Petrovitch, who is a coward, is challenged by a brother officer who is a bully, and prefers flight. While his sister Olga is waiting at Moscow station to bid him farewell, there enters one Hamylton Tregethney, an Englishman weary of life, who has come to Russia in the hope of seeing desperate military service against the Turks. The resemblance is so striking that Olga accosts him as her brother, and will hardly be convinced of the error. The stranger takes advantage of it to offer his services:

"You are very anxious for your brother's safety?" I asked.
'He is my only protector in the world. If he gets away now to Berlin or Paris I shall follow and go to him.'
'But is he likely to get away when he will be missed in a few hours? A single telegram from Moscow will close every frontier barrier in Russia upon him.'
'We know that'; and she wrung her hands.
'If he could have two clear days he could reach the frontier and pass unquestioned,' I said significantly.
She was a quick-witted little thing, and saw my point with all a woman's sharpness.
'Your life is not ours to give away. This man is noted for his great skill.'
'Would everyone be likely to make the same mistake about me that you have made this afternoon?' I asked, in reply.
'Now that I know, I can see differences—especially in your expression; but in all Moscow there is not a man or woman who would not take you for my brother.'
'Then I decide for the two days here. And if it will make you more comfortable I can assure you I am quite as able to take care of myself with either sword or pistol as this bully you speak of.'

So it is settled. The craven brother crosses the frontier under the Englishman's name and with the Englishman's papers; and Tregethney takes up the frayed threads of a very sordid career in Moscow. His gradual discovery of the various responsibilities he has taken on him is disheartening. He finds that he is something of a Nihilist. There is an infant daughter, and a large inheritance of debts. His vices are many; and the wife of the Chief of Police is his too obedient servant. His reputation in the regiment is not good; but his success in the duel brings the name of Petrovitch into better odour. The intrigue is a more difficult matter; but the adroit impostor contrives to carry it on for a time at once without guile and without detection. Meanwhile, the Nihilists, suspecting him of apathy, decree that he shall kill the Chief of Police as a guarantee of good faith. Singularly enough, the Chief of Police is found stabbed to the heart. Headquarters, re-assured as to his zeal, then entrusts him with the assassination of the Czar; and his part in that affair is carried out in such a way that the wedding with Olga is celebrated under Imperial auspices. So romantic a book will not languish on bookshelves.

WARD, LOCK & CO.'S Xmas Gift and Presentation Books.

21s.

Twenty-first Edition: Enlarged and Revised. Medium 8vo, cloth, 21s.

HAYDN'S DICTIONARY OF DATES AND UNIVERSAL INFORMATION.

A Complete Record of all Nations and Times: Containing the History of the World.

By BENJAMIN VINCENT,

Hon. Librarian of the Royal Institution of Great Britain.

"Haydn's 'Dictionary of Dates' is the most universal book of reference in a moderate compass that we know of in the English language."—The Times.

Prospectus and Specimen Page sent free on application.

10s. 6d. VOLUMES.

Royal 8vo, half paste grain, 10s. 6d.

BEETON'S NEW BOOK OF GARDEN MANAGEMENT.

844 Pages, nearly 600 Illustrations.

A Complete and Exhaustive Work on the THEORY and PRACTICE of GARDENING in all its branches, embodying full and detailed information on every subject that is, directly or indirectly, connected with the art.

Royal 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, 10s. 6d., Illustrated.

NOBLE THOUGHTS IN NOBLE LANGUAGE.

Compiled and analytically arranged by HENRY SOUTHGATE.

A Collection of wise and virtuous utterances in prose and verse from the Writings of the Known Great and the Great Unknown.

7s. 6d. VOLUMES

Of very large size (mostly royal 8vo), strongly and handsomely bound.

620th Thousand. The Best Cookery Book in the World.

MRS. BEETON'S HOUSEHOLD MANAGEMENT.

About 1,700 pages, with Thousands of Recipes and Instructions, Coloured Plates, and Hundreds of Engravings.

"Hardly anything belonging to domestic life is wanting in this encyclopædic volume."—Manchester Examiner.

900 pages, 1,000 Illustrations.

POPULAR SCIENTIFIC RECREATIONS.

By HENRY FRITH.

"The book may be recommended as a rich storehouse of entertainment and instruction."—Athenæum.
"Science is not only made easy, but rendered absolutely delightful.... A more fascinating book of its class we have never met with."—Western Morning News.

18th Edition. 914 pages, 850 Illustrations.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN MECHANIC.

By FRANÇOIS CHILTON-YOUNG.

A Complete Guide to every Description of Constructive and Decorative Work that may be done by the Amateur Artisan.

900 pages. 1,000 Illustrations.

THE WORLD'S INHABITANTS.

By G. T. BETTANY, M.A., B.Sc.

Being a Popular Description of the Races and Peoples now inhabiting the Globe, their Origin, History, Manners, and Customs.

625 pages. Profusely Illustrated.

HAYDN'S DOMESTIC MEDICINE.

By the late EDWIN LANCASTER, M.D., F.R.S.

Assisted by Distinguished Physicians and Surgeons.

With an Appendix on Sick Nursing and Mothers' Management.

Royal 8vo, cloth gilt, bevelled gilt edges, 6s. each. Vols. I. to VI. now ready.

THE WINDSOR MAGAZINE.

Containing Serial Stories, complete Tales, Articles and Poems by the best Modern Authors.

Amongst whom are—

HALL CAINE.
CONAN DOYLE.
S. R. CROCKETT.ANTHONY HOPE.
RUDYARD KIPLING.
HENRY SETON MERRIMAN.
GUY BOOTHBY.BERTRAM MITFORD.
ARTHUR MORRISON.
MAX PEMBERTON.

While each volume contains about 650 Illustrations by, among others—

CATON WOODVILLE.
A. FORESTIER.HERBERT RAILTON.
G. MONTBARD.
ROBERT SAUBER.HAROLD COPPING.
STANLEY L. WOOD.

TWO BEAUTIFUL 5s BOOKS.

Crown 8vo, art buckram, gilt top, 5s. each.

POEMS OF THE LOVE AND PRIDE OF ENGLAND.

Edited by F. and M. WEDMORE.

The SPECTATOR says: "Of all the books that we have included under the heading of 'Gift Books' there is not one which it should be as great a pleasure to give and to receive as this."

AT RANDOM. By L. F. AUSTIN.

"A series of fantasies which it would be difficult to overpraise for their grace, their beauty, and their lightness. There is in them, too, a certain seriousness and depth which add to the attraction. Nothing of the kind so good has recently been published."—Dr. ROBERTSON NICOLL in the British Weekly.

ETHEL TURNER'S WORKS.

"Miss Ethel Turner is Miss Alcott's true successor. The same healthy, spirited tone is visible which girls and boys recognised and were grateful for in 'Little Women' and 'Little Men,' the same absence of primness, and the same love of adventure."—The Bookman.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges. 3s. 6d. each.

Profusely Illustrated by HAROLD COPPING and A. J. JOHNSON.

MISS BOBBIE. [Just ready.] SEVEN LITTLE AUSTRALIANS. THE LITTLE LAMBKIN. THE FAMILY AT MIOBULE.

WARD, LOCK &amp; CO., LTD., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

A SELECTION FROM MESSRS. C. ARTHUR PEARSON'S SUCCESSFUL NOVELS.

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

THE INVISIBLE MAN. By H. G.

WELLS. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

"Will greatly enhance the reputation of a very ingenious story-teller. Mr. Wells has a remarkable faculty of invention, and a still more remarkable gift of persuasion."—Illustrated London News."I have not been so fascinated by a new book for many a day."—Mr. CLEMENT K. SHOOTER in the Bookman."Without exception one of the most weird and creepy books we ever remember to have read."—Weekly Sun."The story is told with that fertility of imaginative resource which has made Mr. Wells conspicuous in this domain of fiction."—Daily Chronicle.

A SECOND EDITION IS JUST READY, completing 11,000 copies.

THE SKIPPER'S WOOING. By

W. W. JACOBS. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

"In 'The Skipper's Wooing,' as in 'Many Cargoes,' Mr. W. W. Jacobs proves himself to belong to the tribe of benefactors. The story of how Capt. Wilson, master and owner of the schooner 'Seamew,' won the hand of Miss Annis Gething, is one which few people, to use an expressive vulgarism, will be able to read 'with a straight face.' Those who have read Mr. Jacobs's earlier stories can readily imagine how irresistibly ludicrous are the developments of the plot."—Spectator.

A STIRRING ROMANCE OF THE TIMES OF FRANCIS I.

JOHN OF STRATHBOURNE.

By R. D. CHETWODE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

TIMES.—"We can only say that had it appeared anonymously it might have passed for the handiwork of Mr. Stanley Weyman, and it would be difficult to give higher praise. It is a romance of the days of Francis I., and it has this in common with 'A Gentleman of France,' that the hero's unselfish devotion and dauntless courage change the scorn of a fair and high-born dame into sentiments of the fondest affection. But there the resemblance ends. Mr. Chetwode has too much spirit and originality to be indebted to any one for his ideas.... There are striking pictures of feudal France—when justice lumbered during the civil wars, when bands of brigands ravaged unprotected districts with impunity, and each noble, if he could muster sufficient following, did what seemed right in his own eyes."

ONE OF THE SEASON'S SUCCESSSES.

THE TYPEWRITER GIRL. By

OLIVE PRATT RAYNER. Price 3s. 6d.

"The lady who gives us this book, under the title of 'Olive Pratt Rayner,' is no 'new writer.' She has written an amusing story—extremely slight in texture, no doubt, but withal bright and humorous."—Westminster Gazette."Clever, fresh, and original, this tale by an unknown writer ought to command an immediate success.... Must be considered one of the successes of the season, and lovers of smart and original writing will look out eagerly for further efforts from Mrs. Olive Pratt Rayner's witty and racy pen."—Sheffield Independent.

MR. BURGIN'S LATEST SUCCESS.

FORTUNE'S FOOTBALLS. By

G. B. BURGIN. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

"Mr. Burgin has an alert eye for the eccentricities of character.... The strongly accentuated character-drawing verges here and there on caricature, but the exaggeration of delineation is on the lines of truth, and remains convincing."—Daily News."A clever story agreeably told.... Distinctly above the average, eminently readable, and competent to convince the most sensitive reader that he is being treated as an honest man by an author whose honest work speaks for itself in the sustained interest of every page."—Pail Mail Gazette.

MR. MAX PEMBERTON'S NEW VOLUME.

QUEEN of the JESTERS. By Max

PEMBERTON. With 8 Full-Page Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

"Mr. Max Pemberton has not hitherto given us so excellent a bit of work as his new collection of stories, 'Queen of the Jesters.'"—Sketch."Admirably told and interesting enough to prevent the book being laid down till the last one is finished."—Glasgow Daily Mail."Mlle. de Montesson is an altogether delightful, high-spirited young woman, and Mr. Pemberton 'sets-out' her adventures with exhilarating briskness and crispness."—Daily Chronicle.

NEW HUMOROUS NOVEL BY THE EARL OF DESART.

The RAID of the "DETRIMENTAL."

Being the True History of the Great Disappearance of 1862, related by several of those implicated and others, and now first set forth by the EARL of DESART. Crown 8vo, price 6s.

"Of its brilliance there can be no doubt. The story is quite remarkable."—Dundee Advertiser."Cleverly written and replete with original interest.... Unique and entirely out of the common run of fiction."—Public Opinion."There is plenty of amusement to be found in its pages."—Star.

Complete Catalogue will be sent on receipt of Post Card.

C. ARTHUR PEARSON LIMITED, Henrietta Street, W.C.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1897.

No. 1337, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom.	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE Hon. Lady Simeon, widow of the late Sir John Simeon, has presented the MS. of In Memoriam to the library of Trinity College, Cambridge, Tennyson's old College. The poet presented the MS. to Sir John Simeon on the understanding that on the Hon. Lady Simeon's death it should revert to the present Lord Tennyson, and subsequently reach Trinity College. There is only one condition, which is, that the variations between the MS. and the published text shall never be made public.

THE teaching of English literature in schools—the why of it, and the how of it—is a vexed subject, and we have nothing to say about it here. We merely chronicle the fact that Thomas Carlyle's essay, The Hero as Divinity (George Bell & Sons), has just passed through this office on its way to the British schoolboy, and that it is composed as follows:

Introduction	..	..	90	pages.
Carlyle's Essay	..	..	42	"
Notes	..	..	53	"
Index	..	..	4	"
Total	..	..	189	"

Carlyle's essay thus forms about 22 per cent. only of the whole. What we want to know is this: Is Carlyle's essay the powder or the jam?

THE Daily Mail's statistician has been comparing the Christmas issues of periodicals, and by means of diagrams he shows the number of ounces of reading matter in each, and also the proportions of advertisements, reading-matter, and pictures in each publication. The results strike us as profoundly uninteresting. In case, however, we should have a stray reader who would like to be sure of getting good weight for his money when buying his Christmas number, we may mention that the Queen will give him 3 oz. of reading matter, the Windsor Magazine 2½ oz., the Lady's Pictorial 1½ oz., Holly Leaves 1½ oz., the Strand and Ludgate 1½ oz. each, Pearson's 1¼ oz. The American magazines he will avoid, for Harper's contains only 1¼ oz. of cheer, and the Century a beggarly ½ oz. of delectation. And yet we had supposed lightness, not heaviness, to be the merit of Christmas reading!

THE death of Mrs. Janet Hanning, née Carlyle, has just occurred at Toronto. Thus passes away the last of the Carlyles. Janet Carlyle, the youngest of James Carlyle's nine children, was born in 1812, when her brother was seventeen. In 1878 her husband died. Three years later she was placed in easy circumstances by the will of her brother, who throughout his life had been her devoted friend. They corresponded regularly, and each of his books was sent to her as it appeared, with an affectionate inscription.

At the same time comes the news—or what will be news to most persons—that Frau Charlotte Embden, the only sister of Heinrich Heine, is still living in Hamburg. She was born in October, 1800, and thus has a better claim to be one of the first persons of the century than her brother, the inventor of the joke.

THE Chapbook has subjected the late William Morris's posthumous romance, The Water of the Wondrous Isles, to a curious analysis. The heroine Birdalone, it avers, is entitled to notice as the most thoroughly kissed young woman in English fiction. In the story there are no fewer than one hundred and five descriptions of kisses, of which the heroine is directly concerned with eighty-eight, fifty-four of which were given her by men and the rest by women and children. The following table, in which the figures refer to the page where the osculation is noted, gives fuller particulars:

Arnold (servant): kisses Birdalone's hands,	367.
Arthur (knight): kisses feet, 162; hands, 164; feet, 192; mouth, 351, 353, 355, 482, 485, 500, 501, 502, 504, 508.
Aymaris (servant): kisses hands, 151, 185, 188, 283.
Baudoin (knight): hand, 164; face, 191.
First Carle (peasant): mouth 416.
First Wayleader (servant): mouth, 544.
Gerard (servant): mouth, 399, 548.
Giles (servant): mouth, 399, 548.
Hugh (knight): mouth, 171, 179, 180, 182, 302, 526, 535, 541; face, 191.
Jacobus (merchant): feet, 287.
Leonard (priest): hands, 155; face, 222; mouth, 223, 407, 412.
Old Carle (peasant): hand, 125, 126.
Otter (peasant): mouth, 437.
Robert (servant): mouth, 399, 548.
Second Carle (peasant): mouth, 416.
Second Wayleader (servant): mouth, 544.
Thomas (knight): hand, 249, 258.
Third Wayleader (servant): mouth, 544.

SUMMARY.

	Hands.	Feet.	Face.	Mouth.	Total.
(4) knights . . .	4	2	2	18	26
(1) priest . . .	2	0	1	3	6
(1) merchant . .	0	1	0	0	1
(4) peasants . .	2	0	0	5	7
(8) servants . . .	5	0	0	7	12
	13	3	3	33	52

(NOTE.—The two not scheduled are kisses bestowed by Birdalone upon Arthur's hands.)

A parallel to the Chapbook's statistics is to be found in the late Henry Morley's introduction to Mackenzie's Man of Feeling, where he analyses the tears in the book.

ANOTHER Dickens neighbourhood is marked for destruction. This time it is at Limehouse. The congeries of gloomy lanes behind Limehouse Church is known to few Londoners except as the scene of "The Fellowship Porters" in Our Mutual Friend, and as the locality of the opium den in The Mystery of Edwin Drood. The neighbourhood is said to have altered little since Dickens knew it; and now the Local Government Board's surveyors are picking their way through its muddy alleys with theodolites and things. One is again amazed by the extent of the London portrayed in Dickens's novels. Such clearances as this at Limehouse go on steadily; but the tides of reform will dash for another century or two against the houses and streets which Dickens sketched before they become scarce.

In the newly issued part of Mr. Rothenstein's English Portraits (Grant Richards), there is a cunning portrait of Mr. George Bernard Shaw. The text accompanying it is amusing:

"Dramatic-musical-literary-art-critic, orator-lecturer-pamphleteer, Fabian-Saturday-Review, vegetarian-Hibernian, cyclist-anti-tobaccoist, abstainer-aesthete, atheist-churchgoer and vestryman-dramatist, Mr. Shaw is a jewel of many facets. He is, indeed, rather too complex to be taken seriously by the public (for which, being a good Socialist, he has a profound contempt), and he is likely to remain, as he has ever been, a mystery-man with a big drum, and an egotist who might be puzzled to say exactly where his sterling affectations end and his frivolous convictions begin. It is in dramatic criticism that he has loomed largest hitherto. There is no manager in London but frowns at the mere whisper of those notorious initials, G. B. S. Yet for all his pugnacity and intransigence, Mr. Shaw's brogue keeps him from being disliked in private, and his keen humour from being a bore in public. He contradicts and jibes at no one more often than himself, and, if his judgments are often scatter-brained, he has, at any rate, brains to scatter."

The author of this epigrammatic character sketch has caught his subject's own manner very skilfully.

MR. FISHER UNWIN has just put forth another issue of Good Reading, consisting this year of extracts from new books, chosen by their authors, and embellished with the authors' portraits. Thus, says Mr. Unwin in his little preface, they follow "the example of those modern reviewers who, in lieu of criticism, contribute a literary rechauffé or hash to the front pages of some of our journals. Like some other publishers," he adds, "I have often wondered whether you prefer this form of review to the old-time criticism. Does it come from distrust in the professional critic? Is it that we are all more independent of professional opinion and prefer to form our own by reading for ourselves?" One answer to the question is, that it is more interesting, and he who runs may read it. Nowadays most reading is done at a hand-gallop.

THE author of Brer Mortal thus refuses to allow the patrons of Good Reading to see what manner of face is his:

"Insert my portrait? Come before the curtain when the Audience has not called 'Author?' Himmel! I pray you have me excused until the Broad Grin is an extinct monster, and the weeping willow grows on the grave of the last Smile."

This must be a great blow to the nurseries, for which, if some reviewers are to be believed, Mr. Ben Marlas designed his satire.

THE popularity of foreign novelists is a sign of the times; but do we read them, or do we read something else? In Jokai's novel, The Lion of Janina, as translated, it is written: "When he (Ali) smiled, he was no longer a tiger, but revealed a row of teeth even handsomer than her (Eminah's) own." This, says a correspondent of the Daily Chronicle, who knows Hungarian, is "arrant nonsense." It should be: "When Ali smiled, he displayed a set of teeth, a handsomer set than which no tiger could reveal."

SETTING aside the clumsiness of this amended rendering, which, according to the editor of the Chronicle, is "not English," but more accurately is merely ugly English, it is clear that it differs materially from the first. In the one case we are to understand that Ali was a human tiger in his gloomy moments, in the other that he merely entered into competition with tigers in the matter of teeth. In either case we do not envy Ali's dentist.

THE revival of romance, of which, from time to time, we have had much to say, has called forth the following rondeau from Miss Carolyn Wells—a contributor to the American Bookman:

"Romance revives! Once more we read
Of bold adventure, daring deed,
Of valiant knight and lady fair,
Of secret hoard of treasure rare,
Of hero's pluck and villain's greed.
From hard and long-borne fetters freed,
To merry tunes its pipes are keyed;
With happy laugh and jaunty air
Romance revives!

Now, if an author would succeed,
He writes no realistic screed,
With stubborn facts and statements bare,
And epigrams in bad repair,
Their day is past—it is decreed
Romance revives!

SIR WYKE BAYLISS, P.R.B.A., has prepared for the January number of the Magazine of Art an article on the "Portraits of Christ," from the earliest representations to paintings by modern artists, which will be fully illustrated. In a recent elaborate article appearing in a German cyclopædia, Prof. Nikolaus Müller, of Berlin, has come to certain conclusions which would, if correct, tend to show that, according to our present evidence, it is impossible we can have the faintest conception of the Saviour's form and features. Sir Wyke Bayliss, on the contrary, will show the desire of the contemporaries of the Apostles for the likeness, and that they had the means of obtaining it, as they lived in the age of universal portrait-painting; that it is nowhere objected to in the writings of the Apostles; that even if the Christians were forbidden it, the non-Christians were not forbidden; and that the first Christians were actually taunted with its being so ugly. Sir Wyke Bayliss offers portraits of the Apostles (unquestioned), and Christ's likeness with them, and they must, he says, stand or fall together.

Two writers, one American and one English, having been asked by the New York Bookman to name the best twenty books for boys, reply as follows. The American's list:

Westward Ho! by Charles Kingsley.
Ivanhoe, by Scott.
Phaeton Rogers, by Rossiter Johnson.
Treasure Island, by Stevenson.
The Spy, by Cooper.
Tale of Two Cities, by Dickens.
Hoosier Schoolmaster, by Eggleston.
Hans Brinker, by Mary Mapes Dodge.
The Prince and the Pauper, by Mark Twain.
Tales from Shakespeare, by Lamb.
Boy's Froissart, by Lanier.
Wreck of the Grosvenor, by Clark Russell.
Henry Esmond, by Thackeray.
Silas Marner, by George Eliot.
Ben Hur, by Lew Wallace.
Two Years Before the Mast, by Dana.
St. George and St. Michael, by George MacDonald.
The Wonder Book, by Hawthorne.
Historic Boys, by Elbridge S. Brooks.
Little Women, by Alcott.

The Englishman's list:

Treasure Island, by Stevenson.
Kidnapped, by Stevenson.
Dead Man's Rock, by Q.
Tom Cringle's Log, by Michael Scott.
Michael Strogoff, by Jules Verne.
Beric the Briton, by G. A. Henty.
The Battery and the Boiler, by Ballantyne.
The Three Midshipmen, by Kingston.
The Jungle Books, by Kipling.
Tom Brown's School-days, by Thomas Hughes.
Westward Ho! by Kingsley.
David Copperfield, by Dickens.
Pickwick, by Dickens.
Lorna Doone, by Blackmore.
The Pirate, by Scott.
Ivanhoe, by Scott.
The Talisman, by Scott.
The White Company, by Doyle.
Robbery Under Arms, by Boldrewood.
The True Story Book, by Lang.
The Story of the Iliad and the Æneid, by Church.

Both lists are open to improvement. The Englishman's seems to us better; certainly it is more boyish. The American's list either aims at younger boys, or the American boy is less of a barbarian than our own. Little Women, Historic Boys, A Tale of Two Cities, Silas Marner, and Ben Hur might, from the English boy's point of view, easily be replaced by something more congenial. Both lists omit Robinson Crusoe as a work whose claims are beyond question. Both omit Don Quixote. The Swiss Family Robinson, which is not mentioned, still has adherents. Ballantyne's Battery and the Boiler is by no means his best or his most popular. But in these matters each to his own taste.

THE excellence of The Studio is persistent. Month after month the pages of this magazine, so creditable to all concerned, and an irrefutable argument that art in England is not a mere name, offers a new surprise. The December number has an exquisitely reproduced frontispiece in colours: "Noel," after the painting by Baron Arild Rosenkrantz. Among other pictures is a portrait of Mr. Nicholson, the artist, by Mr. Pryde, in a drawing controlled by the Nicholson convention. There is testimony, too, that Prince Eugen of Sweden is no mean landscape painter. The pages of reproductions from the sketch-books of Mr. Byam Shaw contain drawings of great beauty, and we are the more pleased to remark on their power and grace since we had occasion a few weeks ago to find serious fault with some of this artist's recent work.

WE stated last week that Mr. John Lane would publish next year a play by Mr. Henry Newbolt. This, we find, is not correct. The play in question, which is Arthurian in its subject and is entitled Mordred, has already been published by Mr. Fisher Unwin. Mr. Lane is publishing Mr. Newbolt's Admirals All in America, with new ballads added by the author.

A NEW series of fiction is promised by Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson & Co., the volumes in which are to contain six shillings' worth of material, and to cost half-a-crown. The series is to be called "Latter-Day Stories," but as the first story, by Mr. Bram Stoker, is to deal with the seventeenth century we are at a loss to know what the title means.

ON the subject of literary grievances the Morning Post will publish to-day (Saturday) a composite article containing the views of a popular novelist, a professional critic, and a leading publisher.

THE vacancy in the Chair of Moral Philosophy at Edinburgh University, the patronage of which is vested in the Curators of the University, is not yet filled. As will be seen in our advertisement columns, applications and testimonials should be lodged with Mr. R. Herbert Johnston, secretary to the Curators, on or before March 31 next.

MESSRS. PUTNAM'S SONS have concluded an arrangement with Prof. Werner Sombart, of the University of Breslau, to publish a translation of his recently issued work, entitled Socialismus. The translation has been undertaken by Dr. Atterbury.

REPUTATIONS RECONSIDERED.

GEORGE ELIOT.—I.

THE "bubble reputation" is fleeting, changeable; its colours are vivid in sunshine, pale in shadow; it varies in appearance according to the standpoint of the observer. During the last twenty-five years or so the light has very greatly changed. In the sixties it was an unchallenged belief that George Eliot was one of the glories of English literature; in the nineties it has been the fashion to scoff at her pompous sententiousness, her didacticism, her novel with a purpose. A single quotation will be enough to illustrate the change. To the editor of Cornhill, writing on Mrs. Gaskell's death in 1865, Tito Melema was a "spendid achievement of art and thought—of the rarest art, of the profoundest thought"; in the present decade, and to another school of criticism, he is but "an improper woman in breeches; his inventor an apotheosis of pupil-teachery."

But admiration of George Eliot is not the only attitude that has gone out of fashion in literature. Nearly all the names revered thirty years ago have been trodden underfoot. Ruskin and Carlyle have been struck in succession from their pedestals. Before dealing with any one in particular it may be useful if I try to enumerate the general causes that affect posthumous fame in our days.

First, there is the process which Tennyson described as "ripping them up like a pig." As long as a man is alive, active, and successful, he is more likely to suffer from over adulation than from unjust censure. Flattery reaches its highest point on the morning following his death, when newspapers are filled with "tombstones" or obituary notices long prepared and saved in a pigeon-hole by the provident journalist. Next follows a period of revelation and exposure, of "appreciations" by friends more or less intimate, of recollections and anecdotes and letters. The private chambers and secret places of the dead are flung open to the sight-seer, who never reverences anything with which he is familiar. The little crows and kites gather to the carcass. A glorious feast they have had in these late years: I fancy they must now be like the vultures on the Towers of Silence who were so gorged with carrion during the Bombay Plague that at last they left the bones of dead Parsees unpicked.

But it is plain that reputation is not fixed by tombstones, or obituary gossip, or the shrieks of little crows and kites. Neither is it reflected in the taste of the moment—certainly not of the present moment. For we stand in the middle of a very curious change. Of old, a writer's fame was won by appealing to the small circle of the cultivated. Thence it widened out to the great body of readers. Reputation trickled first as a slender brook and gradually swelled to a mighty river. Just now an author can afford to treat qualified opinion with disdain. The new system of education has borne fruit in the generation now arriving at maturity. They have not yet learned to distinguish good from bad, the glittering and transitory from the valuable and lasting. It will not be always thus; they will in good time advance to a sounder taste; but at this crude stage they are an uninformed multitude to which the mere quack or charlatan author can appeal with assurance of a favourable response. Thus he possesses wizardry enough to raise waves of ignorance which there is nothing to withstand. The publisher has none but a monetary test to apply; there is, for the time being, no critic of high and commanding authority, and many things combine to make the mere reviewer "shout with the shouting crew." It thus happens, that genuine merit and contemporary fame have not the slightest connexion with one another. The new crowd is not only easily won by shoddy, it can be, and daily is, tricked into applause.

Nor is this by any means the worst of the situation. The most disagreeable characteristic of this new public is that it prefers imitation to genius, the lees to wine. It does not seem to have been so before. We do not hear of any of Scott's imitators rivalling his popularity. But nowadays genius, struggling towards a new light, is neglected; the reward is given to him who follows in its footsteps. Something of the kind was boldly indicated for the first time when Anthony Trollope, the incarnate commonplace of Thackeray, was taken as seriously as his master, of whose higher qualities he had not one; when Martin Tupper became more popular than Tennyson; when Wilkie Collins rivalled Dickens. It is not my business here to pass judgment on contemporary writers, but few will deny that all the greatest (or at least the noisiest) successes of our day have been won by working up the lees and dregs of George Eliot, by embroidering on Dumas, by vulgarising Stevenson, by extracting what was catching and popular from the early work of Mr. Barrie. It is not a harsh judgment, it is only a bare statement of fact to say that the public of to-day prefers a concoction from the dregs and lees of a great writer to the writer himself.

Moreover, taste grows by what it feeds on. Sancho Panza preferred garlic because his palate had been accustomed to it. No one could appreciate a masterpiece by Titian if his previous delight had been in German chromos; no one could understand Hamlet if he, before seeing it, had only known melodrama; no one can enjoy great literature who has surfeited his mind with twaddle. Eat garlic for a certain period and garlic will become the food you like best. People have grown so accustomed to inferior novels, inferior poetry, inferior criticism, a mass of new journals grossly inferior to the old, that taste has become vitiated, and can be exploited by any shrewd fellow who will pander to it.

If we turn away from this purely transitory phase of public opinion we are thrown on critical opinion as a guide. But here we are confronted by an entirely new set of considerations. Firstly, critical opinion is at present without a leader and in a state of absolute chaos. It has no voice of the very highest rank, and critics of the second rank do not guide, they only echo the cry of the multitude. They attach themselves to schools and cliques and parties, outside of which they are unable to get. One prides himself on having initiated the New Romantic Movement and esteems it a bounden duty to bless its friends and ban its foes; another is psychological; a third is for his own fantastic conception of Art, and so on. Not one seems to recognise that we come after a great movement and embody the reaction from it; that it is the nature of a movement to produce great writers, but reaction only prosperous imitators; that our custom of carrying all things to an extreme accounts for the ebb and flow. Yet this has to be fully realised before we can as much as get into the proper attitude for criticising George Eliot. The necessary preliminary is to see the contrast between her times and environment and ours.

She was born in November, 1819, and it was not till the autumn of 1856 that she began to brood over her first effort in fiction, The Sad Fortunes of Amos Barton. Her experience of life during the thirty-seven intervening years formed the material out of which imagination fashioned her works. At present we need not dwell on her memories of the rural Midlands and their exquisite reflection in the pages of Adam Bede. The impressions and early associations of a writer supply colour and characters, but direction comes from the voices that call her to this path or to that. Before condemning George Eliot as inartistic it is well to understand why the novel with a purpose was her inevitable portion.

The root of the matter lies in her personal character. And that is not to be understood by listening only to the gossip of those who sought her out in the day of fame and were disappointed to find a somewhat austere, exclusive, aloof-minded woman, with an exaggerated sense of her own importance. A time comes when the artist cannot afford to wear his or her heart on his sleeve, and the mantle of reserve has to be worn as a protection against curiosity. Besides, whoever has really lived and suffered, and has become a little weary of the long battle, learns to shrink from all but a select circle of trusted friends.

If, however, we turn back to the old house at Griff and read the history of Maggie Tulliver—not in the spirit of a literal-minded gossip-monger, but accepting it as the presentation of a temperament—the true features of the woman will soon get themselves outlined. She is feminine to the very core, though her understanding is that of a man. Even her early piety, with its zeal that bordered on the sanctimonious, is very womanly. And though her Christianity passed away, her piety remained to the very end. It preserved her conscience alive, and it filled her with an ambition to leave the world something better for her having lived—a necessary inspiration, surely, for good work of any kind! She was more womanly still in her receptiveness and clinging dependence. All through life George Eliot needed a man's arm to lean on. She leaned on that of her father—Adam Bede in his strength, Caleb Garth in his self-distrust; on her brother's, the Tom Tulliver to her Maggie; on that of George Henry Lewis; finally, when she was old and ailing, on that of Mr. Cross. One cannot look back on her life without recognising the loving, sympathetic, trustful woman's heart as well as the powerful and splendid intellect.

Given a woman of this kind, with an ingrained belief in man's potential virtue, in his duty to do good and not evil, and with a mind singularly open to the influence of those she trusted and loved, you have but to understand what voices she listened to with reverence to know the direction she was bound to take. And, luckily for us and for her, she was born into an England full of such life and enterprise and spirit as come only at long-distant periods. The country was shaking off the languor and exhaustion that had followed the long war. While she was a little girl fishing with her brother in the canal or the pond, playing in the great garden or watching the mail coach passing Griff House, the great world outside was astir not only with extraordinary inventions, but new hopes and aspirations and ideals. And literature, which holds a mirror up to life, quickened with the quickening nation. The trend of opinion at this energetic period was all towards finer morals and better lives. By the time George Eliot was eighteen the accession of a young queen had given a signal for cleansing the Court and setting a fashion of pure living, for which the country seemed ripe. Ere then, too, the men who were to dominate the field of letters had come to the front. And already it was clear that the literature of the era was to be distinguished by a moral purpose such as is not always associated with a burst of activity. A mere enumeration of the names will show how true this is of those whom George Eliot recognised as the highest of her time.

There was Tennyson, whose verse, with all its strength, retained the innocence of a Lincolnshire rectory and the sweetness of a garden. Only a few years older than herself, he had almost reached the zenith of his fame before she began to write. We cannot wonder that a mind which was consoled and sustained by the De Imitatione Christi was drawn to In Memoriam. That was the woman in search of sympathy. Later on the artist was to be one of the first to see that moral intention will not of itself redeem a poem, and that in the Idylls of the King Tennyson committed the mistake of trying to wed modern allegory to old romance, and had done justice to neither.

But the most dominating and influential figure of the time was not Tennyson, but Carlyle. Over the novelists the thinker exercised unbounded sway. The minors, such as Charles Kingsley and Tom Hughes, frankly bowed down before him; the majors, Dickens and Thackeray and George Eliot, assimilated his teaching, and reproduced it as their own. But he had a special and personal attraction for George Eliot. There was a curious resemblance in their life histories. Carlyle's father had been a stone mason, who by industry and economy had been enabled to gratify a rustic ambition, and become the tenant of a farm. George Eliot's father was brought up to the business of builder and carpenter. He, too, had taken a farm, and eventually became a land agent to the Newdigate family. Even before she knew his story, George Eliot felt the similarity of her circumstances to those of Carlyle. Apocryphal of a letter from his wife, she writes to John Blackwood:

"I want the philosopher himself to read it [the Scenes from Clerical Life], because the pre-philosophic period—the childhood and poetry of his life—lay among the furrowed fields and pious peasantry. If he could be urged to read a novel, I should like, if possible, to give him the same sort of pleasure he has given me in the early chapters of Sartor, where he describes little Diogenes eating his porridge on the wall in sight of the sunset, and gaining deep wisdom from the contemplation of the pigs and other 'higher animals' of Enteufuhl."

But it scarcely needed this prepossession in his favour to incline her ear and heart to Carlyle. The sense of duty and responsibility with which her mind had been impregnated, the innate piety and hungering after good in her heart, prepared her to accept his solemn message:

"Choose well: your choice is Brief and yet endless."

Ruskin, who piped the same tune as Carlyle, though on a sweeter and more delicate instrument, was born in the same year as George Eliot, but had come earlier to maturity. In 1856 he had already done much of his best work—Modern Painters, the Stones of Venice, the Seven Lamps of Architecture, and the famous Edinburgh Lectures. It has been almost his life work to preach that connexion between morality and art which is now accounted heresy.

Strangely enough, it was believed in by every great writer of the time. By 1856 Browning, too, had produced the best of his work in defiance of the precepts now taught. So had Dickens, so had Thackeray. Thus all the great contemporary influences combined in one direction. George Eliot's natural bias was in favour of didacticism, and didacticism was required by the temper of the time. It is from such a juncture, call it accident or design, that greatness comes. The period needed the writer, the writer gave the period what it wanted.

But these days are passed, and their voices are all silent. Novelist, poet, and preacher one by one have bid us farewell. Of the great figures of the last generation one only lingers, and he also must soon be a parting guest. That a revulsion of feeling would follow the fervour they inspired was inevitable; and not only inevitable, but necessary. Life could not be sustained at their high pitch: it would be unendurable if the strain were kept up for ever; its sweetness, its true purity, can be maintained only when labour is followed by rest, and enjoyment alternates with endeavour. It is good for a man to put the might of his soul and body into a task; it is equally good for him to lay aside his tools and live merely to enjoy. Danger arises only when idleness is unduly prolonged, when the man begins to think that high aims and effort and labour are a mistake, and lets soul be enchained by that mood so exquisitely described in The Lotus-Eaters:

"Let us alone. Time driveth onward fast,
And in a little while our lips are dumb.
Let us alone. What is it that will last?
All things are taken from us, and become Portions and parcels of the dreadful past.
Let us alone. What pleasure can we have To war with evil? Is there any peace
In ever climbing up the climbing wave?
All things have rest, and ripen toward the grave in silence; ripen, fall, and cease:
Give us long rest or death, dark death, or dreamful ease."

The vast range and wealth of life is not known till this rich indolence has been experienced as well as the vigorous, ardent zest of action that gives vitality to the lines of Browning:

"Then welcome each rebuff
That turns earth's smoothness rough,
Each sting that bids nor stand nor sit but go!
Be our joys three-parts pain!
Strive and hold cheap the strain!
Learn nor account the pang; dare never grudge the throe."

Now, my contention is that the position of the critic ought to be that of the artist. He must withdraw and be apart, beholding the wave of action and the wave of reaction, recognising the function of each, but associating himself with neither. In other words, he who is sunk "in dreamful ease" is unfit to pass judgment on the moralist, ever disturbing him with the shout "Awake, thou that sleepest!" And, on the other hand, the stern and bigoted preacher is not likely to appreciate the most exquisite beauty, if pleasure immediate and sensuous be its only aim. When that obvious postulate is accepted we gain a standpoint from which it may be possible to arrive at a true estimate of George Eliot. With this I propose to deal next week.

P.

SOME YOUNGER REPUTATIONS.

MR. WALTER RALEIGH.

MR. WALTER RALEIGH's career has been primarily an academic one. He taught English to Mohammedans at Aligarh, and was called from that inspiring task to occupy the chair of modern literature at University College, Liverpool. Here he has won golden opinions from colleagues and students. Six-feet-four in his boots, he is the very physical embodiment of the scholar's ideal in the streets of a commercial city. Three years ago he published a study of the English novel, which to competent observers appeared a green oasis in the dreary waste of Extension manuals. An exhaustive thirst for the most voluminous and the most recondite types of fiction, a quick discrimination of real excellence, a happy gift of felicitous criticism, made up the suggestive and stimulating treatise; its defect, perhaps, on the side of construction, the development of argument, the archi-texture of thought. Here is a fragment of his earlier and, so to speak, professional manner. It is of the eighteenth century roman à clef that he writes:

"The personal intention, when it is allowed to predominate, is the death of art in fiction. To compare the method of some of these minor writers to the photographic art would be to compliment it unduly, for the camera is used by them in the service, not of art, but of police. The imaginative structure is the most careless and insignificant part of their work: it is no palace of Romance, no guildhall of Comedy, that they seek to erect, but a hasty, low earth-work, behind which they may lie on their bellies and shoot at their enemies."

Another work which Prof. Raleigh has in hand will also be professional in its scope. This is a selection of English Epistles, to appear in the Warwick Library, published by Messrs. Blackie, of Glasgow. But Prof. Raleigh has no idea of being bound by the fetters of academic convention. He has too much buoyancy of temper, too sensitive a spirit, to make a Dryasdust. He aspires to be man of letters as well as scholar, to put off the cap and gown now and then, and don the velvet jacket of the irresponsible artist. He has tried his pen in places where you do not usually meet with professors—the Yellow Book to wit, and the New Review. And it was certainly in no pedantic mood that he wrote the charming lecture on Robert Louis Stevenson which delighted its hearers at the London Institution, and has delighted many others since in book form. Style is not a matter with which your learned writer is wont to concern himself, but that lecture erred, if any, on the side of over-carefulness and over-elaboration of style. Nor may the critic deny the presence of a similar quality in the thoughtful and brilliant treatise on Style itself which Prof. Raleigh has just put forward. The epigram is sound as well as glittering, the highly wrought metaphor well sustained: yet one cannot escape a feeling of something artificial, something of self-consciousness, or even coxcombry lurking in the paradoxes and the deliberate quaintness. After all, art has its pedantry as well as learning. Let the reader judge:

"It is the misfortune of the actor, singer, dancer, that their bodies are their sole instruments. On the stage of their activities they carry the heart that nourishes them and the lungs wherewith they breathe, so that the soul, to escape degradation, must seek a more remote and difficult privacy. That immemorial right of the soul to make the body its home, a welcome escape from publicity and a refuge for sincerity, must be largely foregone by the actor, who has scant liberty to decorate and administer for his private behoof an apartment that is also a place of business. His ownership is limited by the necessities of his trade; when the customers are gone, he eats and sleeps in the bar-parlour. Nor is the instrument of his performances a thing of his choice; the poorest skill of the violinist may exercise itself upon a Stradivarius, but the actor is reduced to fiddle for the term of his natural life upon the face and fingers that he got from his mother."

After all, Prof. Raleigh's faults are faults on the right side. He cares for perfect expression; and how few writers even do that. And if he will carry something of art into the literature of scholarship, and something of scholarship into the literature of art, he will be conferring a benefit upon either. Recently Prof. Raleigh has prefixed an interesting essay to a new edition of Keats, and we hope some day to come upon the pastoral comedy founded upon Chaucer's Wife of Bath's Tale which he wrote for some private theatricals at Liverpool.

MR. H. B. MARRIOTT-WATSON.

Few writers now living have a finer, freer way than Mr. Marriott-Watson. His sympathies lie with action and intrepidity and resource, and he directs a slashing pen. Hence, when he is minded to he can give us brave stuff. Unfortunately his sympathies lie also with gallantry and intrigue, and, therefore, he must ever introduce a woman. In the romance of action, as has been demonstrated by Mr. Stevenson, the woman is not needful; but if her presence is expedient, it is as well that she is young and simple and beautiful rather than a designing coquette or a woman with a past. Mr. Marriott-Watson favours the latter types. During the recent display of the rapier school of fiction—who have lately been having it all their own way—Mr. Marriott-Watson has remained silent. His Gallop Dick came earlier, and since then he has published nothing. But there is no one, with the exception of Mr. Anthony Hope, better qualified to tell a brisk romantic story than he. He has the manner to perfection. He has a pleasant archaic trick which lends verisimilitude to a tale pitched in the last or seventeenth century; his imagination is lively; his knowledge is sufficient; his sympathies, as we have said, are—partly at least—right. We regret that Mr. Marriott-Watson so rarely employs these gifts; and we regret that when he does, he so persistently brings in a too modern fancy for the analysis of passion. From a man with such a style as his we want no analysis: we want bold, generalising statements. But Mr. Marriott-Watson is not one man, but two. He is only half a romancist: the other half is realist, or if you will, naturalist. He loves a highwayman, but he loves also to tie a modern neuro-pathic subject down and use the knife. He is, in short, both the author of the episode "Of the Man from Cornwall" and of "At the First Corner." His imagination is too much tinged with eroticism. He enjoys risky situations; it is pleasure to him to see how near he may approach the edge without falling over. As an exercise in treading delicately "My Lady the Naiad" is not to be surpassed; but we cannot admire the author for his skill. It seems to us beside the mark, unimportant: the important thing is that a man with his talents should make brisk, clean, and dashing stories. Mr. Marriott-Watson has lately been busy on a story for boys, which is now running in a juvenile magazine. It would do him good if, for a while, he could be persuaded to write only stories for boys and put his heart into them. We do not for a moment wish to deny his cleverness as an inquirer into the more intimate relations of men and women—he is intensely clever. But there are others who do the same work as well or better.

THE CENTENARY OF THE BIRTH OF HEINE.

I.—HEINE: THE MAN.

DECEMBER 13, 1797.

"The spirit of the world,
Beholding the absurdity of men,
Their vaunts, their feats—let a sardonic smile
For one short moment wander o'er his lips;
That smile was Heine."

Matthew Arnold.

A HUNDRED years have passed since Harry—for it was only after his conversion to the Lutheran Church that the poet adopted the name of Heinrich—Heine opened his eyes to read the riddle of a world he was destined to find so hard. It is nearly half a century since the grave slowly closed over him with the problem still unsolved; but the verdict of posterity on the man and on his work is still as confused and contradictory as was his contemporaries' judgment of him. Though it is acknowledged that on him alone the mantle of Goethe, with, perchance, a double portion of the lyrical spirit, fell, though his genius has carried the poetry of his mother tongue round the world; yet when, only the other day, it was suggested to erect a statue to his memory in the town he had made famous by his birth, the proposal was greeted with a shout of enthusiastic approval, with a shriek of offended morality, and a howl of outraged chauvinism. And thus it ever was with Heine. To some he is a silver-tongued poet, the master of love and tenderness; to others the incarnation of lust and discord. Not many years after the poet had drawn his last troubled breath some ecstatic devotees told of Heine's ascent to heaven; and hard on its heels followed a fervid account of Heine's descent into hell. Nor, judging from what he has left us to judge him by, is this diversity of opinion altogether surprising. In his collected works—in his prose as in his poetry—melting tenderness and depth of feeling are found side by side with mocking cynicism and frivolity. Glowing passion and delicate fancy intertwine with coarse sensuality and brutal directness. Flashing wit and dainty humour alternate with dirty buffoonery and impish spitefulness. With the loftiest yearning towards God and the beautiful mingle sneering atheism and cold-blooded realism. It seems to be some strange jungle, this soul of Heine, whence poisonous plants spring up with the fairest flowers, where the hiss of the serpent mingles with the song of the nightingale:

"There is poison in my songs.
How could it be otherwise?"

he says himself.

Now, if a genius of this strange complexity, of these harsh contrasts, be analysed according to the hard and fast formulæ of morality and of religion, the process will yield a grinning, grimacing kobold, a Heine hot from his descent to hell, but not Heine himself nor his true spirit. For consider what manner of man he was, and in what a school his character was formed.

And, above all things, lest the verdict be no more than tinkling brass, let there be charity. Born a Jew, in an age and in a country when birth within the Ghetto carried with it the stigma of social and civic ostracism, in the midst of all that was most seductive in Roman Catholicism, he sat at the feet of Hegel, and in time lightly accepted Lutheranism as his creed. "The certificate of baptism is the ticket of admission to European culture," he urges. By birth a German, he was, by force of his earliest associations, an idolator of Napoleon. By instinct and by education in revolt against the dreary trend of his time towards intellectual and political reaction, and of necessity a fighter, he flung himself into the arms of democracy, until in time men came to mistake him for an apostle of freedom and a tribune of the people: yet at heart he was always an aristocrat. "Lay a sword upon my tomb," he cries, "for I have fought in the War of the Emancipation of Mankind"; but, after all, he fought half-heartedly, dreaming of an oligarchy of the intellect in which the many-headed could have neither appreciation nor share. Home-sick for his native land, the beauty and glamour of which had entered into his soul, and of which he knew how to sing with such deep and true feeling, the exiled "nightingale of Germany" had for many years to build its nest "in the periwig of old Voltaire." Sensitive, spoiled, and proud, he carried throughout his life the rankling sting of a hopeless and unrequited love. Add to all this a keen and exuberant sense of humour, an unparalleled gift of irony and satire, and a biting and flashing wit, and it is difficult to see how, if his verse be poisoned, it could well be otherwise. In the man, as in his works, there were the same infinite complexities and the same startling contrasts.

It is idle to say that the ugly discords which mar the beauty of Heine's works were an affectation, and the outcome of studied calculation to attract, to startle attention. They were in the man himself—in his life. Take, for example, the eventful visit to his uncle, Salomo Heine, the upright, simple-minded millionaire of Hamburg, which seems to mark the crisis of his life. The young man, straight from the unholy influence of "das rote Sefchen," from whose singing he had learnt that he, too, was "born unto singing," was sent—for his mother was an eminently shrewd and practical woman—to learn to follow in the respectable footsteps of his millionaire uncle. Silver-tongued Apollo was to settle down as a reputable banker—H. Heine & Co.—in the "town of bacon." In the society into which he was thrown, money and respectability were the be-all and end-all of life. The gorgeous world of imagination in which he lived was, to all about him, fantastically incomprehensible. With his sense of humour, the young poet must have felt that he cut a very comic figure in this uncongenial setting. Moreover, he fell passionately, madly in love with one of his uncle's daughters. She rejected his wooing with contempt. Although the wound never healed throughout his life, and gave to the world the exquisite pathos of the Book of Songs, though his heart might be throbbing out its life-blood, Heine was fain to see the grim humour in the incongruity of all. It was irony worthy of what he blasphemously calls the "Aristophanes of Heaven." He learnt to mock at himself. These antagonisms of his temperament found its expression in that spirit of self-mockery which is the characteristic keynote of his lyrics. His cynicism is not an artificial, cleverly plotted phase straining after originality, but it is the expression of deeply rooted desire to seek after truth—to reach the kernel of life's philosophy. It expresses his conception of the great gulf which was fixed between the prose of his life and the poetry of his emotions. This, it seems to me, explains, to some extent, the strange dualisms of Heine's nature—its emotional exaltation and its sensual coarseness—and accounts for the glaring contrasts in his works. Throughout his life he worshipped purity, and he ran after any grisette who chanced to cross his path; and he jeered at himself, with tears in his eyes, for both. His life was the tragedy of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, with Mephistopheles chuckling impartially in the background.

The tragedy culminated in the long years of martyrdom which had to run out before the end of his stormy life on the mattress in Paris. Never was Heine greater than during those years when stretched on a bed of sickness, racked with excruciating pain, paralysed so that he had to lift the eyelid with his fingers if he would escape from darkness, he bore his afflictions unflinchingly and uncomplainingly. Never was his spirit so bright, and never was his wit so keen and subtle than during this long-drawn death in life.

"It was in May, 1848," he tells us, "that I went out for the last time and took leave of the fair idols which I adored in the time of my good fortune. Only with difficulty I dragged myself to the Louvre, and I all but fainted when I passed into the grand gallery where the sainted goddess of beauty, our blessed lady of Milo, stands on her pedestal. At her feet long time I lay and wept so bitterly that a stone might have pitied me. The goddess, too, looked on me pitifully, yet so disconsolately withal as if she would say, 'Don't you see that I have no arms, and, therefore, can do nothing to help you?'"

It was Heine's farewell to the outside world. The gods of his youth, even the goddess of beauty, had failed him in his hour of need. He crawled home to die, but the hour of his release was long in coming. "It is a plaint," he writes to Meissner, "as though from the grave, a cry through the night of one buried alive." Yet on his bed, worn out and unable to fight as he had fought, whether on the wrong side or on the right, throughout his manhood, his genius turned again to the poetry which had first won him fame. From the bed of sickness he published the Romanzero, in which, if, as he had foretold long years before, the kisses of the Muse had lost much of their first glow and freshness, there are yet many lines of whimsical thought, of exquisite musical beauty, and all living with that mocking humour which characterised even his deathbed. Whether in those hours of pain and darkness he returned repentant to the God of his fathers; whether he died a Jew or a Christian, it profits little to inquire. Would the spectacle of the battered old roué and freethinker turning whimpering to the consolations of religion which he had always spurned be particularly edifying? For the great history of the Jews he had never disguised his admiration; for their oppression, as for all who were down-trodden, he had always shown sympathy. But in all questions of creed he seems to have maintained the same attitude of tolerant indifference which he had laid down in his criticism of Nathan der Weise:

"Who is right I know not;
And yet I can't help thinking
That the Rabbi and the Monk
Both smell very much alike."

Yet his thoughts certainly often turned to religious matters. Many of his poems, attacking his adversaries too virulently, he burned, not without a pang. But "it is better that the verses should burn rather than the versifier. For," he continues, in the foreword to Romanzero—perhaps one of the most terrible human documents ever penned,—

"since I need the mercy of God myself, I have granted an amnesty to all my enemies. . . . The entire high clergy of atheism has spoken its anathema over me, and there are fanatic priests of unbelief who would like to stretch me on the rack until I recant. . . . Yes, I am returned to God like the Prodigal Son, after a long herding of swine among the Hegelians."

But even in this confession of his faith the old smile of the scoffer seems to flit in and out between the lines.

"That smile was Heine."

O. W.

THE FRENCH ACADEMY.

THE RECEPTION OF M. THEURIET.

THE reception of M. Theuriel last week was an exceptionally brilliant meeting at the Académie de France. The attraction was not, indeed, the latest candidate for immortality—Theuriel, the bland and amiable, mild as milk, and just as insipid. But he was to be received by the youngest Academician, M. Bourget. The fashionable women of Paris must have their special novelist or dramatist. It is an enviable, if, alas! a dangerous post. M. Bourget has naturally stepped into the shoes of the departed Dumas, the late beloved of feminine Paris, so that the display of bonnets and gowns was worthy the most highly decorative and detailed pages of the master, who delights, as we all know, in matters of the toilet. "My merits as a novelist may be challenged," once said M. Bourget, in the extreme fatuity of his well-dressed youth; "but no one can deny that I am the best cravatted man of Paris." His British aspect, emphasised since his visit to America, was not advantageously set off by the ridiculous palm-embroidered coat and futile sword of the Forty; but, still, he managed to look as well as mortal man could possibly look, so disfigured.

For the excited foreigner, nothing is more deceptive than an Academy reception. To begin with, the famous arm-chairs are mere ugly benches. All the Immortals are not present. The hall is small and insignificant, and while you listen to the long addresses, you have plenty of time to realise the absurdity of the whole affair; of men who play at distributing and appropriating glory, and convene all Paris to watch their method of play. At one o'clock the president, M. Bourget, flanked by the chancellor and the secretary of the Academy, took the centre seat on the high estrade facing the hall. M. Theuriet stood in the traditional attitude of respectful dignity beside the reading-desk placed before his "arm-chair," and on either side sat his god-fathers, MM. Brunetière and Cherbuliez. In a clear, monotonous voice, strongly tinged with the Lorraine accent, the new Immortal read the conventional eulogy of his predecessor, Alexander Dumas. Nobody expected anything remarkable from M. Theuriet, and he fully justified this negative expectation. About Dumas he had nothing to say, and he said it, and said it well, which is all that could be expected from an Academician.

Not so with the president's speech welcoming him among the Forty. It was for this all the pretty gowns and "chic" bonnets made such a gallant display in the building; for this the tribunes were packed to overflowing, and people had been standing outside the Institute doors since four o'clock that morning. Here something decidedly remarkable was expected, and nobody for once was disappointed. M. Bourget read a discourse which was a charming and finished piece of literature. The candidate addresses the entire body of Academicians standing. The president addresses him sitting; and in his welcome adopts a personal and responsible tone. Bourget began with a pretty and flattering school-reminiscence, and recalled "an exquisite hour" in the provincial college where the professor, forsaking the old dry path, opened for his pupils a contemporary volume of verse. It was Theuriet's Chanson du Vannier, and young heads and hearts were instantly seized by its enchantment. So vivid is the memory still that he quoted several lines, and in analysing the charms of Theuriet's perfumed landscape, gave us, with delightful freshness, the setting of his own school years. Resuming the captivating influence of the provincial note, which may be said to be Theuriet's sole gift, he cried:

"To belong to a land! What a simple formula! So simple that at first glance it seems to lack even sense. Bridoron said, 'One is always somebody's son'; he might have added, 'and born somewhere.' But the State registrar, in recording beside our name that of our birthplace, does not by that fact make us of that spot. It needs something else for the accomplishment of that mysterious marriage of the earth and the soul that man sums up in that word so tender and profound: 'My country!' To belong to a land it is not sufficient to be born there. It does not suffice even to have grown up there. Our family must have lived there, those who gave us life must have played there as children, where we have played as children. They must have merged their earliest dreams of youth in horizons whither our own have wandered, their works, their blisses, their sorrows must have been associated with the setting of our daily life. Our dead must be there about us—in the streets, among the fields; the highest and humblest influences emanating from all things must have shaped us through them in such a way that the climate of our town has penetrated us like its history, and that everywhere else we are forced to feel ourselves strangers, dépayés—to use the expressive term in which the popular language sums up the suffering of the creature torn from the hereditary atmosphere, from that sacred communion of the land and men, outside of which there is neither durable hearth nor national unity of action, nor health of spirit nor certitude of will. Alas! in our contemporary France, centralised in the extreme, how many have been deprived of this first support! How many have possessed it and undervalued it! You, Monsieur, have had the good fortune to belong to a land. You have had the wisdom to stick to it as far as life permitted you. The best of your talent comes from that good fortune and from that wisdom."

Tracing the influences that formed Theuriet's youth and talent, he recalled with a few delicate strokes the aged aunt Thérèse, who first taught him to love and understand flowers, and who replied to his child's question how the bees made honey, "with the heart of flowers."

"This flavour of wild honey, composed of all the flowers of Lorraine, is that of all your poetry of nature, and, in the poet's fashion, you have royally paid your debt to the gentle dead who first revealed to you the secret of true artists—that of finding the exquisite in the humblest things; you have set her image in an elegy too long to quote entirely, but whose last verses I will quote, wherein we see her too old to wander among the alleys of the garden, imprisoned in her chamber hung with Flemish draperies of faded leaves, the silent spirit, the tarnished mirrors and rosewood furniture."

M. Bourget made what could be made of a mediocre subject. The work of M. Theuriet offers small scope to the analyst or the orator; for this reason, the greater and more notable part of M. Bourget's remarkable discourse was given to M. Theuriet's predecessors. His eulogy of Alexandre Dumas literally took the Academy by storm. Not only were passages saluted with enthusiastic applause, but the entire assembly was lifted to its feet. First the Academicians stood up to applaud, and then the spectators, the laity, male and female. It was a triumph worth achieving, and one that M. Bourget for one sweet brief moment must have felt equal in value to several swift editions of a new novel. He painted Dumas, with his athletic figure, his haughty bearing, his singular and expressive mask, full of intelligence and energy, of virile gaiety and hidden bitterness, of irony and kindness, of courageous serenity and melancholy.

"All this was in that accentuated profile, with its hooked nose, its bold moustache, its brow broad with thought, its mouth at once indulgent and disenchanted, and what a glance! His clear eyes, set within lids a little prominent, had that surgical lucidity of great doctors, great composers, and great statesmen. It seemed that athwart all lies and all modesties, all ignorances and duplicities, that glance must always pierce to the very depth of the being it rested upon and perceive the soul's sick spot, the secret wound to be sounded and cured."

There is not space to reproduce in full this masterly analysis of Dumas' work. Theuriet's eulogy was characterless and dull, but Bourget more than accomplished and completed his task. Each sentence told, each line was revealing, and while we listened, spellbound and entranced, without the Institute gates the students from the redoubtable Quartier, in the detestable anti-semitic spirit of the hour, that makes Paris a public scandal, were clamouring for Zola's blood (though it is not explained why they should batter the Institute gates so inhospitable to Zola, in pursuit of that distinguished writer) and Bourget's uneven and somewhat jerky utterance was continually interrupted by sounds of blows and shouts, till thoughts of war and siege were aroused, and palmed and sworded Academicians moved uneasily in their legendary arm-chairs. But the threatened invasion passed on, the Academy was not taken like another Bastille, by trousered petroleuse, and the Master was permitted to reach his eloquent peroration.

"Dumas has executed in the drama a work resembling that of Stendhal, Balzac, and Flaubert in the novel, of Sainte-Beuve and Taine in criticism, of Thierry and Michelet in history. On the boards he has introduced as much truth as they could hold. His theatre, to borrow the formula of one of the masters of this revolution, is a living psychology. Thus his work is associated with the vast output of the scientific spirit which circulates from one end to the other of this century, and which will remain its unequalled greatness. Suffering century, chaotic, harsh, troubled, which has undertaken everything, accomplished so little, and of which one may say the despairing word that it has been fertile in abortions. . . . When new generations will review the books, novels, poems, plays, essays of all kinds in which we have expended our effort during the last hundred years, they will put aside, no doubt, as decrepit, many a work that was celebrated, but which gave too much place to rhetoric and to fashion. They will preserve, I have the profound conviction, those which were composed with the passionate scruple of exactitude. It is not rash to affirm that Alexandre Dumas' part will be very great in this supreme lottery, because he has sought for much, and much loved truth. Alas! this strong phalanx of our great elders, who with Flaubert linked romance with physiology, with Renan religious history with exegesis, with Taine renewed literary history by the study of surrounding races, with Leconte de Lisle poetry by visionary erudition, we have seen it entirely vanish. In to-day bidding farewell to one of these glorious elders in the name of our confrères, I feel a little of the melancholy that sixty years ago simple officers must have felt in seeing disappear one by one the few survivals among the generals of the Great Army. It is one of the last marshals of French letters whose memory to-day we salute, and our discouragement at the thought of the irreparable losses endured these last years would be great indeed if we did not recall wisely the valiant counsel breathed from the whole person of Alexandre Dumas, and if we did not hear his voice repeating to us the virile order of literary existence, of all existence perhaps; that with which he ends one of his masterpieces: 'And now, let us go and work.'"

H. L.

THE BOOK MARKET.

GEORGE ELIOT'S NOVELS.

OUR inquiries into the sales and merits of the existing editions of Scott's and Dickens's novels have excited considerable interest. Below we give reports (wrung from booksellers whose busiest hours have arrived) upon the sales and editions of the novels of George Eliot. George Eliot's reputation is "reconsidered" in another column. Here she is reconsidered from the practical point of view of the bookseller.

SALES AND EDITIONS.

A London (West End) bookseller writes :

"In my opinion there is still room for a well-printed and attractively-bound edition of George Eliot's works. The old red cloth edition commands the largest sales, and, indeed, is much preferred to the new green edition now being issued. There is always a steady demand for George Eliot's works, but I believe such an edition as I have indicated would be welcomed."

Our Birmingham correspondent makes an interesting reply to our inquiries :

"Of all our English novelists, none have a more uniform sale in Birmingham than George Eliot. There are various reasons for this: here, in Warwickshire, she was one of us. Her knowledge of the ways and customs of the lower middle classes of this county are unequalled in English literature. Again, she was not a voluminous writer: a complete set of her novels can be had in eight volumes. The volumes are few in number, and the cost is within the reach of all.

The best selling are Adam Bede, The Mill on the Floss, and Silas Marner. The latter works do not sell so freely, for in them the philosopher is stamped on every page, and the analysis of character is too searching.

To Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons thanks are due for several excellent editions. The 'Standard' edition, in 21 volumes, is a model of neatness—paper, print, and binding, all are perfection. There are no illustrations—that is a great blessing. The cheap 'Uniform' edition has the larger sale—it is well printed on good paper, but we wish we could prevail upon the publishers to omit the illustrations.

We may add that here in Birmingham the sale of George Eliot is as great to-day as it was during her life. These remarks apply to her prose-fiction only. The essays have been relegated to the upper shelves; the poems have a small sale."

A large Brighton bookseller gives his opinions as follow :

"The sale of George Eliot's novels keeps very even throughout the year. The red cloth edition is by far the most popular; and we think it a pity that it is to be discontinued as the stock runs out, and another colour substituted; for although the new binding is in itself neat and good, it will be a drawback to those who have purchased some volumes not to be able to complete their sets in uniform binding. There does not seem to be room for another 8vo edition, unless it were illustrated; but the pocket edition, which is shortly to be commenced by the issue in that form of Scenes of Clerical Life, should take well."

A Bournemouth correspondent writes :

"The present demand for George Eliot's novels is not quite so good as it has been in previous years.

The 'Cabinet' edition I find sells best in sets; single novels in the 'Popular' edition. Scenes of Clerical Life has had a large sale during the last few months in the sixpenny edition.

If the publishers could see their way clear to publish the novels as they intend publishing Scenes of Clerical Life—3 vols., uniform with the 'Temple Classics'—I certainly think it would take, and especially if the number of volumes did not exceed fifteen for the set."

From Dublin we have received a favourable report on these novels :

"In our experience George Eliot comes next in popularity to Scott and Dickens, Thackeray being a bad fourth.

There is always a steady demand for her works in the cheaper editions (3s. 6d., &c.), and the uniform set of her novels in 7 vols. has also sold well.

The new 'Standard' edition, however, has not found favour with our clients, for although it makes a handsome set we consider the number of volumes and the price tend to keep down the sale, particularly as the cheaper edition is such good value.

We do not stock sixpenny editions."

Finally, an Oxford correspondent gives us George Eliot's position in a University city :

"Whether due to the 'new fiction' or not I cannot say, but the sale of George Eliot's novels is not a third of what it was at Oxford six or seven years ago. These novels seem to be taking their place in the ranks of those classics which, perhaps, because they 'ought to be read,' are not read by the younger generation. The prices, too, of the original editions have dropped considerably, and where an uncut copy of, e.g., The Mill on the Floss, a few years ago brought three guineas, it may now be picked up for one. As to current editions, I think those issued by Messrs. Blackwood & Sons are adequate to the demand, and that there is no crying need at present for anything further."

It will be seen that the demand for George Eliot's novels is reported to be steady at all the above centres except Oxford. It appears that there is some room for a new edition; but while our Birmingham correspondent vehemently condemns illustrations, our Brighton correspondent thinks them necessary to the success of a new edition.

WHAT AMERICA IS READING.

THE American Bookman is worth consulting now and then by those who desire to follow the reading tastes of the vast American public. Its monthly returns of book sales are magnificent in their sweep. They tell, as accurately as can be told, what books are pronounced "real bully" from Boston to New Orleans, from New York to Salt Lake City, and thence to San Francisco. Out of the many lists returned by the Bookman's correspondents we quote the following, which relate to six large cities.

The books are placed in order of demand, and the lists were made up on November 1.

NEW YORK (UPTOWN).

1. Captains Courageous. By Kipling.
2. The Christian. By Caine.
3. The Choir Invisible. By Allen.
4. Hugh Wynne. By Mitchell.
5. In Kedar's Tents. By Merriman.
6. St. Ives. By Stevenson.

BOSTON.

1. Hugh Wynne. By Mitchell.
2. Captains Courageous. By Kipling.
3. In Kedar's Tents. By Merriman.
4. St. Ives. By Stevenson.
5. The Christian. By Caine.
6. Alfred Lord Tennyson. By his Son.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

1. Hugh Wynne. By Mitchell.
2. The Choir Invisible. By Allen.
3. Quo Vadis. By Sienkiewicz.
4. Story of an Untold Love. By Ford.
5. In Kedar's Tents. By Merriman.
6. Chevalier d'Auriac. By Yeats.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

1. Soldiers of Fortune. By Davis.
2. The Choir Invisible. By Allen.
3. Hugh Wynne. By Mitchell.
4. The Christian. By Caine.
5. The Federal Judge. By Lush.
6. The Honourable Peter Stirling. By Ford.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

1. Quo Vadis. By Sienkiewicz.
2. The Christian. By Caine.
3. St. Ives. By Stevenson.
4. Soldiers of Fortune. By Davis.
5. In Kedar's Tents. By Merriman.
6. The Lark. Books I. and II.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

1. Quo Vadis. By Sienkiewicz.
2. The Choir Invisible. By Allen.
3. Soldiers of Fortune. By Davis.
4. The Christian. By Caine.
5. In Kedar's Tents. By Merriman.
6. Chevalier d'Auriac. By Yeats.

Taking the whole of the lists, of which there are over thirty, it appears that the six books most popular in America about seven weeks ago were these :

1. Quo Vadis. By Sienkiewicz.
2. The Choir Invisible. By Allen.
3. The Christian. By Caine.
4. Hugh Wynne. By Mitchell.
5. Captains Courageous. By Kipling.
6. In Kedar's Tents. By Merriman.

The hold which Quo Vadis has taken of the American public is remarkable. It was first favourite last May, and is first favourite now. Even The Christian plays third fiddle to it. Even that fine native product, The Choir Invisible, has failed to dislodge it from its pinnacle. In Kedar's Tents is returned as one of the most popular books in nearly every State.

THE WEEK.

CAPTAIN A. T. MAHAN has issued, in an octavo volume of about 300 pages, eight papers on the naval affairs of the United States. These papers have been written at various dates, the earliest in 1890, and three during this year. Whatever unity they present "will not be due," says Captain Mahan, "to antecedent purpose, but to the fact that they embody the thought of an individual mind, consecutive in the line of its main conceptions, but adjusting itself continually to changing conditions, which the progress of events entails." All the papers appeared originally in American magazines, and among the subjects treated are "Possibilities of an Anglo-American Reunion," "Preparedness for Naval War," "A Twentieth Century Outlook," and "Strategic Features of the Caribbean Sea and the Gulf of Mexico."

THE "Wolseley Series" of military works is growing. Its aim is to place before British officers and the public translations of foreign standard works on military subjects. But it will occasionally produce an original English work, and thus we have, for its latest volume, Indian Frontier Warfare, by Captain and Brevet-Major C. J. Younghusband, who has already won his spurs in the literary field. Mr. Walter H. James, the editor of the series, supplies a brief Introduction to the volume, in which he says:

"Incidentally this book gives a striking proof of the value of the study of military history, a knowledge of the method employed by Hoche to subdue La Vendée, being the basis of the system employed for the pacification of Burmah. Here was a country in which the conditions were much the same as those which obtained in France a hundred years ago, viz., difficult communications and numerous irregular bands, not formidable in themselves, but hard to deal with because of the difficulty of getting hold of them. The actual course employed was not quite the same; still, the later method was distinctly founded on the earlier. No two military incidents can ever be exactly similar. The wise man is he who learns from the experience of the past how to apply his knowledge under the conditions of the present."

IN the way of criticism this week we have Mr. Havelock Ellis's Affirmations, consisting of papers on Nietzsche, Cassanova, Zola, Huysmans, and "St. Francis and Others." Mr. Ellis boldly condemns books about books while producing one himself:

"How happy, for instance, the world might be if there were no literature about the Bible, if Augustine and Aquinas and Calvin and thousands of smaller men had not danced on it so long, stamping every page of it into mire, that now the vision of a single line, in its simple sense, is almost an effort of inspiration. All my life long I have been casting away the knowledge I have gained from books about literature, and from opinions about life, and coming to literature itself or to life itself, a slow and painful progress towards that heaven of knowledge where a child is king."

Another handsome sporting book by "Thormanby" comes to hand. This is Kings of the Turf, a series of biographical sketches of celebrities of the racing world. There are some thirty sketches and portraits, peers being alternated with commoners, jockeys with trainers, owners with backers. Last of all comes a chapter on the Prince of Wales, whose winning of the Derby is stirringly described. We think the author is safe when he surmises that "the number of hats that were lost through being recklessly chucked into the air will probably never be known."

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

MINISTERIAL PRIESTHOOD. By R. C. Moberly, D.D. John Murray.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

KINGS OF THE TURF. By "Thormanby." Hutchinson & Co. 16s.

WOLSELEY SERIES, VOL. III.: INDIAN FRONTIER WARFARE. By Captain and Brevet-Major G. J. Younghusband, P.S.C. Kegan Paul.

THE CAMPAIGN OF SEDAN. By George Hooper. George Bell & Sons.

SIR HENRY WOTTON: A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH. By Adolphus William Ward. Archibald Constable & Co. 3s. 6d.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF HARRIET BROWNE STOWE. Edited by Annie Fields. Sampson Low. 7s. 6d.

LETTERS RECEIVED BY THE EAST INDIA COMPANY FROM ITS SERVANTS IN THE EAST. VOL. II.: 1613-1615. With an Introduction by William Foster, B.A. Sampson Low. 21s.

THE DIPLOMATIC HISTORY OF AMERICA: ITS FIRST CHAPTER, 1492-1493-1494. By Henry Harrisse. B. F. Stevens.

POETRY, ESSAYS, CRITICISM.

REVIEWS AND ESSAYS IN ENGLISH LITERATURE. By the Rev. Duncan C. Toxey. George Bell & Sons. 5s.

THE WOOING OF MALCATHON, and COMMODOUS. By Lew. Wallace. Harper & Brothers.

SENT BACK BY THE ANGELS: BALLADS OF HOME AND HOMELY LIFE. By Frederick Langbridge. 3s. 6d.

POETICAL SERMONS: INCLUDING THE BALLAD OF PLYMOUTH CHURCH. By William E. Davenport. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 3s. 6d.

AFFIRMATIONS. By Havelock Ellis. Walter Scott.

THE SPECTATOR: VOL. III. John C. Nimmo.

MODERN PAINTERS: VOL. V. By John Ruskin. New Edition. 9s.

SCIENCE.

ELECTRICAL TRACTION. By Ernest Wilson. Edward Arnold.

ART BOOKS.

THE "BUILDER" ALBUM OF ROYAL ACADEMY ARCHITECTURE, 1897. Office of the Builder.

THE CENTRAL ITALIAN PAINTERS OF THE RENAISSANCE. By Bernhard Berenson. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

THE ARTISTS AND ENGRAVERS OF BRITISH AND AMERICAN BOOK PLATES. By Henry W. Fincham. Kegan Paul. 21s.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

THE THAMES ILLUSTRATED: A PICTURESQUE JOURNEYING FROM RICHMOND TO OXFORD. By John Leyland. George Newnes, Ltd.

A RUN ROUND THE EMPIRE. By Alex. Hill. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. 3s. 6d.

THE FAVOR ISLANDS. By J. Russell-Jefferson. Sampson Low. 2s. 6d.

CLASSICAL.

THE POEMS OF BACCHYLIDES: FROM A PAPYRUS IN THE BRITISH MUSEUM. Edited by Frederic G. Kenyon. Printed by Order of the Trustees of the British Museum.

DICTIONARY OF QUOTATIONS (CLASSICAL). By Thomas Benfield Harbottle. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. 7s. 6d.

EDUCATIONAL.

NEW GRAMMATICAL FRENCH COURSE. By Albert Barrère. 2 vols. Whittaker & Co. 2s.

DISTINGUENDA. By A. P. S. Newman. Whittaker & Co. 1s.

D. C. C. EXERCISES IN CHOICE AND CHANCE. By William Allen Whitworth. Deighton Bell & Co. (Cambridge).

THE SMALLER CAMBRIDGE BIBLE FOR SCHOOLS: ESEA AND NEMEMIAH. Edited by Herbert Edward Ryle, D.D. Cambridge University Press.

TWO ESSAYS ON WILLIAM PITT. By T. B. Macaulay. Edited by Arthur D. Innes, M.A. Cambridge University Press.

T. MACCI PLAUTI TRINUMMUS. Edited by J. H. Gray, M.A. Cambridge University Press.

JUVENILE BOOKS.

ELSI'S ADVENTURES IN FAIRYLAND. By Bedford Pollard. Elliot Stock. KING LONG BEARD. By Barrington MacGregor and Charles Robinson. John Lane. NATTY'S VIOLIN. By Charles H. Bartow. Frederick Warne & Co. IN QUEST OF SHEBA'S TREASURE. By S. Walkley. Frederick Warne & Co. 2s. 6d. A HOUSEFUL OF REBELS. By Walter Rhoades. Archibald Constable & Co. 4s. 6d. GEORDIE THE BLACK PRINCE. By Rev. J. M. Russell. Jarrold & Sons. 2s.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FRIENDSHIP. By Hugh Black. Hodder & Stoughton. 2s. 6d. THE GUARDIAN'S INSTRUCTION; OR, THE GENTLEMAN'S ROMANCE. By Stephen Penton. F. E. Robinson. THE BOWER MANUSCRIPT. Edited by A. F. Rudolf Hoernle, Ph.D. Parts III. to VII. Government Printing Office, Calcutta. A DICTIONARY OF THE MALAY LANGUAGE: MALAY-ENGLISH. By Hugh Clifford and Frank A. Swettenham. Part IV.: The Letters "D," "E," and "F." Government Printing Office, Taiping, Perak. THE INTEREST OF AMERICA IN SEA POWER: PRESENT AND FUTURE. By Captain A. T. Mahan. Sampson Low. 10s. 6d. A SERIES OF SEVENTY ILLUSTRATIONS TO CAPTAIN SIR R. F. BUSTON'S "ARABIAN NIGHTS." From paintings by Albert Letchford. H. S. Nichols, Ltd. THE ART OF COOKERY. By Mrs. De Salis. Hutchinson & Co. 2s. STUDENTS' EDITION OF A STANDARD DICTIONARY. Funk and Wagnalls. SHADOW LAND; OR, LIGHT FROM THE OTHER SIDE. By E. d'Espérance. George Redway. DANCING A PLEASURE. By Edward Scott. Henry J. Drane.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ACADEMY'S AWARDS TO AUTHORS.

SIR,—May I be allowed to comment upon the letter of "A Veteran Critic" in your last issue? I do not know how far he correctly interprets the true intention of the ACADEMY in raising the question of a prize fund for authors. I venture to hope that his interpretation is unauthorised.

It is evident, to begin with, that no journal, however high be its standing, can take the place of public and official bodies like the five academies which make up the French Institute, and of which the French Academy is the only one known to the generality of educated Englishmen. The French Academy can, without presumption, honour with its approval the work of any French writer, be he who he may; for the ACADEMY to solemnly set the seal of its approbation upon Mr. Swinburne or Mr. Meredith would be a saugrenuité of which I am convinced its editor would never be guilty. It follows that literary work which has been recognised by the most competent organs of English opinion as first-rate is ipso facto debarred from participation in the ACADEMY prize fund; writers of the first rank are hors concours. And if it would be an impertinence for any journal to deem the formal expression of its approval of moment to a writer recognised by the majority of English literary organs, it would be an absurdity in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred to accompany that approval by a pecuniary reward. To refer for one moment to "A Veteran Critic's" list, would it not be gilding refined gold to offer Mr. Rudyard Kipling or Mr. W. W. Jacobs a cheque of £50 for Captains Courageous or The Skipper's Wooing. You might as well offer Sir Henry Bessemer £50 for his metallurgical inventions, or Mr. Edison the same sum for his discovery of the phonograph. "The artist alone," we are told by "A Veteran Critic," "works for nothing but the satisfaction of his own conscience," &c. Have Mr. Kipling and Mr. Jacobs indeed worked for nothing? If so common rumour is truly a lying jade.

Does this imply that what "A Veteran Critic" regards solely as literature—fiction, poetry, and criticism—should be shut out from the ACADEMY Stakes? By no means. The ACADEMY can do most useful work by insisting upon the fact that popular approval and pecuniary reward do not necessarily accompany good literature. In other words, it can seek out those works which have been passed over by the mass of critics, which have been neglected by the public; and it can, by the sympathetic expression of its recognition, by the substantial help of a money reward, encourage and assist the authors. It could thus have assisted Browning at the outset of his career; it could have tendered to T. E. Brown that homage which, since his death, has been accorded him in some measure.

On the whole, however, it cannot be maintained that, so far as the literature adumbrated in the preceding paragraph is concerned, there is any serious need of an ACADEMY prize fund. Talent and genius are scarcely likely to fail of recognition nowadays; on the contrary, there is only too common a disposition to recognise them where they exist in an infinitesimal degree. There has been no Poe, no Mangan, in the world of English-speaking letters during the last fifty years; we are so alive to the possibility of Méryon starving, that any charlatan who stands on his head is sure of an adoring press and any number of suppers at the Savoy. It is far otherwise with the literature of knowledge. If you do, indeed, Sir, as "A Veteran Critic" asserts, believe that this finds its reward in the distant beckoning of a professorship, you must permit me to say that this belief possesses the essential characteristic of faith—entire lack of relation to fact. In the first place, there are very few professorships in England; and in the second, it is notorious that literary output has little, if anything, to do with their award. Moreover, much of the work I have in view has been done by writers engaged in other callings, and forcedly hindered from complying with the beckoning, however distant, of a professorship.

As a simple matter of fact, there are whole fields of knowledge that are scarcely tilled at all in this country because of their miserable yield in honorary or pecuniary reward. Only enthusiasts with a competence can put their hands to the plough. The historical sciences in general, and in especial those branches that are concerned with the literary and artistic manifestations of man's personality throughout the ages, stand on a far lower level in the English-speaking world than on the Continent. Here it seems to me that the generous initiative of the ACADEMY might be fruitful of good. I will cite four works which, had the ACADEMY fund been in existence, would, in my opinion, have had a predominant claim upon it: Lady Charlotte Guest's translation of the Mabinogion, Campbell's Popular Tales of the West Highlands, Mr. Standish Hayes O'Grady's Silva Gadelica, Prof. Child's edition of the English and Scottish Ballads. In the first three cases not only was a new continent of romantic fancy and incident opened up for English letters; but English prose literature was enriched by an original and remarkable masterpiece; in the fourth case one of the most beautiful and characteristic branches of our literature is, for the first time, adequately dealt with.

My conclusion is, that the ACADEMY should mainly restrict its scheme to such branches of literature as are fostered in France by the Académie des Inscriptions, and would in Germany be designated "Philologische Wissenschaften," the German "Philologie" I need not say being a term of infinitely wider import than our philology.

"A FAULTY AGREEMENT."

I should like to say a few words about another matter. Nobody heeds statements made by the Author, which are as little likely to mislead as those, let me say, of La Libre Parole or the New York Sun. But copied into your columns under the title of "A Faulty Agreement" they may do some mischief. It is worth while, therefore, to examine this characteristic example of the Author's method of dealing with figures.

In the agreement criticised the publisher asks the writer to contribute £110 to the cost of producing 1,500 copies of his work, and the result arrived at, according to the Author, is that the publisher makes close upon £100 profit without risking a penny, whereas the writer in return for his risk only nets £65. Now in the first place the cost of production is set down at, "say, £100," an assumption based upon nothing but the conviction that the publisher must inevitably be trying to swindle the author. Let us see if we can test its validity. As the book produces 3s. 6d. to the publisher, it must be published at 6s., and may be assumed to be a crown 8vo of 12 sheets of 32 pages, or 388 pages at least. The binding of 1,500 copies at 5d. each (a low figure) works out at £31, paper for the same number (36 reams of double crown at 15s.) at £27, so that only £42 are left for composing and machining 388 pages. I will not say this price is impossible, but it is very low and it allows absolutely no margin for corrections (which may safely be estimated at from £7 to £10) nor for the printing of prospectuses, circulars, order forms, &c., nor for the postage of gratis copies, nor, most remarkable omission of all (and one which the ACADEMY should surely have spotted) for advertising. Unless the author differs greatly from his kind, and the publisher is less squeezable than most of his fellows, this last item may be put down at £20 at least. In other words, the cost of production assumed, in order to create a prejudice against the publisher, to be £100 is almost certainly from £130 to £140, and may, if author and publisher believe in advertising, reach any figure up to £200. So much for the basis of the Author's calculation. Now for some further developments. The sale of the entire edition is assumed to bring in £262 10s. to the publisher (1,500 copies at 3s. 6d.), so that nothing is deducted for copyright purposes, nothing for traveller's and office copies, nothing for gratis copies to the author, nothing (how came you, Mr. Editor, to pass over this omission?) for review copies! According to the Author's calculation the young writer's work has sold without being circularised, without being advertised, without being reviewed. Lucky young writer, and yet he and the Author are not happy.

We are now in a position to substitute for the misleading figures given by the Author the following approximately correct ones:

On the sale of 1,500 copies—

	£	s.
Cost of production, say...	140	0
Royalty to author on 1,400 copies (allowing 100 for gratis copies), at 2s. 6d.	175	10
Profit to publisher...	39	10
	£	355 0
By author ... ..	110
By sale of 1,400 (allowing 100 for gratis copies), at 3s. 6d.	245
	£	355 0

Ex hypothesi the author risks £110 and gets £175 10s., or £65 10s. profit, the publisher risks £30 and gets £39 10s. profit. But if he advertises beyond the figure of £20 his risk is increased pro tanto, and if the advertisement charge reaches the figure of £50 his possible profit is reduced to a vanishing point. The bargain, assuming the entire edition to be sold, is a hard one for the writer, but it is not the iniquitous one denounced by the Author. Moreover, no mention is made of the possible failure to sell 100 copies, in which case the publisher gets nothing for his risk. True, the writer is in the same plight, but he has at least the satisfaction of seeing his book published, a satisfaction conceivably worth £100 to him, but under no circumstances worth anything to the publisher, unless, indeed, the work has a scholarly value, and he issue it for the benefit of science.

I ask you, Sir, and readers of the ACADEMY generally, if it is advisable to give the sanction of your support to statements which can only be cleared from the charge of unfair animus by a plea of gross and ignorant carelessness?

ALFRED NUTT.

[We gave the figures of which Mr. Nutt complains on the authority of a paper which has made a speciality of the finance and statistics of publishing. No doubt the Author can defend its figures otherwise than by "a plea of gross and ignorant carelessness."]

MR. HERBERT SPENCER ON BOOKBUYING.

SIR,—Allow me to correct two errors contained in your account of the method of book-distribution which I proposed some years ago, one of them evidently typographical.

The date of my letter to Mr. Fawcett was 1882, not 1852. In 1852 Mr. Fawcett was not in office—was, indeed, politically unknown.

There is an important omission in your description of the process of ordering a book. The required postage stamps, equivalent to the price of the book, are to be cancelled. The words used are: "He (the purchaser) then scribbles over the affixed stamps so as to erase them and make them unavailable even should they be detached." Evidently this is an essential precaution.

HERBERT SPENCER.

Brighton: Dec. 13.

AUSONIUS.

SIR,—Your reviewer makes pretty sport with the Californian translator of M. de Heredia:

"When he can go wrong, Mr. Taylor goes wrong: filles d'Ausonie becomes 'Ausonius' daughters'; there is no such person as Ausonius, except to the inventor of 'Eumolpidus.'"

I like the irony, and in the absence of the context I have little doubt that filles d'Ausonie does not mean "daughters of Ausonius." But poor poet, whose veritable and not altogether unimportant existence is thus roundly denied!

"Conquerimur, Natura, brevis quod gratia florum est," he writes, in those lines from which Herrick, and so many besides Herrick, have not been ashamed to borrow. Alas! upon him, too, the iniquity of oblivion blindly scattereth her poppy.

E. K. CHAMBERS.

Some of GARDNER, DARTON & Co.'s New Books.

A Second Edition ready in a few days. Large crown 8vo, printed on superfine paper, gilt top, 6s.

A companion volume to Mr. Crockett's ever popular "Sweetheart Travellers."

SIR TOADY LION and General NAPOLEON SMITH.

By S. R. CROCKETT. With numerous Illustrations by Gordon Browne, R.I.

"One of the best things Mr. Crockett has written."—ATHENÆUM.

"When we say 'Sir Toady Lion' is one of the most delightful stories we have ever read, we are still short of the mark."—DAILY CHRONICLE.

"Distinctly the best book of the season."—DAILY MAIL.

"Cleverly and charmingly illustrated by Mr. Gordon Browne. One of the most popular gift-books of the year."—SCOTSMAN.

NICCOLINA NICCOLINI.

By the Author of "Mdle. Mori," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

"Girls can read this volume with impunity and advantage. The author has a thorough knowledge of Italian character."—MORNING POST.

STORIES from the FAERIE QUEENE.

By MARY MACLEOD. With Introduction by Professor HALES. Illustrated by A. G. Walker, Sculptor.

Large Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Without exception the most admirable book of the kind which we have seen this season. The tales themselves from Spenser's inimitable allegory are daintily and vividly told, and the glamour of the old romance rests on each picturesque passing page.....The book is beautifully produced, and ought to satisfy the most fastidious and exacting taste."—LEEDS MERCURY.

SONG FLOWERS: from "A Child's Garden of Verses"

By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. Set to Music by KATHARINE M. RAMSAY. Introduction by S. R. CROCKETT. Illustrations by Gordon Browne, R.I. Demy 4to, fancy boards, printed on superfine paper, 7s. 6d.

"The settings have the same unconscious charm as the poems, together with such grace and distinction of style as prove the writer to be a musician of taste and high accomplishment. The illustrations are exceedingly pretty, and are an additional attraction to one of the prettiest gift-books of the year."—TIMES.

"A charming gift."—PUNCH.

Printed in Colours, 5s.

ZIGZAG FABLES.

By J. A. SHEPHERD.

"Delightful and original. Nobody since the time of Caldecott has put more fun into pictures of animals than this genial draughtsman."—SCOTSMAN.

GARDNER, DARTON & CO., Paternoster Buildings, London.

ATLASES FOR PRESENTS.

ENGLISH ATLASES FOR ENGLISH READERS.

GEORGE PHILIP & SON'S ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of LIBRARY, COMMERCIAL, and FAMILY ATLASES, containing nearly 100 different Editions, at Prices ranging from a few Pence to £10, will be forwarded gratis on application.

All the Atlases in this List are entirely of English origin and manufacture, and will be found more suited to the requirements of English Readers than the Foreign Atlases which are being so extensively advertised in this country.

GEORGE PHILIP & SON, 32, Fleet Street, London.

THE VICTORIAN ERA SERIES.

In course of publication in Monthly Volumes, price 2s. 6d. each.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE ANGLICAN REVIVAL. By J. H. Overton, D.D., Rector of Epworth and Canon of Lincoln.

PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED.

THE RISE of DEMOCRACY. By J. Holland Rose, M.A., late Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge.

ON JANUARY 15th WILL BE READY.

JOHN BRIGHT. By C. A. Vince, M.A., late Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge.

London: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, 50, Old Bailey.

A NEW VOLUME OF POEMS.

HINEMOA. and Other Poems.

By EDMUND LEE,

Author of 'Dorothy Wordsworth,' 'Some Noble Sisters,' &c. Cloth, gilt top, 3s. 6d.

London: JAMES CLARKE & Co., 13 and 14, Fleet Street.

Now ready, cloth 8vo, price 4s.

VARIOUS FRAGMENTS. By HERBERT SPENCER.

Also by the same Author, price 16s. Second Thousand.

PRINCIPLES of SOCIOLOGY. VOLUME III.

London: WILLIAMS & NORTON, 14, Henrietta Street, W.C.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

TRANSATLANTIC TRAITS.

Essays by the Hon. MARTIN MORRIS.

"Mr. Morris appears to have more than inherited the ability of his father, and we shall expect great work from him in the future. He is an admirer of Emerson and of Thoreau, but it is not impossible that if he lives he may surpass his models."—The Athenæum.

Now published, with Photographic Frontispiece, price 3s. 6d. net; post free, 4s.

BY ROADSIDE and RIVER.

Gleanings from Nature's Fields. By H. MEAD-BRIGGS.

"Every chapter has its particular charm. The volume will be acceptable for all time."—Fun.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price, 3s. 6d.

VOICES of the DAY; or, Thoughts on the Message of God in Nature.

By C. S. WARDLE.

NEW VOLUME OF FAIRY TALES.

In crown 8vo, cloth, illustrated, price 5s.

ELSIE'S ADVENTURES in FAIRYLAND.

By BEDFORD POLLARD, Author of "The Adventures of a Grecian Hero," &c.

"A charming story—we advise all children to read it."

Pall Mall Gazette.

NEW NOVELS.

In crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

A BOOK WITHOUT a MAN.

A Story by AGNES GROZIER HERBERTSON.

"The story is chiefly interesting from its dialogue, which is bright and clever."—People's Friend.

"Daintily imagined and prettily written."

Black and White.

In crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The MEDHURSTS of MINDALA.

The Story of the Development of a Soul. By G. M. WATERHOUSE.

"The book represents the inhabitants of Australia in a light which will be new to many English readers."—Star.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

GRIFFITH, FARRAN, BROWNE & Co.'s New Illustrated Prize and Gift Books.

THE WHITE WITCH of the MATABELE.

By FRED WHISHAW, Author of "Harold the Norseman," &c.

Large crown 8vo, cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, price 5s.

FOR TREASURE BOUND.

By HARRY COLLINGWOOD, Author of "The Log of a Privateer," &c.

Large crown 8vo, cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, price 5s.

DR. BURLEIGH'S BOYS.

By CHARLES EDWARDS. Large crown 8vo, cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, price 5s.

THE LADY of HOLT DENE.

By Mrs. EMMA MARSHALL. Large crown 8vo, cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, price 5s.

THE ADVENTURES of a STOWAWAY.

By FRED WHISHAW. Large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, price 3s. 6d.

GUBBINS MINOR and SOME OTHER FELLOWS.

By FRED WHISHAW. Large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, price 3s. 6d.

OLGA; or, Wrong on Both Sides.

By VIN VINCENT, Author of "Cathedrala Bella," &c. Large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, price 3s. 6d.

IDA from INDIA.

By Mrs. HERBERT MARTIN, Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

SCARLET FEATHER.

By H. J. BARKER. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s.

A NEW BOOK of the FAIRIES.

By BEATRICE HARRADEN, Author of "Ships that Pass in the Night," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, full gilt back and side, gilt edges, price 3s. 6d.

THE CHILD of the CARAVAN.

By E. M. GREEN, Author of "Straps; or, Only a Lad," &c. Illustrated by Edwin Scannell. Crown 8vo, full gilt back and side, gilt edges, price 3s. 6d.

A NEW EDITION of the Works of the late W. H. G. KINGSTON.

Large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. with New Illustrations, price 3s. 6d. each.

THE THREE MISHIMEN.

THE THREE LIEUTENANTS.

THE THREE COMMANDERS.

THE THREE ADMIRALS.

PADDY FINN.

THE RIVAL CRUISEES.

WORKS by G. A. HENTY.

FRIENDS THOUGH DIVIDED .. .. . Price 5s.

YOUNG BUGLERS .. .. . Price 5s.

CURSE OF CARNES HOLD .. .. . Price 3s. 6d.

IN TIMES OF PERIL .. .. . Price 3s. 6d.

OUT on the PAMPAS .. .. . Price 3s. 6d.

YOUNG FRANCHISEURS .. .. . Price 3s. 6d.

35, BOW STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

CLARENDON PRESS PUBLICATIONS.

Demy 8vo, 2 vols., cloth, 21s. net.

HINDU MANNERS, CUSTOMS, and CEREMONIES. By the Abbé J. A. DUBOIS. Translated from the Author's later French MS., with Notes, Corrections, and Biography by HENRY K. BEAUCHAMP. With a Prefatory Note by Professor F. MAX-MÜLLER, and a Portrait.

Cloth, 8vo, price to Subscribers, 12s. 6d. net.

THE FLORA of BERKSHIRE: being a Topographical and Historical Account of the Flowering Plants and Ferns found in the County, with short Biographical Notices of the Botanists who have contributed to Berkshire Botany during the last three centuries. By GEORGE CLARIDGE DRUCE, Hon. M.A. Oxon., Sheriff of the City of Oxford, Curator of the Fielding Herbarium.

*.* The price will be raised to 16s. net after January 15.

8vo, paper covers, price 1s. 6d. net.

TWO LECTURES on the SAYINGS of JESUS, Recently Discovered at Oxyrhynchus, delivered at Oxford by the Rev. WALTER LOCK, D.D., and Rev. WILLIAM SANDAY, D.D.

Now ready, with a Facsimile, small quarto, stiff covers, 5s.

OLD-LATIN BIBLICAL TEXTS.—No. IV.

PORTIONS of the ACTS of the APOSTLES, of the EPISTLES of ST. JAMES, and of the FIRST EPISTLE of ST. PETER. From the Bobbio Palimpsest (s) now numbered Cod. 16 in the Imperial Library at Vienna. Edited, with the aid of Tischendorf's and Beheim's Printed Texts, by HENRY J. WHITE, M.A.

Just published, Fasc. X., Pars I, small folio, paper covers, 36s.

THESAURUS SYRIACUS collegarunt Stephanus

M. Quatremere, Georgius Henricus Bernstein, G. W. Lersbach, Albertus Jac. Arnoldi, Carolus M. Agrell, F. Field, Aemilius Roediger. Auxit Digessit Exposit Edidit R. PAYNE SMITH, S.T.P., D.Litt. Dubl., Ecclesiae Christi Cathedralis Cantuariensis Olim Decanus.

Fasc. X., Part II., Completing the Work, is in the Press.

WITH MARGINAL REFERENCES.—Fcap. 8vo, long primer type, 4s. 6d.

THE GREEK TESTAMENT. With the Readings adopted by the Revisers of the Authorised Version.

Now ready, FIFTH EDITION, greatly Enlarged, crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

SHORT HISTORY of FRENCH LITERATURE.

By GEORGE SAINTSBURY, M.A.

TIMES.—"Has obtained a universal recognition as a valuable and comprehensive guide by a writer marvellously well acquainted with his subject in its every branch."

Demy 8vo, cloth, 25s.

A SUMMARY CATALOGUE of WESTERN

MANUSCRIPTS in the BODLEIAN LIBRARY at OXFORD, which have not hitherto been Catalogued in the Quarto Series. With reference to the Oriental and other Manuscripts. By FALCONER MADAN, M.A., Sub-Librarian.

THE OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

*.* Dedicated by special permission to Her Majesty.

To be published January 1.

New Section, 4to, stiff covers, 5s.

A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY on HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES. Founded mainly on the Materials Collected by the Philological Society. Edited by Mr. HENRY BRADLEY.

FRANK-LAW—FYZ,

AND

G.—GAIN-COMING.

Now ready, with Maps and Illustrations, royal 8vo, linen, 21s. net.

AETOLIA: its Geography, Topography, and Antiquities. By WILLIAM J. WOODHOUSE, M.A., F.R.G.S.

SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.

Edited by the Right Hon. MAX-MÜLLER.

Vol. XLIII.—THE SATAPATHA BRÂHMANA.

Part IV., Books VIII.-X. According to the Text of the Mādhyandina School. Translated by JULIUS EGGELING. 12s. 6d.

Vol. XLVII.—THE MARVELS of ZOROASTRIANISM: being Part V. of the PAHLAVI TEXTS. Translated by E. W. WEST.

8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

THE ODES of KEATS. With Illustrations, Notes, and Analyses, and a Memoir. By ARTHUR C. DOWNER, M.A., Brasenose College, Oxford.

Now ready, extra fcap. 8vo, 2s.

SHAKESPEARE'S HENRY the FOURTH.

Part I. Edited, with Preface, Notes, &amp;c., by ALDIS WRIGHT, D.C.L.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY CALENDAR for 1898.

MINIATURE "OXFORD" CLASSICS.

Now ready, Two Editions: (a) On Writing Paper for MS. Notes, paper boards, 3s. 6d. each; (b) On Oxford India Paper, roan, 6s. each.

THE COMPLETE WORKS of HORACE. Edited

by the Very Rev. E. C. WICKHAM, D.D., Dean of Lincoln.

UNIFORM WITH ABOVE.

THE COMPLETE WORKS of VIRGIL. (Papillon and Haigh.) WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"Nicely got up and easily carried in the pocket."

ALSO PUBLISHED BY HENRY FROWDE.

THE "OXFORD" EDITIONS of the POETS.

MINIATURE EDITIONS, PRINTED on OXFORD INDIA PAPER. In case, 32mo.

Burns, 3 vols. ... ..	from 10s. 6d.	Byron, 4 vols. ... ..	from 14s. 6d.
Shakespeare, 6 vols. ... ..	16s. 0d.	Longfellow, 6 vols. ... ..	16s. 0d.
Scott, 5 vols. ... ..	16s. 0d.	Wordsworth, 5 vols. ... ..	16s. 0d.

Single Volume, printed on best rag-made paper, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d. each.

Also printed on Oxford India Paper.

Byron, Shakespeare, Wordsworth, from 10s. 6d. each.	Burns, Longfellow, Scott, from 7s. 6d. each.
---	--

Fcap. 4to, cloth, pp. 191, 2s. 6d. net.

THE THACKERAYS in INDIA: and Some

CALCUTTA GRAVES. By Sir WILLIAM WILSON HUNTER, K.C.S.I.

CHURCH TIMES.—"This is a delightful book. It is a tale well told, abounding in scenes of thrilling interest and pathetic episodes. It is as informing as it is entertaining."

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

THE OLD MISSIONARY. With 5 Illustrations

by General Sir Charles D'Oyly, Bart.

SPECTATOR.—"A tale of tender pathos, which it is difficult to read without tears."

FULL CATALOGUES POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

London: HENRY FROWDE, Clarendon Press Warehouse, Amen Corner E.C.

Printed by ALEXANDER &amp; SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published for the Proprietor by PETER GEORGE ANDREWS, 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1338.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General Literature (No. 118, for DECEMBER), at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street East Liverpool.

W. THACKER & CO.,
PUBLISHERS,
MSS (Type-written) considered for Publication. [Established 1819.
A large Clientèle in all parts of the East.
2, Creed Lane, London, E.C.; and at Calcutta and Simla.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 57, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 30, South Frederick Street,
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

T. H. WOHLER BEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum).
Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices.
CATALOGUES on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and
BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 34, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING and PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—
KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 19, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C. have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 32, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 55121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done.
10d. per 1,000 Words.
Samples and references.
Address Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TYPE-WRITING work of every description done with accuracy and despatch. Author's MSS., Technical and Legal Copying, Indexing, Specifications, Tracing, Translating, Addressing, Type-written Mimeographed Copies, &c., &c.—The Misses E. & J. PUTZ, 435, Mansion House Chambers, London, E.C.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.
(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY Office, 45, Chancery Lane, London.

BOOKS FOR SALE.
Advertisements are inserted under this heading at 4d. per line, prepaid.

AUTOGRAPH LETTERS.—FOR SALE, SOME HUNDREDS, dating from 1855 to 1871, relating to the Ritual Movement in the English Church, in one lot or selection.—Apply to Wm. VINCENT, Belle Vue Rise, Norwich.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD.
(THE LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)
Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 5, Fumival Street, London, E.C.

UNIVERSITY of EDINBURGH.

CHAIR OF MORAL PHILOSOPHY.
The Curators of Patronage of the University of Edinburgh request that each Candidate for the above CHAIR should lodge with the undersigned, not later than 31st MARCH, 1898, Eight copies of his Application and Eight copies of any Testimonials which he may desire to submit. One copy of the Application should be signed.
R. HERBERT JOHNSTON, W.S., Secretary.
68, Frederick Street, Edinburgh,
14th December, 1897.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE,

COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.
The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch F. W. D., and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways.
For particulars, apply to Secretary at College.

CHRISTMAS LECTURES.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN,
ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.
Professor OLIVER LODGE, D.Sc., LL.D., F.R.S., will, on TUESDAY NEXT, December 28th, at 3 o'clock, begin a COURSE of SIX LECTURES (adapted to a Juvenile Audience) on "THE PRINCIPLES of the ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH."
Subscription (for Non-Members) to this Course, One Guinea (Children under 16, Half-a-Guinea); to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

CALIFORNIA.—WANTED, for TWO BOYS, 13 and 14, the Sons of an English Gentleman, a TUTOR, Fishing, Shooting, and Riding.—For further particulars write T., 18, Delamere Terrace, W.

LONDON LIBRARY,

ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.
PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
PRESIDENT—LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.
VICE-PRESIDENTS—Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, the Very Rev the DEAN of LLANDAFF, HERBERT SPENCER, Esq., Sir HENRY BARKLY, K.C.B.
TACITUS—Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF.
Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., Right Hon. EARL of ROSEBURY.
The Library contains about 170,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in Various Languages. Subscription, £3 a year: Life-Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town Members. Reading-Room Open from 10 to half-past 5. CATALOGUE, Fifth Edition, 2 vols., royal 8vo, price 21s.; to Members, 16s.
C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, Secretary and Librarian.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

LONDON,
PRODUCERS and PUBLISHERS of
PERMANENT CARBON (Autotype) REPRODUCTIONS
OF
FAMOUS WORKS OF ART.

A VISIT IS INVITED TO
THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET,

To INSPECT the Large Series of Examples of REPRODUCTIONS OF WORKS BY THE OLD MASTERS of all Schools, and numerous Specimens of MODERN ART.

ALSO ON VIEW,
A COLLECTION OF AUTOTYPES,
Framed in Specially Designed Moulding, SUITABLE FOR PRESENTATION.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,
IS OPEN DAILY,
From 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.—ADMISSION FREE.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN
AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.
N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT
Greatly Reduced Prices.
A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)
Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited.
30 - 34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.; LONDON; and
at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C. -
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich.
The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.
PROCESS BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS.
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.
Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSBOROUGH, Manager

WALTER SCOTT'S NEW BOOKS.

A NEW WORK BY MR. HAVELOCK ELLIS.

Now ready, demy 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

AFFIRMATIONS. By Havelock

ELLIS, Author of "Man and Woman," "The Criminal," "The New Spirit," &amp;c.

The series of Essays contained in this volume ("Nietzsche," "Casanova," "Zola," "Huysmans," "St. Francis," and others) is not so much a series of literary studies as a discussion of questions of the day (religion, morals, sex, literature and morals, "decadence," &c.), with as much freedom as it is desirable to exercise. It will be found that the volume is not a mere haphazard collection of unrelated papers, but one informed with a distinct and interesting unity of object.

THE CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.

Edited by HAVELOCK ELLIS.

FOUR IMPORTANT NEW VOLUMES.

Just issued, and First Large Edition nearly exhausted.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d., with Diagrams.

SLEEP: its Physiology, Pathology,

Hygiene, and Psychology. By Dr. MARIE DE MANACEINE (St. Petersburg).

The LANCET says: "Written in a truly scientific spirit." The DAILY CHRONICLE says: "It is full of most interesting hints concerning the cure of insomnia, and sufferers therefrom would do well to try the simple expedients there suggested before resorting to the use of any of the so-called hypnotics."

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

HALLUCINATIONS and ILLUSIONS: a Study of the Fallacies of Perception. By EDMUND PARISH.

"This remarkable little volume."—Daily News.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

THE PSYCHOLOGY of the EMOTIONS. By Prof. T. H. RIBOT.

"Prof. Ribot's treatment is careful, modern, and adequate."—Academy.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. 124 Illustrations.

THE NEW PSYCHOLOGY. By E. W. SCRIPFURR, Ph.D. (Leipzig).

"We have at present no work in English which gives in so compact a form so comprehensive a view of the subject."—Liverpool Post.

A NEW BOOK ON INDIA.

Just ready, demy 8vo, gilt top, art. linen, with 14 Full-Page Illustrations, price 6s.

SUNNY MEMORIES of an INDIAN WINTER. By Mrs. ARCHIBALD DUNN, Author of "The World's Highway."

THE SCOTT LIBRARY.

Crown 8vo, gilt top, cloth elegant, price 1s. 6d.

NEW VOLUMES NOW READY.

RENAN'S LIFE of JESUS. Translated, with an Introduction, by WILLIAM G. HUTCHISON.

"Mr. Hutchison's introduction gives a valuable critical account of the book; and his rendering is, on the whole, the most generally acceptable in which the work has been presented to English readers."—Scotsman.

CRITICISMS, REFLECTIONS, and MAXIMS of GOETHE. Translated, with an Introduction and Biographical Note, by W. B. RONNFELDT.

"Any competent critic or editor, therefore, who aims at imparting to us a better understanding of one of the greatest of moderns is a genuine benefactor; and this is what Mr. Ronnfeldt has accomplished, not without success, in the present little volume."—Chronicle.

ESSAYS of SCHOPENHAUER.

Translated by Mrs. RUDOLF DIRCKS. With an Introduction.

This is a collection of Schopenhauer's most representative Essays, including Authorship and Style—Education—Reading and Books—Women—Thinking for Oneself—Immortality—Religion—Metaphysics of Love—On Physiognomy—On Suicide—On the Emptiness of Existence, &c.

THE WORLD'S GREAT NOVELS.

Large crown 8vo, illustrated, price 3s. 6d. per Volume.

IMPORTANT NEW ADDITION.

LES MISÉRABLES. By Victor

HUGO. 1,384 pages, 12 Full-Page Illustrations, including Frontispiece.

"What I call a really cheap book is Mr. Walter Scott's new English edition of Hugo's 'Les Misérables,' which is a handsome and easily readable volume."—Daily Mail.

AN EXCELLENT CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

Crown Quarto, in specially designed cover, cloth, price 6s.

"Wedding Present" Edition, in silver cloth, 7s. 6d., in box. Also in limp morocco, in box.

An entirely New Edition, Revised throughout. With Twelve Full-Page Portraits of Celebrated Musicians.

DEDICATED TO PADEREWSKI.

THE MUSIC of the POETS. A

Musician's Birthday Book. Compiled by ELEONORE D'ESTERRE-KEELING.

A work that has already won wide acceptance."—Athenaeum.

"Probably the most handsome and elaborate book of the kind ever published."—Liverpool Post.

"A most delightful wedding of poetry and music."—Birmingham Gazette.

London:

WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED, Paternoster Square.

DIGBY, LONG &amp; CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW NOVEL BY MINA SANDEMAN.

1. SIR GASPARD'S AFFINITY. By the Author of "The Worship of Lucifer." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. "This novel has a certain indefinable charm about it, and is a capital book."—Weekly Sun.

NEW NOVEL BY RUPERT ALEXANDER.

2. THE VICAR of ST. NICHOLAS. By the Author of "Ballyrowan." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. "The story is bright and racy."—Pall Mall Gazette. "The tale has plenty of excitement."—Glasgow Herald.

NEW NOVEL BY J. GORDON PHILLIPS.

3. FLORA MACDONALD. A Romance of the '45. By the Author of "James Macpherson." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. "The renaissance of the historic novel has been hailed with satisfaction in many quarters. This work by Mr. J. Gordon Phillips is a masterpiece of its kind."—Aberdeen Journal.

NEW NOVEL BY VIOLET TWEEDALE.

4. WHAT SHALL IT PROFIT a MAN? By the Author of "And they Two." &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEW NOVEL BY ERIC WYNDHAM.

5. REVELATION: a Romance By Eric WYNDHAM. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

6. MARIE of LICHTENSTEIN. By Wilhelm HAUFF. A Tale of Love and War. From the German of WILHELM HAUFF, by R. J. CRAIG. With a Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEW NOVEL BY L. J. ROSE-SOLEY.

7. MANOUPA By L. J. Rose-Soley. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

A STORY FOR GIRLS.

8. NORMA: a School Tale. By Emily N. BRYANT. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, pictorial cloth, 3s. 6d.

BY M. P. GUIMARAENS.

9. PORTUGUESE RITA. Long 12mo, paper cover, 1s. "A neat little book of seven sketches of life in Portugal. The style is, on the whole, simple and charming."—Aberdeen Press.

DEDICATED BY SPECIAL PERMISSION TO

H.R.H. PRINCESS CHRISTIAN.

10. THE LATEST FRUIT is the RIPEST. By F. J. GANT, F.R.C.S. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d. [Just out.]

DIGBY, LONG &amp; CO, 19, Bouverie Street, London, E.C.

AUTHORS may send in their MSS., suitable for Volume Publication, with a view to immediate consideration.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

ELEVENTH THOUSAND.

ALFRED LORD TENNYSON: a Memoir. By HIS SON. With Photogravure Portraits. 2 vols., medium 8vo. 36s. net.

NEW BOOK BY RUDYARD KIPLING.

Sixteenth Thousand. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. "CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS." A Story of the Grand Banks. By RUDYARD KIPLING. Illustrated by I. W. TABB. ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"A rattling good book." GRAPHIC.—"There should not be a more popular book for boys this season."

THIRD EDITION, demy 4to, buckram, 42s. net.

PEN DRAWING and PEN

DRAUGHTSMEN: their Work and their Methods. A Study of the Art of To-day, with Technical Suggestions. By JOSEPH PENNELL, Lecturer on Illustration at the Slade School, University College. A New and Enlarged Edition, with 366 Illustrations.

NEW EDITION, globe 8vo, 6s.

GUESSES at TRUTH. By Two BROTHERS.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"A work that has taken a sure and lasting place in our literature."

VOLUME IV. NOW READY.

THE EVERSLY BIBLE. Arranged

in Paragraphs, with an Introduction by J. W. MACKAIL, M.A. In Eight Volumes, to be published monthly. Globe 8vo, 6s. each.

Vol. IV.—JOB to the SONG of SOLOMON.

* The Text is that of the Authorised Version.

LITERATURE.—"Undoubtedly the rearrangement of the text here adopted will tend to a truer appreciation of the sacred books not only on their literary, but on their religious side. Continuity of thought and narrative is certainly assisted by the discarding of chapters and verses, and of the too frequent dial cation of the text by multitudinous reference to marginal or other notes. Great advantage also arises from an intelligent use of paragraphs."

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LTD., LONDON.

THE GREAT NOVEL OF 1897.

THE CHRISTIAN.

By HALL CAINE.

Of this novel nearly 150,000 copies have now been sold. Statesmen, preachers, and the most influential writers in the Press have welcomed it, and have proclaimed it as the most forcible, the most brilliant, and the most conscientious piece of work of the year. Such success inevitably produced a certain amount of irresponsible attack, but the permanent hold it has obtained upon the public is evidenced by the continued demand from all parts of the world.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

Uniform with the above, 6s. each.

THE MANXMAN. | THE BONDMAN. | THE SCAPEGOAT.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS	PAGE
Cardinal Wiseman ... ..	563
Signor Graf's New Poems ... ..	564
The Copts and their Church ... ..	565
The British Navy ... ..	565
East Anglia and the Great Civil War ... ..	566
Mathilde Blind ... ..	567
In the West Country ... ..	567
Second Cousin to the Worm ... ..	568
Red Beauty ... ..	568
Sweetness and Light ... ..	568
BRIEF MENTION ... ..	569
NOTES AND NEWS ... ..	570
REPUTATIONS RECONSIDERED ... ..	573
ALPHONSE DAUDET ... ..	574
THE CENTENARY OF THE BIRTH OF HEINE.—II. ... ..	576
WHAT THE PEOPLE READ: VII., A Railway Porter ... ..	577
NEW BOOKS RECEIVED ... ..	577
CORRESPONDENCE ... ..	578
BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..	580
FICTION SUPPLEMENT ... ..	120-130

REVIEWS.

CARDINAL WISEMAN.

The Life and Times of Cardinal Wiseman.
By Wilfrid Ward. (Longmans & Co.)

MR. WILFRID WARD has already, in his two volumes upon the life and times of his distinguished father, shown himself an excellent and skilled writer of ecclesiastical or theological biography; he has in abundance the culture, the humour, the impartiality, and the care in research eminently needed for such work. It is unhappily seldom that a writer who can "carry a bon mot" and tell a good story, can also give us chapters which, whether we agree with them or not, are rich in philosophic suggestion and political exposition. The lives of Dr. Ward and of Cardinal Wiseman are, at least, conceived and executed upon the higher plane of literature, and are not, as are so many modern biographies, trivial and ephemeral as well as voluminous. Voluminous, indeed, this last work is, we cannot but think, to excess. Vivid as is the portrait of Wiseman, yet a somewhat closer style of narrative, and a greater conciseness of disquisition, would not have obscured it. But we recognise the weight of various reasons for a treatment so elaborate. First, in so far as Mr. Ward is writing for English and foreign Catholics, for the clergy and educated laity, he has written nothing superfluous, and he has filled a sphere in their literature left too long vacant. He has gathered into this volume a mass of matter which every year would have made it harder to collect, as survivors of the older generations pass away and accuracy becomes harder to secure. Secondly, as regards his readers in general, it must be remembered that Wiseman was one of the chief fighters and figures in a religious movement which, for better or worse, has affected the thought of England. The modern history of Catholicism in England is fairly accessible up to the death of Bishop Milner, or the granting of Emancipation: it is plentifully accessible, from the conversions of Newman and Manning up to the present day, as, of course, is also the Oxford Catholicising Movement. But the history of the Roman Church in England from, let us say, Emancipation to 1845 or 1850, has not been told with any width of outlook and conception. Wiseman's "life" fell in momentous "times," which deserve an ample record: and the life cannot be understood without a clear understanding of movements and events in many countries, which had a profound influence upon Wiseman, and so helped him to his influence upon England. In a very wide and various sense, he was a man of the world, and his biographer—or, at least, his first adequate and authoritative biographer—must needs handle a multiplicity of matters.

It is upon Wiseman, as the majority of his countrymen will regard him, that we wish to dwell, rather than upon the ecclesiastic: upon Wiseman, as an Englishman of greatness, if not a man of genius. His origin and early experiences were strangely cosmopolitan. Upon the publication, at the age of twenty-five, of his "Horæ Syriacæ," he was described by a German critic as an "in Spain born, from an Irish family descended, in England educated, in Rome residing, Syriac scholar." Had that critic lived to record Wiseman's other and future characteristics and accomplishments, he must have done his best in one interminable sentence to say that Wiseman was something of a musician, painter, romance-writer, poet; very much of a linguist, orator, and controversialist; a popular lecturer upon science, art, and social questions; a lover of pomp, puns, and good cheer; the most unpopular man in England when consecrated first Archbishop of Westminster, and among the most regretted when he died. Withal, a simple, natural, childlike, and saintly man, whom Browning was yet not wholly and utterly unjust in portraying as "Bishop Blougram," though the portrait be mainly unjust: a man who, setting foot in England as Cardinal, was in some real peril of his life from mob violence, and who, passing through London to his burial, passed through sorrowful and respectful crowds, only less great than those which honoured the hearse of the Great Duke. Every inch a prince, he was addressed by his frequent correspondent, the third Napoleon, "mon cousin," mediæval wise; when he visited Ireland, the first Cardinal to do so since Rinuccini's mission, the nation flung itself at his feet to "kiss the purple." But he was happiest, with little children on his knees and round his neck. He was conscious of high station and a far higher mission when he issued pastorals and letters couched in the traditional "grand style" of Rome: but his heart was lighter when he composed devout little plays for convent schools. As Newman wrote of him, he could "speak with readiness and point in half-a-dozen languages, without being detected for a foreigner in any of them, and at ten minutes' notice address a congregation from a French pulpit or the select audience of an Italian Academy"; but his letters show this rare and ornate linguist inflicting upon his intimates unpardonable puns, and a sort of ecclesiastical wit or slang, bordering—to the lay mind—upon irreverence. Clearly a versatile man, easily misunderstood by friends and foes; but he succeeded in making himself understood as a man of singular straightforwardness and candour, and as a man of very rich and full development in all that concerns or becomes the spiritual and intellectual life. As such he was finally recognised, and his country became proud of him, as they became proud of Newman and Manning.

Each in his way the three men did one work of a twofold aspect. They worked to Europeanise, Cosmopolitanise, Romanise, the somewhat Gallican minds of the hereditary English Catholics; and they worked to exhibit before their other fellow citizens the compatibility of Catholicism with loyal citizenship and with participation in the national life. Each had a special animosity to face. Newman, in Disraeli's famous phrase, dealt the Church of England a blow from which she yet reels; Wiseman was the hero, or the villain, of the "Papal Aggression"; Manning was the protagonist of those two unpopular causes, the Temporal Power and Papal Infallibility. Each lived to convince his countrymen that he was a sincere and truthful man. That conceded, and it has abundantly been conceded, the day was won. They did not convert England to their Church, but they did convert it to the conviction that an English Catholic need not be a bad and treacherous Englishman. And it is this very quality of truthfulness and candour which explains all that needs explanation in the relations of the three to each other, and to those with whom they had mutual relations. The three men were of most dissimilar temperaments and of an equal sincerity. Little psychological skill is needed to comprehend the natural issue of those conditions in occasional misapprehensions, passing silences, seeming estrangements. Tennyson said of Dr. Ward that he was "grotesquely truthful"; so, but with a somewhat subtler and clerical decorum, were the three cardinals. It is an absurdity to admit, as all admit, that they have vindicated the consistency of their careers and motives, while remaining capable of insincerities and intrigues, one against another. It is enough to remember that at their deaths the almost unanimous verdict upon each of them was the public testimony of all creeds and classes to their straightforwardness and honour.

Mr. Ward has drawn for us a somewhat pathetic figure. At first sight, we do not think of Wiseman as a man of many sorrows or heavy burdens: but there are pages here most intimate and sacred, showing a side of him that he never showed to the world. Indeed, the world judged him but too often by appearances; whence such a description, as this by Charlotte Brontë, not quoted by Mr. Ward:

"He is a big portly man, something of the shape of Mr. Morgan; he has not merely a double, but a treble and quadruple chin; he has a very large mouth with oily lips, and looks as if he would relish a good dinner with a bottle of wine after it. He came swimming into the room smiling, simpering, and bowing like a fat old lady, and sat down very demure in his chair, and looked the picture of a sleek hypocrite. He was dressed in black, like a bishop or dean in plain clothes, but wore scarlet gloves and a brilliant scarlet waistcoat. A bevy of inferior priests surrounded him, many of them very dark-looking and sinister men. The cardinal spoke in a smooth, whining manner, just like a canting Methodist preacher. The audience seemed to look up to him as to a god."

That is exceedingly, though unintentionally, amusing: but it is a typical specimen of the quaint distrust which Wiseman's manner inspired among the prejudiced, who loved to call him "oily"—i.e., dangerous, and "suave"—i.e., insinuating. Had he retained the thin and stooping form of his youth, they would have called him a pallid inquisitor. But though he lived down reproaches thus silly, and others more serious, his life leaves an impression of sadness. For all that his heart was in his English labours, he seems burdened with the weight of cares laid upon him as he goes his uphill way. The Rome that he paints with so rich and wistful a sympathy in his book upon The Four Last Popes—a Rome unknown to this generation—haunted him: it was so absolutely congenial to him, as the shrine of faith and of culture, as a world apart. And with all his thoroughly English nature, he had, as it were, a second nature of foreign ways and likings, the result of his studious years in Italy, his converse with foreign scholars, his multifarious contact with large and liberal aspects of life. It was of necessity a little hard to find even one of his own countrymen, a member of a learned profession, so heartlessly consumed with narrow hatred as publicly to suggest that he was "a Spanish mule," the offspring of his mother and a "Catholic priest." His mother was living! It seems incredible now, but he heard plenty of such cruel insults then, in days when to call Archbishop Cullen of Dublin "the archiepiscopal pumpkin of Ireland" was a comparatively courteous expression. He lived down all such envenomed vulgarities; he breathed a new spirit into his own people; he became an admired and venerated figure in public life; yet there was bitterness in his cup and thorns along his way. Though Mr. Ward shows us the abundant joys of his life, religious and secular, spiritual and intellectual, private and public, yet he has destroyed the Wiseman of a not unkindly fiction, which has been wont to portray him as an excellent prelate, zealous indeed in the discharge of his functions, but chiefly fond of expatiating upon catacombs and basilicas and the delicacies of ritual, not without a genuine, if cautious, interest in the problems of physical science. What our ancestors loved to call the "virtuoso" was truly strong in him, as were the instincts of scholarship and study in a larger sense: but in these volumes we are face to face with something greater than all that. It is a man with whom religion was the whole of life, and who lived in "latter days," when religion and civilisation seem now to anathematise each other, now to treat each other with tacit contempt. He could but mourn at so fatal a thing, as would be the divorce of faith from all that litteræ humaniores mean, of devotion from culture, of Christianity from civility, of the Church's life from the world's: he could but sorrow at the possible prospect of religion unable, for no fault of her own, to be both generous and rigid, and, therefore, forced to preserve the rigidity of truth at the cost of curbing generosity in action. The friend of statesmen and of philosophers, both clerical and laic, the history of his own times aroused in him alternations of hope and fear: while for England, and for his own cause in England, his hopes and fears were of a personal and special poignancy. Upon these grave matters we cannot touch here. We will but say that Mr. Ward, following his wonted admirable fashion, has dealt with them in an epilogue full of suggestive speculation, not to say wise counsel.

If we shall have left upon our readers the impression that these ample volumes are anything but attractive and fascinating, even to those who care little for their special and paramount questions, the fault will be exclusively ours. They are rich in humour and in the charming accidents of humanity, rich in valuable historic retrospect, filled with good matter, and written with an excellent art. And yet, despite all this—perhaps even partly because of it—the figure of Nicholas Wiseman, Cardinal and Archbishop, stands forth not only sacerdos magnus and homo venustus, but as one much-tried and much-enduring.

SIGNOR GRAF'S NEW POEMS.

Le Danaidi. By Arturo Graf. (Turin: Ermanno Loescher.)

ARTURO GRAF occupies a somewhat isolated position among contemporary Italian writers. Influenced neither by Carducci nor by D'Annunzio, whose sway has until recently been supreme in Italian poetry, nor much occupied by the social problems and miseries which supply matter for other poets of modern Italy, the characteristic note of his work has hitherto been a pessimism as profound as Leopardi's, but more strenuous. The themes that inspire him are of the gloomiest kind, and he renders them in highly finished verse, simple in technique, perfect in lucidity, and with terrible directness.

In the prologue to an earlier volume, Signor Graf hailed Medusa as the universal spirit of the world and as the inspiring muse of his song. In the opening sonnet, which gives its title to the present work, he represents human life and human efforts in the endless labour and fruitless torment of the daughters of Danaus. In other powerful sonnets Hope is "la mala pianta," the evil plant that man strives in vain to destroy, but which ever lives and produces poisonous fruit. Not only does Autumn raise up pallid ghosts and miserable remembrances in the soul, but Spring itself merely suggests fresh budding of flowers of pain. A sonnet on "Contemplation" becomes almost a prayer for annihilation.

Such subjects attract him as La Caccia Disperata, a wild hunt of a spectral deer by spectral dogs and horsemen; or the grim pleasantries of the Danza dello Scheletro, where a skeleton leaps out to dance in the sunlight, but, seeing by chance his own reflection in a stream, flies back to his grave in horror at the sight. Here, too often, Signor Graf mars his own work by excess, and is merely grotesque instead of being terrible. The finest poem of this class is the "Carica Notturna." Night has descended upon a plain where a great battle has been fought, but there is no more peace and rest for the dead than for the living. At the sound of a spectral drum they rise to new conflicts; hoarse blasts of trumpets ring out, phantom trains of artillery sweep past, and the field resounds with the tramp of dead hosts, as the moon gleams upon bayonets and lances, while fiendish parodies of martial music sound the charge of the dead. The "Città dei Titani" is grim satire of another kind. A vast and splendid city, built with superhuman power and adorned with inimitable art, remains to bear witness of the sublime wisdom and power of that ancient race that made war upon the gods. Many centuries later a wretched race of pigmies, neither good nor bad, neither beautiful nor ugly, come to the deserted place. At first they strive in vain to complete the work which the Titans had begun, and then, equally ineffectually, to destroy it. Such, apparently, is the poet's conception of the present of the human race in comparison with its past.

The chief poem in this volume is the "Ultimo Viaggio di Ulisse," told in endecasyllabic lines, "a rima baciata," which, of course, correspond to our rhymed heroics. In much greater detail than Tennyson, and with occasionally close adherence to Dante's version of the story in the Inferno, Graf describes how weariness and consequent self-contempt grows upon Ulysses like a subtle poison creeping through his veins, and then his address to his comrades, the mysterious voyage, and at last, with admirable poetic force, the bursting of the storm, the tremendous rush of the great white horses—and swallowing up of the ships. This is the first example that Graf has given us of a real power of sustained poetical narrative, but, as Signor Cesare de Lollis remarks in a highly appreciative review contributed to the Nuova Antologia, the poet, not content with retelling the old story, makes it illustrate one of the gloomy maxims of his pessimistic philosophy, and in the final catastrophe symbolises the helplessness of human will and daring against the power of adverse destiny. Excepting this, Graf's method for once somewhat recalls that of William Morris; and, in the spirit of the Earthly Paradise, he tells as a companion poem to the Voyage of Ulysses a mediæval legend in the same metre and at about the same length—"La Leggenda di Ecarto," which is practically a fuller and more powerful rendering of the story of the Monk Felix in Longfellow's "Golden Legend." And, in this instance, Signor Graf enters into the spirit of the Middle Ages, and tells the exquisite fable of the singing of the mystical white Bird of Paradise without any infusion of his own pessimism.

"A mostruosi agoni Corron confusamente i cavalloni"—

When the monk Eccarto wakes from his trance of a hundred years, that had seemed but a moment, it is the spring of the year 1300, the year of Dante's vision; and, at the Mass in the convent chapel, as Eccarto receives the "bianco pan degli angeli" from the prior's hands, his old age suddenly falls upon him, and he passes away to hear again the bird's song in Heaven.

Nor is the pessimism of Graf quite so hopeless here as in his former volumes. Like Shelley, he chooses Prometheus and the other Titans as types of the human race, and is not without hope for their future. In the "Città dei Titani," when the pigmies disappear, the deserted city awaits the return of its Titans to give it new life and to complete their ancient work; and in the "Titano Sepolto" the victim of Jove's oppression, still unsubdued, at last cuts his way up through the mountainous mass that lies upon him, and rises again exulting to see the sun and the glory of the world. "Upon the golden cornfields he gazes, and the wooded hills and the sea, and with an immense cry of joy awakes the earth and makes heaven tremble":

"Biondi i campi di spiche ei mira e denso
D'arbori il giogo e il mar senza alcun velo,
E con un grido di letizia immenso
Sveglia la terra e fa tremare il cielo."

This little book is certainly one of the most noteworthy volumes of Italian poetry published during the past twelve months, and should make a very striking poet better known to English readers than he is at present.

THE COPTS AND THEIR CHURCH.

The Story of the Church of Egypt. By E. L. Butcher. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

A BOOK by a lady who is, if we mistake not the wife of the chaplain of the English Church in Cairo. It begins with an account of the rise of Egyptian Christianity, but long before the Arab invasion is reached melts into a history of the Egyptian or Coptic nation, a fact which is impressed on the reader only by the sub-title. To say that Mrs. Butcher lacks the critical faculty would be to understate the case, for she does not even seem to be aware of its existence. If a character in her history is a Pagan, a Mohammedan, a Roman Catholic, or a member of the Melchite or Greek Church in Egypt, she looks upon him as ipso facto capable of the worst crimes, and his delinquencies are recorded when discoverable, and suggested when they are not. Should he, on the other hand, be a Christian, a member of the Coptic Church, or (to take what is apparently in her view the proudest title in the hierarchy) a married priest, his offences are omitted, slurred over, or apologised for. Poor Hypatia, we are told, may have been as beautiful, but was certainly not as young, as is generally supposed at the date of her murder, and Cyril could not [read: without losing popularity with the monks] have punished her murderers if he would. Nor is it the case that immediately after the alliance of the Christian Church with Constantine, "the lurking-places of the heretics," in the words of the orthodox Eusebius, "were broken up by the emperor's command, and the savage beasts they harboured driven to flight." Mrs. Butcher assures us that it was the wicked Arians, "the forerunners," she says, "of those who call themselves Unitarians," who "have the unenviable distinction of being the first Christian persecutors." And so on throughout the book. It never seems to have entered the author's head that the persecuting Emperors of Rome were in the main wise and patriotic rulers, who saw in Christianity a real danger to the state, or that "a true Jesuit," to use her contemptuous phrase, was generally willing to run all risks on the mere chance of preaching the same gospel as herself.

The accuracy with which the book is written may be judged from its sources. Although no verifiable references are given, we learn from a list of authorities subjoined to the preface that it is compiled from such works as the Dictionary of Christian Biography, Stanley's Lectures on the Eastern Church, Neale's Patriarchate of Alexandria, and the like, the authors being, as a rule, more remarkable for their orthodoxy than for their breadth of view. And, not content with reproducing the mistakes of these authorities, she introduces so many of her own that a list of them would be nearly as long as the book itself. We can forgive in a female author the spelling of "Avidus Cassius," "Ammonius Saccus," and "Oxyrhynchon," and the translation of "Osorapi" as "Osiris the Concealed"; but could not some of her clerical friends have warned her against writing "Gregory of Nazianzen," and against making such astounding statements as that "Nestorius taught that our Lord was not Himself God, but merely" an impeccable man?

And yet, in spite of all this, candour compels us to say that Mrs. Butcher has written a very interesting book. The history of the Roman Church is, and always will be, the history of the Christian world; but Egyptian history is a more recondite matter, and the record, however faulty and careless it may be, of a Church which has preserved its national character unchanged for nearly nineteen centuries must needs have the deepest interest for all who care for antiquity. Moreover, after the schism between the Eastern and Western Churches, Mrs. Butcher enters upon less familiar ground, and her mistakes are, therefore, less glaring. We have read with great pleasure her simple but romantic narrative of the perils and hardships through which the Monophysite Church of Egypt passed after breaking with Rome until she at length reached safe harbour under the English flag. Mrs. Butcher will doubtless not agree with us in thinking that the Coptic Church in the main deserved all the persecution she got, and that the theological virtues are of no avail to an individual or an institution when united with cowardice, greed, and intolerance. But Egypt is now beginning to be overrun with tourists of a class not very likely to be critical, who will overlook her mistakes in consideration of the clear outline she gives of a subject on which most of them are profoundly ignorant, and to them we can commend her book. If they want to extract a moral from it, they may find one in the proof it affords that nothing is so fatal to a nation as the admission of the ministers of any religion to political power. In the case of Egypt, the mischief was done many centuries before the coming of Christianity. No sooner had the priests of Amen obtained supreme control of the country than its best men began to prefer praying to fighting, while the priesthood appears to have been always ready to welcome an invader who promised to leave their privileges untouched. The history of Egypt from the time of Alexander to the English occupation repeats the same story on every page.

THE BRITISH NAVY.

A Short History of the British Navy—1217 to 1688. By David Hannay. (Methuen & Co.)

ALTHOUGH the remarkable interest in naval matters which the past ten years have witnessed has, as might have been expected, called forth a corresponding addition to our supply of naval literature, yet until the last few months no serious attempts had been made to give us something more accurate and up to date than James's well-known Naval History. The ambitious work now being written by Mr. Laird Clowes and his coadjutors will no doubt, when completed, go far towards filling this serious gap in our nation's history; but such an analysis of the use of our sea power, though highly valuable to naval students and men of leisure, is far too lengthy and erudite to secure the interest and attention of the general public. The Short History of the British Navy which Mr. Hannay has undertaken to write will give us what we have long waited for. The remarkable gift which Macaulay possessed of denuding history of all dryness, while at the same time retaining a true grasp of the subject, is shown in this new volume to a most remarkable degree. It is no exaggeration to say that if the second volume, which we are told is to bring the history of our Navy up to the close of the French war, is as ably written as the one now before us, the work will rank as an English classic of a very high order. Mr. Hannay is lucky in finding a subject so congenial to his literary style and so worthy of his best efforts. It is curious that such a fascinating theme has never until now been dealt with by any of our great writers. Probably the risk, which the author tells us he is fully alive to, of a landsman falling into error when writing on nautical affairs has been the reason for the long neglect of the Navy by our historians. But as no naval critic, with the exception of Capt. Mahan, has yet been found worthy of the task, Mr. Hannay has now stepped into the breach and has taken up the subject so thoroughly and to such purpose that it will be hard for any who come after to surpass him.

The author divides the maritime history of this country into three stages. First, "the ages during which the people was being formed and the weapon forged, which extended to the accession of Henry VII."; second, from the latter date until "the close of the seventeenth century, when superiority of powers at sea had been fully won"; and the third, beginning with the Revolution until our own time. It is with the first two periods that the present volume deals.

The first of these periods the author only treats in a cursory manner. He could hardly have done otherwise, for the history of the Navy in the Middle Ages appears to be inextricably bound up with that of the contending factions throughout the State. The Navy as a Royal force did not exist, for it was not until the time of the Commonwealth that the service was rendered strong enough to dispense with the assistance of the mercantile marine when a fleet had to be mobilised. Yet during the ages of its inception we can easily trace, with Mr. Hannay's assistance, the processes by which sea power was brought home to the people of these islands as the foundation of their independence, and the weapon with which they could deal the most effective blows against their country's enemies. More interesting still, we can realise how the faculty for sea fighting was a national characteristic from the earliest times. The very first maritime action of any importance in our history showed this advantage in a vivid manner. In 1217 Eustace the Monk sailed from Calais with a fleet of eighty ships to succour Prince Louis, who had just been defeated at the battle of Lincoln. His intention was to round the Foreland and lay siege to London, an act which, if it had succeeded, would have changed the whole course of English history. Fortunately, "neither the man nor the means to avert the disaster were wanting." Hubert de Burgh, the Governor of Dover Castle, hastily gathered together the men of the Cinque Ports, and sailed with them in a quickly improvised fleet of sixteen large ships and smaller ones, with the object of preventing Eustace from doing harm on shore by beating him at sea before he could land. As Mr. Hannay truly says, "the man who reasoned like this had grasped the true principle of the defence of England." Hubert and his brave fellows showed themselves worthy ancestors of our latter-day seamen. After standing far out to sea and securing the windward position, they put their helms up and ran down upon the enemy's fleet, scattering and destroying them, so that not a man nor a ship remained above the surface of the water. Mr. Hannay's comments on this splendid but little known battle are significant. He says:

"The trial stroke of the English Navy was a master stroke. No more admirably planned, no more timely, no more fruitful battle has been fought by Englishmen on water. It settled for ever the question how best this country is to be defended. In after times, during the Armada year and later, there have been found men to talk of trusting to land defences, but the sagacity of Englishmen has taught them to rely on the Navy first, and that protection has never failed us in six hundred and eighty years."

Truer words than these were never written, and no more convincing proof of their justice could be given than the simple history of the Navy itself.

It is, of course, impossible with the space at our disposal to trace out even in the slightest manner the thread of Mr. Hannay's narrative, wherein he describes the gradual evolution of the British Navy from the crudest materials, and marks its numerous advances and reverses during the reigns of the Tudors and Stuarts. Suffice to say that he has treated the history of the service from every possible aspect, and formed out of the scanty material at his disposal a narrative of fascinating interest and of the highest historical value. There is not a dry page in the whole volume, yet every one is marked with unmistakable evidence of painstaking research and the highest literary ability.

THE "EASTERN ASSOCIATION."

East Anglia and the Great Civil War. By Alfred Kingston. (Elliot Stock.)

For this scholarly, and at the same time readable, volume we have nothing but praise. The general purpose and scope of the book can best be explained by quoting the opening words of the preface: "In the following pages," says the author,

"I have endeavoured to show not so much what was the part of each individual member of the Eastern Counties Association in the Civil War, as what was their general contribution to the war, and what were the temper and the experience of the people of these Eastern Counties. To have told the story of each of the seven counties separately would have required as many volumes, and, besides, would have been inconsistent with the unity of this famous area of East Anglia, which, stirred by one common impulse, and having sufficient in common in situation and surroundings, assumed a distinctive character of its own, such as no individual county and no other part of the country could show."

Mr. Kingston has traced for us "the remarkable story" of the great Eastern Association—the backbone of the power of the Parliament—against which, when it was on the defensive in the earlier stages of the war, the Royalist attacks broke themselves in vain, and which later on assumed the offensive, and in the form of the New Model swept all before it in its irresistible advance. Owing to the peculiar importance, geographical, moral, fiscal, and military, of the Eastern Association, a work of this kind was almost necessary as a supplement to Mr. Gardiner's Great Civil War. But it was essential that it should be written by a trained and sufficiently equipped historical student. This Mr. Kingston has shown himself to be. His methods are those of a careful and conscientious scholar. He has drawn his materials from contemporary, and, to a considerable extent, from MS., sources, and where requisite he has stated his authorities.

In these interesting pages much light is thrown upon the inner working of the committees in the associated shires, and the many and various difficulties which the leading members of them had to face and surmount are brought home to us in a very definite and realistic manner. The story is naturally enlivened by local colouring, by personal action, and by isolated episodes, now quaint, now sad, now humorous, now heroic, such as the laws of proportion and perspective perforce eliminate from scientific history, but which, nevertheless, are indispensable to the completion of the picture of the past. We read, for instance, how when a batch of Royalist prisoners, famished and naked, were being marched through the streets of Cambridge, and scholars who offered them beer were knocked down by the guards, "a valiant chambermaid relieved them by force, and trampled under her feet, in the kennel, their great persecutor, a lubberly Scotch major"; how Parson Styles, of Crowland, and Parson Ram, of Spalding, the ritualist and the ranter, girt on the sword of the Lord and Gideon, and, backed by their respective flocks, waged a miniature civil war of their own, in the course of which, among other amenities, the men of Crowland were accused of using poisoned bullets; how at one of the assaults during the famous siege of Colchester by Fairfax, the "winking gates" of the town were clapt to with such feverish haste that on this occasion it was a case of the devil taking the foremost as well as the hindmost, for while the defenders trapped the front ranks of the Parliamentary foot, they shut out a number of their own men to be haled off to captivity by the besiegers. Then there is a pleasant little comedy, too long to relate here, in the matter of the plot to retake Lynn for the King in 1644; also a detailed and romantic account of the flight of Charles in disguise through the Fenland in the spring of 1646; while each party revealed a rudimentary sense of humour—though, perhaps, somewhat of the Red Indian type—in their practice of exposing their prisoners in conspicuous positions in the line of the enemy's fire: clerics, Laudian or Puritan as it might be, especially being selected for this Sebastian-like martyrdom. Thanks, however, to the sorry marksmanship of the period, the jest was seldom a complete success. One thoroughly English feature of the contest, and a feature which contrasts strongly with the contemporary atrocities and abominations of the Thirty Years' War, is here clearly brought out. However embittered the actual combatants became as the long struggle dragged on—if a Lucas or a Lisle was shot in cold blood by the Ironsides, or if a Roundhead recruiting squad was fallen upon by Cavaliers who "cut a-too the sinews of their right hands to make them unserviceable for fighting against their king"—yet women and children rarely met with personal violence or insult from either side.

There are some valuable appendices touching, among other things, on questions of finance and supply, which show the vast amounts of the assessments on the Associated Counties. A few illustrations are given: just enough to make one wish for more. We congratulate Mr. Kingston on a satisfactory performance of a useful task.

MATHILDE BLIND.

A Selection from the Poems of Mathilde Blind.
Edited by Arthur Symonds. (Fisher Unwin.)

THE reader of these selected poems of Mathilde Blind finds it difficult upon the last page to refrain from a sigh. This enthusiastic, noble woman wrote also prose tales and translations in prose, but her sustained ambition and her strength were put into her verse. She chose to be regarded as a poetess, and published one volume after another (St. Oran, The Heather on Fire), encouraged by the praise of undiscerning friends. Now, the pursuit of the poetic art is specially arduous. It is almost invariably a thankless pursuit, and one unpaid. Yet it calls for extraordinary powers of sensibility and intelligence. When, therefore, the life of a gifted woman is spent, and well-nigh fruitlessly, in the effort to become a poet, leaving not a single perfect poem and at most, let us say, ten short poems which are worth anything, one is tempted to look with bitterness on the attractions of the artistic career which can so sterilise an existence. Does so slenderly meritorious a production justify this lifelong endeavour? Perhaps it does. Perhaps the efforts of minor craftsmen are necessary to the preservation of traditions or of a favourable milieu for the growth of the greater craftsmen. Perhaps they alone among the contemporaries of a man of genius can estimate approximately his value. For theirs is the penetrating criticism of those who have manfully tried and failed, where he has tried and succeeded.

The verse of Mathilde Blind has not the true poetic quality. It has little or no imaginative insight; no creative, and little interpretative power. Her outdoor poems—such as "The Sower," "The Reapers," and "The Teamster"—are dull and conscientious studies. Her ambitious "Ascent of Man," in praise of the Darwinian idea, is, in most respects, extraordinarily prosaic. Her intelligence was not strong enough to consume, to fuse its scientific material into the glowing vapour of imaginative truth. The truths of poetry are nebulous as nascent stars. Scientific formulæ or "laws" gain nothing by being rhythmically enunciated. To live as poetry they must be born again.

Further, Miss Blind had no sense of proportion or design. She yokes an idea strong enough to draw a couple of stanzas to a luggage-train of twenty-five. In the piece entitled "Tombs of the Kings," which contains substantial stuff for a sonnet, the theme matter appears at the tail of a long poem. All preceding it is a string of conventional reflections about the vanity of glory. "Where," she asks, now "is Thebes? Where is Memphis?" Some faint notion of her complete lack of control may be gathered from the poem called "The Street Children's Dance," which we think Mr. Arthur Symonds has been ill-advised to include in his selection. This pretty little theme is treated in nineteen lengthy stanzas. It will scarcely be believed, but is nevertheless true, that the subject of the poem is not even touched until the fifteenth stanza is reached. Had the first fourteen been cut out, the remainder would have been a respectable poem.

Her diction is usually correct, adjectival, and yet colourless. It is curiously wanting in any of those felicities which, if not the invariable, are after all the readiest indications of artistic faculty. The epithets are redundant. Thus, blasts are "hurrying" (as if blasts were commonly sedate creatures), ghosts are "white," spells are "magic," rooks "swart," and infinite love, in the same line, is called "uncircumscribed." The word "vouched" is thus used:

"At last her keys
Vouch'd passage to her sacred ways of old."

Among other pieces, we like "Noonday Rest," "The Mystic's Vision," "L'Envoi," "I charge you, O winds of the West," "I think of thee in watches of the night." "A Winter Landscape" is in its first part ill-written, but, on the whole, finely felt and observed. We will end by quoting a touching little piece.

"REST."

"We are so tired, my heart and I,
Of all things here beneath the sky,
One only thing would please us best—
Endless, unfathomable rest.

We are so tired; we ask no more—
Than just to slip out by Life's door,
And leave behind the noisy rout
And everlasting turn-about.

Once it seemed well to run on too
With her importunate fevered crew,
And snatch amid the frantic strife
Some morsel from the board of life.

But we are tired. At Life's crude hands
We ask no gift she understands;
But kneel, to him she hates, to crave
The absolution of the grave."

IN THE WEST COUNTRY.

In the West Country. By A. H. Norway.
(Macmillan & Co.)

MR. A. H. NORWAY has written one book which contained facts that were new to most readers: his History of the Post-Office Packet Service must always continue to be of value to students of the history of Cornwall. As to the present volume, it is excellent, but not exciting, reading. The author plainly knows his authorities, and has extracted most of what is interesting in Hunt and Bottrell. He has discovered one or two stories that are new: we did not know, for example, that there is a haunted room in Cornwall where a small cold hand, that seems to seek comfort and sympathy, steals into the hand of everyone who occupies the room; though, of course, the tale has been told of many rooms in other parts of the country. But, for the most part, Mr. Norway follows the authorities, and repeats of each place visited only what they told a good many years ago. One can by no means deny that the Cornishman is still greatly given to superstition. Within the last few years the pages of that soberest of journals, the Western Morning News, have testified abundantly to the fact that he is superstitious; and one remembers at least two cases wherein the belief in the evil eye has been confessed to before the magistrates. In one a man was charged with having starved his cattle, which were proved to be in a terrible state of emaciation. The farmer admitted that his kine were, indeed, but bags of bones, but swore stoutly that they had been fed abundantly. He explained their condition by suggesting that some unknown enemy had "ill-wished" them, casting a spell upon them that made it impossible they should prosper. The other case was one of assault and threat to murder, and the accused was a farmer who also found his cattle unduly meagre and fancied he had divined the person through whose machinations they were thus affected. But the Board schools have been doing their levelling work for a long time past, and we cannot but think that Mr. Norway has been fortunate if he has really found some of the ancient superstitions as vital as they would seem to be from his report. To take one example only: there are few prettier stories than that of the submersion beneath a sudden rising of the sea of the Land of Lyonesse that used to be betwixt the Scillies and the mainland. So far as one can judge there are records which excuse the belief that something of the sort did happen, and there is real tangible evidence such as might prove convincing to the popular imagination. Everyone knows the story (in Hawker) of the farmer who threw a stone at some fairies one moonlit night and broke the leg of one of them. He wanted to have it as a household pet, but he was tired and left it there until the morning. When he came to fetch it the other fairies had rescued it: "but there, sure enough, was the very stone I threw," and so the reality of the fairies was proved. It is beyond denial that timber, and fragments of hazel with the nuts upon them, have been dug up out of the sands that lie along the shores of Mount's Bay. But Mr. Norway has been unconscionably lucky if he has found anyone in Marazion who is even aware of the fact, and if one of the fishermen from any of the villages believed that he had heard the ringing of the bells of sunken churches, or had seen on clear days the ruins of the ancient cities, it is very certain he would keep his impressions to himself. If we may judge from a limited personal experience it is only in moments of tremendous stress and strain that the Cornish folk of to-day show themselves to be the true children of their ancestors, believing, almost against themselves, all that was most contrary to nature in the creed of those who were before them in the land. Mr. Norway must have had luck.

A word as to Mr. Joseph Pennell's admirable illustrations. For the most part they will be accepted as gladly by the man who does not remember the time when he did not seem to have known the places they depict for ever as by him who looks on them merely as so many pictures. To recall St. Ives is to take a standpoint other than that which happened to appeal to the artist. Still one recognises that he has made an excellent likeness of that lovely spot, as well as a fine drawing. This also is true of "Perran Porth," "Fowey," "Newlyn," and "Market Jew Street, Penzance." But there are times when Mr. Pennell's sense of the picturesque rather carries him away. His "Street in Truro" represents that narrow lane as it might be if it were a street in fairyland, and he also must have been lucky if he ever saw St. Michael's Mount as it appears in the drawings on pages 290 and 291. Still, he has adventured on dangerous ground—for they are jealous folk in the West—and achieved success. Mr. Norway has made a book that is pleasant to read, and the illustrations are—Mr. Pennell's.

SECOND COUSIN TO THE WORM.

The Houses of Sin. By Vincent O'Sullivan. (Smithers.)

THE cover is of pure smooth white, but the gilt design, with its columns and garlands, and the winged and snouted thing which snuffles on the cover, betrays the hand, or at least the inspiration, of Mr. Beardsley. By this combination, no less than by the title, the contents are declared. It was, Mr. Street's "Tubby" who hawked among reluctant publishers the "Ballad of Shameful Kisses." But it might just as well have been Mr. O'Sullivan. He sings of "rags and motley of outworn desire," and of "tepid kisses odorous of the tomb." Of "Malaria," too, he sings:

"Thou sweet grave harbinger of Death," and of "the slimy poisoned fingers," and of death itself:

"The violet breath
And glamour of approaching Death."

In the physical details of mortality, the coffin and the worm, he takes an especial interest; is, indeed, the laureate of putrefaction and the panegyrist of decay. Thus he dirges it:

"Earth's iron jaws are bound with scarfing snow,
Like to a man late dead whose mouth drops low
(Hush my Friend! The tempest broods behind).

Long hours I watch a little scented glove,
And dream of noons I played and glanced with love
(Voices of dead children in the wind).

Sudden I found my plying was in vain:
I scratched between her breasts a crimson stain
(A scarlet light breaks on the purple sky).

She wronged me and she crushed me to despair,
That woman with the lustful raven hair!
(A cold face snow-bleached by a veil doth cry.)

I seized a poisoned knife and struck her dead:
To-night three coffins shall enclose her head.
(Wolves in the winter have a hungry growl.)

To-night the glory of her magic kiss Shall stir the damp worms as they pry and hiss.
(Wet leaves of cypress in the henbane bowl.)

And my soul and the soul I loved so well
Shall mingle in the torment of God's hell.
(Moan, wind! above the pit where lost souls howl.)"

What a fancy, ye gods, what a fancy!
"Wet leaves of cypress in the henbane bowl," indeed! Among these pleasant morbiditys are scattered, according to a well-known receipt, certain poems which must give pain to the devout. The following imitation of a perfectly reverent form of art gathers irreverence from its surroundings:

"When Christ our Lord up Calvary Hill,
Went stumbling on that dark Friday,
A crowd with horrid taunts and shrill
Did follow all the grievous way.
Poor Simon followed with the rood,
And vain high-priests from west and south,
And Pagan slaves, and traitor Jude,
And Saul of the gibing mouth."

We have no wish to bring art into bondage, and we are perfectly aware that genius can illumine—has illumined—the charnel-house and the street-walker. But genius has nothing to say to Mr. O'Sullivan, and we desire that our minor poets should realise that, if they cannot be great, they are at least to be wholesome. The sooner Mr. O'Sullivan learns the lesson the better, for we fancy that he has the gifts to do something worth doing. Probably he writes in some provincial town, and has not yet heard that the fashions have happily changed, and that "tepid kisses" and "lustful raven hair" are no longer tolerable in poetry.

RED BEAUTY.

The Story of a Red Deer. By the Hon. J. W. Fortescue. (Macmillan & Co.)

WE had hitherto known Mr. Fortescue only as an expert in naval history, and the author of an excellent monograph on Dundonald. Now he has given us a book for boys—for quite small boys—one of those imaginative natural-history books, where the denizens of hill and wood play rational parts as befits their importance. This kind of work is always welcome, above all when it is written with the intimate knowledge of a keen sportsman and naturalist, and the honest zeal of a lover of the great out-of-doors. The aim is the best; for, says the quaintly worded preface, the reader will gain "not only that which the great Mr. Milton (in his tract on 'Education') hath called the helpful experience of hunters, fowlers, and fishermen, but such a love of God's creatures as will make the world the fuller of joys for him, because the fuller of friends."

It is all about Devon and the moors and the trout-streams. The Red Deer is an excellent fellow, and from his birth in the ferny hollow to his death in the great pool below the fall we follow his surprising adventure with delight. Any right-thinking child will find a new world created for him—a very fresh, breezy world, where the frank fellowship of bird and beast awaits him. But unless he be an exceedingly quick-witted child, he will be seriously puzzled—as, indeed, was the present writer—by the human story which is introduced. Who were the Fair Man and the Girl, and what have they to do with the tale? But the several runs are excellent; not only good writing, but very good narrative besides. And the last great chase really goes breathlessly, and may send the sensible child in tears to bed. This is how it all ends:

"Then men came and pulled the great, still body out of the water; and they took his head and hung it up in memory of so great a run and so gallant a stag. But their triumph was only over the empty shell of him, for his spirit had gone to the still brown pool. And, indeed, the stream has received many another wild deer besides him, which, I suspect, is the reason why ferns, that love the water, take the shape of stag's horns and of hart's tongues. So there he remains; for he had fought his fight and run his course; and he asks for nothing better than to hear the river sing to him all the day long."

The book, of course, suggests Kingsley's Water-Babies, but there is no imitation. It is only that Kingsley and Mr. Fortescue, being both Devonians, and both filled with the same honest love of moors and hills, let the same spirit show itself in their work. "The Trout" is very much in the Kingsley mood; and so, too, the catches of song:

"Through heather and woodland, through meadow and lea,
We flow from the forest away to the sea.
In cloud and in vapour, in mist and in rain,
We fly from the sea to the forest again.
Oh! dear is the alder and dearer the fern,
And welcome are kingfisher, ousel and herne,
The swan from the tide-way, the duck from the mere,
But welcome of all is the wild Red Deer."

But most we see the likeness in the little scraps of good advice—very wise and true. Take this:

"And, for my part, I think that the calf was right; and if (as I hope may never be), after you are grown up, disappointment should lie in wait for you at every turn, and fate and your own fault should hunt you to despair, then run on bravely, and when you can run no more, face them and dare them to do their worst; but never, never, never lie down and squeal."

This has the right ring, and even so should a boy's book be written.

Mr. Fortescue makes no attempt at fine writing, for which we thank him. The book is a success through his loving minuteness of knowledge and his real vigour in story-telling. But he has felt so keenly the rich flavour of weather and scene, that there is a vividness about the descriptions which somehow or other reproduces the atmosphere of the place with fine effect. Above all, there is something clear, fresh and clean in his use of words, an absence of all tawdriness and pretence, which is very attractive.

SWEETNESS AND LIGHT.

Falklands. By the Author of The Life of Sir Kenelm Digby. (Longmans.)

THESE biographies, which of late years have been put forward by the "Prig" with no sparing hand, are scrappy and superficial enough, but they are none the less entertaining. The "Prig" reads widely, and if he cannot boast real learning, has at least the gift of picking out from what he reads the plums of picturesqueness and humour. He does not add greatly to the world's knowledge of his subjects, but he calls attention to and inspires interest in them. We gather from a preface that he is wholesomely aware of his own deficiencies. "My books," he says, "are reviews, and reviewing has become so engrained a habit as to be incurable." The criticism is a true one, but, then, if a review is not a book surely a criticism is not an apology. In the Falklands the "Prig" has, perhaps, a less satisfactory topic than in either of his two earlier heroes, Everard and Kenelm Digby. For the second Lord Falkland, Lucius Cary, who naturally fills the larger part of the book, is already a sufficiently familiar figure, and the sketch of his career here given goes over well-worn ground. The idealist of politics and the philosopher of the court, Falkland, through his real merits and his untimely end, has succeeded in impressing the imagination of posterity. He was a man, says Clarendon, to whose Orestes he persistently played Pylades, "of inimitable sweetness and delight." In the mouth of Matthew Arnold this readily becomes "sweetness and light," and, indeed, Falkland's broad and tolerant views, whether on politics or on religion, have a luminosity rare in the thinkers of his day. He was a scholar, a versifier, and the friend of poets. One of Jonson's finest odes immortalises a friendship of Falkland's, and Falkland, in his turn, wrote elegies on Jonson and on Donne. At Great Tew, where that pretty prude Letice Lady Falkland kept house, Sandys, Carew, Suckling, Waller, Montague, together with Mr. Hobbes, of Malmesbury, were honoured guests. There is much about Letice Lady Falkland in the book before us, and much, too, about the Falklands of the previous generation, Henry Cary and Elizabeth his wife. Hers, indeed, was an interesting and a stormy career. She was an heiress and a woman of learning. As a girl she bought candles surreptitiously, and read in bed at night. As a married woman she preferred study to society. "Dressing was all her life a torture to her," and though you find her in her picture with ruff and head-dress of unusual elaboration, yet her women had to walk about the room after her "while she was seriously thinking on some other business, and pin on her things and braid her hair." About 1626, Lady Falkland took it into her head to become a Catholic, and was received into the church by a Benedictine priest in a stable. Here began her troubles. Her husband and the King were furious. Her supplies were cut off, and she was reduced to dining on pieces of pie-crust, or bread-and-butter, carried in the handkerchief of a faithful maid from the tables of her friends. Almost to her death she lived destitute in a little old house ten miles from town, with a flock bed on the bare ground, an old hamper for a table, and a wooden stool. Here she translated the Lives of the Saints and the works of Cardinal Perron. It is a curious story.

BRIEFER MENTION.

The Odyssey of Homer. Translated by J. G. Cordery, C.S.I. (Methuen & Co.)

OF Homer there can be no final translation." So wrote Mr. Lang in the preface to the translation of the Odyssey which he made in conjunction with Mr. Butcher; and Mr. Lang is certainly right, for each literary generation looks at Homer from a different point of view. The age of Elizabeth demanded that Homer should come dressed in the mannerisms of Chapman; the age of Anne could not accept an epic devoid of the conventions of Pope, with Scott came the worship of the ballad; and with that the belief that Homer must be a ballad-monger or nothing; and hence the tentative efforts of Mr. Gladstone and others. The translator who will make a verse rendering of Homer such as shall convince the average reader ignorant of Greek that the Odyssey is really worth reading, has two courses open to him: he must either turn Homer into a nineteenth century poet, as Pope turned him into an eighteenth century one—this is what Fitzgerald did with Omar Khayyam—but to do this he must be an epic poet himself; or he must fall back upon prose, using a style which shall suggest to an Englishman the archaism which the Homeric poems suggested to an Athenian of the Periclean age. This is what Messrs. Butcher and Lang did with conspicuous success. Mr. Cordery has taken neither of these courses, and so, not being an epic poet, but only a careful and conscientious scholar, he has shown us with immense labour just how the Odyssey ought not to be translated. Felicitous phrases are frequent, and a reference to well-known difficulties will prove that the translator has not shirked them. But the main impression left by his painstaking alexandrines—which drop occasionally into rhyme, as in the Song of Demodocus—is that they must have taken him a terribly long time to hammer out.

Manners for Women. By Mrs. Humphry. (James Bowden.)

It has been said—rudely—that women have no manners; but now that Mrs. Humphry has spoken, they will have no excuse for the lack. For here you may, if you be a woman, read your title clear to mansions in Mayfair. You need no longer wonder how long you should wear mourning for an uncle, how to write a letter, how many cards to leave (which must "be exactly  $3\frac{1}{2}$  by  $2\frac{1}{2}$  inches"), how to marry your daughters, and how to behave in the street, at a restaurant, and at a club. At a club you must not monopolise the looking-glass, remembering that all the other lady members require it. Also, you may learn how to laugh, avoiding "the exhibition of whole meadows of pale pink gum." Laugh like a lady "in London artistic society," who uses "two soft contralto notes." In an interesting chapter on the giving of presents, you are recommended to give a young man a box of ties in favourite colours. This is the only flagrant error we have been able to find in a book which is far less absurd than most books of etiquette. But the delicacies of polite life are always rather ridiculous when reduced to written expression.

Everyday Life in Turkey. By Mrs. W. M. Ramsay. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

This is a nice, chatty book; and to call a book nice and chatty is a courteous way of saying that its writer did not worry about style or grammar. "Will knew it was me," writes Mrs. Ramsay, in her chatty way; and she describes a certain hill as "a volcano which was active until a very recent time (geographically speaking)." Nevertheless, once convinced that it is a "chatty" book, one can get a good deal of amusement and a certain amount of instruction out of it, since it contains the chat of the observant wife of a distinguished Aberdeen professor. For we have had a considerable amount of fiction about Armenia of late; and this is the running record of rides through Asia Minor in search of antiquities. Riding through Asia Minor has its diversions:

"If the village is built on a hillside, which is frequently the case, you can often step from the door of one house on to the roof of the next, and in this way one may walk over almost the whole village. I once rode over the roof of a house, and nearly came to grief at the chimney-hole, before I observed that we had arrived at a village at the foot of a hill, down which we had been riding in the dusk. We have on occasion pitched our tent on the roof of a house for want of a more convenient situation."

Mrs. Ramsay has many curious adventures to relate—notably a day in a harem, with a performance of dancing-girls. Encounters, too, with dogs fell to her lot, as well as with innumerable fleas—insects which she modestly calls "B flats"—and an "animal too far beyond the pale of civilisation for its name to be mentioned here, even accompanied by an apology." It is interesting to note that, so far as Mrs. Ramsay's observations go, the Turk is very kind to his wives, and that Moslems and Christians live in amity together, being almost indistinguishable one from the other.

The Print Gallery. Vol. I. (H. Grevel & Co.)

This is a half-made book. We have no means of determining the intention of the editor or publisher. There is no introduction. There is no proper index. The pages are not numbered. What we have is a series of some hundred reproductions of prints by the Italian, German, Flemish, French, and English masters of engraving, preceded by several pages of biographical notes which enjoy the two headings of "Index" and "Contents of the First Volume," neither being strictly correct. Nor do we see any reason why the publisher's name should be reprinted below every print. What the book wanted was editing. Wood engravings and etchings are, as a rule, reproduced well; but copper engravings with less success. In many cases a toned paper would have yielded more pleasing results than the hard white paper employed.

Cambridge, Described and Illustrated. By T. D. Atkinson, with an Introduction by J. W. Clark. (Macmillan.)

HISTORIES of Oxford and of Cambridge are always somewhat mournful reading to lovers of architecture. The hand of the vandal and the incompetent has worked terrible havoc with both the Universities in the past. As one turns over Mr. Atkinson's pages and realises how much of the story he has to tell deals with destruction, demolition, and "restoration" one wonders that so many buildings yet remain for our admiration. It is hard to say which University has suffered most from the destroying hand of its children. The front quadrangle of New College, Oxford, was entirely ruined by injudicious alterations in the seventeenth century. All Souls', in the eighteenth, wanted to pull down and rebuild the old part of its buildings, and was only restrained by the indignant remonstrance of its own architect, Nicholas Hawksmoor. Merton actually proposed at one time to pull down the greater part of the historic "Mob" quadrangle in order to put something bigger in its place, and of course the notorious Wyatt mauled, mangled, and destroyed everything he could lay his hands on. Cambridge has not fared much better. The fifteenth century chapel of Queens' was first subjected to the iconoclastic frenzy of Dowsing, and, finally, in the eighteenth century, was "entirely taken to pieces and new modelled," in other words ruined. The older buildings of Trinity fell a victim to the destroying ardour of Nevile, who had his own ideas as to what a college should be like, and showed small reverence for other men's work. Pembroke suffered severely in the last thirty years from the zeal of re-builders. Last, and perhaps worst of all, the old buildings of King's College, in the first half of this nineteenth century of ours, were actually in part pulled down, in order that Mr. Cockerell's new building might occupy their site; but this was too much for the long suffering of even our fathers, and ultimately the destroyed buildings were re-erected by Sir Gilbert Scott. Mr. Atkinson's book gives a very full account of the architectural features both of the churches and colleges of Cambridge, and the various modifications which these from time to time have undergone. He also gives in a short compass much interesting information as to the early history of the town and the amusements and discipline of the old-fashioned undergraduate. His book will be welcomed by all those who desire to get, in the compass of a single volume, a comprehensive view of both town and University. The illustrations throughout the volume are well drawn and excellently reproduced, and the complete list of portraits in the possession of the University and the colleges should be a useful feature.

The Truth about Agricultural Depression. By Francis Allston Channing, M.P. (Longmans & Co.)

A CAREFUL, closely reasoned, and very earnest attempt to solve the agricultural problem. Mr. Channing sat upon the Agricultural Commission, and this book is of the nature of a Minority Report. The Majority Report, says Mr. Channing, "strikes no definite note, and points to no positive policy." Mr. Channing certainly has a note: it is the blithe one of hope. His policy is less easy to state briefly; but Mr. Channing's contention—supported by ranks of arguments—is that rents—founded, as they are, on competition and not upon a clear-sighted and equitable estimate of the actual value of the land to the man who digs it—are too high all over the country. Of twenty-five final conclusions to which Mr. Channing asks the reader's assent, the eighth is perhaps the most salient. It is this: "The most effective help Parliament can render to tenant farmers is by the extension of agricultural arbitration to rent, and by giving real security to tenants and for capital invested in the soil, and to their tenure of their holdings." A painstaking work, which economists cannot afford to neglect.

Boxing. By R. G. Allanson-Winn. (A. D. Innes & Co.)

THIS is a statement of the first principles of boxing for the advanced student of the art, the author having addressed himself to beginners in a former treatise. The usual pleas—cogent enough—in favour of boxing are advanced by Mr. Allanson-Winn in his introduction. We then have chapters on various branches and details of the "science," illustrated by photographs of the positions resulting from the movements of the combatants. Accounts of famous prize-fights are also quoted. We suppose that the vocabulary of the "ring" is incorrigible but it is a legitimate matter for remark that an art which is persistently called "noble" by its votaries should create a language which vies in hideousness with the face of a prize-fighter when it has been severely mauled. We read how Tom Sayers "came up with a suspicious mark on his potato-trap"; and how "Nat retreated, and as Tom followed him Nat jobbed him on the nozzle, again disturbing the cochineal." The volume is the fifth in the Isthmian Library.

The Queen's Hounds and Stag Hunting Recollections. By Lord Ribblesdale. (Longmans.)

ANY account of an institution so ancient having pretensions to completeness and symmetry must necessarily contribute almost as much to History as to the literature of sport. Lord Ribblesdale's excellent book can boast that completeness; and, though not a little of it is devoted to accounts of remarkable runs, to the peculiarities of deer, and to kennel and stable affairs, it has claims upon the attention of others than sporting men. Few, we imagine, are aware that the Mastership of the Royal Buckhounds was for centuries an hereditary office. One of the earliest records of the existence of any regular establishment for the hounds is the grant of certain lands in Little Weldon, near Rockingham, in 1216 to one Hamon le Venour; and to this grant, described as "Hunter's Manor," was attached "in Grand Serjeanty" for generations the Mastership of the Royal Buckhounds. It seems probable, moreover, that these lands were appropriated to the same purpose at an earlier date, as Mr. Burrows in his introductory chapter names Osborne Lovel, chamberlain to Henry II., as the first holder of Hunter's Manor and Master of the Buckhounds. For nearly three centuries, from 1363, the office was held by a family of Gascon knights named de Brocas; and Mr. Burrows is no doubt correct in attributing bestowal of the office to this family's "knowledge of breeding and training horses on the turbulent marches of Gascony" and to services rendered in England's wars with France: an interesting and suggestive link between war and sport. Lord Ribblesdale takes up the tale in the time of the Georges, and many are the glimpses of character we obtain through the medium of the Buckhounds; in days when Court influence was paramount in State affairs and the monarch had a taste for sport, place-hunters might spend a day much less profitably than with the Royal pack. Whether in search of place or pleasure we are not told, but in 1735 such great crowds came out that arrangements were made whereby people could only hunt by ticket signed by the Ranger of Windsor or his deputy. The book is well and brightly written; and those of the fox-hunting fraternity who read it will discover that there is more science in hunting the carted deer than they had supposed. The illustrations, which are numerous, have been well chosen and well reproduced. Regarded only as a work on sport it is far above the average, both in interest and literary merit.

The Tears of the Heliades. By W. Arnold Buffum. Third Edition. (Sampson Low.)

THE yellow is the familiar amber; it has made millions of mouth-pieces for smokers, and it has supplied to poets a word to conjure with. Milton has "amber light," and so has Tennyson. Herrick knew the melody of it (especially when he wanted a rhyme for "chamber"), and he made, at a pinch, his maidens play on "lutes of amber," whatever they may be. Milton's "Sabrina fair" had "amber-dropping hair," which is more alluring than even hers that was "yellow like ripe corn"; and Mr. Myers makes Damaris, St. Paul's convert, clamber to her temple at dawn when the sunrise made her idol "eminent in amber." Mr. Arnold Buffum is "eminent in amber" in another fashion; and his book is unique as a history of the substance of which the very name is poetry. Larger books on the subject have been made in Germany, but none here, where, however, the issue of a third edition shows that amber has many admirers and, perhaps, a fair sprinkling of collectors. The Queen herself has some noteworthy specimens, which were once shown at South Kensington. The visitor to the Museum will not now find any amber to equal that described by Mr. Arnold Buffum, and possessed by him, particularly in the fine blue and red varieties, found, not on the Baltic, but in Sicily. The delightful enthusiasm of the genuine collector pervades Mr. Arnold Buffum's pages, which are pleasantly and learnedly written from first to last.

THE ACADEMY FICTION SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1897.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

LORD DULLBOROUGH.

BY THE HON. STUART ERSKINE.

A CRUDE story and "smart," with satirical intent. The hero writes a play while he is still an Eton schoolboy, starts a paper, extols Charles II., denounces the House of Lords, founds a rational religion, and makes love to another man's wife. He then discovers that nowadays "in order to be original it is necessary to be commonplace," and dies from reading The Last Straw: a Sequel to 'The Philistine', by H—ll C—ne. On his coffin are engraved his name, the date, and the sentence, "He took the cake." (J. W. Arrowsmith. 221 pp. 3s. 6d.)

OTHER PEOPLE'S LIVES.

BY ROSA N. CAREY.

A SERIES of stories of quiet dwellers in a remote English village. The historian purports to be a maiden lady, who went to Sandilands (the village) for one night only, and stayed ten years. A lovable old vicar is the central figure. A gentle, fragrant book. (Hodder & Stoughton. 359 pp. 6s.)

MARIE OF LICHTENSTEIN.

TRANS. BY R. J. CRAIG.

A TRANSLATION of Hauff's Lichtenstein. The preface commends the work particularly to admirers of Sir Walter Scott. (Digby & Long. 335 pp. 6s.)

REVELATION.

BY ERIC WYNDHAM.

THE author calls his story "purely hypothetical." It is about a man who met a prophet named Salvator. The prophet gave him a draught of paroidin, which begins by being opaline, is then crimson, then purple, and then clear crystal, and when taken separates the soul from the body and carries it back into time. Not a tippie to be lightly swallowed. In the present case the hero was transplanted to the Rome of Nero, where events occurred somewhat similar to those in the "Sign of the Cross." Subsequently he came to himself again and married the prophet's daughter. (Digby & Long. 267 pp. 6s.)

REVIEWS.

The Kentuckians. By John Fox, jun.
(Harper & Brothers.)

To men and women, city-born and city-bred, such a novel as The Kentuckians makes irresistible appeal. Streets, houses, shifting crowds, and the dazzle of shop windows were the poor material that filled their childhood. A book like this opens the shutters to the sunlight of a world they have missed. To look is to be glad—not envious. It is to see the spacious growing life of a young and gallant people, to hear their birds, to touch their flowers and grasses, to feel their skies overhead, and to smell the scent of their good rich earth. They speak our speech. They are our friends. We understand them—these kinsmen we have never seen.

"To belong to a land!" What good luck! What an aid to writing! What a consolation for old age. Poor souls who belong only to a city. Hard is your fate. "To belong to a land!" It was the text of Bourget's latest speech. It was Daudet's inspiration, as of a dozen others—Stevenson in exile cried:

"Be it granted me to behold you again in dying Hills of home."

It makes the charm of those American writers who remember things seen through "eyes of youth." California, Louisiana, Virginia, Kentucky, are magic words. Granted the tales are well-written, we never tire of their grey state houses, their mansions, their swarthy pioneers, their capable men, their fearless, elusive, tantalising women. Wind blows through their pages, trees rustle, strange crops and flowers with haunting names are there. It is so new, so spacious, so gay. We peer into the wilderness "undulating away for hundreds of miles like a vast green robe with scarce a rift of human making." We stand face to face with Indian fighters, "swarthy, lean, tall, with long thigh-boots of thin deer-hide, open at the hips, ornamented with a scarlet fringe, and rattling with the hoofs of fawns, and the spurs of the wild turkey." Not for us the great American cities. We are tired of cities where everything is spread out thin like butter upon a piece of bread. Rather, for choice, the Kentucky mountaineers, who speak of the capital as "settlements," who still wear fringed hunting-shirts, moccasins, and coon-skin caps, who live like pioneers, "singing folk-songs centuries old, talking the speech of Chaucer, loving, hating, fighting, and dying like the clans of Scotland." Also they are generous with their potatoes at dinner. "Take out, stranger," says your host. "Have a tater; take two of 'em; take damn nigh all of 'em."

Mr. John Fox, jun., "belongs to a land." He is a Kentuckian, his father is a Kentuckian, he dedicates this fine book "to my father and my father's Kentuckians." He gives you atmosphere, colour, living souls. You tread the blue grass, you climb the mountains, you follow Marshall to his mother's house when the blow falls—rat to its hole, lion to its lair, man to his home when the blow falls.

"Up in the sun, the hillside was covered with sheep. A ewe with one white lamb was lapping water at the grassy edge of the creek. Just to one side of the path lay another—its twin, no doubt—dead and mutilated, and across the creek hung its murderer, a robber crow, dangling by his wings from a low limb, with his penitent beak between his feet. . . . He was not the only thing on earth that had to suffer. . . . He must take his share. There were other motives to action in life than love, than duty to his mother—the duty to those of whom he had no thought much, and of whom suffering was teaching him to think now: others than himself, his duty to the world around, above and below. He might have drawn tears from an audience on that theme once with his tongue and brain: it was sinking to his heart now."

The story? Well it is the story of two men who love a woman to their hurt, and to their making, and she to her hurt and to her making. It is modern and hoary at the same time. You might meet Anne in Bond Street, you might encounter Marshall any afternoon in Piccadilly if they cared to travel so far from their little Kentucky capital. But you must seek Boone Stallard in the Kentuckian mountains—

"Its woods are primeval, its riches are unrifed, and its people are the people of another age—for the range has held her own. These men of the mountains and the people of the blue-grass are the extremes of civilization in the State. A few years ago there was but one point where they ever came in contact, one point where their interests could clash. That was the capital, the lazy little capital."

In that little, lazy, friendly capital the things with which this story deals happen. There Anne, Marshall, and Stallard sorrow and suffer and fight, till in the end comes to each the victory they desired. Mr. John Fox, jun., has done his work well—extremely well. His characterisation is good: he has a clean, swift style, not without charm, and it is his privilege—ineestimable privilege!—to love a land, and to be able to convince others of his sincerity.

* * * * *
The Silver Fox. By Martin Ross and E. CE. Somerville.
(Lawrence & Bullen.)

This is another good novel, well written and eminently readable. It has atmosphere, and these authors, too, "belong to a land"—Ireland. They treat the old themes—love, friendship and death—but they have a light hand, and a merry flyaway style most suitable to a story whose main interest is hunting. Being Irish they cannot get quite away from "the Celtic glamour," or the "Irish Wonder-world," or whatever it is called, and so we have the silver fox, an evil beast, omen of disaster, darting through the pages. We like the girl Slaney. Her eyes were clear and half shy, like a boy's, and she had a fastidious, spiritual mouth, which the wrong man kissed once, to find it a trembling and human one. She also had a delicate, clever hand. We are glad Bunbury won it in the end.

The authors sail gaily between shoals and over rocks; when tragedy is inevitable they treat it with reticence, and in the end the attractive scoundrel is caught in his own snare. A bright, breezy, buoyant book. We could have wished it longer.

* * * * *

Deborah of Tod's. By Mrs. Henry de la Pasture.
(Smith, Elder & Co.)

It was the perpetual regret of General Sir Arthur D'Alton that Deborah had no sense of humour. When he first kissed her in the kitchen at "Tod's" he meant nothing but a flirtation: she translated it as a proposal of marriage. When he married her, having found her to be the possessor of quite unexpected riches, and revealed himself gradually to her for the dissipated old roué that he was, she was seriously dispirited by his gallantries, and never once had the humorous idea of retaliating in kind. When, again, Sir Arthur died, she regarded her freedom so seriously that, casting off the dust of her shoes against Portman-square, she at once took a third-class ticket home to the old farm.

"I am going home," said Deborah. "I was just a country maiden like any other when Sir Arthur found me, brought up by a God-fearing woman, and innocent as a maid shude be, and happy enough, wi' a guine bit o' money put by. I am going home now, and the most o' my money be gone, and not through payin' for any foolishness of mine, and I ha' lost beside all the heart I ever tuck in life, and 'tis no thanks to any on yer, but tu God A'mighty, that I ha' not lost my soul as well."

That is not a typical utterance; for Deborah was a silent woman—another grievance with Sir Arthur—and a forbearing one—a quality of which he never suspected her. She is, in person and character, an agglomeration of the virtues which, somehow, one associates with the name "Diana" rather than "Deborah"—large and statuesque, grave and, perhaps, a trifle heavy. It is characteristic of her that she married Sir Arthur, who was old enough to be her grandfather, out of sheer gratitude for an action by which he had once befriended her father. The main theme of the story is, of course, well worn, but Mrs. de la Pasture has handled it with dignity and tenderness—in places, exquisitely. If she has made her "society" a little more shallow and heartless than usual in order to throw the sterling virtues of her heroine into relief, she makes amends by such passages as that last one between the giddy Lilian and her patient husband:

"Lilian had gone back to her favourite sofa. The little gleam of red sunset touched her small face as it rested on the cushions, and it looked strangely old and tired.

The dusk gradually deepened until the face lost form or meaning, and became a white patch in the darkness.

'Joe,' said a far-off voice that seemed hardly to belong to Lilian, so utterly had the affected cadence died away in it, 'you have been very good to me.'

'Bosh,' said Joe. He made a lumbering step towards the sofa.

'I've not been good to you,' said the voice.

Lilian rose in the dusk and came closer to him. He made no answer, but he drew the little frail creature into his arms and leant her against his breast.

'I've known—all the time,' she whispered, 'that you were worth all the rest put together—but—'

'I know,' he said gently. 'I bored you.'

'That's the funny part of it,' said Lilian, whose laughter was always p-riously near her tears, 'but you wouldn't have bored me if—if we'd been on a desert island together—at least, I think not. It's—it's the other people who turn my head.'

'I know,' said Joe dully.

'Joe,' she said breathlessly, 'you know as well as I do that there are things—which stand between us. If—if I found courage to tell you—here—in the dark—I might be happier in this world, and the next. I must tell you—'

'Must you?' he said gently. 'I think I would rather you didn't, Lily.'

There was a long silence in the darkened room before Joe broke it once more.

'You see,' he said pleadingly, 'it would be an awful blow to me if you went and made out you weren't perfect. I've always thought you so, always. And—I couldn't help making a lot of allowance, you know, for you, being so pretty and clever, it naturally made people think a lot more of you than they ever would of me. And I know you'd never forget—the little chap—meeting him some day, and all that. I wanted you to have your fling. And if you've had it—his voice broke a little—and you really care about such a stupid fellow as me, why, I wouldn't change with anyone, that's all.'

The book contains one or two considerable improbabilities, but it is an excellent book nevertheless.

* * * * *

Among Thorns. By Noel Ainslie.
(Laurence & Bullen.)

NOEL AINSLIE is a clever woman, who looks at life straight, without prudishness or hysteria. She describes with very little exaggeration or heightening of colour what one may call virtuous Bohemia, where people dispense with the conventions, but work hard and live on the whole straight. This life, with its freedom and privations, she contrasts on the one hand with the easy existence of attractive people who do not live straight, on the other, with a society which can afford to give its women diamonds; and she shows, in a rather interesting way, the fascination and repugnance which both extremes inspire in her Bohemian heroine. Comfort attracts; more particularly it attracts a woman; and also a woman likes somebody to make love to her. Lebia Meynell decides against the love-making—not without hesitation; she accepts marriage for the sake of comforts, but finds it a bore because of social functions. She is a Bohemian, but a Bohemian of the new type, who cannot take her pleasure after the manner of old-fashioned society, nor of old-fashioned Bohemia. Her friend Peggy Walton is thoroughbred Bohemian, and elects for comfort and love-making without the drawbacks. Altogether, there is a good deal of acute feminine psychology in the book, it has a plot decidedly above the average, and the men and women have all a tolerably distinct existence. But it is chiefly interesting as a thoughtful study of certain types produced by conditions which have only operated of late years. The bachelor young lady has not existed long, but she is abundant, and Noel Ainslie points out that her path, if it is to be virtuous, lies decidedly "Among Thorns."

* * * * *

The Time Spell of Château d'Arpon. By M. Carta Sturge.
(Arrowsmith.)

IN The Time Spell of Château d'Arpon there is carried out, upon the whole with skill, a conception that is remarkable and original. It is a weird story, the incidents in which, had they occurred or been believed to have occurred in actual life, would have been fitting subjects for the inquiries of the Society for Psychical Research. It is almost a ghost story; the scene laid near the Italian or Provençal coast, and the château and the garden—an old neglected garden—are described as by one who is really familiar with them. The story is not only conceived boldly, but written well—a little diffuse, perhaps, in its earlier pages, and occasionally disfigured by an absence of complete harmony in the style—a word or phrase wholly conventional or banale, bringing one down from the almost poetic, at all events the romantic, plane, to the level of commonplace talk; and that not done with any artistic intention of vivid contrast, deliberate effect, but as by slips of the pen. This, however, is a matter which, as things now go, only writers (and of writers, indeed, not very many) will have the faculty to perceive. Not only an occasional slovenliness or amateurishness, like Miss Carta Sturge's, but an absolutely unbroken one, is powerless to prevent a public that knows not Style from appreciating a good "story"; and we only mention her lapses to Miss Sturge because she would wish at all points, we are sure, to preserve the virtues of a writer. The illustrations—by Major Ricketts, we believe—are decorative as well as explanatory. They are very well drawn and composed; and the only thing that to some extent lessens their suitability to the present little volume—a "pott quarto," is it not?—is that they are elegant, precise, and matter of fact, and so do not add anything to the suggestion of the weird and the uncanny. But they are very good.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1897.

No. 1338, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . .	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

"LITERATURE is over for the year!" said a leading London publisher on Tuesday; and he said it as if he were glad of the fact. He spoke as a publisher. The bookseller (writes a representative) has not time to speak to you at all, unless you go to his shop early in the morning and cling to his coat-tails. Booksellers who met you at the door three months ago are now seen at the far end of their shops, bobbing like corks on a sea of customers. The bookseller believes in Christmas. People who "never buy books" buy them now. They come in and ask for "a nice book." And they get several.

BUYING books is the happiest kind of shopping. The book-buyer purchases more than merchandise—he purchases self-respect. It is perhaps the only way in which self-respect can be purchased. Observe the man who enters a jeweller's shop on one of these Christmas evenings. He enters falteringly, or with an unreal bravado. Ten minutes later he emerges with no parcel in his hand—only an unseen, unfelt trinket in one of his inner pockets. Do you wonder that he is pale? But the jolly book-buyer staggers across the pavement into a cab, where he opens all his parcels and wraps them up again in shapeless bundles before he gets home.

You may observe a light in every bookseller's shop long after closing time. That means that parcels are being made up, and that huge lists of orders on publishers are being prepared for the "collectors" in the morning. If, from the top of a 'bus, and in a lucky light, you catch sight of a bookseller, pen in hand, you will see that he is smiling. Wishing a bookseller a merry Christmas is like taking coals to Newcastle.

LITERARY projects are in the air. Indeed, when were they not? The Chronicle crowds into one small glorious paragraph the following announcements of new papers for 1898, which we have tabulated:

"A shilling monthly.
A sixpenny monthly.
A sixpenny weekly.
A threepenny weekly.
Another threepenny weekly."

"O, what men dare do! what men may do! what men daily do, not knowing what they do!"

WE understand that the weekly journal which is to rise from the ashes of the New Review will be published by Messrs. Harmsworth. Is this the paper which, according to the Chronicle, is to be conducted on the principle laid down in Danton's famous motto?

AN interesting experiment in collaboration is in progress. Mr. Grant Richards and Mr. G. W. Steevens have embarked upon a novel-writing enterprise together. Their story is to deal with a young Englishman of modern times, who by certain magic means is transported back through time to the Rome of Commodus. Some of the incidents have place in Egypt, where Mr. Steevens is now sojourning. Of old the lion lay down with the lamb; to-day the publisher writes romances with the author.

IN his remarks on the novel made at the dinner of the Sir Walter Scott Club on Monday, Mr. Balfour, after describing all the varieties of novels which readers are now called upon to buy, said that almost every subject had been exhausted, but there was one aspect of life which has been only sparingly treated: the development of character extending through the life of the individual. We presume that Mr. Balfour meant that the novelist usually introduces the reader to his hero too late in life, or leaves him too early; whereas the speaker would prefer the novelist to emulate the Chinese dramatist, who begins the book with the birth of the hero, and ends it with his death.

IN Mr. Balfour's own words: "Not one novel in a thousand attempts to take an individual and trace what in natural science would be called his life-history; and it is curious that what we get from a good biography should be absent from the novel at a time when the historical aspect of things, of individuals, of institutions, and the globe itself forms so large a portion of the subject-matter of science." This, no doubt, is a pointed remark; but it may lead to novels of inordinate length, containing more than a common supply of what Mr. Balfour called the dulness that never was on sea or land.

THE making of books for children reaches the height of absurdity in the illustrated reprint of Coleridge's Raven, which has been issued by Messrs. H. S. Nichols & Co. The poem, which consists of forty-four lines, is offered in a volume weighing 1 lb. 15½ oz.

—a result attained by large print, two prefaces, wide margins, heavy paper, blank leaves, and illustrations. The artist is Ella Hallward, whose drawings, though they have merit, are little enough suited to the nursery; and the Hon. Stephen Coleridge, who writes one of the prefaces, says that "as an humble kinsman of the wonderful man that wrote it [the poem], I enjoy at once a pleasure and a privilege in being permitted thus to associate myself with this beautiful volume."

It is a relief to turn to the genuine nursery entertainment provided by The Cruikshank Fairy-Book (Putnam's), which is just in time to take its chance in the busiest bookselling week of the year. This is a reprint of George Cruikshank's versions of "Puss in Boots," "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Hop-o'-My Thumb," and "Cinderella," illustrated from his own plates. The plates have yielded very fair impressions upon the shining white paper employed.

At the end of the book are several interesting literary items. The first is Cruikshank's "Address to Little Boys and Girls." In this he tells, in the old-fashioned, fatherly way, how he came to love and draw the Fairies—

"In my childhood, and when a very little boy, I recollect that I used to be very much pleased and delighted with Fairy Tales; and it so happened that my nurse at that time was a young woman who used to tell a great many Fairy Tales; and many an evening have I sat by the fireside listening with wonder and delight to her stories about these wonderful little people, and I once asked her where the little Fairies lived. She told me that some of them had houses in the white places in the corners of the cellars, where these fungi were growing on the walls, and about which, in some places, were also large cobwebs; and whether they were spiders, or flies, or some other insects, or the force of my excited childish imagination, I know not, but I certainly did at the time fancy that I saw very, very tiny little people running in and out of these white houses; and I now believe that any talent or power that I may have in drawing a Fairy, or describing one, had its origin in the early impressions these little people made upon my mind at that early age."

IN addition to this address to children we have within the covers of this volume Cruikshank's address "To Parents and Guardians," in reply to the strictures passed by Charles Dickens, in Good Words, upon Cruikshank's alterations of the familiar text. Dickens was severe, too, on Cruikshank's introduction of his views on social and educational questions into these stories, and particularly his temperance doctrines. Cruikshank defends himself with doubtful success:

"He [Dickens] declares that whoever alters these Fairy Tales to suit his own opinions is guilty of an act of presumption, and appropriates to himself what does not belong to him. This is the opinion of Mr. Charles Dickens; but in my humble opinion, if Shakespeare thought proper to alter Italian tales, and even history, to suit his purpose, and if Sir Walter Scott used history also in the same way for his purpose, surely anyone may take the liberty of altering a common Fairy Tale to suit his purpose, and convey his opinions; and most assuredly so, if that purpose be a good one."

BUT these addresses and arguments are beside the mark. No one will read them. For the purposes of children, Cruikshank's versions of the stories are good enough, and his pictures a continual delight. He had fun and quaintness and whimsicality, and he read the story before he illustrated it. Best of all, he was not a decorator.

OUR Paris correspondent writes under Monday's date:

"I come from Daudet's funeral. The crush was great, flowers and wreaths in excess, music mournful and sentimental, as befits a last farewell to Le Petit Chose. Here is a passage from Zola on Daudet's illness: 'It was impossible to dissimulate any longer the gravity of his state. Then my poor friend knew every torture. He whose need of air, of space, and light was so great, who was such a lover of life, condemned to eternal immobility! His mind was nearly ruined by despair. He even thought of a violent end, of evasion through the gates of death. The admirable devotion of his wife alone saved him. I remember one spring day going to take him to Keller, at the hydropathic establishment. We crossed the Tuileries gardens, he leaning on my arm. The buds were showing green on the branches. He contemplated this awakening of nature's forces, and comparing it with his own irremediable misery, tears obscured his vision.'"

THE Paris Municipality met on the day of Alphonse Daudet's funeral and decided to name a street after him.

THE Standard's Berlin correspondent states that a booklet, entitled Consolation in Suffering: Fruits of the Reading of a Mourner, translated from the English by von L., will appear in a few days, in two fine editions, at Darmstadt. I hear, he adds, that the anonymous authoress is the Queen's youngest daughter, the Princess Beatrice. The work has a preface by a Hessian clergyman, "written near the place where the chivalrous Prince [Henry of Battenberg] spent the greater part of his youth." He writes that the "contents of the little book were collected and thought out in hours of the deepest sorrow, and touch upon all the questions that stir us when our dear ones die. What the sorrowing authoress experienced herself with consolation in suffering she now wishes to offer to others."

THE following extract from a letter purporting to come from the author of The Beth Book has been published this week: "We are all in fits of laughter here over that naughty letter to the D. T. I never wrote it at all. It was a practical joke."

A VERY intelligible complaint is uttered by a correspondent of the Chronicle. He writes: "On the strength of your review of Mr. Havelock Ellis's Affirmations, I purchased and read the book, and as far as the reading of it goes I quite endorse your judgment. But I should like to make a remark about the book considered as a purchase. I find that the area of margin in each page is more than three times that of the printed portion; also that, compared with a hundred other bond fide octavo volumes, the paper is one-third thicker. As far, therefore, as these measurements may be taken as correct, the purchaser gets nearly four times the amount of blank paper for his money that he used to get. Is this to be the rule under the new six-shilling price? Is it not a rather questionable proceeding?"

THE Society of Authors, having finally shaken themselves free of the discount question, might meet to determine upon the right proportions of type and paper to be offered for six shillings.

IN the current number of Scribner's Mr. James Whitcomb Riley adds the following verses, inspired by an early portrait of Robert Louis Stevenson, to the mass of Stevenson literature:

"A face of youth mature: a mouth of tender,
Sad human sympathy yet something stoic
In clasp of lip; wide eyes of calmest splendour,
And brow serenely ample and heroic;—
The features—all—lit with a soul ideal. . . .
O visionary boy! what were you seeing,
What hearing, as you stood thus midst the real
Ere yet one master-work of yours had being?
Is it a foolish fancy that we humour—
Investing darily with life and spirit
This youthful portrait of you ere one rumour
Of your great future spoke that men might hear it?—
Is it a fancy, or your first of glories,
That you were listening, and the camera
drew you
Hearing the voices of your untold stories
And all your lovely poems calling to you?"

It is a pretty poem, but we suspect that the answer to the question is No. R. L. S. was too humorous a man to entertain such thoughts at a photographer's.

A CORRESPONDENT writes: "Referring to an article on Mr. H. B. Marriott-Watson in last week's ACADEMY, how is it that his fine story, The Web of the Spider, never seems to get justice done to it? It combines the adventure story and the detective story in a most effective setting of wild New Zealand scenery."

THE Art Union of London is to be congratulated on its choice of a subject for its presentation plate to the members for the current year. It is an etching (30 in. x 15 in.) by Leopold Flameng, of Mr. Edwin A. Abbey, A.R.A.'s picture, "Richard, Duke of Gloucester and the Lady Anne." This work was, on the whole, the most admired and discussed picture in last year's Royal Academy Exhibition. In its translation from black and scarlet to black and white the picture has lost little of its impressiveness.

REFINEMENT in America progresses. According to the Critic, there came not long since from a Philadelphia college a letter signed by a woman who added to her name the legend "Chairlady of the Committee on ——" Perhaps she thought "chairwoman" would look too much like "charwoman." As a rule, nowadays, it is the charwoman who insists upon being called a lady. What would be thought of a chairman who signed himself "Chairgentleman."

MR. JOHN B. LONG informs us that he is about to begin business as a publisher, under the name of John Long, with the following programme: "Fiction by popular authors; fiction by new writers of undoubted promise; works of travel; medical works; and poetry that may appeal to the public." All poetry comes, we imagine, under this heading. Why not make a departure and publish poetry that will appeal to the public?

MR. J. M. Barrie's next book will be a sequel to Sentimental Tommy. It will be called Celebrated Tommy.

A NEW series of the Indian Magazine and Review will begin in January. Articles are contributed by Sir John Jardine, K.C.I.E., Mrs. Logan, Mrs. B. Batey, and Mr. Coldstream. A design for the wrapper has been supplied from the Lahore School of Art.

UNDER its new control Cassell's Magazine is making a braver show than once it did. The January number has a singularly interesting list of contributions: complete stories by Mr. Bret Harte and Mr. Max Pemberton; a serial by Mr. Headon Hill; an illustrated article on tobogganing; a humorous paper by Mr. L. F. Austin; and other matters.

THE bookbindings by women which Mr. Karslake, of Charing Cross-road, is now introducing to book-buyers, have earned appreciation in high quarters. The Queen has just purchased two volumes: a copy of the Imitation of Christ, bound in bevelled vellum, and Italian Book Illustrations, in Indian red morocco, and tooled in floriated gold from an old Italian design.

EARLY in 1898 Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton will publish the complete correspondence between Burns and his well-known patroness, Mrs. Dunlop. The book—which is being prepared by Mr. William Wallace, editor of the last edition of Robert Chambers's Life and Works of Robert Burns—will contain nearly forty letters by the poet which have not yet seen the light, and one hundred letters by Mrs. Dunlop. The volume, which is fully annotated, clears up a number of disputed points in connexion with Burns's life and works, makes clear his views on religion, and proves that his friends endeavoured—a fact which has hitherto been unsuspected—to secure for him a professorship in Edinburgh University.

MR. LEONARD HUXLEY, who is now engaged upon a Life of his father, contributes to the January number of the Century a chapter of familiar reminiscences, "Scenes from Huxley's Home Life." It is accompanied by a portrait of Prof. Huxley and his little grandson, from a photograph taken shortly before the former's death.

REPUTATIONS RECONSIDERED.

GEORGE ELIOT.—II.

TO arrive at the real greatness of a writer it is necessary to begin by shearing off what is spurious or defective. In George Eliot's case the process requires to be thorough and drastic. There is, indeed, a residuum of the most shining merit, but to exhibit its full beauty a large rubbish heap has to be cleared away.

Her initial error lay in misconceiving the essential difference between the philosopher and the novelist, in not recognising that while it is the function of the former to reason about life, it is the business of the latter to represent it. The philosophising is but the crude preparatory stage. No one can set the men and women of fancy to play out their lives in work and laughter, in love and hatred and tears, who has not mused long and deeply over the springs of human motive, the variation in character, the aims and ideals of humanity. For a novel is, or should be, a kind of microcosmos built up from the fruits of experience. It may be a sad little world or a merry one, since either aspect belongs to life; it may have any atmosphere the writer can produce—if only the reader be compelled to breathe it for the time being, so that he is carried out of his actual environment and lives among the creatures of imagination. This end can never be attained unless the author knows the human heart and is true to it. Genius may and often does take wing, carrying us on strange journeys, but at the bottom it will be found that it continues true to some aspect of nature. Truth constitutes the difference between great artists and those who may be called the jerry-builders of literature, those who produce showy, glittering novels as rapidly as a row of villas are run up in a London suburb.

Now if a man must be either a fool or a physician at forty, still more certain is it that he must be either a fool or a philosopher. He may be so (as Tristram Shandy was a logician) without knowing the rules; but that does not alter the fact. Renan, indeed, used to say that no man should write till he is forty, and it is worth noting that all the great novels were composed in or after middle-age, when wisdom grows mellow and the memories of early experience tender. No fault is to be found, then, with George Eliot for being a philosopher. What the reader objects to is the continual and unseasonable obtrusion of her philosophy. A stage-play would be insupportable if even a Wilhelm Meister were to discourse learnedly over every exit and entrance, to stop the action while he drew a moral or adorned the tale. The novel reader dislikes this as much as the playgoer. Let the characters only act and speak and he himself will supply the comment; for he, too, has lived and loved and suffered in some degree; he has amassed knowledge and experience of his own; something within him tells what is faithful and what is unfaithful. I might further illustrate my meaning by an example drawn from poetry. Take a lyric verse; for instance:

"To sleep! to sleep!
Whate'er thy joys, they vanish with the day
Whate'er thy griefs, in sleep they fade away.
To sleep! to sleep!
Sleep, mournful heart, and let the past be past;
Sleep, happy soul, all life must sleep at last.
To sleep! to sleep!"

There is the experience of a life-time, the philosophy of a sage behind these simple lines; but they themselves are philosophy blossomed into beauty and wisdom. I think George Eliot would have been a greater, a wiser, and more attractive writer if she had given us only her mind's blossom in the speech and action of her characters, and allowed life as reflected in her microcosmos to teach its own lessons and draw its own moral.

Her not doing so was partly due to temperament, partly to living under Carlyle's dominion, and yielding her susceptible nature to the influence of men of philosophic leanings such as George Henry Lewes and Herbert Spencer. But a weakness grounded on character does not come out in one form only. George Eliot's style suffered from the same causes. It is often, and especially in her later books, pompous and consequential, and produces an impression of straining and struggling. Not thus were the great masterpieces of fiction written—Cervantes, Le Sage, Fielding, and Scott, each, in his own way, shows mastery and ripeness. Men and women come at their bidding, play their parts, and disappear; but the magician who summoned them dwells aloof and detached, as one who has sounded the depths of life, and now, from some exterior standpoint, directs his mimic world with a smile half of irony, half of pity. So orderly is the procession, so laughing and natural the pageant, that the casual reader never thinks what has gone to the making of it—the close and vigorous thought, the long experience, the blood and tears. On the contrary, I am afraid he more often than not belongs to the barber's school of criticism.

"'He the best player!' cried Partridge, with a contemptuous sneer. 'Why, I could act as well as he myself; I am sure if I had seen a ghost I should have looked in the very same manner, and done just as he did. And then, to be sure, in that same scene as you called it, between him and his mother, when you told me he acted so fine, why, Lord help me! any man—that is, any good man—that had such a mother would have done exactly the same.'"

George Eliot fared none the worse in her day for her air of self-consequence. The public is slow to appreciate the simplicity of perfect art. It is more easily impressed by the pompous and obscure and pretentious. And this is no merely modern weakness. It has been inherent since the day when Naaman, the Syrian, said:

"Behold, I thought, he will surely come out to me, and stand, and call on the name of the Lord his God, and strike his hand over the place, and recover the leper. Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel?"

How would a fashionable doctor of to-day earn his living if he did not talk learnedly and shake his head and administer draughts and pills many a time when he knows the best medicine would be something to think about and something to do? Well does he know the advantages of Abana and Pharpar! And so it was rather than otherwise in favour of her popularity that George Eliot never attained that consummate simplicity of style which is born of ripe thought, and deep experience, and bears its apportioned load of laughter, of passion, or of memory, as lightly as the little brook carries a feather from the bird that has been bathing in it. But her fame has now to pay the penalty.

One cannot defend her style—we can only explain it as the result of temperament and influence combined. Thackeray, alone of her contemporaries, caught the accent of the masters, and she did not like Thackeray; least of all did she like Henry Esmond, the most admirably written of all his novels. On the other hand, the men whom she did like were no doubt very excellent teachers and moralists, but their style was not invented for the purpose of narration. Indeed, it would be difficult to imagine any worse model for that purpose than Carlyle or Mr. Herbert Spencer. Even Mr. Ruskin's flowing and stately rhetoric is ill-adapted to the ends of the storyteller. And she was not like Tennyson, who could be keenly interested in all forms of research and hold familiar converse with the most diverse intellects, and yet maintain the independence of his own spirit and write his own language. To some extent this was perhaps due to her sex. A woman is more apt than a man to take a cue from her companions, and her language gradually became more technical as her friend and companion George Henry Lewes passed from novel-writing and belles lettres to his Physiology of Common Life and History of Science. Yet she knew very well what were the true objects of the novel. Her teaching, she said, was æsthetic, her way was "to urge the human sanctities through tragedy—through pity and terror as well as admiration and delight." On another occasion she declared that her object was to produce "gentle thoughts and tender remembrances." It scarcely requires saying that to excite pity and terror, to stir old memories, to appeal to the sense of beauty, it is necessary to employ a diction far other than would be appropriate for discussing the Nebular Hypothesis or the facts of physiology. Nevertheless, in picturing the life of Middlemarch, not only is the style ruined with pedantic phrases, but there are great patches fitter for an Encyclopædia than a tale.

Worse even than that is the deterioration in tone. The broad human sympathy of Silas Marner, the wise and tender humour of Adam Bede, the deep feeling of the Mill on the Floss, are replaced by a hard pedagogic smartness, and on every page the author poses as if she were the Sybil of Cumæ. At no time does George Eliot produce fun for fun's sake, as Dickens would on the slightest provocation, and as Shakespeare many a time did. Neither has she a keen eye for the oddities and whims of human character; but Middlemarch suffers more than any of the rest from lack of humour. What would the creator of Jonathan Oldbuck or of Parson Adams or of My Uncle Toby or of Don Quixote not have made of Mr. Casaubon? And the Vincys and Brookes and Garths and Bulstrodes required the easy touch of a Thackeray rather than her sober dead-in-earnest pomp. Middlemarch always reminds me of a very desolate landscape seen in a bad light—a wind moaning amid bare tree-tops and tossing the lake into forbidding waves. At the best it is a wintry scene, but how much a little sunshine improves it! The water ripples and glitters and sparkles, the warm russet of the dead beech leaves glows under the soft-black stoles. It is not the scene, it is only the light that has changed. There is more sunshine in life than in George Eliot's novels.

Her own light began to fail at a very early period. Her day may be said to have lasted from 1856 to 1863—it was twilight only from then to her death. "I began it, (Romola), she says, "a young woman—I finished it an old woman." Her subsequent work is only that of one who is nursing the embers of a slowly dying fire. Felix Holt, with its revolting ground-plan and inferior execution, showed symptoms of decay that were further developed in Middlemarch, Deronda, and The Impressions of Theophrastus Such.

Of her poetry it is sufficient to note that the student of her prose could have divined what it would be like. "All crudity of expression marks, I think," she wrote to a friend, "a deficiency in subtlety of thought as well as in breadth of moral and poetic feeling." This wise deliverance exactly defines her limitations. A rich style is produced only by a wide mental vision, a sense not only of immediate relations, but of those that are remote; carrying its message with perfect lucidity it will still suggest even more than it directly conveys. Such writing is so difficult of analysis that the critic has got into the way of describing its quality by the single word "charm." He means that it has a sub-colour, an undercurrent of meaning, a suggestion of emotion. Now, with many of the most admirable qualities, the style of George Eliot lacks this. To take an example, let the reader turn to the prison scene in Adam Bede. It is no casual incident, but the corner-stone of the novel. The whole story was suggested by it. And the description was long premeditated. Yet it would be superfluous to show that it is a failure. The pathos has no lasting effect; it has no sub-tint, no relief. Life itself is so grotesque a mixture of fun and irony; laughter and tears are so much intermingled that an unmitigated appeal to sentiment is felt to be as unnatural as mere buffoonery.

On the other hand, George Eliot does not seem to have quite appreciated that pathos in Hetty's fate which appeals most strongly to the modern mind. The girl is, as it were, whirled into a side pool, and the great river of life closes in and flows onward with nature's own disregard for the individual. Even Adam Bede, to whom she had appeared the one object worth living for, marries and forgets. And so the poor little ego, whose mirror declared her the fairest of God's creatures, and whose beauty made her mistress of the strongest, is relentlessly cast aside. If George Eliot had endowed Hetty with just a trifle more brains, what would one not have given to get her theory of the universe after she had been thrust out of her Eden?

The same lack of sub-tint nullifies George Eliot's descriptions. As in novels of older date they remain those of a view-hunter pure and simple. They might be all cut out without injuring the story. But a finer, a more subtly and highly developed art, is not satisfied with this crude method. Lord Tennyson in verse, and R. L. Stevenson more than anyone else in prose, showed that without set description, as much as by the use of one imaginative phrase or sentence, it was possible so to blend the feeling of a scene and the feeling of the actor that one henceforth became inseparable from the other. I shall have further occasion to deal with this promising field of the future novelist; it is enough to note that with all her experience and observation George Eliot's description is never by any chance that of a poetess. It is brought in; it is not vital to the narrative.

One more addition must be made to this formidable, and yet not exhaustive, list of shortcomings ere we arrive at virtues that go far to atone for them. In the Mill on the Floss occurs the first instance of that unsoundness of judgment that was to be so pronounced in her subsequent work. Five out of its seven books are devoted to the purpose of producing an atmosphere, and the story only begins at the sixth. But the curious point is, that the cream of the work is all in this monstrously large introduction, and the episode of the heroine who "forgot herself in a boat"—that is to say, the long premeditated story with the subsequent drowning—is not worthy of criticism as literature. The error of judgment lay in not completing the catastrophe in the atmosphere so laboriously and successfully produced.

Beautifully, too, as Maggie Tulliver's rich, dreamy temperament is presented, George Eliot has not chosen her incidents very happily. Unless she deliberately intended to estrange sympathy, Maggie's forgetfulness, for instance, might have been suggested more felicitously than by her allowing Tom's rabbits to starve to death. This cruelty of neglect, however, appears to be part of a deliberate scheme. Maggie Tulliver's relations with Philip Wakem, her want of loyalty to Lucy, and her conduct with Stephen Guest, leave a bad taste in the mouth, a taste that should not have been there if George Eliot wished to enlist our sympathy. The issues are confused, and the difference between right and wrong is lost sight of.

My chief reason for insisting on these grave defects is to obtain solid footing for a great and hearty admiration of George Eliot's best work. It has been said that she and Sir Walter Scott are, after all is said and done, the greatest English novelists produced in the nineteenth century, and I am not inclined to dispute it. No doubt there are many who, taking too seriously the flouting and sneering thrown at her these many years, will lift an astonished eyebrow at this opinion. But a candid examination of her best work will at least make it intelligible. For our purpose it will be necessary to put aside the Scenes of Clerical Life, which, though always promising and often powerful, still bear marks of having been written by a beginner, one who has not yet learned "the tools' true play." The essays and poems must also be dismissed as efforts in a direction where her genius did not lie. Felix Holt, Middlemarch, Daniel Deronda, are to be struck out because composed when her powers had begun to decay. When that is done her reputation must rest on the four novels, Adam Bede, Silas Marner, The Mill on the Floss, and Romola. The last-mentioned has the vigour and sanity of her early work; in some respects it is keener and more powerful; yet the cream of what she had to say is found in the three first. George Eliot's creative art is seen at its highest among the Poysers at the Hall Farm, in the meetings of the Tullivers, the Dodsons, and their clan, and in her delineations of Silas Marner, and the kindly inquisitive rustics among whom his fate was cast. And it is great, not because of striking and dramatic situations—the invention of situation is a different and inferior faculty—it is great because she displays insight into the motives of human action and imaginative skill to body forth no mere walking characteristics, but full many-sided human characters in their natural environment. And in doing so the artist forgets she is a philosopher. Here is no pose, no pedantry of phrase, no stilted and supercilious smartness, but a free, happy, spontaneous style, and a wide loving sympathy. It is rather sad to reflect how time affected her work. There are two spirits visibly engaged—one is kin to the muse that directed Jane Austen's pen and Scott's, the other is that of an affected schoolmistress: the former was dominant in those early days, the other lurked in the background; but, as feebleness and premature age came upon both mind and body, the influence of her chosen companions became too strong, and the Bad Angel gained the mastery. Had it been otherwise—but, then, it never is otherwise!—it might have been George Eliot's fate to pilot the way to that as yet undiscovered country of romance where richer harvests than have yet been yielded await the reaper. But this, and her pre-eminence among her contemporaries, and much else yet remaining to be said, will become more apparent from the sidelights cast from other reputations.

P.

ALPHONSE DAUDET.

GREATER writers have come and gone, but none whose death brings to us a more personal sense of commotion, a feeling of more absolute loss, than Daudet's. It is something of the affectionate spell Dickens cast over his generation, but its intensity of intimacy comes from the radiant reflection of Southern charm, the effervescent wit and humour, the constant revelations of a delightful temperament set in perfumed and musical prose. Alphonse Daudet is dead, and the world is the poorer by a source of entertainment the less. His books were never masterpieces in the full sense of the word; never flawless works of wit. But how lovable, how gay, how caustic, how luminous, how full of the South world of ineffaceable charm! Where else may we hope to look for such delicacy and daintiness of pathos, of railery, of humour? So youthful and fresh, and sweet too, that it is with difficulty we have been able to conceive a Daudet worn by life, the soft and brilliant regard dulled by suffering and travail. It is the Daudet of the Contes Choisis, of the Lettres de Mon Moulin, we find it hard to forget in all the brilliances of his remarkable Provençal beauty, with his Merovingian dusky mane and his exuberance, as seizing and unforgettable as the scents of Provençal hillsides.

No living French writer has penetrated so far, filled so many hearts, brightened so many homes, cast light and air and laughter into gloom, touched the source of tears, and made us all feel younger and fresher for an evening spent in his society. His big efforts generally missed fire, and Jack and Le Nabab fall far below their aim. His power is in his slighter efforts, and here his strength is the exceeding delicacy of his touch. Their charm is a surpassing fragility, a perfume almost evanescent, so subtle and faint that one hesitates to say precisely wherein is hidden the sting of remembrance. Who is to analyse such grace as his? such warmth that sheds its beneficent rays over his most poignant and ruthless dissection of human vanity and frailty? his bitterest probing of the sources of deception, disenchantment and suffering? A great master we cannot call him, for he was too imperfect an artisan, and not only did he sin by excess in all moods and views, and, as Flaubert told him, "used too much paper," but he continually sinned against taste, and against judgment and discretion. He spared neither friend nor foe when the spirit seized him to paint a living portrait, sometimes with cynical ferocity, the Duke of Morny, whose secretary he had been; sometimes with charming and sprightly mockery, as the good citizens of Tarascon. But the enchanter was ever sure of ready pardon, however he sinned. He had the art of sinning so gracefully. He had the gift of being dull with enthusiasm. He captivates in his prosiest moods, and you see him ever athwart his pages, with his effulgent gaze, his winning smile and his vivid gesticulation. The tale of his youth and early struggle has been told as only Daudet could tell it—first in Le Petit Chose, with its melancholy sweetness and delicious irony, and afterwards at length in Trente ans de Paris. Once fortune embraced him, his success was a stupendous one. Two other writers alone share such popularity as his, Zola and Georges Ohnet. But while Ohnet exclusively belongs to the illiterate multitude, Daudet was the beloved of all sorts and conditions of men. The implacable and fastidious artist read him with relish. Though a naturalist, even the austere M. Brunetière saluted him with the heavy artillery of his praise. The politician, the Academician read him, not always with joy or approval, for Daudet, freelance and bohemian, had an exceedingly bitter pen at the service of both, his own particular delight lying in the remorseless exposure of humbugs, the largest elements of which for him were gathered under the dome of the Institute, and within the walls of the Chamber of Deputies. The woman of the world and the little bourgeois, the people, provincials, colonials, foreigners of every land, read Daudet, and his name has for long been a household word at home and abroad. While it is impossible to approve of satire so cruelly venomous as that which is the essence of l'Immortel, such genial railery as that which roused the ire of Tarascon, or fetched bloodthirsty warriors up from the south to morose and wicked Paris, armed with big sticks for the skull of their perfidious compatriot, fills the world with mild radiance and laughter. There is such a smiling kindness in it; it proceeds so blithely. This is in every probability the single portion of Daudet's large complex and unsatisfactory work that will pass into the classics or his land. To create a type is to stand the test of time. Tartarin is as finished a type as any literature possesses. The setting of the type, too, is as engaging as the central figure itself. The sleepy little town lives for ever a legend of elastic prowess that needs but a pen-prick for cautious effacement. We see with his clear and joyous vision a corner of France, which through him has become a lasting memory, and nevermore can we forget such pictures of living colour, touched with the bold, free, and vivid strokes of the born landscape painter, told with the rhythm of the perfect musician; the silent ponds of Provence, with their rose-hued flamingoes; the grand grey-blue river, quaint and dead old towns; a land perfumed with rose and lavender and wild woodland scents, and the thousand lovelinesses of shepherd life, with the sufferings of the minstrel and the luminous ferocity of summer in the south. Here is the Daudet who will live when l'Immortel, Le Nabab, Jack, or Numa Roumestan will be forgotten.

For his heavier books are but impassioned studies of the hour; evanescent phrases of modern Parisian life, caught sometimes heavily and bitterly on the wing, and worked deliberately into novels. He had the misfortune to believe in the note-book, and hence the ponderous exactitude of his descriptions. Provence, where he is merely the witching impressionist, he offers us with all the convincing precision of broad strokes. When he laughs he is sure to be right, and he has the virtue always of laughing in Provence. Sometimes, from force of mocking tenderness, he laughs with the tears not far from his eyelids, and this is an added charm. Elsewhere he is ruthlessly documentary, and like Zola, the Goncourts, and all of their school, piles detail upon detail, till the picture is covered or lost in verbiage. Of course, he saves himself continually on the point of creating a yawn or an impatient sigh, by his wit, his humour, his boundless pity for suffering, his poignancy and delicious sentimentality. The man himself is always so charming that we cannot long remain in the sulks, and are forced to follow him. His love of women is so naïve, so weak, without any actual perversity; he so clings to them, and so infinitely prefers their weaknesses to those of his own sex. Whatever his faults as a man may have been—and he was far from being a saint—he had the merit of adoring his wife and leaning on her, like the middle-aged child he was, and appreciating, as few writers ever have done, by word spoken and written, his home-solitude peopled with kisses. And never was man more beloved of his friends than he. The fame of his winged word has travelled far. As a conversationalist he was more brilliant even than as a writer. He spoke as he wrote, with vibrant, vital eloquence, the words hurrying on a luminous wave, captivating like light and wine; full of every exquisite quality of wit and humour; variable, flexible, rainbow-hued; musical as wind and water. And equally magical was his sympathy. "We shall ever remember the master's gentleness," writes the brothers Paul and Victor Marpièrre, "his discreet tenderness, his heart that was open for all who knocked. This invalid was a curer of souls." This we may well believe. The essential note of his work is pity rather than satire. No one has felt the misery and suffering of tortured childhood, of isolated youth, of poverty, of blight, of sickness and despair more deeply, and it would be impossible to convey the great lesson of pain in more poignant pages than those in which he has painted the sufferings of Jack; of Rosalie, the betrayed wife of Numa Roumestan; of Felicie and the Nabab; of the mother of the Évangéliste; of so many men and women on whom the hand of Destiny has lain with such unjust force. In his graver moods, a kindly, genial, and generous creature—full of faults, it is true; not over discreet or wise; sometimes lacking in taste and in tact, but always sympathetic, by reason of his exuberant personality; who has given us many an exquisite page, many a delicate fancy, many a delicious hour in the dull, sad moments of life; whose irony, mournful and tender, has often proved a tonic in moods of lassitude and indifference; whose inextinguishable gaiety is ever a fountain of fairy force at which exhausted spirits may refresh themselves. A vigorous, a vital, and a subtle nature, the best of him was perhaps lived, not written. In this moment of mourning, it is not to the wife and the children so intensely loved by this intense nature that the thought flies, but to the forsaken "Mère Jacques," the big brother of Le petit Chose, from whom his "little things" of so many precious memories was taken so suddenly, without a farewell look, without a last bitter hand-clasp, without a last word of endearment or consolation. Such a brotherhood as that of the two Daudets was a divine tie, and the one that remains cannot ever say as Daudet himself said of his last moment with Goncourt, his brother of letters:

"Suddenly his hand, whose burning heat had cooled by degrees, was drawn hastily from mine, almost harshly. The last agony, it appears, has these spasmodic movements. For me it was like a precipitated departure, the friend who is pressed by time, and who brusquely tears himself from your farewell."

There is a quality rare in modern French fiction which Daudet can claim: a reverence for and an understanding of purity. How many of the younger writers could paint us that delicate little picture of the enamoured shepherd, whose master's lovely young daughter shares his vigil beneath the stars:

"I felt something fresh and fine weigh lightly on my shoulders. It was her head, heavy with sleep, that rested against me with a pretty crush of ribbons, laces and wavy hair. She remained thus without stirring until the moment when the stars of heaven began to pale, effaced by mounting daylight. And I watched her sleeping, a little troubled in the depths of my being, but sacredly protected by the clear night which has ever filled me with beautiful thoughts. Around us the stars continued their silent course, docile like a big herd of cattle; and for a moment I imagined that one of the stars, the most beautiful and brilliant, having lost its way, had come and lain on my shoulder to sleep."

So much may we be thankful for to the Daudet who has thus enriched us with many a beautiful thought, beautifully expressed, that came to him, like the shepherd's stars, in the soft night hours of his wondrous Provence.

H. L.

THE CENTENARY OF THE BIRTH OF HEINE.

II.—HEINE: THE SINGER.

BOTH as a poet and as a man Heine's nature was dual; in his work as in his life we can hear the clash of opposing forces. He inspired the muse of the romantic school, growing rigid in the trammels of her own conventionality, with a new and magic life; yet standing as he did in the fierce dawn of realism, which flooded a new light over a world of things as they are, he withered her beautiful shadowy realms with his mockery. The subjectivity of every line of verse he ever wrote was revolutionary. No poet had before him struck the chords of natural egotism with so sure a hand. In his songs poetry welled up, against all the canons of romanticism, from the parched soil of actual life, and drew its inspiration from the moving present, not from the misty past. Yet his methods are still those of romanticism. He still sees nature—though his wonderful pictures of the North Sea seem to give this assertion the lie—through the coloured glasses of the romantic school. His glimpses of the Orient, for example, are romantic; his is the legendary Orient of the Crusades, not the Orient which Goethe had discovered for the West. In the whole succession of his poems we find the well-worn symbols of romanticism, the conventional tinsel of a love song, the lily fingers, the rosy cheek, the bleeding heart and kindred poetic properties, which date back to the troubadours. Heine himself, later in life, acknowledged his dependence on the time-honoured romantic conventions; for in the introduction of a French translation of his Book of Songs he writes of "a far too big a dose of the roses, nightingale, and moon-beams fricassée."

Although his Book of Songs made him the patron saint of the new realistic school of "young Germany," one of his latest works, Atta Troll, was directed against "these cockchafers of the spring-time of nations." In its attack on poetry with a purpose, in its appeal for the liberation of song from the fetters of actuality, in its scorn for the lyric politician, Atta Troll is a sounding echo of romanticism. So again, in his bitter attack on "the Swabian poets," Heine turned and rent a school he himself had called into being. In many of his poems, it is true, this antagonism between the romantic and the real is conscious, almost coquettish, as when the poet gibes at his own lovelorn anguish with bitter mockery. But it is none the less genuine. According to a very straightforward and simple method of criticism, which obtains more especially in Germany: Heine feared the pain of his own heart; therefore he had no real feeling; therefore his pain was a deceit; therefore all his poetry is artificial. This process of reasoning is all very well, but for the fact that it takes no account of the artistic imaginative temperament. Heine possessed it, and by calling to his mind the memories of spent passion and scarred sorrow, his genius enabled him to strike a note which goes straight to the heart. For all his conventional apparatus, therefore, Heine as the singer of the bitter sweet of love can, whether he himself felt deeply or not, awake memories in every one of his readers. The common happenings of everyday life gain a new significance. The genius of the poet lights up a world to the beauty of which we are strangers and with which we are yet strangely familiar.

What is perhaps most remarkable in the lyrics of the Book of Songs, apart from their exquisite melodiousness, is the simplicity and spontaneity of their language—the language of the true Folk song, which has to-day led hundreds of peasants to sing the "Lorelei" who have, perhaps, never heard the name of Heine. Analysing the material of this wonderful song critically, it is threadbare enough. We have the beautiful maiden combing her conventionally golden hair with the inevitably golden comb, while the love-lorn youth drifts to destruction on the rocks at her feet. The story is as old as that of the Syrens. Yet these dry bones, revived by the breath of Heine's genius, are clothed in the romantic spirit of the Rhine. It is also, as are most of the best of Heine's verses, not to be translated from its mother tongue. Transplanted from its native atmosphere it becomes wooden. Take, for example, the wonderful picture of the Rhine in the gloaming with which the poem opens. Sir Theodore Martin, whose versions I have elected to follow—chiefly because he keeps most closely, at whatever cost, to the original, though often enough he plays the cat and banjo with Heine's most tuneful metres—renders it after this fashion:

"I cannot tell what's coming o'er me
That makes me so eerie and low,
An old world legend before me
Keeps rising, and will not go."

It sounds like a description of the premonitory symptoms of sea-sickness. Another translator, in a desperate endeavour to cling to the original, outrages his own mother-tongue:

"The air is fresh and it darkies,
And smoothly flows the Rhine;
The peak of the mountain sparkles
In the fading sunset shine."

Happiest of the many attempts is, perhaps, that of Mr. Macmillan, who has chosen a soft kailyard dialect, which seems to suit the requirements of the folk-song:

"From the cool the gloamin' drops dimmer,
And the Rhine slips softly by;
The tops o' the mountains shimmer
I' the lowe of the sunset sky."

Often in the rich mines of the Book of Songs we find rare gems of exquisite tenderness and purity and depth of feeling. In the sonnet dedicated to his mother Heine tells how he wandered far in the quest of love, and found only contempt or hate:

"And ever searched I after love; yes, ever Searched after love, and love discovered never,
And so I homeward went with troubled thought,
But thou wast there to welcome me again,
And, ah, what in thy dear eyes floated then,
That was the sweet love I so long had sought."

Or again:

"Thou art even as a flower is,
So gentle and pure and fair,
I gaze on thee and sadness
Comes over my heart unaware."

I feel as though I should lay, sweet,
My hands on thy head with a prayer,
That God may keep thee, always, sweet,
So gentle and pure and fair."

Side by side with this worship of the good and the beautiful we find verses of cynical coarseness and brutal directness. Very characteristic of many of Heine's poems is the abrupt transition from the dreams of a fantastic imagination to the incongruity of reality. In the "North Sea" there is a striking example. The poet is lying idly on board his boat gazing dreamily into the water. Through the depths he sees at length the mirage of a sunken town. The vision grows clearer. Grave men, with black mantles and long swords, cross the crowded market-place to sculptured town hall. Under the clipt yew trees are silk-robed girls and smiling gallants. The scene reopens the old wound in the poet's heart. In the old high-gabled house his mistress sits. He cries:

"I have found thee again and see again
Thy sweet face,
The bright, faithful eyes,
That dear smile,
And never again shall I forsake thee;
And I am coming down to thee.
And with arms outstretched
I plunge down to thy heart."

At this point the poet swiftly abandons his earnest mood; adding, with a laugh:

"But just in the nick of time
The skipper grabbed my foot
And dragged me from the taffrail,
And cried, laughing half angrily,
'Doctor, what the devil's the matter?'"

Almost magic in its simplicity and directness is Heine's gift of describing the spirit of a scene by a few vague outlines. The beauties of nature are not only hinted but the significance of every scene is brought home. Consider that exquisite love-song:

"Oh, I would bear thee, my love, my bride,
Afar on the wings of song,
To a fairy spot on the Ganges' side:
I have known and loved it long.
'Tis a garden aflame with blossoms rare
That sleeping in moonlight lies,
The lotus flowers are awaiting thee there,
A sister they dearly prize.
There the violets twine and soft vows repeat
And gaze on the stars above,
The roses exhale in whispers sweet
Old legends of souls that love."

But, as I have said, to attempt to translate Heine, as with Horace, usually spells failure. More especially is this the case when the poet sums up his whole philosophy of love in a few couplets of almost epigrammatic directness and terseness. Happy, however, for its daintiness is one of (I think) Miss Kroeker's translations:

"The Butterfly is in love with the Rose,
And hovers around her all day;
But a golden Sunbeam loves him again,
And flutters around him all day.
But tell me with whom the Rose is in love?
That would I know soonest by far,
Or is it the singing Nightingale?
Or is it the Evening Star?
I know not with whom the Rose is in love,
But I love you all as you are—
The Butterfly, Sunbeam, and Nightingale,
The Rose and the Evening Star."

Sir Theodore does one of the most famous of Heine's lyrics into English in this wise:

"A young man loves a maiden;
For somebody else she sighs;
That somebody else loves another,
And marries his winsome prize.

The maiden in mere vexation,
Because of the loss she had had,
Weds the first kind soul that offers,
And makes the young man mad.

'Tis an old, a very old, story,
But still it is always new,
And when and wherever it happens,
A heart is broken in two."

And, again:

"People have teased and vexed me,
Worried me early and late:
Some with the love they bore me,
Other some with their hate.

They drugged my glass with poison,
They poisoned the bread I ate:
Some with the love they bore me,
Other some with their hate."

This shall be the last quotation from the lyrics of Heine, from this poetry of such rare beauty and of such startling contrasts. What he himself said of the heart of one of his heroines seems to me to apply to his own poetry. "There are hearts in which jest and earnestness, wickedness and goodness, heat and cold are so strangely mingled that it becomes difficult to judge them. . . . Sometimes her heart was a frozen island of ice, from the glassy floor of which rose the most passionate glowing palm woods; sometimes, again, it was a glowing volcano of enthusiasm which is suddenly overwhelmed by an avalanche of snow." No; it is not easy to sit in judgment on such hearts, still less on such poetry! You cannot ticket and catalogue it according to the rules of literary entomology. It is still too full of life. Least of all can you "do it into English verse."

O. W.

WHAT THE PEOPLE READ.

VII.—A RAILWAY PORTER.

"Epsom train!" I gasped, as I plunged from the District station at Wimbledon into its neighbour of the South Western. "Have I time to get a ticket?" He was standing on guard at the doorway which led to the platform, and as he swung round at my voice he showed a genial face, and brought down his wooden leg with a crack on the asphalt.

"Plenty of time, Sir," he said pleasantly; "close on a howler. Next train 6.52."

"But what about the 5.48?" I asked.

He nodded towards a red light which was rapidly growing dimmer in the distance.

"That's the 5.48," he said.

I was annoyed. But I only remarked that it seemed inconvenient for the 5.48 out of Wimbledon to start before the 5.45 into Wimbledon had arrived. And he only raised his eyebrows and wagged his head, as though such a mischance were—in the language of the company's by-laws—the Act of God.

I walked once up the platform, and once down again, to recover my temper. And then I found him explaining to two ladies and one old gentleman the quickest route to Leatherhead, to Pinner, and to Latimer-road, and each inquiry was greeted by the same genial countenance and the same crack of the wooden leg upon the asphalt.

"I should think," I said, when the others had been pointed to their destinations, "that you have no leisure to read anything but the railway time-tables."

He leaned back against the doorpost and laughed, sticking out his wooden leg.

"Ah, that's all in the day's work, Sir," he said. "The comp'ny's treated me well enough since I lost my leg, fifteen years ago; and look here—if you was to ask me any train that came through here, Sundays or weekdays, I'd tell you—without thinking."

He had become very grave, and his finger was laid upon the lappel of my coat.

A murmur, a rattle, a roar; and a red tail-light receded with a diminuendo of sound.

"That train's going to Haslemere," he said.

"You know Haslemere?"

"Yes, I know the whole line."

"Haslemere has become quite a literary colony."

"Ah," he said.

"Prof. Tyndall lived there, I believe."

"Prof. Tyndall—yes, he was a infidel, wasn't he?"

"And Mr. Grant Allen has a house there—you know Grant Allen by name?"

He wrinkled his brows.

"I daresay I know the gentleman well enough. There's lots of gentlemen stop and talk—same as you—and ask me how I lost my leg, and so on—but, bless you, they don't tell me their names, and it ain't my place to ask."

"Ah, I thought you might have seen his name on the bookstall there. He writes books, you know."

"No, I don't remember the gentleman's name," he said.

"I suppose you have the free run of the bookstall?" I said.

"Oh, I go and have a look round now and then," he said, waving his arm. "There's always something fresh to look at. Beats me how they think of all the things they do. There's Punch now, and Pick-me-Up, and Answers, and Sketch; for pictures, now, you don't want nothing better than that."

"Well, what is your favourite reading?"

"My favourite reading? Well, I'm not what you might call a great reader. Beats me how people find time for reading all they do. Seems to me if you go and look at all them books on that bookstall, you'll wonder how anyone could find time to read 'em all. Now I'll just tell you; it's like this with me: I've got to stand here day in and day out, and tell people how the trains run—he had been telling them at intervals while he talked with me—and that's as much as one poor 'ed can carry. Now and then, I grant you, I go and look at the books—like the Graphic and Tit-Bits. And then I sees 'Horrible Murder' on one bill, and 'Awful Tragedy' on another. And it's just the same thing. So I tell you what I do. Last thing before the bookstall shuts that boy there brings me a Evening News."

"And you read that?"

"I don't read nothing here," he said, emphasising the locality with a tap of his wooden leg—"it's only looking. But I go home—I live just over there"—he jerked his jolly face over his shoulder—"and after I've fed the fowls, and had a wash, and a bit of supper, I just sits down and reads the paper. It mayn't be more than ten minutes or a quarter of an hour, because I'm generally a bit sleepy. But I've got to know what's going on. And"—again he placed a forefinger on the lappel of my coat—"I've got a son that plays in the Woolwich Arsenal." He stumped forward a few paces and looked up at the clock.

"Epsom, 6.52, is your train, Sir, isn't it? You've just ten minutes."

C. R.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

WITH Christmas at our doors the publishing season has slackened; and we do not select any books for special comment.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

THE PARALLEL HISTORY OF THE JEWISH MONARCHY, PRINTED IN THE TEXT OF THE REVISED VERSION, 1898. C. J. Clay & Sons. 2s.

THE ANGLICAN REVIVAL. By J. H. Overton, D.D. Blackie & Son. 2s. 6d.

BRIGHT THOUGHTS TEXT BOOK. Digby, Long & Co.
 ABRAHAM AND HIS AGE. By George Henry Tomkins.
 Eyre & Spottiswoode.
 THE PROTESTANT FAITH; OR, SALVATION BY BELIEF. By Dwight Hinckley Olmstead. Third edition. G. P.
 Putnam's Sons. 3s. 6d.
 THE EXPOSITION. Edited by the Rev. W. Robertson Nicoll.
 Fifth Series: Vol. VI. Hodder & Stoughton. 7s. 6d.
 THE IDEAL LIFE, AND OTHER UNPUBLISHED ADDRESSES.
 By Henry Drummond. Hodder & Stoughton. 6s.
 THE BIBLE: EVERLEY EDITION. Edited by J. W. Mackail.
 Macmillan & Co. Vol. IV. 5s.
 THE CATHOLIC DIRECTORY, 1898. Burns & Oates. 1s. 6d.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

THE STORY OF CANADA. By Howard Angus Kennedy.
 Horace Marshall & Son.
 HENRY WHITEHEAD: 1826-1890. By the Rev. H. D.
 Rawnsley. James MacLehose & Sons.
 THE OXFORD MANUALS OF ENGLISH HISTORY: No. IV.,
 ENGLAND AND THE REFORMATION. By G. W. Powers, M.A.
 TRANSACTIONS OF THE ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY. Longmans, Green & Co.
 THE CID CAMPEADOR, AND THE WANING OF THE CRESCENT
 IN THE WEST. By H. Butler Clarke. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 5s.
 AMBROISE PARÉ AND HIS TIMES, 1510-1590. By Stephen
 Paget. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 10s. 6d.
 LIFE OF SIR JOHN HAWLEY GLOVER. By Lady Glover.
 Smith, Elder & Co. 14s.

POETRY, ESSAYS, CRITICISM.

THE INNER LIGHT, AND OTHER POEMS. By Ellen H. Ebbs.
 Digby, Long & Co.
 THE HABITANT, AND OTHER FRENCH CANADIAN POEMS.
 G. P. Putnam's Sons. 5s.
 WASHINGTON: A NATIONAL EPIC IN SIX CANTOS. By Edward Johnson Runk. G. P. Putnam's Sons.
 GUESSES AT TRUTH. By Two Brothers. Eversley edition.
 Macmillan & Co. 5s.

NEW EDITIONS OF FICTION.

VICTORIA. By George Meredith. Revised edition. Archibald Constable & Co. 6s.

ART.

THE VENETIAN PAINTERS OF THE RENAISSANCE. By Bernhard Berenson. Third edition. G. P. Putnam's Sons.
 21s. net.

SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

SOCIAL AND ETHICAL INTERPRETATIONS IN MENTAL DE-VELOPMENT. By James Mark Baldwin. Macmillan &
 Co.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

FROM THE TROPICS TO THE NORTH SEA. By Fanny A.
 Barkly. The Roxburghe Press. 3s. 6d.
 PICTURESQUE DUBLIN, OLD AND NEW. By Frances Gerard.
 Hutchinson & Co. 12s.

EDUCATIONAL.

SOLUTIONS OF THE EXERCISES IN TAYLOR'S EUCLID. By
 W. W. Taylor, M.A. Cambridge University Press. 6s.
 THE REIGN OF QUEEN ANNE. By Margaret A. Rolleston.
 George Philip & Son.
 THE WARWICK SHAKESPEARE: THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.
 Edited by H. L. Withers. Blackie & Son. 1s. 6d.
 THE JOURNAL OF EDUCATION: A MONTHLY RECORD AND REVIEW, 1897. William Rice
 ATHENÆUM PRESS SERIES: BURKE'S SPEECH ON CONCILIA-TION WITH AMERICA. Edited by Hammond Lamont.
 Ginn & Co. (New York). 2s. 6d.

JUVENILE BOOKS.

THE MONKEY THAT WOULD NOT KILL: STORIES BY HENRY
 DRUMMOND. Hodder & Stoughton. 2s. 6d. THE CRUISEMAN FAIRY-BOOK. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ON THE OUTSIDE EDGE: BRING DIVERSIONS IN THE HISTORY
 OF SKATING. By G. Herbert Fowler. Horace Cox.
 THE STORY OF THE POTTER. By Charles F. Burns.
 George Newnes, Ltd. DOD'S PERRAGE: 1898. Sampson
 Low. 10s. 6d. THE QUEST OF HAPPINESS. By Philip
 Gilbert Hamerton. Seeley & Co. 5s. A CROTIAN
 COMPOSER: NOTES TOWARD THE STUDY OF JOSEPH
 HAYDN. By W. H. Hadow, M.A. Seeley & Co.
 2s. 6d. A PILGRIM'S SCRIP: EXTRACTS FOR DAILY
 USE. From the Writings of Rev. J. W. Neale. Ellis &
 Keene. 2s. 6d. NORSE TALES AND SKETCHES. By Alexander L. Kielland. Cheap edition. Elliot Stock.
 NOTES ON CARPENTRY AND JOINERY. By Thomas Jay
 Evans. Vol. I. Chapman & Hall.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. NUTT AND THE "AUTHOR."

SIR,—As a general rule, the editor of a paper prefers his own columns for any reply to charges brought against his paper. The present case, however, seems to invite a departure from that rule.

It is now some four or five years since I received a visit from Mr. Nutt, and discussed with him many points connected with the administration of literary property. I found him, at the time, quite open to reason, and, as I believed, ready to recognise the fact that the Authors' Society has for its first and most important duty the discovery and the publication of all the facts connected with this administration. He seemed to me ready to aid in this work, not to resent it, and to recognise its importance to those who create and own literary property. The favourable impression thus left upon me, therefore, made it the more amazing to read in your columns the letter of last week signed by the name of Alfred Nutt.
 It is the kind of letter to which we are quite accustomed, but I did not expect, I confess, to see it signed by Mr. Nutt. And I deeply regret that he should have stooped to make such an attack in such language.

Leaving his abuse aside—one need not stoop with him—I ask your permission to state the facts of the case.

Let me first assure your readers, most seriously, that the figures published from time to time by the Authors' Society are not inventions. They are figures actually found in printers' estimates and printers' bills, and in publishers' accounts.

Some time ago one of the discontented gentry who are always trying to attack these figures adopted the ingenious method of adding two sheets to the number given in the Society's figures. He was thus enabled to prove them quite wrong—even ridiculously wrong. Another person adopted the method of publishing figures of his own—which his own firm contradicted the next day by a confidential circular sent to the trade. Mr. Nutt has adopted a method somewhat analogous.
 He enlarges the average book. Thus he lays it down as a rule that the average six-shilling novel consists of 388 pages "at least"—note carefully the words "at least"— i.e., 24½ sheets of 16 pages each. If this is the "least" number of sheets or pages possible, the average book must be at least 450 pages, while a long novel would perhaps run into 600 pages.
 This assumption is one which few of your readers are likely to question or to understand.
 That it should have been advanced is amazing from one point of view; intelligible from another. It makes the figures which follow possible, and it clearly proves our figures to be quite wrong.

Let us, therefore, examine into this assumption. We want to find the length of an average six-shilling novel. I take down a few from my shelves:—Rudyard Kipling, The Light that Failed, 15½ sheets (248 pp.); Becke, A First Fleet Family, 17 sheets (271 pp.); Jacob's
Many Cargoes, 15½ sheets (247 pp.); Barrie,
A Window in Thrums, 13½ sheets (217 pp.);
 Anthony Hope, Prisoner of Zenda, 19½ sheets (310 pp.) Where, now, is Mr. Nutt's "at least"? Where are his 24½ sheets and 388 pages "at least"? Here are five most popular works—calculate the average length for yourself—I will give no more instances. As a matter of fact, the six-shilling novel is becoming shorter and not longer, and as an average volume we assume that 17 sheets is fairly representative. Even if we took 18 sheets or 19 sheets the result would be very little different. But to take a book of 24½ sheets as an average length, not to speak of a minimum length, is perfectly monstrous.

Our average, however, is not taken from these five books just quoted; it is the result of comparison and experience. The Society's secretary has arrived at the conclusion that such a number of sheets—viz., 17—fairly represents the average six-shilling novel in length. In cases where it is longer it is generally found that the type is larger, so that there must be a corresponding reduction in the cost of composition. Thus the Prisoner of Zenda has 19½ sheets with 51,000 words; Many Cargoes takes only 15½ sheets with 86,000 words. But I do not suppose there was much difference in the cost of production of either work.

Now for our figures. They are "publishers' figures"—i.e., a writer with a single book would probably have to pay more. We assume, then, a book of 17 sheets, or 272 pages, the type to be small pica, the number of words in a page to be 282. We have, for the whole edition of 1,500 copies:

	£	s.	d.
Composition at £1 7s. 6d.
per sheet ... ..	23	7	6
Printing at 17s. 6d. per sheet	14	17	6
Paper at £1 7s. per sheet...	22	19	0
Binding at 4d. per vol. ...	25	0	0
	86	4	0

Since these figures were collected paper has gone down, so that we may reduce the charge on paper very materially. Let the total stand, however, so as to include corrections. The charge for binding is that commonly made by the binder when the publisher can order a large quantity of cloth at once. In the Author, however, the cost of production was set down at £100, not £86. Why was this? Simply in order to include the advertising. On this class of book—viz., a book by a new hand whose work no publisher would take unless the writer paid for it in advance—£14 is much more than would be generally spent on advertising. However,
 Mr. Nutt's assertion, that no allowance is made for advertising and corrections, is, you see, without foundation. As for circularising, if any, that would come out of the author's preliminary advance of £110. He says further, that review and presentation copies are not included.
 He estimates the item at one hundred copies.
 I do not. I estimate it, for such a book, at forty.
 Further, he forgets the "overs." Now on an edition of 1,500 there would probably be enough
 "overs" to meet this demand. If, however, by any amazing accident there were no "overs" we should have to subtract this number from those sold; but we should also subtract the same number from the author's royalties, a fact which seems to have escaped Mr. Nutt's penetration.
 The reduction, indeed, makes matters much worse for Mr. Nutt, because it deprives the author of £5 10s. and the publisher of £1 10s.
 After all, that is not much to make a fuss about,
 is it?

Therefore all the facts advanced by the Author remain; viz.,

1. If 1,000 copies are sold the author makes a profit of £2 10s. to the publisher's profit of £72.
2. If 1,500 copies are sold the author makes
 £65, and the publisher more than £90.
3. And all this while the author has paid
 £110 in advance, and the publisher has had no risk whatever.

Your readers now understand that our figures were not "based on the conviction that the publisher was swindling the author." There is nothing about swindling except in Mr. Nutt's brain. It is called in my paper "a fancy offer," which is a very good name for it. The publisher had a perfect right to make any offer he pleased, and the author to refuse it if he pleased. All, so far, was fair and above board. I really do not know whether the author accepted the proposal or not—I hope not. The secretary knows, however, if the information were required. There is another point. Considering that the publisher would not take any portion of the risk I incline to the opinion that the sale of the work would be numbered by a very few, in which case the author would get nothing but the honour and glory which generally follow on the production of a work which can be published on no other terms. And so I dismiss Mr. Nutt.

I would advise other persons anxious to follow Mr. Nutt's admirable method of disproving our figures not to begin by saying that no one heeds the Author, and then to take a column and a quarter in order to prove that he himself pays very particular attention to what the Author says. It is a great pleasure to me, as the editor, to know that the paper is so carefully read.

WALTER BESANT.

MR. WATSON'S POETRY.

SIR,—In the ACADEMY's review of Mr. Watson's poetry it is stated that "from time to time he would write lyrics, and, of all singers most deliberate, will call himself 'a tarrying minstrel, who finds, not fashions his numbers'"; the implication being that there is something of arrogance in such a claim, since Mr. Watson is eminently a poet who laboriously "fashions his numbers," his great defect being a lack of spontaneity. I venture to submit that the context in which the phrase appears does not substantiate any such suggestion.

The passage occurs at the commencement of the "Hymn to the Sea," where we read as follows:

"Grant, O regal in bounty, a subtle and delicate largess;
Grant an ethereal alms, out of the wealth of thy soul:
Suffer a tarrying minstrel, who finds not fashions his numbers,—
Who, from the commune of air, cages the volatile song,—
Here to capture and prison some fugitive breath of thy descendant, Thine and his own as thy roar lisped on the lips of a shell."

Here the thought surely is, that if the sea will give the poet but a small portion of its spirit there will be no need for him to fashion the song. The numbers are already provided, and only require to be "caged." It will be enough for him to capture them as they fall air-borne upon his ear, and to reproduce them though—it may be—faintly, as the shell reproduces the roar of the sea. He is content to be the vehicle; he makes no claim to be the fashioner or creator of the song.

A. E. THISELTON.

AUSONIUS.

SIR,—I was far from forgetting the existence of Ausonius, the strange Christian poet of the "Rosæ," "Mosella," and "Cupido Crucifixus," with many other things—some exquisite, some infamous. I should have saved myself from Mr. Chambers's rather cruel suggestion had I used some such phrase as "There is no such person as Ausonius in this connexion," or "from a mythological point of view." I relied, perhaps, too much upon the reader's familiarity with M. de Heredia's context.

THE REVIEWER.

A NEW SHAKESPEARE CRYPTOGRAM. WAS THE AUTHOR OF THE PLAYS AN IRISHMAN?

SIR,—The cryptogram now put forward for the first time is to be found in a well-known passage from "Hamlet":

"Hamlet: Yes, by Saint Patrick, but there is Horatio,
And much offence too, touching this vision here,—
It is an honest ghost, that let me tell you. . . ."

The phrase, "by Saint Patrick!" has ever been a crux for the critics. "How," writes Warburton, "the poet comes to make Hamlet swear by Saint Patrick I know not. However, at that time all the whole northern world had their learning from Ireland." Warburton openly confesses his inability to solve the enigma, which later commentators have not attempted.

The incongruous oath, it should be noted, is used by Hamlet where he swears his friends to the most solemn secrecy; and hidden for ages in the text lies another secret—less awful, but none the less mysterious.

The keynote of our cryptogram is the Hibernian name, seemingly pitchforked into the play without object or meaning—

"(1) Patrick. . . ."

Our attention is again arrested by the word "Horatio," which has the same number of letters as "Patrick—the cabalistic seven—the final 'o' being punctuated by a comma—"o." Here we have a further clue, because "o" followed by a comma, and coming directly after the name Patrick, obviously suggests an Irish surname. We have now:

"(2) Patrick O'. . . ."

The end of the first line having been reached, we naturally turn to the second, or line 2. The mental process involved in this act naturally forces into our minds the idea of two, while before our eyes stands the word "too," which philologists tell us was originally equivalent in meaning to "two." We add this word to our line:

"(3) Patrick O'Too. . . ."

After this the solution of the cryptogram becomes slightly more difficult; its author probably thinking that he had at first made it too easy. The mind having been forced to dwell twice successively upon the numeral 2, frames for itself the equation, "2 + 2 = 4."

Having found the first letter of our surname at the end of a line, we now turn to the end of the third line of the quotation—"four" being still our predominant idea—where we find the fourth letter from the end, "l," which gives us:

"(4) Patrick O'Tool. . . ."

The imperfect spelling of the surname may be perfected by passing from "l" to the next letter in the same line, still counting backwards:

"(5) Patrick O'Toole. . . ."

Lastly, between the final "o" in "Horatio" and the "too" which we have already commented upon, stands the remarkable word "offence," which easily turns into the designation "of Ennis," the birthplace of Patrick O'Toole:

"(6) Patrick O'Toole of Ennis."

So far the cryptogram is incomplete, but no doubt further elucidation awaits the investigation of the learned. Meanwhile, this Irish name hidden in so suggestive a context, this "ambiguous giving out to note," cannot have been purposeless. And, while the true name of him we call "Shakespeare" is yet a mystery, may we not ask—Is one name, greatest of all, to be added to those of Farquhar, Goldsmith, and Sheridan, and other Irish dramatists? was "Shakespeare" the pseudonym of Patrick O'Toole?

GEORGE NEWCOMEN.

Dublin: Dec. 9.

MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

SIR,—I desire to thank your reviewer for his very favourable notice of my book. Concerning that feature to which he takes serious exception you will, perhaps, kindly allow me to make an explanation. The charges brought by me against the late Sir John Skelton are certainly grave, and in some cases strongly put; but, as your reviewer apprehends, they were intended to appear during Sir John's lifetime. Had I known that he was to have no opportunity to reply, several of the expressions would have been softened, and the grounds of some of the charges made more plain. Two of those to which your reviewer objects may be specially mentioned.

After exposing a gross misrepresentation of Knox's conduct (p. 397), I put the question: "Has Mr. Skelton been drawing on a disordered imagination?" As he had himself spoken of Knox's "disordered imagination" (Maitland of Lethington, ii. 165), I was in this case merely retorting his own words—words which he had wilfully used towards one who could not possibly defend himself.

In connexion with the articles drawn up, and signed by several of the Lords, before the Riccio murder, Sir John says in his Mary Stuart (p. 78): "He [i.e., Moray] now returned to make Darnley king; and that there might be no mistake, either then or afterwards, the shameful bargain was reduced to writing. These are the articles to which Moray set his hand." Then follows within inverted commas the summary which I have so severely denounced. In his Maitland of Lethington (ii. 164), the same summary is introduced in a very similar way—in words distinctly implying that he is proceeding to quote the articles themselves. Although the articles were carefully printed from the original by the Maitland Club in 1843, and again by Sir William Fraser in 1890, Sir John, who mentions no authority in his Mary Stuart, only refers in his Lethington to "Keith (iii. 261)." Keith merely gives them in an abridged form; but even compared with that abridged form Sir John's presentation of the articles deserves emphatic condemnation. Without the slightest hint of having done so, he not only compresses the phraseology, but he omits a vital stipulation, and essentially alters the terms of what he retains. With his vital omission I have dealt on p. 385. His compression and alteration of the terms can best be shown by short parallel quotations.

KEITH.

"1. The said Earls, Lords, and complices, shall become, and by the tenor hereof becomes, true subjects and faithful servants to the noble and mighty Prince Henry, King of Scotland, husband to our Sovereign Lady; That they and theirs will take his part in all his causes and quarrels against whomsoever it be, to the uttermost of their power, and shall be friends to his friends, and enemies to his enemies, and therein neither spare their lands, lives, or estates.

2. The said Lords and their complices shall, at the first Parliament after their return grant, give, and ordain the Matrimonial Crown to the said noble Prince all the days of his life."

It was this glaring departure from his authority that I characterised as "an imperfect, a misleading, a dishonest summary!" Though in the circumstances, perhaps, I should not now say so, it still appears to me that this divergence cannot be regarded as accidental.

D. HAY FLEMING.

St. Andrews, Dec. 13.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

"More Tramps Abroad,"
By Mark Twain.

It is recognised that in this book we have Mark Twain as traveller and thinker rather than as humorist. "The jester," says the Daily Telegraph,

"is almost completely merged in the traveller, and though now and again he points a witty moral to a sober tale, or 'rounds up' a page of statistics by a flash of humour in the true style of Artemus Ward, in the main he is serious, sometimes even sombre minded to a marked degree. . . . One jest he fires off on leaving, perhaps the last on hand. 'Two members of my family elected to go with me, also a carbuncle. The dictionary says a carbuncle is a kind of jewel. Humour is out of place in a dictionary'—and then for the remainder of the five hundred pages, saving for an occasional sprightly story or happy aside, we are as staid as the majority of travellers who do the round tour of the world in the least possible number of days and glory in that accomplishment."

This critic thinks that Mark Twain is least

SKELTON.

"The Earl of Moray shall become a true subject and faithful servant to the noble and mighty Prince Henry, King of Scotland—shall be the friend of his friends and the enemy of his enemies. He shall at the first Parliament after his return grant, give, and ordain the Matrimonial Crown to the said noble Prince all the days of his life."

pleasant when most political, as, for instance, when he writes:

"Rhodesia is a happy name for that land of piracy and pillage, and puts the right stain upon it."

Or when he says of Mr. Cecil Rhodes:

"I admire him, I frankly confess it; and when his time comes I shall buy a piece of the rope for a keepsake."

To the Daily Chronicle the book suggests these interesting remarks:

"We accept Mark Twain as just the type of all the best American qualities of the best Americans on travel. He is always full of interest in everything he sees, and eager for information, which always appears to come quite new to him, no matter how familiar. He rushes from sight to sight, full of curiosity, and always in high spirits. He does not know the meaning of the words boredom and blasé. There is about him that country-cousin freshness which makes nice Americans the most delightful of companions. He likes 'culture,' but is not overcultured; and enjoys history, but does not know enough about it to make himself unpleasant. Above all, he is entirely frank about what he likes or dislikes, what he knows or has never heard of. He is quite free from the cant of secondhand criticism, and sees things for himself, no matter what the correct and recognised verdict on them may be. And is it not the perfect frankness of her opinions which makes the American girl so attractive?"

This critic then indulges in a column and a half of quotations, in the course of which he remarks:

"Perhaps the best is the 'Delicately Improper Tale,' which has no ending, and describes a young man in a very embarrassing situation as 'petting the horse a moment to secure its compassion and loyalty.' But, after all, the value of the book lies in what Mark Twain saw himself, and his own opinions on it all. His peculiar power of shrewd observation, and a wit which gains its effect by a kind of dry absurdity or exaggeration, is here seen at its best."

The Scotsman's critic agrees that humour is not the strong point of Mark Twain's latest book; but he likes the "informality" of the book, a quality which other critics have called disorder. And he likes the Pudd'nhead maxims, especially this one:

"To be good is noble; but to show others how to be good is nobler, and no trouble."

On the whole, the Speaker's remark—"not at his best"—is typical of the reviews of More Tramps Abroad. Not less so is this critic's remark that Mark Twain is "a jolly good fellow."

"Ballads of the Fleet," By Rennell Rodd.

THE Navy has found simultaneously two singers to give voice to its traditions and aspirations. We gathered the opinion of the critics last week on Mr. Henry Newbolt's Admirals All. The Times, after referring to Mr. Rodd's experience as a traveller and a diplomatist, says:

"The greater part of the book deals, in long Tennysonian ballad metre, with the exploits of the Elizabethan seamen, and especially of Drake, the poet's hero, whom he carries through many a thrilling adventure to the last moment when Elizabeth took his sword and when

She bared his blade, she rose a queen, a queen to mar or make—

'My little pirate, rise,' she cried, 'and be Sir Francis Drake.'

The ballads will naturally suggest comparisons, especially with Tennyson's 'Revenge,' the crown and flower of modern Elizabethan ballads, and with Mr. Kipling; but Mr. Rodd would be the last to desire to put himself into competition with either. Still he writes vigorously and well, as one who knows from experience, and not from books, of what fine stuff the English race is made, how it rises to meet danger, and how it loves the chances, the changes, and the terrors of the sea."

The Westminster Gazette makes this critical comparison:

"If only we could roll Mr. Kipling and Mr. Rennell Rodd into one, we should come very near the ideal ballad-writer. Mr. Rodd is as much too smooth with us as Mr. Kipling is too rough. The one carries us along on an easy stream, the other dashes us upon rocks and throws us bruised and beaten on the shore."

And this critic adds:

"Mr. Rodd's chief failing is a dangerous facility which carries him away from the matter in hand into pretty reveries and charming descriptions. You feel that he could go on for ever, often delighting you, and never falling below a certain standard of literary execution. But these very gifts are somewhat against the strong light and shade and stirring climax which the ballad requires. They also not infrequently prolong the poem to a length which exacts a good deal from the reader."

But he quotes, with enthusiasm, the following lines from the first of the poems, "Children of the Sea":

"'It was little enough like boyhood's dream—
when the light on a sunset sail,
To eyes that followed the outward-bound,
was more than a fairy tale;

To crouch chilled through on the dripping planks and watch for the roving lights,
When green seas break on the dripping prow through the endless wintry nights.

When the blast drives down from Bergen,
and the cloud-banks blot the moon,
And the evil sea is a churning race from the chalk cliffs to the dune.'

"This is good writing, and it matters not that Mr. Kipling has shown the way. In short, there is good writing everywhere throughout these poems."

The Scotsman says Mr. Rodd's poems "are all written with the same inspiring gallantry."

THIS historical romance comes in for high praise and acute criticism. Literature gives most of the first: "The most enthusiastic devotee of Scott can read Lawrence Claverling with enjoyment." But says this critic:

"Mr. Mason is, of course, not a Sir Walter. If he could produce some thirty stories as good as Lawrence Claverling he might claim a nearer comparison. We miss, too, the broad, clear touch; the machinery is a little too intricate; the sense of proportion not always exact, the characters—Herbert and his wife, for instance—sometimes lacking in individuality. But there are scenes of singular power. . . . The whole story is, it seems to us, conceived in the best vein of historical romance."

The Spectator thinks "the verdict of most readers will probably be that he got a great deal more than his deserts in winning the hand of so charming a lady as Mistress Dorothy Curwen."

NOTICE.

IN response to complaints as to the difficulty of obtaining this paper, we now publish a LIST OF AGENTS from whom "THE ACADEMY" may be obtained. We shall be pleased to receive applications for agencies from Booksellers and Stationers, and to supply them direct or through their London Agents.

LONDON.

Wholesale.
Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, Strand
" CASSEL & LAMB, Salisbury Square
" DAWSON & SON, Bream's Buildings
" KENT & CO., Paternoster Row
" KINGSBURY & CO., Racquet Court, E.C.
" MARLBOROUGH & CO., Old Bailey, E.C.
" H. MARSHALL & SONS, Temple Avenue, London
" SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & CO., Stationers' Hall
Mr. GEORGE VICKERS, Strand [Court
Messrs. H. WILLIAMS & CO., 48, Old Bailey, E.C.
" TERRY & CO., Hatton Garden
Mr. E. W. ALLEN, 4, Ave Maria Lane, E.C.
Mr. POULTER, Temple
Messrs. COWIE & CO., 17, Gresham Street, E.C.
" FARRINGTON & CO., St. Bride Street
" RICHIE & CO., Red Lion Court
Mr. ROGERS, 32, Portland Street, Soho
Messrs. STECKERT & CO., Star Yard, W.C.
Mr. B. F. STEVENS, 4, Trafalgar Square
LONDON and SUBURBAN DISTRIBUTING AGENCY,
Bouverie Street
Mr. WALTERS, Bell Yard, Temple Bar
London, E.O.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Liverpool Street Station (Main Line)
" " " " Book Stall, Cannon Street
" " " " " " Ludgate Hill Station
Mr. BLENKINS, Bream's Buildings, Fetter Lane
Mr. SMITH, 14, Curator Street, Chancery Lane
Mr. MANNERS, 68, Fetter Lane
Mr. KELLY, 2, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane
Mr. WALKER, Mitre Court, Temple
Mr. JENKINSON, Shoe Lane, Fleet Street
Mr. WALKER, Imperial Arcade, Ludgate Hill
Mr. COLE, 27, Queen Street, Cheapside
Mr. BERRY, Cullum Street, Fenchurch Street
Mr. STYLES, Fishmonger Alley, Fenchurch Street
Mr. ABBOTT, 32, Eastcheap
Mr. ATKINSON, London Bridge
Messrs. W. H. EVERETT & SON, Royal Exchange
Mr. POTTLE, Royal Exchange
Mr. BLAIR, Royal Exchange
Mr. DAVIES, 1, Finch Lane, Cornhill
Messrs. LEATHWAITE & SIMMONS, 1, Pope's Head
Alley, Cornhill
Mr. R. GRAVATT, King Street, Cheapside
Mr. OWEN, 35, Little Britain
Mr. RALPH, 57, Little Britain
London, W.O.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stalls, Euston (Express side)
" " " " " " King's Cross, G.N.R.
" " " " " " St. Pancras, Mid. R.
" " " " " " Charing Cross
Mr. WOOD, Portsmouth Street, Lincoln's Inn Fields
Mr. BUNDOCK, St. Martin's Court, St. Martin's Lane
Mr. PERKS, 41, St. Martin's Lane
London, S.W.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stalls, Waterloo Station
" " " " " " (Main Line) " "
" " " " " " (Loop Line) " "
" " " " " " Victoria (L.B. & S.C.) Stn.
" " " " " " (L.C. & D.) " "
" " " " " " (District) " "
" " " " " " Richmond
Mr. BLACKBURN, 14, Lowndes Street, Lowndes Square
Messrs. RASTALL & SON, Eccleston Street, corner of Ebury Street
Mr. LOVELL, 140, Fulham Road
Mr. NEWBURY, 196, Fulham Road
Mr. H. S. EDWARDS, 303, Fulham Road
Messrs. H. SPORNE & SON, 270, Fulham Road
Miss LANGLEY, 694, King's Road
Mr. STONE, 510, King's Road
Mr. J. SUTTON, 69, Cheyne Walk, Chelsea
Mr. CHANNON, 82, Brompton Road
Mr. MONK, 9, Montpelier Road, Brompton Road
London, S.E.

Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, London Bridge Station (Main, S.E.R.)

London, W.
Messrs. SMITH & SON, Paddington Station.
Book Stall, Kensington
Mr. ANDREWS, 1, Bridge Street, Hammersmith
Mr. KETTON, 70, North End Road, West Kensington Station
Messrs. HOBBS & CO., 154, Earl's Court Road
Mr. BATES, 2, Station Buildings, Gloucester Road Station
Mr. HALL, 17, Bute Street, West Kensington Station

PROVINCIAL TOWNS.

Bath.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Mid. R.
" " " " " " G.W.R.
" STANFORD & MANN, New Street
Mr. ASTON, Smallbrook Street
Mr. BEACON, Pershore Street

Birmingham.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, G.W.R.
" " " " " " L. & N.W.R.

Bradford.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Mid. R.
" " " " " " L. & Y. & G.N. Ry.
Messrs. BILLBROUGH & KITCHINGHAM, Dale Street
Mr. W. H. CLOUGH, 28, Forster Square
Mr. HOPPER, Bridge Street
Mr. TROTTER, Cheapside

Brighton.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Bristol.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, G.W.R.
Carlisle.
Mr. STEWART, 36, Botchergate, and English Street
Messrs. MUIR & CO., English Street
Messrs. OHAS. THURNHAM & SON, English Street
Messrs. MENZIES, Railway Station

Cheltenham.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, G.W.R.
Chester.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Mid. R.
Mr. ASTON, Market Square
Mr. MOUNTFORD, Northgate Street
Mr. C. W. THOMAS, Northgate Street
Messrs. MINSHILL & MEESON, Eastgate Row
Mr. AINSWORTH, 64, Foregate Street

Cambridge.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall
Messrs. DEIGHTON, BELL & CO., Booksellers
Orew.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall
Mr. EARDLEY, Chester Bridge
Mr. W. DISHART, 39, Nantwich Road

Croydon.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall
Durham.
Mr. CALDCLEUGH, Junr., 6, North Street
Mr. JOHN PALMER, Saddler Street
Mrs. SLACK, North Road

Darlington.
Mr. WALKER, Railway Station
Exeter.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Queen Street
Gloucester.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, G.W.R.

Ipswich.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall
Jarrow.
Messrs. ROBINSON & CO., Ormond Street
Keswick.

CHAPLIN'S LIBRARY
Liverpool.
Messrs. SMITH & SON, Castle Street (Wholesale)
" " " " " " Book Stall, Lime Street Station
" " " " " " Exchange " "
" " " " " " Central " "
Mr. McKEON, Exchange Street East
Mr. WINTERBOTTOM, Moorfields
Mr. PARTINGTON, Renshaw Street

Leeds.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Wellington Street " " " " " " Railway Station
" " " " " " Central do.
Messrs. GOODALL & SUDDICK, New Station
Mr. JOHNSON, 1, Call Street
Mr. BURNISTON, 48, Briggate, and Covered Market
Mr. CORNWALL, Upper Mill Hill
Mr. N. G. MORRISON, Bishopsgate
Mr. E. JOWETT, 51, North Street
Mr. RICHARD JACKSON, 16, Commercial Street
Mr. JAMES MILLS, 39, Bond Street

Leicester.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Mid. R.

Manchester.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Depot (Wholesale)
" " " " " " Book Stall, Exchange By Station
" " " " " " London Rd., L. & N.
" " " " " " W. R. Station
" " " " " " ditto, M.B. & L. R.
" " " " " " Station
" " " " " " Central Ry. Station
" " " " " " Victoria Ry. Station
Mr. JOHN HEYWOOD (Wholesale Newsagent)
Mr. ABEL HEYWOOD, Oldham Street
Messrs. MORRIS & CO., 43, Deansgate
Mr. WHEELER, Pall Mall
Mr. POWELL, Corporation Street

Malvern (Great).
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stalls

Newcastle-on-Tyne.
Mr. C. O. ROSS, 35, Side, Dean Street
Mr. WATMOUGH, 40, Newgate Street
Mr. J. COCHRANE, 291, Westgate Hill
Mr. J. A. DE LACY, 218A, Westgate Road
Mr. RENDER, Newgate Street
Mr. MACEY, New Bridge Street

Nottingham.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Mid. R.

Norwich.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Thorpe Station

Oxford.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall
Messrs. WILLIAMS & NORRIS, Booksellers

Peterborough.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Preston.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Portsmouth.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall
Plymouth.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall (Millbay)

Reading.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall
Stafford.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Stockton.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall
Mr. J. R. WOOD, Caxton House

Southampton.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Southport.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, L. & Y. R.
Shields (North).

Mr. CLARKE, Nile Street
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S, Railway Station
Shields (South).

Mr. LAWSON, Fowler Street
Mr. LEARMOUNT, 76, King Street

Sheffield.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, Victoria Station

Thirsk.
Mr. WALKER, Railway Station

Tunbridge Wells.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, S.E.R.

Warrington.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

Windsor.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall, G.W.R.
" " " " " " S.W.R.

Wimbleton.
Messrs. SMITH & SON'S Book Stall

York.
Mr. BENTLEY, 63, Coney Street
Mr. GILBERTSON, Silver Street
Mr. A. W. OUTHWAITE, 35, Market Street
Mr. SAMPSON, 13, Coney Street, and Book Stall, Ry. Stn.

SCOTLAND.
Edinburgh.

Mr. ARCHIBALD, 2, Dairy Road, Haymarket
Mr. W. G. B. ABOUS, 43, Broughton Street
Mr. ELLIOTT, 28, Princes Street
Mr. FAIRGRIEVE, 7 & 9, Cockburn Street
Messrs. GRANT & SON, 107, Princes Street
Mr. GARDNER, Dundas Street
Mr. JAMES HAIG, 1, Antigua Street
Messrs. KEITH & CO., 68, Princes Street
Mr. WM. KAY, 5, Bank Street
Messrs. MOODIE BROS., 9, Antigua Street
Miss MACK, 10, Clark Street
Messrs. MENZIES & CO., Hanover Street (Wholesale)
" " " " " " Waverley Station (two Stalls)
" " " " " " Central Station (Caledonian)
Mr. MacPHAIL, 33, St. Andrew's Square
Mr. ROBINSON, 111, Leith Street
Mr. F. M. SLOAN, 19, Broughton Street
Mr. W. M. URQUHART, 46, Queen's Ferry Road

Glasgow.
Mr. BLYTHWOOD, Sauchiehall Street
Mr. WM. BARE (Wholesale), 15, Dumbarton Road
82, Sauchiehall Street

Mr. M. DICKINSON, 192, Sauchiehall Street
Mr. GRAHAM (Wholesale), 108, Eglinton Street
Mr. GRAHAM'S Book Stall, College St. Station, G. & S.W.R.
Queen Street Station

Mr. HIGGINS, 13, Stobcross Street
Mr. HOLMES (Wholesale), St. Enoch's Square
Mr. KEARNEY, High Street
Mr. HOOD, 229, Argyle Street
Mr. WM. LOVE (Wholesale), 221, Argyle Street
Messrs. MENZIES & CO. (Wholesale), 90, West Hill Street
Central Station (two Stalls)

Mr. MOORE, Charing Cross
Mr. ROBERTSON, 142, Dumbarton Road
Mr. STEWART, 187, George Street
Mrs. WALKER, 230, Dumbarton Road
Messrs. WILSON & KING (Wholesale), 83, London Road

Leith.
Mr. GEORGE ELLIOTT, 71, Elm Row, Leith Walk
Mr. CHARLES DRUMMOND, 49, Duke Street
Mr. FRASER, 174, Leith Walk

Mr. A. HARDIE, 8, Eastern Road
Mr. C. HUNTER, 79, Brunswick Street, Leith Walk
Messrs. JOHN NAYLOR & CO., 147, Great Junction Street

Lockerbie.
Messrs. MENZIES & CO., Railway Station

Stirling.
ENEAS MACKAY, 43, Murray Place

IRELAND.
Dublin.
Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Backville Street

AMERICA.
New York.
Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM & SONS

PARIS.
Messrs. GALIGNANI, 224, Rue de Rivoli

CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES.

THE FACE of CHRIST: a Painter's Study of the Likeness from the Time of the Apostles to the Present Day, by Sir Wm. B. Baylis, P.R.S.A. with Twenty-four Illustrations, appears in the JANUARY PART of

THE MAGAZINE OF ART.

NOW READY, price 1s. 4d.

Among the Contents are:

- LADY SCOTT-MONCRIEFF. By Sir Henry Raeburn, R.A.
RENE-BILLOTTE: the Painter of the Parisian Suburbs. By M. H. Spitzmann. Illustrated.
ENAMELS. By Alex. Fisher. With Nine Illustrations.
THE ART COLLECTION at BELL MOOR, the HOUSE of Mr. THOMAS J. BARRATT. By Joseph Gasea. With Six Illustrations.
THE ART SALES of 1897. By W. Roberts. With Seven Illustrations.
NEEDLEWORK as a MODE of ARTISTIC EXPRESSION. By Walter Crane. With Seven Illustrations.
THE QUEEN'S TREASURES of ART. Decorative Art at Windsor Castle: Inlaid Wood Furniture. By Frederick S. Robinson. With Six Illustrations.
ARTISTIC "ALPHABETS" With an Illustration.
THE CHATEAU CHANTILLY and the MUSÉE CONDÉ. By Robert de la Sizeranne. With Two Illustrations.
THE ART MOVEMENT—
 The Recent Irish Textiles Exhibition. By Annie B. Maguire. With Four Illustrations.
 Ecclesiastical Embroidery. With an Illustration.
NOTES and QUERIES.
THE CHRONICLE of ART. With Six Illustrations.
 Cassell & Company, Ltd., London; and all Booksellers.

"A TREMENDOUS SIXPENNYWORTH."—Globe.

NOW READY, price 6d.

CASSELL'S MAGAZINE,

For JANUARY, Containing:

- THE BEST TOBACCOGANNING. By Theo. A. Cook. Illustrated.
SEE YUP. By Baer Hamre. Illustrated.
STAGE ANIMALS. By W. B. Rosemarion. Illustrated.
ON A WINTER SEA: THE MAN-EMPRESS. A Complete Story. By Max Fenimore. Illustrated by Gordon Brown.
IN THE WORLD of SOCIETY. Brides. By Mrs. F. H. Williamson. With Portraits.
LOOKING DOWN on PARIS. By Edmund R. Spearman. Illustrated.
THE DEFENCE of the CHATEAU. By D. H. Parry. Illustrated.
CAPITALS at PLAY: Copenhagen. By F. Fletcher Robinson. With Photographic Views.
IN THE ARENA. With numerous Portraits.
SPECTER GOLD: a Romance of Klondyke. By Headon Hill. Illustrated.
THE CRY. By Matthias Barr.
FROM a CLUB WINDOW. By L. F. Austin.
THE OLD BAILEY. By a Member of the Bar. Illustrated.
A SNAKE'S LOVE STORY: for Children. By Myra Hamilton. Illustrated by Marie Mills.
 &c. &c.

SUBSCRIBERS TO

CASSELL'S MAGAZINE for December

and JANUARY are entitled for the sum of One Shilling, to a copy of a Facsimile of the MS. of DICKENS'S CHRISTMAS CAROL. Up to the present time a few copies only of this literary curiosity have been issued to the public, at a charge of Half-a-Guinea a copy.

Cassell & Company, Ltd., London; and all Booksellers.

JANUARY, 1898.—Price Sixpence.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.

THE DUENNA of a GENIUS. By M. E. Francis (Mrs. Francis Bundell), Author of "In a North Country Village," "A Daughter of the Soil," &c. Chapter I. Introductions. Chapter II. Staccato.

THE TALE of a FLINT. By A. M. Bell.

THE FLIGHT of a SOUL. By Walter Henries Pollock.

THE LAST CROSSING. By Harold Child.

THE RE-ARISEN MOTHER; or, the Return of the Dead. By A. G. Gilchrist.

THE AUTHOR of "MONSIEUR TONSON." By Austin Dobson.

THE STORY of the DONNA from 1833 to 1897.

I. By the Editor.

II. By the Author of "Charles Lowder."

AT THE SIGN of the RHIP. By Andrew Lang.

London, New York, and Bombay: LONGMANS, GREEN & Co.

People's Edition, price 6d., with Portrait. (Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V., with Two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Fumival Street, E.C.

THE MOST NUTRITIOUS.

E P P S ' S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A

BREAKFAST AND SUPPER.

FIRST PART.

NEW SERIES OF

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL.

Now ready. Price 7d.

"A miniature library in general literature. Something for all classes of readers."—Scotsman.

"An admirable combination of what is best in the old and the new style of periodical."—Spectator.

"The articles are delightfully blended, instruction and information holding a conspicuous place."

Contains

OPENING CHAPTERS OF JOHN BUCHAN'S

NEW NOVEL,

JOHN BURNET OF BARNES.

The story is full of dramatic incident, and may be expected to give its author a high place amongst the best modern writers of tales of romantic adventure.

Complete Stories by

J. ARTHUR BARRY.

JAMES PATEY.

D. L. JOENSTONE.

Among other Articles in

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL are

THE FATE of SIR WALTER SCOTT'S MANU-

SCRIPTS.

UNCLAIMED FORTUNES.

AT THE MAKING of CANADA. ISABELLA FRYIE

Mayo.

WATER, the MODERN RIVAL of COAL.

THE RIDERS of the PLAIN. By Roger Pocock.

THE MONTH: SCIENCE and ARTS, &c.

Annual Subscription, 7s. 6d., or including postage to any address at home or abroad, 9s. 6d.

Press Opinions on

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL

CHRISTMAS NUMBER, Price 1s.

"In quality and quantity will compare with the best."

"A wholesome corrective to the mass of illustrated literature."

"Chambers's" does not rely upon pictorial illustrations for its popularity, but rather upon the excellence of its reading matter."

On sale at all Booksellers' and Bookstalls.

W. & R. CHAMBERS (Limited), London and Edinburgh.

Price 2d., by post 2½d.; yearly subscription (including Supplements), 2s. 8d.

THE LITERARY GUIDE

And Rationalist Review.

THE JANUARY NUMBER CONTAINS:

THE PARTING of the WAYS. By Charles E. Hooper.

THE WORK of RATIONALISM. By R. BIRNELL, B.Sc., Ph.D.

THE PRESENT POSITION of the BIBLE. By P. J. GOULD.

THE NON-RELIGION of the FUTURE.

THE GREATEST of SCIENTISTS.

SCHOPENHAUER.

A LIBRARY of GREAT THOUGHTS.

SIGNS and WARNINGS (Gleaned from the Religious Press).

RANDOM JOTTINGS.

LITERARY CHATS—X. With Dr. W. R. Washington Sullivan.

IN MEMORY of GEORGE JULIAN HARNEY.

RATIONALISM in the MAGAZINES.

Also a 4-page Supplement, entitled "Origins of Sacrifice," being a Summary of J. G. Fraser's "Golden Bough."

London: Watts & Co., 17, Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

JANUARY NUMBER NOW READY.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

Price 1s.—CONTENTS.

1. A PHILOSOPHER'S ROMANCE. By JOHN BRERICK. Chapters VII.—IX.
2. BURNS. By CHARLES WHIBLEY.
3. IN the LAND of the WHITE POPPY. By G. LEVETT-YEATS.
4. SOME FRIENDS of BROWNING. By J. C. HADDER.
5. THE GENTLE ART of CYCLING.—I. By AN AMBLER.
6. AN EPISODE in the HISTORY of the COMÉDIE FRANÇAISE. By TIGHE HOPKINS.
7. SAYWARD'S RAID: a Tale of the Behring Sea.
8. THE FRENCH INVASION of IRELAND.—I. By C. LITTON FALKNER.

NOW READY.

JANUARY NUMBER of

THE CENTURY.

Illustrated.—Price 1s. 4d.—Contains:

A MYTH of WATERLOO.

By ARCHIBALD FORBES.

SCENES FROM HUXLEY'S HOME LIFE.

By His SON. With a Portrait and an Autograph.

THE LORD MAYOR'S SHOW.

By ELIZABETH ROBINS PENNELL.

Illustrated by JOSEPH PENNELL.

MAXIMILIAN'S EMPIRE: Reminiscences of Mexico during the French Intervention.

By SARA Y. STEVENSON.

&c. &c. &c.

JANUARY NUMBER of

THE ST. NICHOLAS MAGAZINE.

Illustrated.—Price 1s.—Contains:

Second Instalment of

THE "JUST-SO" STORIES.

HON THE CAMEL GOT HIS HUMP.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

THROUGH THE EARTH. Chapter I.

By CLEMENT FEZANDIE

JOHNNY and the GIANT. By J. R. WEBSTER.

And Numerous other Stories.

MACMILLAN & CO., Ltd., London.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS TO "THE ACADEMY."

The following have already appeared this year:—

SAMUEL RICHARDSON ...	January	2	ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON ...	April	17
THOMAS DE QUINCEY ..	"	9	HENRY WADSWORTH LONG-}	"	24
LEIGH HUNT ...	"	16	FELLOW ...	"	"
LORD MACAULAY ...	"	23	ANDREW MARVELL ...	May	1
ROBERT SOUTHEY ...	"	30	ROBERT BROWNING ...	"	8
S. T. COLERIDGE ...	February	6	THOMAS CARLYLE ...	"	15
CHARLES LAMB ...	"	13	PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY ...	"	22
MICHAEL DRAYTON ...	"	20	CHARLES DICKENS ...	"	29
WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR ...	"	27	JONATHAN SWIFT ...	June	6
SAMUEL PEPYS ...	March	6	WILLIAM MAKEPEACE }	"	12
EDMUND WALLER ...	"	13	THACKERAY ...	"	"
WILKIE COLLINS ...	"	20	WILLIAM BLAKE... ..	"	19
JOHN MILTON ...	"	27	SIR RICHARD STEELE ...	"	26
WILLIAM COWPER ..	April	3	ALEXANDER POPE ...	July	3
CHARLES DARWIN ...	"	10	DOUGLAS JERROLD ...	"	10
			FRANCIS BACON ...	"	17

3 9015 02009 3780

